to England means certain proselytisation; for what can you expect of a place where almost every school is governed by a rabid Christian "mollah," if the children's heads are not broken in football or cricket before there is time for conversion? Not many months ago, on the introduction of some English teachers to a school, I think, in Alexandria, it was gravely announced that several limbs had been broken in an endeavour to imitate English games.

It is not generally known that the only official languages technically recognised in Egypt are Italian, French, and Arabic; and some courage is necessary even yet on the part of enlightened officials to use the language most important for the business of organisation in every department of government. English readers may be interested to read an announcement that appeared last May in the Journal Officiel and the comment of the Bosphore Egyptien thereon. The two together will form a fair specimen of what Englishmen are trying to do, and of the spirit in which they are sometimes met.

"Journal Officiel, May 12, 1890.

"MINISTÈRE DE L'INSTRUCTION PUBLIQUE.

"NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Examination for the Secondary Education Certificate will be held on the 21st June (3rd Zilcada, 1307) and on the following days, at the Ministry of Public Instruction, Darb-el-Gamamiz.

"All who have completed a course of study corresponding to that prescribed by the Ministry of Public Instruction in the official 'Programme of Secondary Studies,' and who desire to be examined for the Secondary Education Certificate must make application on a sheet of stamped paper (3 P.T.), stating in full their name and surname, address, place and date of birth, and the schools which they have attended. The Form of Application, accompanied by a certificate of good conduct from the Head Master of the school at which the candidate is at present in attendance, must be sent to the Secretary at the Ministry of Public Instruction not later than 11th June (22nd Shawal, 1307).

"Candidates who do not present themselves at the Ministry of Public Instruction, Darb-el-Gamamiz, at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 21st June (3rd Zilcada, 1307) will not be admitted to the Examination."

This is followed by regulations, lists of examiners, and the like. And here is the friendly comment; to wit

"Le Bosphore Egyptien, May 17, 1890.

"COURTISANERIE.

"Bien que la langue anglaise ne fasse pas partie des langues officielles, nous avons vu fréquemment le Journal Officiel enregistrer des documents en anglais. Ces pièces, émanant du Ministère des Travaux publics, on pouvait admettre à la rigueur, qu'originellement écrites en anglais, elles fussent insérées telles quelles, soit que les traductions, fissent défaut soit qu'on ne voulut perdre du temps. Mais est-il admissible que le Ministère de l'Instruction publique, où personne, sauf deux ou trois professeurs nouveaux venus, connaît un mot de la langue anglaise, fasse publier en anglais le programme des examens qui seront passés pour l'obtention du certificat d'études secondaires? C'est pourtant ce qui a lieu.

"Le Journal officiel du 12 mai 1890 publie dans la belle langue de nos protecteurs un long document qui a pour titre: SECONDARY EDUCATION CERTIFICATE et portant pour signature:

"ALI MOUBAREK,
"Minister of Public Instruction.

"Ce procédé ne constitue pas seulement un acte de servilité, mais encore une violation flagrante des lois en vigueur qui n'admettent comme langues officielles que l'Arabe, l'Italien et le Français. Cette infraction est d'autant plus grave qu'elle est commise par un haut fonctionnaire qui doit donner à tous l'exemple du respect qu'on doit aux lois de son pays; de plus, elle est sans excuse, la langue anglaise, nous le répétons, étant absolument étrangère à ceux qui affectent de l'employer."

The education of women forms a most interesting chapter in Artin Pasha's work, and we may cordially agree with him in seeing signs of its tendency to expand as that of men has expanded, though the task of effecting a real liberalisation of women's education carries with it the necessity of modifying some of the most obstinate conditions of Mohammedan life and history. But to-day even the mosque of El Azhar is receiving warning that it must resign some cherished prerogatives and practices; even in Cairo there is to be no room for a mediaeval university. The schools of proselytising Christians are bidding against it; and it is found that other things are needed for success in life beside grammar, "philosophy," logic, canon law, and theology. Meantime, it is to be hoped that, as the English are "in possession," they will be allowed to make their contribution to Egyptian education, as they have to most other things Egyptian that are of any permanent value.

P. A. BARNETT.

NEW NOVELS.

Kirsteen. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 3 vols. (Macmillan.)

A Born Coquette. By Mrs. Hungerford. In 3 vols. (Spencer Blackett.)

Aunt Abigail Dykes. By Lieut.-Col. George Randolph. (Chatto & Windus.)

Norman Reid, M.A. By Jessie Patrick Findlay. (Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The Lost Explorer. By James Francis Hogan. (Ward & Downey.)

A Very Young Couple. By B. L. Farjeon. (White.)

Three Beauties. By Millwood Manners. (The Leadenhall Press.)

Kirsteen is the best story that Mrs. Oliphant has published for ten years, and—which is saying a good deal more—is in all respects on a footing of equality with the best of her early Scotch novels. There is only one unsatisfactory character in it, and he errs through excess of strength. No doubt savage Highland lairds have done terrible things in the remote past—such as driving their children from their houses, tyrannising over their wives, committing murders, and in general behaving as if they were compounds of Legree and the Master of Ballantrae. But Drumcarro, who does these things in Kirsteen, is surely an anachronism. About the time of the battle of Waterloo the Highland laird must have developed into something a little less like a Zulu chief. Any man who has never tried to keep his passions under control, and who sees his daughter in danger of a libertine, might murder that libertine, as Drumcarro murders Lord John; but he would scarcely have behaved with such unmitigated brutality as he does at the bedside of his weak and dying wife. Drumcarro, however, apart—and even he is an attractive though a repulsive personality—there is not a weak character in Kirsteen; nor is there a weak incident or a weak line. The flight of Kirsteen from the arms of an elderly lover and the wrath of her father to Glasgow and from Glasgow to London, there to make her fortune and retrieve that of her family as a mantua-maker, and to bear about with her always a romance that ends in tragedy, is carried through without hitch or flagging from beginning to end. Equally good with Kirsteen are her sisters—the weak Anne, who marries a doctor and becomes a commonplace wife and mother; Mary, who is content with Kirsteen's rejected lover; and Jeannie, who hardly deserves so good a husband as falls ultimately to her lot. Nor would the story be so good—at least so thoroughly Scotch—a story as it is, but for the presence of the strong-willed, yet kindly, housekeeper, who keeps even Drumcarro in order; and her sister Jean, who is for a time Kirsteen's partner in London. The murder of Lord John, too, however improbable, is in all respects an appallingly effective bit of melodrama.

Has Mrs. Hungerford written herself out, or has she made the too common blunder of spinning out a thin plot to fill three volumes? Either the one question or the other will suggest itself to every reader of her new and disappointing story, A Born Coquette. There are three good characters in it—Penelope and Gladys, the two younger sisters of the heroine, and Murphy, an Irish butler full of brogue and unconscious humour. But that heroine, Nan, is little short of intolerable till the last half of the third volume. She is supposed to hate Hume, one of her lovers. Why, in that case, should she practically compel him to take the sail with her in his yacht which forces on a marriage? One is also reminded too much of Ohnet's Ironmaster, by the growth of Nan's love for her husband, and by her boxing the ears of her other and unworthy lover Ffrench. There are, of course, sallies of genuine sprightliness in A Born Coquette; but there are also too many touches of feminine realism, such as "a mighty hug" and "wriggling her pretty slender body in his grasp."

Aunt Abigail Dykes is not so much a novel as a literary jungle. Colonel Randolph apologises for his work, saying that "the product of a rough soldier's pen would seem to be but a poor offering to the cultivated, refined literary taste of the present century." Colonel Randolph shows no "roughness" either in character or in penmanship, and the only fault that the taste of the present century can find with him is his attempt to pack too much into a novel. Had he been content to give a simple story of love, treachery, and revenge in Carolina in the days of slave-holding—had he, in fact, developed naturally the initial and unfortunate connexion between Preston Wayne and Gilley Farley, he might have succeeded in producing an admirable story which would have satisfied all serious critics. But, not content with this, he must needs give pictures of buffalo-hunts, frontier-fighting with Indians and brigands who are worse than Indians, and the "passions" of General Kennon. Of these, every reader, however favourably disposed otherwise, cannot but get wearied. Yet the "evolution"—to use a now vulgar phrase—of poor ill-treated Gilley Farley into Aunt Abigail Dykes, the owner of countless herds and unlimited land, and the Meg Merrilees of a large body of border scoundrels, is perfect in its way. The tragic close of the story, too, is as powerfully pathetic as it is simple.

It is not very easy to say whether the author of Norman Reid, M.A., intended her story of love, mystery, and the Free Church of Scotland to be a religious gift-book or a religious novel. But its moral earnestness and the serious nature of the issues at stake give it the character of a novel. The writer belongs, unmistakably, to the Annie Swan school of Scotch writers of fiction, although she has certainly not the power of character-delineation possessed by the head of that school herself. The merciless ruling elder, however, of the Free Church in which Norman Reid is minister, who deserts his wife, coerces his men, and persecutes his son—without knowing the relationship between his victim and himself—is a stronger character than any to be found in fiction of the Aldersyde order. Clara, the daughter of the Bohemian artist, who very nearly loses her happiness because she temporarily prefers her ideal to her lover, is also an excellent sketch, although her characteristics are not specially Scotch; while Norman himself, in his struggles with illness and religious obtuseness, is doubtless a good specimen of the Free Church clergyman of to-day. The ordinary reader may object to quasi-Kingsleyan allusions in the story to "the Celestial City," "God's face," &c.; but, then, the ordinary reader must take his chance when he strays into the region of religious fiction. Norman Reid, M.A., is a conscientiously written story of its class; it contains abundance of piety, but no mawkishness. The author and artist do not appear to be quite at one as to the details of their hero's appearance. One reads of "the wide, full-lipped mouth, half-hidden by a moustache of golden brown." In the picture which illustrates the page from which this quotation is made, the mouth is present, but the moustache is conspicuous by its absence.

Mr. Hogan is evidently bent on being the Rider Haggard of Australia; and The Lost Explorer in many ways recalls King Solomon's Mines. It is not difficult to say what hero is suggested by Uralla, the aboriginal Australian, who accompanies Arthur Louvain on his search for his father, and who is "fully six feet three in height, with the muscles standing out on his naked figure in statuesque detail, and plainly telling of the herculean strength of the man." Mr. Hogan may be allowed, however, to have taken full advantage of actual discoveries in Central Australia, and especially of the volcanic origin of a portion of it, to construct a wonderful story of heroism, privations, fighting, mystic treasure-houses, fanatical rites, love, and fire. It is so full of hair-breadth escapes that it will delight boys quite as much as Allan Quatermain or Kidnapped. It is, moreover, so carefully written, and several characters in it—in particular, Lumeah the heroine, the fanatical priest, and the military leader who circumvents him—are so well sketched that it will more than satisfy the taste of older readers.

In A very Young Couple Mr. Farjeon tries a vein of humour for which he is totally unfitted; and in consequence, it is, all things considered, the greatest blunder he has ever made in fiction. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Palmerston are a very engaging pair as they appear in the early pages of this little farce, although they are socially somewhat finer than the sub-middle-class people whom Mr. Farjeon is most accustomed and most competent to draw. Mr. Holland, Palmerston's father-in-law, is a good sketch of a loving, yet level-headed, husband and father; but there is no excuse for the incident which brings about a quarrel between the young folk. It is absolutely certain that Mrs. Rae-Norton and Harry Palmerston would not have carelessly sent to each other through the post the letters which shadow forth the novel on which they are engaged. All this is done to give a mischief-making, muddle-headed aunt, Mrs. Gibbons, an opportunity for asserting herself. But Mrs. Gibbons is not worth so much trouble. Altogether A very Young Couple suggests that Mr. Farjeon is trying to discover whether he is not capable of writing Criterion farce. It proves happily that he is not.

Three Beauties is amateurish and weak, though not very badly written after a fashion. The good peer who makes love incognito, and who has a very bad brother unfortunately the image of himself in outer form, is a not unfamiliar character; and Gerald Higgins or Rivers is not a specially good example of the character. The device of a love-philtre is rather too antiquated to be introduced into what purports to be an essentially modern novel. In any case, the author of Three Beauties is not justified in introducing the name of an eminent living physician into her story, least of all in the guise of a doctor.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

English Miracle Plays, Moralities, and Interludes. Specimens of the Pre-Elizabethan Drama. Edited, with an Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by Alfred W. Pollard. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) This excellent little book contains specimen miracle-plays from the four English cycles, the play of "Mary Magdalene" from the Digby Mysteries, an unpublished "Morality" of the fifteenth century called "The Castell of Perseverance," Heywood's "The Pardoner and the Frere," Bale's "Kynge Johan," Skelton's "Magnificence," and the interludes "Everyman," "The Four Elements," and "Thersytes." In an appendix are added two Latin mysteries, and the "Harrowing of Hell," and the Broome play of "Abraham and Isaac." The pieces have in most cases been more or less abridged and expurgated, but all that is essential to the story has been given. The Introduction is well written, and contains a satisfactory outline of the history of this species of literature in England. The notes and glossary are sufficiently full, very few points of difficulty being passed over. In nearly every case Mr. Pollard's explanations appear to be unquestionably correct. He has however failed to observe that briggen irons in "Thersytes" is a corruption of "brigandines." In the line "with cursydness in costes knet" the word costes seems to be "manners, qualities," not, as Mr. Pollard takes it, "coasts." Bleykyn cannot mean "blacken," nor can stower mean "time, hour" (in the passage referred to it seems to be "store"). The participle pylt ("Castell of Perseverance," 174) which Mr. Pollard thinks should read fyllt, appears to be correct; the middle-English verb was piltten or pultten. The ingenious suggestion that coryous as an epithet of Christ may stand for κύριος is extremely tempting, but involves some difficulties; if the Greek word had been known in England in the fourteenth century its form would surely have been kyrios, kirios. The word mener in the Towneley play, rendered by Mr. Pollard as "handsome," seems to have no etymology; can it be mever=French meûre? The selection of the pieces is entirely excellent. The reader who makes himself acquainted with Mr. Pollard's specimens will have a good notion of all the varieties of style to be found in the English mysteries, ranging from the pathetic beauty of the Broome play of "Abraham and Isaac" to the boisterous farce (genuinely witty, however) of the Towneley "Secunda Pastorum." The later plays given will illustrate the gradual transition from the sacred to the secular drama, and are for the most part worth reading on their own account. Perhaps Mr. Pollard somewhat overrates the merit of the "Thersytes." The versification is certainly spirited, but the extravagance of the caricature rather overshoots its mark. Bale's "Kynge Johan," with its audacious perversion of history, is valuable as an exemplification of the polemical temper of the Reformation times. Altogether, the volume contains an extraordinary amount of instructive and interesting material in small compass.

Giovanni Pico della Mirandola: his Life by his nephew Giovanni Francesco Pico; also, three of his Letters; his Interpretation of Psalm xvi.; his Twelve Rules of a Christian Life; his Twelve Points of a Perfect Lover; and his Deprecatory Hymn to God. Translated from the Latin by Sir Thomas More. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by J. M. Rigg. (David Nutt.) It is singular that this earliest published work of Sir Thomas More, interesting from so many points of view, should have remained so long inaccessible to the student of literature. It is now published by Mr. Nutt as the first volume of a projected Tudor Library. The paper, type, and binding of the volume are dainty and excellent, and the price will be an agreeable surprise to all book collectors. But Mr. Nutt is most of all to be congratulated upon his editor. Mr. Rigg positively goes out of his way to give himself trouble. His introduction, picturesquely and easily written in strong, nervous English, gives us the results of a most laborious and thorough examination of all Pico's works. Mr. Rigg's unusually solid philosophical attainments have made this task possible to him, and give to his analysis of Pico's achievements and position as a thinker a permanent value. He has been willing to condense into forty pages the results of labour which might easily have filled a volume. We speak of this as a going out of the way because we rather expected the Introduction to treat of More, to speculate upon his reasons for translating Pico's Life, and to ask which of his friends—Colet or Grocyn or Lily—interested him in the Italian Creighton or brought him his works from Italy. Mr. Rigg instead confines himself to Pico; and inasmuch as previous writers on Pico, from More to Mr. Pater, have been interested in him rather as the “phoenix of the wits” who was also a devout Christian than as the writer of certain philosophical and theological treatises, Mr. Rigg starts from these treatises, and gives us for the first time in English a clear account at first hand of their teaching. This inquiry into Pico’s writings concludes that “it is impossible to study him attentively without seeing at last that amidst all his vagaries, absurdities, perversities, there was real faculty in him, and faculty of an order which, matured by a severer discipline than his age could afford, would have won for him a place—though, perhaps, no very exalted one—among philosophers.” As regards his historical position, “that which in the specific sense we call scholasticism made in Pico its final effort.” It is this analysis and estimate of Pico’s works and position as a thinker which is most valuable in Mr. Rigg’s Introduction. He is fully alive to the more romantic aspects of his hero’s character—his personal fascination and his genuine piety; but these have been frequently noted and adequately appreciated, the more difficult and less-explored subject has too often been entirely neglected. Mr. Rigg has compared More’s English with the original, and has added terse notes on various matters, remarkable, like his Introduction, for the labour compressed into them. He has printed the original Latin of the Deprecatoria ad Deum, and of the poem to Benivieni, the only surviving specimens of Pico’s elegiacs. His criticism of these poems, and of Pico’s literary abilities, is scholarly and graceful.

The Confessions of a Poacher. Edited by J. Watson. (The Leadenhall Press.) The comparison of this book with The Amateur Poacher by a much greater name in woodcraft is obvious; and it is at least a singular coincidence that the story of a poacher sleeping near a lime kiln and not merely being suffocated but burnt to a heap of pure white ashes, which forms the end of a chapter in Mr. Jefferies’s book, likewise ends a chapter in Mr. Watson’s. Nor can it be averred that the latter contains any matter concerning poaching as a fine art which has not been long told the world by Mr. Jefferies. Proceeding on the assumption that Mr. Watson has merely edited an actual poacher’s confessions, as he intimates in the preface, it is apparent that the editor has embroidered the poacher’s stories when the latter is made to say, “a sharp report tore the darkness” and a brace of teal fell dead; or when he soliloquises—

“on the margin of the wood are a few young pines, their delicate plumes just touched with the loveliest green. An odour of resinous green is wafted from them, and upon one of the slenders sprays a pair of diminutive gold-crests have hung their procreant cradle.”

It has been our privilege to know a good many poachers, and language more unlike what these squalid, skulking “mouchers” use can scarcely be conceived. Eliminating these literary misdemeanours, if any young fellow wishes to graduate as a consummate poacher he cannot need a better guide than Mr. Watson. It is a pity that he should have been so explicit, however, as to the method of liming water in order to capture trout. The great difficulty of the art is not to succeed in killing game, but to discover a method of smuggling it off the preserves without arousing suspicion. Mr. Watson seems to consider ferreting the best method of capturing rabbits, but it is not so fatal a method as snaring them. A quiet poacher on a still, moonlight night can easily fill a sack of rabbits if an adept at snaring. The editor tells of birds that used to strike on wire fences and kill themselves. A long line of wire fencing running over the Inverness-shire moors has at present bunches of heather tied on it every eight yards or so to warn grouse of this danger. Well-traps for rabbits require too much manipulation for poachers to make it worth their while adopting them; and this is fortunate, for we have seen an unlucky clergyman fall into one in broad daylight. Mr. Watson’s remarks on the steady extinction of the hare as a British animal are very sensible, but he should know that only the leaves of young oaks remain on them through the winter. There is a good deal in The Confessions of a Poacher to interest lovers of the country, and Mr. James West’s illustrations are quaint, and sometimes striking.

Blossom-Land. By Clement Scott. (Hutchinson.) This is a volume of some three hundred pages, composed of letters descriptive of various holiday haunts in England and the Continent. Mr. Clement Scott tells us he is a lover of solitude. If this be so, he is his own worst enemy, for he no sooner discovers some charming nook than he must write of it in the newspapers and invite the reader to invade his sanctuary. He himself comments on the change that has taken place since he wrote, not in himself but in the scenes he has described. The Cromer of to-day is not the Cromer he wrote of some years ago as his “beloved Poppy Land.” The scenes visited by the author in his holidays can not be complained of as monotonous. Four letters are devoted to Cromer; but the Nazareth Home at Hammersmith, Sark, Etretat, a Cumberland otter hunt, Madrid, Stratford-upon-Avon, Ems, Guernsey, Chamounix, and Rouen, at least offer variety to the reader. Perhaps the chapter entitled “Bravo Toro” is the best written in the book. It contains a most spirited account of a bull fight at Madrid, if the term “spirited” can be applied at all to such a field of carnage. Mr. Clement Scott thus describes the bull, the hero of the scene:

“Like Milton’s Satan, he is foredoomed, and without reprieve. His bravery or cowardice meet with the same reward. The destiny that awaits the bull is that of the shadow of fate overhanging the hero of a Greek play. Nothing can save him. He bounds out of his den the picture of life and fierceness and daring, the very embodiment of noble vigour; in less than twenty minutes he will be dragged across the blood-stained sand by his horns by a team of jingling mules, a mass of disfigured and execrated flesh, a dead thing baited, tortured, and slaughtered for the amusement of a death-loving crowd.”

This is a fair specimen of Mr. Scott’s style—a style always bright and picturesque, if occasionally rhetorical and declamatory. The book is pleasant holiday-reading, and has the added charm of reminding the traveller of scenes that belong to the past, but are still landmarks in his lifetime.

NOTES AND NEWS.

ON behalf of the committee of section F of the British Association, Prof. Alfred Marshall, of Cambridge, has issued invitations to those interested in political economy and statistics to attend a meeting at University College, Gower-street, on Thursday, November 20, to discuss proposals for the foundation of an English economic association, and the publication, in conjunction therewith, of an economic journal. Mr. Goschen, chancellor of the exchequer and former president of the Statistical Society, has promised to take the chair.

THE committee formed last May to purchase Dove Cottage as a national memorial of Wordsworth have now obtained a conveyance of the premises, and have entered into possession. But in order to put the place in good repair, to make it look like a home, to plant the garden with the flowers Wordsworth planted, to put his poems on the shelves he used, a further sum of about £300 is required. Furthermore, as it is intended to place within the cottage such memorials of the poet as can be obtained, any who may have relics, pictures, MSS., &c., that they would give or lend, are invited to send them to the hon. treasurer, Mr. George Lillie Craik, 29, Bedford-street, Covent Garden.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE, Her Majesty’s printers, have now completed the task of photographing, within the precincts of the House of Lords, what is known as the “annexed” Book of Common Prayer, originally attached to the Act of Uniformity. Conjointly with the Cambridge University Press, they will publish a facsimile of it early in next year, with a special dedication to the Queen.

THE long-promised Dictionary of Hymnology, edited by the Rev. John Julian, is now almost ready for issue. It sets forth the origin and history of the Christian hymns of all ages and nations, with biographical and critical notices. It will form a volume of about 1,500 pages.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will publish before the end of this month the correspondence of the Hon. Mrs. Osborn between the years 1721 and 1771, edited by Emily F. D. Osborn. Mrs. Osborn was a great niece of Dorothy Osborne, who married Sir William Temple. Being the only near relation of the ill-fated Admiral Byng, she took a prominent part in pleading for a commutation of his sentence. The same publishers will also issue the Letters of S. G. O. (the Rev. Lord Sidney Goldolphin Osborne) to the Times on public affairs from 1844 to 1888, edited by Mr. Arnold White.

THE small volume of fragments by the late Dr. Edersheim, to be published by Messrs. Longmans, under the title of Tohu-wa-Vohu, which was announced to appear last month, has been delayed in the press owing to an accident. It will, however, shortly be before the public.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK have in the press The Church in the Mirror of History; Studies on the Progress of Christianity, by Dr. Karl Sell, of Darmstadt, editor of “The Life and Letters of Princess Alice.” The translation is dedicated, by permission, to Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately a volume of short lyrics, rhymed and unrhymed, on a variety of subjects, by Mr. Robinson K. Leather. It is entitled simply Verses.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish shortly, in volume form, The Anglomaniacs—a keen though not ill-natured satire upon the foibles of New York society, which attracted much attention while appearing as a serial in the Century Magazine. The name of the writer has at last been revealed as Mrs. Burton Harrison, known in this country chiefly by two pretty but rather slight collections—The Old-fashioned Fairy-book and Bric-à-Brac Stories.

Mailand of Laurieston, a Family History, is the title of Annie S. Swan’s new story, to be published next week, in one volume, by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier.

MISS HELEN LINDSAY will issue almost immediately, with Mr. Elliot Stock, a volume entitled Letters to Working Men; or, Short Chapters on Many Subjects.

A NEW series of monthly volumes, with the general title of “The Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour,” will be begun early in the new year by Messrs. Henry & Co. Mr. Davenport Adams is the editor.

IN the course of a few days, a new shilling Reference Annual will be published by Messrs. F. Warne & Co., under the title of Barker's Facts and Figures. It will contain statistics and information on almost every subject which an ordinary man is likely to wish to consider, arranged in alphabetical order, in such a way that any item may be at once consulted.

THE first edition of Vol. I. of Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod's Theory of Credit has been exhausted for some time; and a second edition is in the press. Part II. of Vol. II., completing the work, will be published shortly.

THE first edition of the popular issue of The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff was exhausted on the day of publication, and a second edition will be ready about November 10.

MR. UNWIN will issue in a day or two a new edition of Dick's Holidays, and What he Did With Them, which was a success four years ago as a child's picture book."

AT the meeting of the Library Association, to be held at 20, Hanover-square on Monday next, November 10, Mr. Joseph Gilbert will read a paper on "Some Misleading Titles of Modern Books."

MR. J. G. COTTON MINCHIN, author of Growth of Freedom in the Baltic Peninsula, will deliver a lecture on "Bulgaria" at the South Place Institute on Sunday next, November 9, at 4 p.m.

THE first important sale of the season is that of the library of the late F. W. Cosens, which will begin on Tuesday next, November 11, and will last for twelve days. As might be expected, Spanish literature is most prominently represented; and there are also collections relating to America, the topography of Sussex, and the wine trade. But, besides these special interests, Mr. Cosens's sympathies extended to two branches which are now probably the most sought after by bibliophiles—Shaksperiana and Cruikshankiana. Of the former he possessed the three later folios, several of the rarer quartos, and an almost complete set of the Halliwell-Phillipps facsimiles. Another curiosity is the English version which he himself made of the early Spanish play of "Los Bandos de Verona." Among the illustrations we may mention a series of original water-colour drawings made by Hablot K. Browne ("Phiz") for Dickens's works, some similar ones by Marcus Stone, and a number of framed drawings and engravings by Cruikshank.

THE annual service of Westminster scholars in commemoration of founders and benefactors will be held in the Abbey on Monday, November 17, at 8.30 p.m. The service will be in Latin, with the special Psalms and Te Deum set to Gregorian music; and the sermon will be preached by the Dean of Lincoln. After the service the head master and the masters will hold a reception in the great schoolroom.

MESSRS. A. AND C. BLACK, of Edinburgh, have issued this week the penultimate volume of their new edition of the Collected Writings of De Quincey, edited by Prof. David Masson. It is noteworthy as containing the most original of his works—"On Murder considered as one of the Fine Arts," "The English Mail-Coach," and "Suspiria de Profundis." Somewhat incongruously, a first instalment is appended of the "Miscellanea," which will properly occupy the final volume. The editor has added many valuable bibliographical notes, including an elaborate investigation into the sources of "The Spanish Military Nun," which De Quincey concealed with more than his usual perverseness. But Prof. Masson does not seem to be aware that the remains of Williams, the murderer and suicide, were disinterred some little while ago, and are now (we believe) on exhibition at a public-house in the East-end of London.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

LORD ACTON has been elected to an honorary fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford—a distinction shared only by Mr. Gladstone.

MR. WALTER HRAPE, of Trinity College, has been elected to the Balfour studentship at Cambridge, for original research in biology, especially in animal morphology. The studentship is of the value of £200 per annum, and is tenable for three years.

THE dates fixed for the performance of the "Ion" of Euripides at Cambridge are Tuesday, November 25, and the four following days. On the last of these days (Saturday, November 29) the hour will be 2 p.m.; on the other days at 8 p.m. The text chosen for acting is that of Mr. M. A. Bayfield, who has himself prepared a prose translation. The incidental music, which has been written by Mr. Charles Wood, will be conducted by Prof. Stanford. A new scene has been painted by Mr. Hemsley. Mr. J. Willis Clark, as on previous occasions, is secretary to the committee and also stage manager.

THE curators of the Bodleian library have obtained authority to lend the following portraits to the coming Hanover Exhibition at the New Gallery:—Addison, by Kneller; Sir William Blackstone, by Kettle; Lord North, by Dance; Swift, by Gervas; W. W. Grenville, by Owen; and Handel.

IT is noteworthy that, of the five fellows elected this week at St. John's College, Cambridge, two had graduated in classics, two in natural science, and only one in mathematics.

IN Convocation at Oxford on Wednesday, the university of Bombay was admitted to the benefits of the statute by which students, under certain conditions, are excused one year's residence. The same privilege has already been extended to the universities of Calcutta, Sydney, and the Cape of Good Hope.

PROF. HENRY SIDGWICK has been appointed secretary to the general board of studies at Cambridge.

THE electors to the Craven fellowship at Oxford—which, as now remodelled, is in the nature of a travelling fellowship for classical research—announce that there will be no general examination, but that candidates must offer some special subject in Greek and Latin literature, history, or antiquities. Account will also be taken of the qualifications and previous university career of the candidates. At the same time, an appointment will be made to the studentship of £50, offered to the university out of the Newton testimonial fund, by the managing committee of the British School at Athens. The corresponding Newton Studentship at Cambridge has been awarded by the vice-chancellor to Mr. E. E. Sikes, of St. John's College.

PROF. HENRY NETTLESHIP will deliver a lecture at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, November 9th, at 8 p.m., upon "Authority in the Sphere of Morals and Intellect."

MR. VICTOR HORSLEY has been elected to the Fullerian chair of physiology at the Royal Institution for a term of three years.

MR. ARTHUR W. THOMSON has been appointed by the Secretary of State for India to be professor of mechanism and applied science in the Science College, Poona.

THE last part of the Transactions of the Oxford Architectural and Historical Society contains some "Notes on the Manor and Parish of Holywell," recently read before the society by Mr. George Simms. Besides consulting the old documents at Merton College and elsewhere, Mr. Sims has been able to give, from his own reminiscences, much curious information about the condition of the parish in the early part of the present century.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

OVERON'S LAST COUNCIL.

I.

If, on some woodland lawn, you see a ring
Of darker hue upon the paler grass—
The strange green growth which children as they pass
Still tell each other is a fairy thing

Left by the Elves o'er-night—let your soul cling
To the sweet thought that there the Elf King was

With all his crew at dawn; but that, alas;
They met there for their last, last gathering.

For they are dead: and though the sunshine still Dances in flocks, as dance the leaves above,
And still the squirrel nibbles and the mouse,
The little folk are gone who used to fill

The hazel copses where the wild wood-dove
With cross-laid twigs still builds her little house.

II.

He called a last assembly of the Elves.
Hundreds of Fairies in the forest met 'Neath one huge oak-tree—Sprites of dry and wet,
Pixies and Imps, and every gnome that delves:
And Oberon said: "We lurk by tens and twelves,
'Starved in the woods. Man's faith—our food as yet—

Feeds us no more; the Fairies' sun has set:
We are but shadows of our former selves.

'Tis time to leave the woods and to depart.
When faith quite ends—so say the High Decrees—
Then death will strike us with his icy dart.

Long have we nestled in the hearts of trees;
Now we must nestle in the Poet's heart—
The only place in which we ne'er shall freeze."

EUGENE LEE HAMILTON.

OBITUARY.

ALEXANDER J. ELLIS, LITT.D., F.R.S.

IT is with much regret that we record the death of Dr. A. J. Ellis, the creator of the scientific study of English phonetics. For some time past his health had been infirm, especially after the loss of his wife last year. He died at his residence in Auriol Road, West Kensington, on the evening of Tuesday, October 28, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. The actual cause of death was the bursting of a bloodvessel.

Alexander John Ellis was born at Hoxton, in Middlesex, on June 14, 1814. His father's name was Sharpe, but this was changed to Ellis by royal license in 1825. Educated at Shrewsbury and Eton, he was elected to a scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated in 1837 as sixth wrangler and also first in the second class in classics. He never proceeded M.A.; but he was much gratified when his old university conferred upon him (though tardily) the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters, in company with Dr. Evans and Prof. Sylvester, in June of the present year. Of other distinctions such as fall to learned men, he enjoyed a full share. He was elected a fellow of the Royal Society in 1864 (serving on the council of that body from 1880 to 1882), and a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1870. He was twice president of the Philological Society, from 1872 to 1874, and again from 1880 to 1882. The Society of Arts conferred upon him its silver medal for his papers on "Musical Pitch" and "Musical Scales;" and he was a life-governor of University College, London.

His scientific interests included mathematics and music, as well as philology. In connexion with the former, we must be content only to mention his translation of Helmholtz's classical treatise, The Sensations of Tone as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music (1875, second ed. 1885); Algebra Identified with Geometry (1874); and papers on "The Computation of Logarithms" (Proceedings R. S., 1881).

In 1848 he precluded as a philologist by two books—Essentials of Phonetics and A Plea for Phonetic Spelling—which mark the direction in which his mind ultimately turned. About the same time he associated himself with Mr. Isaac Pitman in framing a system of phonetic printing, which he afterwards developed by himself into the more accurate palaeotype and the popular glossic.

It was while preparing a third edition of his Plea for Phonetic Spelling in 1859 that he came across a book in the British Museum which first directed his attention to the history of spoken English. This book was Salesbury's Dictionary in English and Welsh, "where to is prefixed a little treatise of the English pronunciation of the letters" (1547). In 1866 he laid his system of palaeotype, "or the representation of spoken sounds for philological purposes by means of the ancient types," before the Philological Society, and in the following year he read a paper on "The Pronunciation of English in the Sixteenth Century." Henceforth he devoted the remainder of his life (with occasional remissions for work on music and mathematics) to the slow but laborious completion of the magnum opus on which his reputation will rest. The title of this work deserves to be given in full:

"On Early English Pronunciation, with special reference to Shakspeare and Chaucer. Containing an Investigation of the Correspondence of Writing with Speech in England, from the Anglo-Saxon Period to the existing Received and Dialectal Forms, with a Systematic Notation of Spoken Sounds by means of the ordinary Printing Types. Including a Re-arrangement of Prof. F. J. Child's Memoirs on the Language of Chaucer and Gower, Reprints of the rare Tracts by Salesbury on English (1547) and Welsh (1567), and by Barclay on French (1521), Abstracts of Schmeller's Treatise on Bavarian Dialects, and Winkler's Low German and Friesian Dialecticon, and Prince L.-L. Bonaparte's Vowel and Consonant Lists."

This work was published, through the good offices of Dr. F. J. Furnivall, jointly by the Philological, the Chaucer, and the Early-English Text Societies. It occupies altogether something like 2,500 pages. The first four Parts appeared pretty rapidly between 1869 and 1874; but Part V., on the existing phonology of English dialects, required such elaborate investigation and repeated revision that it was not finished until 1889. The author contemplated a sixth Part, which would contain a summary of the whole, a consideration of the observations of other scholars, and an elaborate index; but it is to be feared that increasing ill-health prevented him from proceeding with this design. The very last task upon which he was engaged was to prepare for the English Dialect Society an abridgment of Part V., entitled English Dialects—their Sounds and Homes, the proofs of which he finally passed for the press in June of the present year. For this (comparatively) popular work he substituted glossic for palaeotype.

It should be mentioned that all these publications were printed for him by the firm of Messrs. Stephen Austin & Sons, of Hertford, to whose care and accuracy he often expressed himself as deeply indebted, and were published by Messrs. Trübner (now Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.). They form a magazine of information about the pronunciation of English, which will preserve the memory of Alexander Ellis to future generations, so long as the language retains even a philological interest. In the Ciceronian periods of the public orator at Cambridge:

"Venient anni (licet confidenter vaticinari) quibus dialectorum nostrorum tot varietates, non minus quam Arcadum et Cypriorum linguæ antiquæ, hominum e cognitione prorsus obsolescent: tum profecto viri huiusce scriptis cura infinita elaboratis indies auctus accedet honos."

In all the relations of private life, Dr. Ellis was marked by a kindness of heart and a dignified courtesy characteristic of the old school, and also by a consideration for the opinions and feelings of others which is not always found among philologists. He leaves behind him two sons, both of whom have attained some distinction in the artistic world.

J. S. C.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE article with which the October Livre Moderne opens, on "Portraits and Caricatures of Jules Janin," would furnish forth a very good number if there were nothing else save ephemeral matter. As it happens, however, there is another interesting paper on "Charles Monslet Voyageur," and a sheaf or sheaflet of letters from autographs of Sainte-Beuve, Nodier, and others. The chief attraction is, however, the article on that "prince of critics" who has gone whither, alas! so many princes go, to be some one in the Land of Matters not Unforgot. There must be more than a dozen in one kind or another of these counterfeit presentments of "honest Janin," who, if he was more solid in his material frame than in his literary work, was always genial and jovial in both life and literature. It is noteworthy that in the charges there is nothing approaching to brutality (he would have been indeed a brute who treated Janin ill-naturedly); and one of the regular portraits, that by Bouquet in 1841, succeeds not only in making the subject handsome, but even in imparting a touch of sentiment to his honest face.

THE Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia, July to September, contains a notice of Icazbalceta's "Nueva Colección de Documentos para la historia de México." The reviewer, A. Maria Fabrè, adds thirteen inedited letters from Fray J. de Zumárraga, Archbishop of Mexico, addressed to Charles V., Philip II., and others, between the years 1536-1548. The last are to Fray Bartolomé de las Casas. They are important as regards the conduct of the Conquistadores, and for the attitude of the writer to his sovereigns, which hardly differs from that of our English bishops to the Tudors and early Stuarts. Philip is addressed as "alumbrado por el Espíritu Santo." The conduct of the Mexican clergy is much complained of. Two articles, by González de Arceche and Francisco Coello respectively, treat technically of the military history of Spain. Juan Villanova has three valuable papers on prehistoric archaeology, dealing chiefly with the age of copper. F. Codera describes eleven Arabic MSS. recently acquired by the Academy. The remaining articles deal chiefly with Hebrew inscriptions.

THE Boletín for October has a fresh installment of the Cortes de Madrid of 1655-1658; An excellent account of the relations between Sweden and Spain and Portugal at the end of the seventeenth century, by A. Strindberg; and "Las Cortes de Barcelona en 1327," by Padre Fita, with the formulæ of the oaths and homage of the Cortes and the feudatories to Alfonso the Learned. The oath is taken by the "Comites vicecomites barones Richi homines milites et Sindici seu procuratores universitatum Civitatum et villarum Cathalonie." Homage is rendered: "Secundum usaticos Barchinone et consuetudines Cathalonie."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAILLE. Souvenirs d'Annam (1836-1890). Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 BATTENBERG, F. J. Prinz zu. Die volkswirtschaftliche Entwicklung Bulgariens vom 1870 bis zur Gegenwart. Leipzig: Veit. 6 M.
 BERLEUX, J. La caricature politique en France, pendant la guerre, le siège de Paris et la Commune. (1870-1871.) Paris: Paul. 25 fr.
 BRANDES, G. Die Litteratur d. 19. Jahrhunderts, in ihren Hauptströmungen dargestellt. 6. Bd. Das junge Deutschland. Leipzig: Veit. 8 M. 60 Pf.
 CHÉLARD, Raoul. La Hongrie contemporaine. Paris: Le Soudier. 5 fr.
 MAZDE, Ch. de. Lamartine: sa vie littéraire et politique. Paris: Didier. 3 fr.
 NEUMANN, W. A. Der Reliquienschatz d. Hauses Braunschweig-Lüneburg. Wien: Hölzer. 90 M.
 POULLIN, Marcel. Nos places perdues d'Alsace-Lorraine. Paris: Bloud et Barral. 8 fr.
 RUMBAUR, O. Die Geschichte v. Appian u. Virginia in der englischen Litteratur. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
 TILLE, A. Die deutschen Volklieder vom Doktor Faust. Halle: Niemeyer. 5 M.
 ZOLA, E., Guy de MAUPASSANT, etc. Les soirées de Médan. Paris: Charpentier. 10 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BUHL, F. Kanon u. Text d. Alten Testaments. Leipzig: Faber. 6 M.
 LOHR, M. Introductionis ad commentarium de Threnis Jeremie capta nonnulla. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M.
 PFLIEDERER, O. Der Paulinismus. 2. Aufl. Leipzig: Reiland. 10 M.
 SCHIFFERS, M. J. Amwäs, das Emmaus d. hl. Lucas, 160 Stadien v. Jerusalem. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Herder. 3 M.
 WENDT, H. H. Die Lehre Jesu. 2. Thl. Der Inhalt der Lehre Jesu. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 12 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ALLARD, P. Histoire des persécutions du 1er au 4e siècle. Paris: Lecoq. 30 fr.
 CLAIR, C. H. La Vie de Saint Ignace de Loyola, d'après P. Ribadeneira. Paris: Plon. 20 fr.
 COIGNET, Mme. C. La Réforme française avant les guerres civiles (1512-1559). Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GITTERMAN, J. M. Ezzelin v. Romano. 1. Thl. Die Gründung der Signorie (1194-1244). Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 HECHT, F. Die Organisation d. Bodenkredits in Deutschland. 1. Abthg. Die staatlichen u. provinziellen Bodenkreditinstitute in Deutschland. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 24 M.
 HENNER, C. Beiträge zur Organisation u. Kompetenz der päpstlichen Ketzergerichte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 8 M. 80 Pf.
 KLEIN, F. Sachsensitz u. Ersatzung. Forschungen im Gebiete d. römischen Sachenrechtes u. Civilprocesses. Berlin: Heymann. 12 M.
 PERLBACH, M. Die Statuten d. Deutschen Ordens, nach den ältesten Handschriften hrg.. Halle: Niemeyer. 20 M.
 MOREL-FATIO, A. Etudes sur l'Espagne. 2e Série. Grands d'Espagne et petits princes allemands au 19e Siècle. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
 SAKGÜLLER, J. B. Die Papstwahlen u. die Staaten von 1447 bis 1555. (Nikolaus V. bis Paul IV.). Tübingen: Laupp. 4 M. 80 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- CHAIGNET, A. E. Histoire de la psychologie des Grecs. T. 3. La psychologie de la nouvelle académie et des écoles éclectiques. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
 DRACHICU, M. M. Erläuterungen zur geologischen Uebersichtskarte d. Königr. Rumänien. Wien: Hölzer. 8 M.
 DU BOIS-REYMOND, P. Ueb. die Grundlagen der Erkenntnis in den exakten Wissenschaften. Nach e. hinterlassenen Handschrift. Tübingen: Laupp. 3 M. 60 Pf.
 HAMERLING, R. Die Atomistik d. Willens. Beiträge zur Kritik der modernen Erkenntnis. Hamburg: 12 M.
 KOESTER, A. Schiller als Dramaturg. Berlin: Besser. 6 M.
 LIEBSCH, Th. Physikalische Krystallographie. Leipzig: Veit. 25 M.
 LOEB, J. Untersuchungen zur physiologischen Morphologie der Thiere. 1. Ueb. Heteromorphose. Würzburg: Hertz. 3 M. 60 Pf.
 LOEWENTHAL, A. Dominicus Gundisavi u. sein psychologisches Compendium. 1. Thl. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 ROTH, J. Allgemeine u. chemische Geologie. 3. Bd. Allgemeine Geologie. 1. Abthl. Die Erstarrungskruste u. die Lehre vom Metamorphismus. Berlin: Besser. 6 M.
 SCHMID, A. Erkenntnislehre. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Herder. 9 M.
 USSEL, L. A travers le Japon: climat, géologie, forêts etc. Paris: Rothschild. 20 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BRANDSTETTER, R. Prolegomena zu e. urkundlichen Geschichte der Luzerner Mundart. Einsiedeln: Benziger. 2 M.
 FRAENKEL, M. Die Inschriften v. Pergamon. 1. Bd. Bis zum Ende der Königszeit. Berlin: Spemann. 50 M.
 FÜRST, J. Glossarium graeco-hebraicum od. der griech. Wörterschatz der jüd. Midraschwerke. 1. Lfg. Strassburg: Trübner. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 GOLDZIEHR, I. Muhammedanische Studien. 2. Thl. Halle: Niemeyer. 12 M.
 GROEPP, A. De Euripidis versibus logaedicis. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 HERZFELD, G. Die Räthsel d. Exzerbuches u. ihr Verfasser. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 9 M.
 OHLERT, A. Die deutsche Schule u. das klassische Altertum. Hannover: Meyer. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE HERO OF THE CHALDEAN EPIC.

Queen's College, Oxford: November 1, 1890.

In the newly-published number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record, Mr. Pinches announces a discovery which is of considerable interest to Assyriologists. The phonetic reading has been found at last of the name of the hero of the Chaldean Epic, hitherto provisionally read as Gishubar. It proves to be Gilgames.

Now this is evidently the same name as that of Gilgames, given in the Hist. Anim. of Aelian (xii. 21), which has been corrected into Thilgames, as we now see, erroneously. Gilgames, it is stated, was the son of the daughter of Sakkhoras, king of the Babylonians. The king had been forewarned that he would be slain by his grandson, and accordingly had imprisoned his daughter in a tower to prevent the prophecy from being fulfilled. Of course, a husband surreptitiously made his way to the imprisoned lady, and a child was born, who was flung from the tower, but saved by an eagle while in mid-air, and brought up by a gardener. In the latter part of the story the legend of Sargon of Accad seems to have been attached to that of Gilgames.

The story is so closely related to that of Akrisios and Danaë that it is difficult not to believe it to have been the origin of the latter. If so, Gilgames will be the prototype of Perseus. This will account for the points of resemblance between the adventures of Perseus and those of Héraklēs the double of the Chaldean hero.

A. H. SAYCE.

THE LANGUAGE OF THE MICMAC INDIANS—THE WORD "TOBOGGAN."

Cambridge: November 4, 1890.

By the kindness of the Hon. G. E. Foster, Minister of Finance, Ottawa, Canada, I have received a copy of an English-Micmac Dictionary, compiled by the late Dr. S. T. Rand, an enthusiastic missionary. The Micmacs are an aboriginal tribe of the Algonquin family, inhabiting the maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada; and the Parliament of the Dominion wisely granted an appropriation to aid in the publication of the work.

It has been interesting to hunt in this work for certain words, known to some of the Algonquin tribes, that have found their way into English. Micmac has, however, no forms answering to "moose," "opossum," "squaw," and several others. But it illustrates the few words following.

I must premise that the symbols used have English values. Thus, short o is like o in "not"; short u as u in "gun"; long o as o in "no"; ee as ee in "meet"; a as a in "father" (but short); and a circumflexed, for which I write aa, as aa in "baa"; ow as ow in "now."

A house is wigwom; cf. E. "wigwam." A shoe or mocassin is mkusun, accented on the second syllable; and the initial m is vocalic. Shoes is mkus'unul. An axe is tumee'gun, accented on ee, clearly a related word to "tomahawk." A chief is sakumow, clearly the same as "sagamore," given in the Imperial Dictionary as a word for an Indian chief, and probably allied to "sachem." As a specimen of a compound word, with which the language abounds, we may take sakumôgwom, i.e. a chief's wigwam.

But the greatest gain is that here we find the true origin of "toboggan," which has always been said to be of Canadian-Indian origin. The true Micmac form is tobaakun, accented on aa, and meaning a sled or a sledge. After much hunting in many books, this is the first time I have ever lighted upon really good authority for this word. The o and u are both short. The word must either be from Micmac, or from some dialect very closely related to it.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

OGAMS AND RUNES IN MAN.

Ramsey, Isle of Man: October 28, 1890.

I have just seen Prof. Browne's interesting letter in the ACADEMY of October 18.

With respect to his paragraph concerning the "controversy in the ACADEMY on the readings of the Manx runes," I think it is due to the memory of the late Dr. Vigfusson to say that, on a second visit by him to the Isle of Man during the summer following, he called at Ballaugh Rectory, and informed my father that he had come expressly to acknowledge that he was mistaken in some particulars in his reading of the Michael inscriptions, and that my reading was correct. Being informed that he wished to see me, I was subsequently able to meet him at Andreas and to accompany him to Bride, when he admitted that I was right in some cases, but held to his own opinion in others. I expected that he would have written to the ACADEMY, or in some other way have published his revised readings; but I am not aware that he did so.

I join in the hope expressed by Prof. Browne as to the housing of our old crosses, but I think that for several reasons it would be better to have them all collected into one room. If preserved in their own parishes, there should at least be a complete collection of casts in the Island Museum; but I trust Mr. Browne will not delay his next visit till all are safely housed, as I fear that will not be for several years—if ever.

P. M. C. KERMODE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 9, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Bulgaria," by Mr. J. G. C. Minchin.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Authority in the Sphere of Morals and Intellect," by Prof. Henry Nettleship.

MONDAY, NOV. 10, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: "Chemistry of Vehicles and Varnishes," by Prof. A. H. Church.

8 p.m. Library Association: "Some Misleading Titles of Modern Books," by Mr. Joseph Gilbert.

TUESDAY, NOV. 11, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Presentation of Medals, Premiums, and Prizes; "Steam on Common Roads," by Mr. John McLaren.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "British East Africa," by Mr. G. S. Mackenzie.

8.30 p.m. Geographical.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 12, 8 p.m. Geological: "A New Species of Trionyx from the Miocene of Malta, and a Chelonian Scapula from the London Clay," by Mr. R. Lydekker;

"Specimens collected by Mr. W. Gowland in the Korea," by Mr. T. H. Holland;

"The Stratigraphy of the Bagshot Beds of the London Basin (North Side)," by the Rev. A. Irving.

THURSDAY, NOV. 13, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: "Chemistry of Pigments," by Prof. A. H. Church.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Chemistry of Secondary Cells," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton and Messrs. C. G. Lamb and E. W. Smith.

8 p.m. Mathematics: "The Influence of Applied on the Progress of Pure Mathematics," by the President;

"Spherical Harmonics of Fractional Order," by Mr. R. A. Sampson;

"Proofs of Steiner's Theorem relating to Circumscribed and Inscribed Conics," by Prof. G. B. Mathews;

"An Algebraic Integral of Two Differential Equations," by Mr. R. A. Roberts;

"Geometrical Constructions," by Osher Ber.

FRIDAY, NOV. 14, 8 p.m., New Shakspeare: a Paper by Mr. P. Z. Round.

8 p.m. Ruskin Society: "The First Two Volumes of Modern Painters," by Mr. Sydney Robjohns.

SCIENCE.

Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages. By William Wright. (Cambridge: University Press.)

The above-named volume, which has been edited by the competent hands of Prof. Robertson Smith, will make Semitic scholars feel more keenly than ever the loss they have sustained in Dr. Wright. Every page bears the marks of that profound acquaintance with the majority of the Semitic languages, that sobriety of judgment and ready recognition of the labour of others, which distinguished the late Professor of Arabic at Cambridge. He could have left us no worthier or more important legacy than this first systematic attempt to found a comparative grammar of the Semitic dialects. Thirty-five years ago, M. Renan promised us a similar work. But the introduction which he wrote for it remains a splendid torso; the work itself has never been accomplished.

It is clear that special difficulties must stand in the way of the fulfilment of a task from which even the scientific imagination of M. Renan has shrunk. Though the students of the Indo-European languages have pointed out the road along which the comparative grammarians of the Semitic idioms must travel, though they have founded the method which must be followed by all who would analyse language scientifically, and have discovered not only the laws which preside over the creation and decay of grammar, but also the limits within which the action of such laws can be traced—the scientific treatment of Semitic grammar has awaited in vain its Bopp or Schleicher. It is true that the individual languages of the Semitic group have received minute—perhaps too minute—attention; it is also true that special points in the general grammar of the group have been investigated by Nöldeke, Philippi, Haupt, Barth, and other scholars. It nevertheless remains a fact that less has been done to analyse successfully the forms of Semitic speech and to determine the phonetic laws which govern it than has been done by Bleek for the Bantu languages of Africa.

There have been several reasons for this. The connexion between the Semitic languages is as close as that between the several members of the Romanic family, and the parent-speech which stood to them in the same relation that Latin stood to the Romanic family has been lost. It has not been possible, therefore, to discover those striking phonetic changes and etymologies which had so much to do with the early progress of comparative Indo-European philology. Moreover, few of the students of Semitic grammar have been trained in the school of comparative Indo-European grammar. Semitic philology is still much in the same condition as that of Greek or Latin at the beginning of the present century; and statements are still possible in the works of the most eminent Semitic scholars which would astonish a pupil of Brugmann. But, above all, until lately the Semitic philologist has been unable to trace the history of Semitic speech back to any very early date by means of contemporaneous monuments, while the documents which he possessed were written in an alphabet which ignored the vowels. The decipherment of Assyrian has supplied both these deficiencies, and, from this point of view, Assyrian well deserves to be called the Sanskrit of the Semitic family of speech. We need not be surprised that most, if not all, of the recent attempts to analyse scientifically the forms of Semitic grammar have been made either by Assyriologists or with the help of Assyrian. It is Assyrian, for instance, which has proved that the distinction between the Arabic hh and kh goes back to the parent-speech, and which has thrown such an important light on the origin of the pronouns and verbal forms.

Like Sanskrit, however, Assyrian has very far departed from the purity of primitive Semitic speech. Its contact with the non-Semitic Accadian or Sumerian dialects brought with it the inevitable result of phonetic change and decay. Its phonology is thoroughly degenerate. The characteristic Semitic sounds have either partially or wholly disappeared, and originally distinct sounds have amalgamated one with the other. In fact, four thousand years ago the language of Babylonia was already more advanced on the road of phonetic decay than even the Egyptian Arabic of to-day. If we would find the one Semitic language which has remained true to the earliest alphabet of Semitic speech we must turn to Arabic. Arabic phonology has been preserved from corruption because the peninsula in which Arabic was spoken has been preserved from the inroads of foreign tongues. Late though the literary records of Qoranic Arabic may be, the language they embody takes us back to the beginnings of Semitic speech. It is only the vocabulary of Arabic which has suffered from the intrusion of the stranger.

The primitive character of Arabic phonology and grammar supports the view which I have long maintained, and to which, I am glad to see, Prof. Wright rallied in his later years, that the cradle of the Semitic parent-speech was Central Arabia. This does not of course exclude the view that behind this cradle lay a still older African cradle, the home alike of the mother of the parent-speech and of the languages out of which sprang the old Egyptian and the Hamitic idioms of Africa. At the same time, this home seems to me to have been more probably in Southern Arabia than on the coasts of the neighboring continent.

It is possible that light may be thrown upon the question by the inscriptions discovered by Dr. Glaser in the South of Arabia, which reveal the existence of a powerful and cultivated kingdom in the Arabian peninsula at a very early period. If Dr. Glaser is right, some of the Minaean inscriptions he has collected go back to the age of the Hyksos in Egypt; at any rate he and Prof. Hommel have made it clear that the kingdom of Saba or Sheba was preceded by that of Ma'in, and that consequently the Minaean or Himyaritic alphabet has an older history than the Phoenician. It would seem to follow that Prof. Hommel is right in holding that what Prof. D. H. Müller has called the Proto-Arabic alphabet is the source both of the Himyaritic and of the Phoenician, and that this fact will have to be taken into consideration in all future enquiries into the origin of the alphabet. It would certainly explain why it is that the Minaean alphabet possesses what the Phoenician alphabet does not—special characters, not derived from any others, for denoting certain sounds which belonged to primitive Semitic phonology but had been lost in the language of Canaan. It will also explain the names of many of the Phoenician letters which have hitherto been a mystery. It is only in the Minaean, not in the Phoenician alphabet, that the forms of the letters Aleph, Beth, Pe, and others resemble the objects after which they have been respectively named: "ox-(head)," "house," and "mouth."

If I were asked which parts of Dr. Wright's book seem to me most to need future expansion and modification, I should say the chapters on phonology and the formation of nouns. The latter subject, indeed, is hardly touched upon; while, as regards phonology, Dr. Wright's attitude is rather that of a chronicler of facts, or supposed facts, than of the scientific analyst. But the work was not intended to rival a comparative grammar of the Indo-European languages. It consists confessedly of lectures, and was designed to guide and stimulate others in following the path which it marks out. The good beginning of a work is half the whole, and what Dr. Wright has done is more than the good beginning of a comparative grammar of the Semitic tongues. Perhaps he was too profound a scholar to have done more. Bopp founded linguistic science because his scholarship was not too searching to prevent him from forming bold theories at the risk of making mistakes. Dr. Wright does not make mistakes; we may differ from his conclusions, now and then, but we know that his facts are correct. It is pleasant to feel that the future historian of comparative Semitic grammar will say that the writer of the first comparative Semitic grammar was—like Edmund Castle, the compiler of the first comparative dictionary of the Semitic languages—an Englishman whose authority on any matter of Semitic scholarship was never called in question.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PĀLI LEXICOGRAPHY.

(1) Vani.

Dedham, Essex.

In Dr. Wenzel's interesting communication to the ACADEMY of August 30 (No. 950, pp. 177-8), the poetical word vani is wrongly explained as "voice." No doubt the writer was thinking of vāni, "voice," without paying much heed to the exact sense demanded by the context, hence the origin of the mistake.

For vanim we ought properly to read vanim, with dental and not cerebral n; but this change may be due to the preceding labial, as we find in the best texts onata for avana. The corresponding Sanskrit word is vani, "wish, desire," from the root van, "to ask, beg." It belongs to the older language of poetry; the only authority for its use, given by B. and R., is the Atharva Veda Sanhita.

The passage where vani occurs is as follows:

"Tenānusiṭṭho idhamāgato 'smi
Vanibbako cakkhupathāni yācitam:
Vanibbako [vanibbino?] mayha vanim anuttaram."

(Jāt. iv., p. 404.)

"Commanded by him [Indra] here am I come to ask-for (your) eyes: for me, a beggar, [this is an] incomparable request." The play upon the related words vani and vani-bbaka

(= Sk. vanipako = vaniyako) cannot be adequately represented in a translation. The commentator is quite right in explaining vani by yācana, "request."

In Udāna, p. 53, v. 5, to which Dr. Wenzel refers, vani has the sense of "begging"; and "dhammena na vanim care" must mean "one should not go about begging or soliciting alms by means of the Dhamma"—that is, one should not preach the Dhamma for the sake of getting a living, as some false Bhikkhus or mendicants of the Buddhist and other religious orders were wont to do. For the expression "vanim carati," compare the Sanskrit phrase, "vanim āyati," to come a-begging.

We often find in the Gāthās of the Jātaka stories curious uses of words not found in Sanskrit; for example, in Jāt. i., p. 283, dhamati, "to blow," is used in the sense of vādeti, to beat or sound the drum. "Dhame dhame nātidhame, atidhantam hi pāpakam dhantena satam laddham, atidhantena nāsitan ti," sound, sound the drum (but), do not overbeat it, for mischance (befell) him that overdid it. By one playing the drum (in moderation) a hundred coins were earned, (but) grievous loss by overbeating.

Dr. Wenzel is naturally puzzled as to the etymology of kirāsa (Jāt. iv., p. 223). There appears to be no such vocable in Sanskrit, though an original **kim-rāsa* in the sense of "gambling" might possibly be the source of the word. Some corruption has evidently crept into the Jātaka text, to judge by the various readings given by the editor—gharāsa, kirāsi, &c. Looking at the line wherein kirāsa occurs ("Gottham majjam kirāsam vā sabbhāni kirānāni ca"), it seems probable that the kir of kirāsam is wrong, and is due to the kir in kirānāni. We ought, perhaps, to amend the text by reading vilāsam, "sport, pastime."

The Brahmacari was bound (1) to avoid all idle conversation (gotthi)—he must, therefore, keep away from all assemblies, public meetings, and family gatherings; (2) to abstain from all spirituous liquors (majja)—he was, therefore, to keep away from the grogshop (pānāgāra); (3) not to engage in any sport or pastime (vilāsa), whether innocent or otherwise. Singing, dancing, music, wrestling and boxing matches, dice, games of every description would come under this head. The word sabbhāni (= sabbhāyo, "assemblies") refers, probably, to gotthā; and kirānāni, "squanderings" (?) to both majja and kirāsa (vilāsa?).

In explaining kirāsa by dhutta kerā-tikajana, "gamblers and cheats," the commentator had in view only that kind of sport which involved gambling and trickery. The compound dhuttak does not occur in Sanskrit literature, the equivalent term being dhūrta-kitava. The word kerātika (not very common in Pāli) is usually referred to the Sanskrit kairāta from kirāta, the name of a savage people; but Pāli always has the cerebral t, as in Sumaṅgala, p. 289—"te kerā-tikā c'e'va andhabālā."

It is somewhat curious that both dhūrta and kitava signify the "thorn apple," as well as "sharper" (compare Sk. krūra = cāta = kārpātika, kāpātika, "a cheat"), from some root meaning "cutting, sharp." Kirāta and Kairāta are used to denote a sort of gentian, probably from a root signifying "biting, bitter." Wilson gives kairātika (with cerebral t) in the sense of "a species of poison," and this is nearer in form (though not in sense) to the Pāli kerātika.

* Dhuttakerātikajana does not, I think, signify "the society of tipplers and charlatans," as tipping is included in majja.

† The usual etymology of kitava is kin-tava!

To go back to the form kirāsa, the variant reading gharāsa, probably for girāsa, suggests a possible etymology for this word. There is no doubt that kirāsa means "gambling, dicing." There is in Sanskrit a root glāh, "to play at dice," from which we get a noun glāha (like graha, from grah) with the same meaning as Sk. glāha, "gambling, dicing." This would become in Pāli—(1) kilāha = gilāha (for the change of g to kil compare Sk. glāsnū with Pāli kilāsu); (2) kilāsa (for the change of h to s compare Sk. snāhika, goliha with Pāli snesika, golisa); (3) kirāsa (for the change of r to l compare Sk. kila, ālabana, with Pāli kira, āramana).

Dr. Wenzel clearly shows that the commentator did not always know the true signification of the old words in the Jātaka verses. We have a very good instance of this in Jāt. iv., p. 221—"Aggi pite na hāpito"—"the fire has not been kept up by thee." The commentator wrongly explains hāpita by jalita ("lighted"). He did not see that aggim hāpeti was equivalent to aggim paricarati, to keep a sacrificial fire (aggihutta) constantly burning. Hāpeti = paricarati (used also in the sense of "to worship") may represent an original **hāvayati* (cf. Pāli hāvaka, "one who sacrifices," the causal of the root hu, or **hvā-payati* (= hāvayati), from the root hū or hvā).

There is another and very common verb hāpeti in Pāli, which is the causal of jahāti, from the root hā.

(2) Karoti.

Karoti, not in Childers's Dictionary, signifies a bowl or cup. In Pāli, according to Dr. Trenckner, it assumes the form kalopi or khalopi (Digha viii. 14; Majjhima i. 77; Mil. 107; Anguttara iii. 151; iv. 198, 4; Pug-gala iv. 24; Jāt. v. 252), and represents Sanskrit karoti, "basin, skull," with which we may compare Marathi karoti, karati, "a skull, shell"; Hindi katori, "a shallow cup or bowl." In Jāt. i., p. 243; ii., p. 363; iii., p. 225, rasa-karoti means "a sauce-bowl."

In Jāt. i., p. 204, karoti seems to be employed in quite a different sense as a substitute for supanna = suparna, a winged creature, something like a vulture, a garuḍa or garuḍa. "Uraga-karoti payassa ca hāri Madanayutā caturo ca mahantāti." The Commentary has the following explanation: "Karoti saddena supannā gahitā, tesam kira karoti nāma pāna-bhojanam tena nāmam labhissu."

For pānabhojanam = food and drink, one is tempted offhand to read pāna-bhājanam, "a bowl of water." The old commentator probably connected supanna with pāna and panna (= pañña = pāniya), "water, drink," taking karoti, perhaps, to mean "a water-bowl," which suits the original sense of the word. But karoti is used in the passage quoted above in the sense of "bowl-holder," corresponding to the Sanskrit karotapāni.

In Mahāvastu, p. 30, we find Yaksas called "bowl-holders," karotapānayo nāma yaksā mālādhārā nāma yaksā sadāmatā nāma yaksā. See Divyāvadāna, pp. 218, 319, where the karotapānis are called devas.

Burnouf, in his Introduction (2nd ed.), pp. 536, 7,* gives, on the authority of Csoma, a Tibetan word gnod-sbyin lag-na-gjong-thog, "a mischievous imaginary spirit who holds a basin in his hand," which is evidently a translation of the Sanskrit karotapāni yaksā, and this evidently answers to the Pāli karoti. Burnouf adds:

"Tout ce que nous en savons est dû à Georgi qui les [yaksā] représente occupés à puiser avec leur vases l'eau que les flots de la mer rejettent sur le mont Mèru. . . . Le nom que leur donnent les Thibétains rappelle en partie celui de kumbhānda."

In the Jātaka story, however, the epithet karoti is not applied to Yaksas or to Kumbhāndas, but to Supannas. The latter were included among the classes regarded as deceased ancestors, to whose manes presentation of water in a bowl (ornamental?) was made daily (see Manu iii. 196, 202). There may have been a kind of water-bowl, called karoti, in shape resembling a bird, or ornamented with the figure of a bird.

It is perhaps a karoti that figures in one of the Hindu signs of the Zodiac as Aquarius. "[The Sun.] The first of the jar (Aquarius) is a man with a vulture's head . . . busied in obtaining . . . water and food [pāna-bhojana]." See Colebrook's Essays ii., p. 234. The passage we have quoted from the Jātaka book has a few more curious expressions that need some special notice.

Payassa hāri for payahāri is, according to the Commentary, used with reference to kumbhānda, which Prof. Davids renders by "dwarfs."

The phrase payassa hāri seems to mean "water-carriers," and, as applied to the kumbhāndas, denotes a class of supernatural beings attendant on Virūhaka, the regent of the Southern quarter. Perhaps they appear also in the old signs of the Zodiac, for, according to Hardy, the eleventh sign of the Zodiac among the Buddhists was Kumbha, a white man holding a water-jar. Cf. "[Venus] a man . . . carries and transports vases. . . . He is the last of the Kumbha" (Colebrook's Essays ii., pp. 324, 5).

In calling Kumbhāndas "payassa hāri" there may have been an attempt at supplying a popular derivation for the word kumbhānda from kum bha. The corresponding epithet to payassa hāri in the Mahāvastu is mālādhārā, in Thibetan phreng-thogs, "having garlands." The original term may have been vāridhārā, "water-carriers," i.e., clouds.*

Madanayutā, an epithet of yaksas, corresponds to the Buddhist Sanskrit sadāmatā, but with a slight variation of meaning.

Madanayutā may signify "fond of drink," and would in a rough way answer to sadāmatā, "always drunk." The Jātaka Commentary adds that the Yaksas are said to be yuddhamsonḍā, "war-drunk." But madanayutā may also mean "fond of sexual delights," an epithet more strictly applicable to the Gandhabbas than to the Yaksas.†

The Kulāvaka-jātaka story is evidently a Buddhist version of an old Hindu legend. Čakra or Indra, in order to keep off the Asuras or Titans from his territories, is said to have placed "guards" in five quarters. Taking these in the order they stand in the Jātaka tale, they are as follows:

1. Nāgas or Uragā (placed in the West).‡
2. Suparnas or Karoti (placed in the East).
3. Kumbhāndas or Payassa hāri (placed in the South).
4. Yaksas or Madanayutā (placed in the North).
5. Cattāro mahārājā or Caturo mahantā (the four great kings) are the rulers or regents of * Kumbhānda may be a Prakrit form of kabandha, (1) a cloud, (2) the name of a demon. The Jātaka Commentary says that some explain kumbhānda as equivalent to dānavarakkhasā.

† In the Meghadūta we are familiar with the affectionate Yaksa who employs the cloud as a messenger to his banished wife.

‡ The Jātaka tale does not give the position of these "guards." This agrees with Dhammapada, p. 194: "Sakko heṭṭhā samudde nāgānam ārak-kham adāsi, tato supannānam kumbhāndānam yakkhānam tato catunnam mahārājānam."

the four quarters, and lords over the four classes of guards:

1. Virūpakkha, regent of the West.
2. Dhatarattha, regent of the East.
3. Virūhaka, regent of the South.
4. Kuvera or Vessavana, regent of the North.

According to Buddhist traditions, the abode of Indra was surrounded by four mansions inhabited by Nāgas, Garulas (Supannas), Kumbhāndas, and Yakkhas. In the Mahāsāmaya-sutta we find Dhatarattha mentioned as ruler of the Gandhabbas, a race always described as hostile to the Supannas. This seems quite at variance with the account that places the Supannas in the Eastern quarter; but both Gandhabbas and Supannas were sky-dwellers, and hence, perhaps, the confusion.

Popular etymology may have had something to do with the change. In Sumaṅgala i., p. 40, Dhatarattha is called Hansa-rāja, king of swans or king of flamingos; but, in Pāli, Hansa-rāja may mean King Hansa, who in Hindu mythology was a chief of the Gandharvas. Dhatarattha represents Sk. Dhṛita-rāstra (1) the name of a king, (2) a sort of hansa; and this may account for the Supannas or fine-winged creatures being placed by later writers under the rule of Dhatarattha (see Jāt. iii., pp. 104, 257).

For some few details respecting the Regents of the Quarters see Ātānātiya-sutta in Grimblot's Sept Suttas Palis, pp. 321-337; Mahāsāmaya-sutta, ib., p. 285; Petavatthu, i. 4. 2; Hardy's Man of Buddhism (2nd ed.), pp. 24, 25; Kern's Saddharma-Pundarika, pp. 4, 373.

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

It is proposed that the memorial to the late Father Perry shall take the form of an equatorial telescope, with a 15-inch object-glass, to be erected at Stonyhurst. The total cost is estimated at about £2,700, towards which subscriptions are invited. The committee includes the names of the astronomers-royal of England, Scotland, and Ireland; of Sir George Stokes, Mr. Norman Lockyer, and M. J. Janssen. The hon. secretary is Mr. A. C. Thomas, 30, North John-street, Liverpool.

At the last general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution, the following presents were acknowledged: The apparatus employed by Prof. Elihu Thomson in his experiments on electro-magnetic repulsion, from Dr. J. A. Fleming; and an old engraving (1809) of the library of the Royal Institution, from Mr. Hervey Pechell.

We have received a paper on "The Cheapest Form of Light," by S. P. Langley and F. W. Very, reprinted from the August number of the American Journal of Science. Mr. Langley's name is already known from his researches into the wastefulness of all industrial modes of producing light, in which he proved that (e.g.) in the ordinary Argand gas-burner over 99 per cent. of the radiant energy is lost for illumination. He now approaches the same problem from another point of view. By an elaborate series of both photometric and thermal investigation on the radiation of the Cuban firefly (Pyrophorus noctilucus), conducted with special apparatus at the Allegheny Observatory, he arrives at the startling conclusion that the light of the insect is not accompanied by any measurable heat; other than that heat which the luminosity itself comprises and which is but another name for the same energy. The process by which the fire-fly produces its light is still unknown; but from a comparison of the opinions of naturalists, physicists, and chemists, it appears to be established that its light is not indissolubly associated with any so-called vital principle, but is a result of certain chemical combinations. Hence the joint authors maintain that nothing forbids us to suppose that the same light may some day be produced in the laboratory. And, therefore, we are justified in hoping that we may yet discover the method of obtaining an enormously greater result than we now do from our present means of producing light. Something of this kind, if we recollect rightly, was foreshadowed in Bulwer-Lytton's anonymous novel of The Coming Race.

* I am indebted to Prof. Senart's Mahāvastu for this reference.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

IN addition to Mr. T. G. Pinches's paper, noticed elsewhere in the ACADEMY, the current number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record contains several interesting articles. Dr. Hayes Ward comments on several cylinders in the collection of Sir Henry Peek; Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen announces the discovery of fragments of a Babylonian legend closely resembling the story of the Fall in Genesis; Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie concludes his paper on "The Calendar Plant of China, the Cosmic Tree, and the Date Palm of Babylonia"; and in a second article, on "The Onomastic Similarity of Nai Hwang-ti of China and Nakhunte of Súsiana," he replies to the criticism of Prof. Legge against the late W. F. Meyers, Prof. R. K. Douglas and himself, with reference to the name of the Chinese hero.

UNDER the title of Bible Translations (Elliot Stock) Dr. R. N. Cust—who describes himself on the title-page as honorary governor of the British and Foreign Bible Society—has published a very useful catalogue of all the known languages and dialects into which the Bible, or any part of it, has been translated up to the middle of the current year. He gives three lists. First, languages in alphabetical order, numbering 269 in all, besides 62 subordinate dialects, together with information about the locality, the population of speakers, the probable life of the language, and the amount of translation-work done. It is notable that he gives exactly the same number of speakers (two hundred millions) for both English and Mandarin. Second, the same languages grouped geographically under continents and countries, with a statement of the Bibles, &c., printed in more than one language, and of the written character employed. It appears that there are 21 English "di-glotts," 12 French, and 6 German. Third, the same languages classified in continents according to their linguistic families. Here, the most significant fact is that Australia is entirely unrepresented. Finally, in an appendix, he classifies the languages as—conquering, permanent, isolated, of uncertain future, moribund, dead, and obsolete; enumerates the versions in existence before the foundation of the Bible Society in 1804; and gives the names of some of the principal translators. The only matter of importance omitted is any reference to different versions in the same language; but Dr. Cust's object has been linguistic rather than bibliographical.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Oct. 4.) E. G. CREW, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—The secretary read a report of the work of the past session, and gave a notice of the books that had been added to the library during that period. Miss Florence Herapath was elected president for this (the sixteenth) session, when the following plays are to be considered: "Macbeth," "The Knight of the Burning Pestle," "Pericles," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Duchess of Malfi," "Troilus and Cressida," "Coriolanus," and "The Virgin Martyr." The hon. sec. (9, Gordon-road, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the society's library, which now consists of 493 volumes.

(Saturday, Oct. 25.)

MISS FLORENCE HERAPATH, president, in the chair.—Miss Louisa Mary Davies, in a paper on "'Macbeth' as a Ghost Story," said that to people of to-day the play is a treasure-house of all the beauties, and anyone wishing to take from it a theme for an essay is like an artist in some exquisite Swiss valley, who, enraptured with the many fine points of view, knows not where to begin. Passing by the great problems of—

"Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute," which are here presented to us, and also the psychological studies of character, and not stopping to say anything about the marvellous lines, phrases, and terms of expression which have become current coin of conversation, we may say that to the audience before whom this tragedy was first performed these aspects would scarcely present themselves. To the mass of the listeners it would most likely be a gigantic ghost story, with plenty of murder and marvel in it. From this point of view the management throughout leaves nothing to be desired, and doubtless those first audiences felt some sympathy with the man who had been so bitterly fooled by friends—

"That keepeth the word of promise to our ear
And break it to our hope."

—Mr. John Taylor read a paper on "Witchcraft in Shakspeare's Time." No gleam pierces the gloomy atmosphere of "Macbeth"; no flashes of humour or of wit relieve the horror of the mightiest tale of murder ever told. Even in a solemn cathedral there are grotesque miseries, gurgoyles, corbels, and bosses to vary the mood of the observer; but in "Macbeth," which is as much a masterpiece of literary construction as a cathedral is of architecture, there is a complete absence of even fantastic conceit. In truth, antic and jest would have been impertinent; and although the introduction of the weird sisters seems to us almost a caricature, it must be remembered that witches and witchcraft were a religious and philosophic belief of the age of the Shaksperian drama. Whether Shakspeare was a believer in the prevalent delusion has been questioned—the more especially as he reminds us that the poet's imagination bodies forth the forms of things unknown to experience, his pen turning them to shape and giving to airy nothings an embodied existence. But this applies rather to the shapes of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," or of an Ariel. Goblins, fairies, elves were visionary creations and playful fancies, but witchcraft was universally believed to be a terrible reality. If anything is with certainty known of the character of Shakspeare, it is that he was an intense Conservative in matters of Church and State, and, in fact, on all points of generally-accepted beliefs. When Bacon, Raleigh, Selden, Sir Thomas Browne, Sir Matthew Hale, Hobbes, Cudworth, the gentle Dr. Henry More, and the patient and inquiring Boyle professed or affected belief in witch incantation, or, at least, consented with popular credulity on the point, it may be concluded that sceptics were few, and that poets were hardly of them. For 2000 years civilised humanity believed in the power of witchcraft and magical incantation. Macbeth was not a truer believer in the power of witches to untie the winds to fight against the churches and to raise the foaming billows to confound and swallow up navigation than the foolish pedant James I., whose book on Demonology was the death-warrant to numberless persecuted old women. The follies connected with witchcraft are a shame to morals and religion and a disgrace to human intellect.—A short discussion followed the reading of Mr. P. A. Daniel's "Time-Analysis" of "Macbeth," and a reference to Professor Wilson's remarks on the subject in "Dies Boreales" (Blackwood, November, 1849).

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Oct. 20.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, president, in the chair.—The president exhibited some of the stakes and pottery from a Wattle-hut on Loch Maree, and (for comparison) a pile and some pottery from the lake-dwelling of Robenhausen, and also a rude earthen vessel from Hauxton, which in the texture of the ware and the plainness of the rim much resembled the urn from Loch Maree.—Mr. Jenkinson exhibited a MS. letter in Dutch from P. Kaetz, a London stationer, to John Siberch, the first printer at Cambridge, the letter having been found by Mr. E. Gordon Duff in the binding of a book in the Chapter library at Westminster. Mr. Jenkinson regretted that he had been unable to get a translation of the letter made to bring before the meeting, but he briefly stated what he had made out of its contents. The date of the letter was gone, but Kaetz's name first appears in books as publisher about 1524; and the letter was of interest as suggesting a probability of Siberch's presence at Cambridge after he had ceased to print there in December, 1522. Mr. Bowes, who stated that he had for many years been in search for some information about Siberch, congratulated Mr. Jenkinson on the discovery of this letter, and hoped that other discoveries might follow. Mr. Bradshaw had made an examination of the eight known books printed at Cambridge 1521–22, and had determined their order of issue, with the result that Linacre's translation of Galen De Temperamentis, the book that had been accepted by all writers as the first book printed in Cambridge, was not really the first, but Dr. Henry Bullock's Oration. Mr. Bradshaw's paper had been printed, and told everything that could be learned from the books. But by the present letter we were for the first time brought into touch with the man, John Siberch.—The Rev. H. W. P. Stevens, in his notes on the parish of Tadlow, began the history of the parish at Domesday, and traced it through various records down to a survey of the parish made in 1750, from which it appeared that cherries, apples, and pears had at one time been much more grown than they are at present. The parish registers afforded some interesting entries; for instance in 1744, Widow Swann was the overseer of the poor. The gaps caused by time in the following entry were tantalising:—"Goodman Parker, reputed an hundred years old, was buried on St. Michael's Day, 1714, . . . really thought he prolonged his life by . . . pills." But the mineral spring at Tadlow, and not the (now unknown) pills, may have produced the longevity. A list of the parsons of Tadlow, beginning with 1347, had been compiled. Syr Robert Ashby, the parson in 1539, had (it appeared from the list of church goods) "one cope of blue satten." The Cole MSS. tell us that in 1595, November 3, Mr. Chapman was rated for the vicarage of Tadlow, jointly with the rector of East Hatley, to find one pike furnished. In 1609, April 4, he was rated to raise jointly with the said rector one pair of curuls and a pike furnished. Of the Rev. F. Say, buried in 1705, the register states "he was a peacemaker in his parish." This Mr. Say, it seems, was (when Lord North was prime minister) the owner of Downing-street in London (called after the name of the grandfather of the founder of Downing College). Mr. Dawes, afterwards Dean of Hereford, was a noteworthy parson, as his lifework had been to extend and improve the education of the working classes. When Mr. Dawes was tutor of Downing, the college combination-room acquired a social and convivial character second to that of no other college in the university. Here it was the delight of such men as Whewell, Peacock, Sedgwick, and Romilly to assemble. Dawes voted with Sedgwick and Henslow for the admission of Nonconformists to the university. This cost him the mastership of the college. Mr. Sykes's incumbency was of great mark in the history of the parish, as through his energy and liberality the churches of Tadlow and East Hatley were restored, and schools were built in each parish. The two following events are curious—first, that there existed at one time a manor of Hobbledods at Tadlow—the Laver MSS. 1639 (=Harl. 6768) tell us that "John Brograve held ye Manor of Hobbledods 20 Hen. VIII. of Thomas St. George and Joan his wife, now held of ye Honor of Clare"; and, secondly, Laud tells us that on Christmas Day, 1638, "in sermon-time a dog came to the table [in the chancel] and took the loaf of bread prepared for the Holy Sacrament in his mouth and ran away with it." This event is thought to have led to the episcopal injunction of railing in the altars. Some of the Tadlow collections or briefs are historically of interest. July 28, 1661, "Collected towards the relief of Phillip Dondulo, a turk converted, the suine of 2/6."—November 10, 1661. "towards the advance of the fishing trade, 6s. 6d." April 3, 1692, "for ye inhabitants of Potton for a fire 00. 10. 09." The gap between Potton town and Potton church seems to be explained by a fire such as this. Dr. E. Liveing, of Queen Anne-square, London, a descendant of the Downings, had kindly furnished Mr. Stevens with data to trace the descent of the family from a Mr. Downing, head master of Ipswich grammar school early in the seventeenth century; the late Serjeant Barnardiston, as well as Mr. Cecil Raikes, were found to be descendants of the Downing family. Mr. Stevens quoted from the Cole MSS. an account not generally known of the preservation of the life of Charles II. by the first Sir George Downing. Some provincialisms now in use were mentioned; the etymologies of most of them were, however, unknown; such as Horkey, a harvest supper; Cad, the smallest pig of a litter; unplunge, an unpleasant surprise; making a horse unready for unsaddling it, and the following sentence: "Shall I wait whiles [=until] eight o'clock? Or do you think if I come forward [=early] in the morning I shall happen on [=meet] him by these houses?" It was shown how some obsolete local words such as "upstart" and "mending the muckheap," could be made to restore a fairly vivid picture of part of the social life of the ancestors of the dwellers in our country villages. Prof. Skeat suggested that cad is derived from the French cadet, and that, in the word Tadlow, the latter syllable means a hill or burial-mound, the former being probably a personal name.—Mr. J. W. Bodger, of Peterborough, exhibited and described one gold and two silver Celtic coins, found in Peterborough in 1886, associated with bronze coins of Hadrian, Claudius, Domitian, and others; also bronze fibulae, men and women's finger rings, bangle, bodkin with eyelet slit, pottery and tiles, intermingled with bones of ox, sheep, boar, hare, &c.; bronze of Philip the Elder struck at Alexandria, found at Castor; bronze of Constantine the Great struck at Constantinopolis, found at Castor; silver and bronze coins from Gallienus to Constantine the younger, found at Castor; silver coin, Antoninus Pius, found at Waternewton; silver coin, Julius Caesar, found at Conington; one silver and seven bronze coins found at Woodstone Hill; sixteen bronze coins, from Nero to Gordianus III., including one of great beauty of Faustina the Younger, found at Sandy.

FINE ART.

THE ART MAGAZINES.

OUR (everybody's) old friend Mr. Birket Foster is the subject of the Christmas number of the Art Journal, which has certainly appeared in good time. Mr. Huish, in his biography, has traced Mr. Foster's artistic career with care and minuteness; and, in accordance with the prevailing fashion, has given us a chapter on "Birket Foster at Home," illustrated with drawings by the artist, and pictures of stained glass and other adornments of "The Hill." Surely, however, he has erred in giving the design on p. 31 to Mr. Burne Jones, instead of to Mr. Madox Browne. The frontispiece is an etching by Mr. Foster's own hand; but this and the "processes" of his later drawings compare very unfavourably with the beautiful woodcuts "from his earlier drawings on the block."

IN the current number of the Art Journal Mr. J. Bloundelle-Burton has an interesting paper on Caen illustrated by Mr. Herbert Railton, and Mr. D. S. Graham another on Hexham. The illustrations of both are in that clear touched pen-work, of which Mr. Joseph Pennell is such a master; though deficient in tone, it lends itself to the reproduction "processes" now so much in vogue. The articles on the Royal Academy in the last century are continued; but it is disappointing to find that the combined researches of Mr. Hodgson and Mr.

F. A. Eaton, the secretary, have discovered so little that is fresh to tell us.

THE editor of the Archaeological Journal deserves warm commendation. The annual meeting of the Archaeological Institute was held in August, and the new number of the Journal contains the three most important papers then read. Among the other contents are a note by Prof. Sayce on a Hittite seal, and two articles on Roman antiquities. Mr. F. Haverfield, of Lancing College, prints and explains some seventy inscriptions recently found in Britain. The article, it may be added, is fully illustrated. He says that he intends to publish annually an article of this sort, by which he will do for English readers and discoverers in Britain what M. Cagnat's Année Epigraphique does for epigraphy in general. We hope all finders of new inscriptions will send them to him. In another article Mr. Bunnell Lewis discourses upon "Roman Antiquities of the Middle Rhine." It is painfully obvious that Mr. Lewis has attempted a task quite beyond his powers. The paper appears to be the result of a visit to the Rhine, but the use to which that visit has been put may be shown by one example. There is a well-known inscription to the memory of a soldier who fell in the defeat of Varus; it is in the Bonn Museum and can be seen by any visitor. Of this inscription Mr. Lewis gives an inaccurate text, taken seemingly from the confessedly inaccurate engraving of Lindenschmit. He then mistranslates the inscription, and, in discussing it, assigns a wrong date to the defeat of Varus, and reveals his ignorance of epigraphy by saying that TRO "would, of course, stand for tribuno." The whole article contains much show of learning and a mass of miscellaneous references; but it is not exactly calculated to increase the credit of English archaeology.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS EXHIBITION.

FURNITURE and embroidery—these two crafts are (we are told by Mr. Walter Crane in his preface to the Catalogue) the leading features of the exhibition, and doubtless the Society has brought together some beautiful examples of both. The embroidery to which the west gallery is mainly devoted it would be difficult to overpraise so far as the execution and the arrangement of colour are concerned, and there are some examples of design not only fine but original. Ingenious at least and bold, if not altogether pleasant, is the wall-hanging, "Earth, Air, Fire, and Water," designed by Mr. Heywood Sumner (127); and very effective is Mrs. Reginald Hallward's somewhat kaleidoscopic design for a cushion worked in silks, by Miss Edith Bloxam (115); but for sweet and joyous colour and graceful lines there is little to compete with the curtain embroidered on blue linen after the design of Miss May Morris (117). A somewhat over undulation, destructive of rest, marks, however, this and many of the embroideries, and reaches a pitch of curliness and whirliness in Mr. Heywood Sumner's wall-hanging before-mentioned, which we hope is not a sign for the future. Among other pieces designed by Mr. W. Morris, the quilt worked in crewels on linen (132) should not be passed over on account of its want of colour; nor, though the whole effect of the colour is a little sickly, the beautiful wall-hanging of silk needlework in linen, sent also by the Royal School of Art Needlework (171). Many of the designs vary with more or less originality and sincere feeling the never-tiresome theme of bird and bough. One of the boldest and most charming of these is an embroidered curtain by Mrs. Thackeray Turner (166), whose taste is equally shown in an embroidered sofa-back, sweet in design and of delicate harmony (234). Some of the most delightful pieces are after the designs of Mr. Lewis Day. For skill in taking advantage of the gloss of silk to obtain effective play and gradation of colour, there are no embroideries more noticeable than a top of a stool worked by Mrs. Lewis Day (114), and (142) a front of a piano; while others like (118), a panel worked by Miss Clara Day, are of a daintier charm. Miss Hodding's table-centre, designed by F. A. Rawlence (95), is dainty also. Miss Ethel King Martyn's screen panel (125) with all kinds of birds rejoicing in all sorts of fruits and flowers growing on the same stem, is graceful and effective. But there are many more pieces to which the same epithets might be applied; and we can only call special attention to two curiosities, the Irish National Banner, belonging to Mr. Parnell, which scarcely shows Mr. Walter Crane's decorative genius at its best, and the quilt for a cot, designed by Miss May Morris, embroidered by Mrs. William Morris, which will delight children of all ages (if we may be allowed the paradox) by the admirable spirit and humour of its animals.

Of the furniture it may be said that so far as workmanship is concerned it is excellent, and that for design the plainest pieces are the best. We are glad to see here specimens from some firms which have not been represented at these exhibitions before—from Messrs. Collinson & Lock (338-351) for instance, who show a number of highly finished and ornamented tables, chairs, cabinets, &c., mostly designed by Mr. G. J. S. Lock. The fault of most of these and other highly decorated pieces of furniture is that the decoration is over-done and the panels too crowded; but the inlay and marqueterie are beautifully executed, and the colour of the latter (mixed walnut and boxwood) is charming. There is a cabinet sideboard richly and delicately inlaid and of charming design sent by Messrs. Gillow & Co. (274), and a very effective mantel-fitting of teak, with intaglio decoration, which proceeds from the workshop of Messrs. Liberty & Co. (333). It is to be regretted that in the case of these two beautiful pieces of furniture the name of the designer is not given. The mantel-fitting, though its details are adapted from Egyptian designs, is in the best sense original, and its character is kept up with true artistic feeling through all the details. Let us hope that it was designed for some room in architectural sympathy with it. To return to the movable furniture—special praise is due to the simple and substantial bachelor's sideboard in mahogany, designed by Mr. Jack and (with some other excellent pieces) contributed by Messrs. Morris and Co.; and to Mr. Reginald Blomfield's "Mahogany Corner-Cupboard," with its pretty panel inlaid with snake wood and ebony (311). Messrs. Gregory's grand sideboard in Italian walnut, designed by Mr. Edwin Foley (359), and Mr. Mackmurdo's more original mahogany writing-table, with copper mounts (263), sent by Messrs. Wilkinson & Co., are among the most noticeable of the other pieces of furniture.

The south gallery is devoted to cartoons and designs for stained glass and mural decoration; but although the names of Burne Jones, Ford Madox Brown, and Walter Crane are among the designers, this section of the exhibition is not up to its usual strength. Mr. Burne Jones has, however, some fine cartoons, especially a triptych of three nameless figures (11), full of style and fine feeling; and Mr. Ford Madox Brown's cartoon for Manchester (22) (one of the well-known series in the Town Hall) has his usual merit of placing the event (the baptism of Eadwine) before the spectator with direct dramatic force. Of Mr. Whall's large design for a memorial window (48, &c.), of which the subjects are taken from the legend of St. Christopher, it is difficult to judge, for its outlines are overpowered by the strong lead marks, and it is without colour. Possibly it is more instructive in this shape for students; but for the public it would seem desirable that such working drawings should be accompanied by a small coloured sketch to show at least the general effect intended, as has been done in the case of Mr. Henry Pegram's fine design of "Justice" (12). It is in this room that the genius of Mr. Walter Crane is best shown in some graceful and elaborate designs for wall-paper and ceiling (6, 7, 14, 15). Among other works of much merit are Mr. Ingram Taylor's cartoons of saints (16 and 27), Mr. Frank Murray's bold frieze in strong oil colours of ancient and modern shipping (for the new buildings of the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Office, Liverpool) (21 and 28), Mr. John D. Sedding's refined design for the centre of an altar, modelled by Mr. Conrad Dressler (75), and several designs in charcoal and chalk (23, &c.) by Mr. Selwyn Image for stained glass.

In pottery, as usual, the most conspicuous "exhibits" are the lusted vases, &c., of Mr. De Morgan and Messrs. Maw. The former still maintains his lead as a designer for this class of ware, even though Mr. Walter Crane has entered the lists and has a case all to himself, in which there is much elegant novelty in shape as well as graceful ingenuity in decoration. In some of Mr. De Morgan's pieces, also, especially in some of the smaller bottles, he has achieved a soft but gem-like play of colour and a harmony between the ground and the decoration which we see nowhere else, least of all in the hard and glittering lustres of Signor Cantigalli (303). Of other pottery there are fair specimens of Elton Ware, and some interesting pieces from the Devonshire village potteries of Aller Vale; but little that deserves special notice, except, perhaps, the "Marqueterie" ware of Messrs. Doulton & Co., which is very delicate and pretty (364).

Of the beautiful bookbindings of Mr. Cobden Sanderson, of the printed velveteens of Messrs. Turnbull and Stockdale, after designs by Mr. Lewis Day, of the lamps, &c., of Mr. W. Benson, and the cloisonné vases of Mr. Clement Heaton, of Mr. Knox's beautiful statuettes in boxwood, and the altar of Mr. Sedding and Mr. Stirling Lee, of the glass of Messrs. Powell, and the printing of the Chiswick Press—of these and many other agreeable items of this interesting exhibition there is no space to speak. But a word must be said for the fine piece of handwoven arras tapestry called "The Forest," designed by J. H. Dearle (318). It is, perhaps, a little heavy altogether in colour; but the design is excellent, and the animals are introduced with great skill. This has been produced under the superintendence of Mr. W. Morris.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

RECENT ADDITIONS TO THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

THE South Kensington Museum has recently made a whole series of further additions to its already very comprehensive collection of casts from the masterpieces of sculptures belonging to the period of the Italian Renaissance.

This branch of art evidently commands, to a high degree, the attention of the presiding authorities. And yet, strange to say, although they have not, in naming any of the recently added examples, fallen into the flagrant errors which, until lately, disfigured the nomenclature of the national collection of reproductions, there is still manifest a very superficial acquaintance with modern research as extending to the Italian schools of sculpture of the fifteenth century. Thus, among the most recent additions are casts of no less than four marble reliefs representing the Virgin and Child, of which three are unhesitatingly given to Donatello, and a fourth is ascribed to him; whereas there is no serious ground for assigning any one of these works to the master himself. Of these, the relief from the Panciatichi Palace, Florence, numbered 1890—36, is beyond doubt by the same imitator of Donatello who produced the marble relief (No. 8376—63) the original of which has for many years belonged to this museum; the peculiar treatment of the eyes and the draperies affording the strongest proof of this assertion. The cast numbered 1890—37 is a reproduction of the famous marble panel by Desiderio da Settignano, now in the Turin Gallery; or it is, perhaps, taken from an inferior, but, as regards design, identical replica existing elsewhere. The cast numbered 1890—38, taken from a relief in the Alberti Palace, Florence, is absolutely identical with a marble panel which, in another section of the museum, is exhibited—and probably exhibited rightly—under the name of Desiderio. Finally, the relief of the Virgin and Child from the Via delle Donne in Florence, although it may possibly be loosely ascribed to Donatello, is evidently nothing more than a very second-rate imitation of the similar sculpture by Verrocchio, to be seen in the Bargello, of which a cast hangs handy for comparison at South Kensington. Again, the bas-relief of the Crucifixion here—as, indeed, at the Bargello, where the bronze original is preserved—given to Antonio Pollajuolo, is now very generally admitted to be the work of Agostino di Duccio, that eccentric follower of Donatello, whose productions must be sought for rather at Rimini and Perugia than in his mother city, Florence. Lord Wemyss's gesso duro bust, formerly styled "Lucrezia Borgia," is shown here as "A Florentine Girl"; while in immediate juxtaposition with it appears the same personage in a more finished version, now possessed by the Berlin Museum, but this time more correctly described as "A Princess of Urbino by Desiderio da Settignano." Again, the museum authorities seem unaware that Dr. Bode's recent researches show that the so-called Marietta Strozzi bust, formerly ascribed to Desiderio, cannot any longer be put down to him, or be deemed to represent a lady of that noble Florentine house; although we may fairly hold his assumption that it is the work of Francesco Laurana, and represents a Neapolitan princess, as still resting merely on conjecture.

Among the other most recent additions are casts of two beautiful tondi by Benedetto da Majano; a font in the Duomo of Siena, by Lorenzo di Mariano, and the Pietà from the well-known Fonteggiusta altar, by the same Sienese master; and, more important still, a complete series of the reliefs on the bronze shrine or casket of S. Zanobio, finished by Lorenzo Ghiberti in 1446, which, in the obscurity of the Florentine Duomo, is so imperfectly seen that the beauties of the work can be far better appreciated in this reproduction than in the original.

It is curious, by the way, that, while the Florentine, Sienese, Pisan, and Lombard schools of sculpture of the Quattrocento are lavishly illustrated at South Kensington, there is absolutely nothing there to exemplify the great Venetian group, headed by Antonio Rizzo and the Lombardi, save a reproduction of one of Leopardi's great standard pedestals from the Piazza S. Marco.

It is very satisfactory, on the other hand, to observe that South Kensington is at last alive to the importance of the French gothic school of sculpture belonging to the classic period of the thirteenth century. This is now further illustrated by numerous reliefs and sculptural details from Notre Dame de Paris; by the retablo of St. Germer (Oise), now, if we mistake not, at Cluny; and by the base of the Drapers' Pillar from Rheims Cathedral. The course of the French Renaissance is explained, inter alia, by a portion of the great rood-screen of Limoges—a marvellous fantasy in stone which already, in its unstructural profusion of ornamentation, shows marked signs of decadence. It may be pointed out that the cast of the recumbent effigy of Admiral Chabot, in the French Renaissance department of the Louvre, is here still given to Jean Cousin; while in Paris this ascription has lately been abandoned, the work being now placed to the account of an anonymous French sculptor of the sixteenth century.

C. P.

BURMESE COINS AND CURRENCY.

III.

Simla: September 5, 1890.

THE Burmese were great tamperers with their currency, even though it was of such recent issue. I have a one-mū piece, which, though very like a true mint coin, has, I am sure, been played with. And in this connexion I would give a word of warning to collectors and those interested in numismatics. "Peacock" coins are already beginning to command a price far beyond their intrinsic value in Mandalay, and a manufactory of sham "peacocks" is already springing up, especially of the smaller values. I have two one-mū pieces purchased purposely in the Zéjō (the great market of Mandalay, known to Europeans as the King's Bazaar, though it was never anything of the kind) for more than their intrinsic market value, and I feel sure they were manufactured to sell as curios. Of course, this is a very old story in India, and from all over Central Asia there come complaints from scientific Russians that forgery is becoming rampant.

Forgery of coins of the common criminal type became a serious nuisance in Upper Burma before the old currency was withdrawn. The crime was helped—one might almost say created—by the taking of Mandalay, when the royal mint dies passed into the hands of anyone who chose to steal them. I have one, bought in the Zéjō! The result is that the criminally forged coins are admirably executed. One in my collection represents the rupee of 1214, and two others the tō copper piece of 1240.

Closely connected with coins as a means of testing historical dates in the East are standard weights. In India, in Akbar's day, the mints used to issue standard weights stamped and dated like coins, and these are still occasionally current in the bazaars of Northern India as pice. In Burma something of the kind was also done. The royal treasury issued standard weights of a particular form, which were sent as such all over the country. These forms purported to vary with the reign, and so are, to that extent, historical. The weights were cast by the cire perdue process, the cores being of wax previously run into deeply sunk iron dies. I have a complete set of the "peacock" weights of Mindón and Thibaw, with cores and dies. Very little, however, so far as I am aware, is known about this subject, and I can do no more now than draw attention to it as worth studying. In my collection are old henthā (=Sk. hansa) weights, said to have been issued by Bôdawphayā, 1781-1819 A.D., and an elephant weight, said to have belonged to the great Alompra (Alaungphayā) himself 1753-1760, A.D. All the weights appear to be parts or multiples of the tickal, a standard common to Siam and Burma.

The Burmese jewellers' weights are merely those of India with new names, and are the seeds of plants.

Metal ungraved discs exist in Burma which might easily be mistaken for coins, but are in reality weights, medals, or charms, and may be noticed here. In Tenasserim are found curious metal discs with illegible legends, which were probably weights; the pagoda medals have already been mentioned, and small silver engraved discs exist all over Upper Burma under the skins of braves and heroes, especially of dacoits, as charms against death. They are of the size and appearance of the one-pè silver piece. I have two from the body of a deceased Shan. I think it is probable that with patience the legends might be read, and thus help in the reading of those on the Tenasserim weights.

I have, also, both old and new gold "peacock" charms used for hanging round the necks of Ponnā children, which might easily be taken for coins. These Ponnās are a curious race of naturalised Brāhmans and high-caste natives of Manipūr, long settled in Mandalay and many other parts of Burma, about whom we should enquire and learn much more than we know now.

The gold and silver majizis used as playthings by the children of the late royal family of Burma have been already mentioned. I have managed to collect a few others in gold and silver, mostly miniature models of fruit. Their manufacture, for which special jewellers were employed, has, of course, now ceased; and it may not only prove interesting to those who have the opportunity, but also valuable, to collect these relics of a most curious past rapidly disappearing beyond recall under our very eyes.

R. C. TEMPLE.

P.S.—I forgot to mention that the currency of the Shans and Chins is well worth examination, especially of the Shan State of Wuntho to the west of the Irrawaddy. A series of the Wuntho specimens en route to me were unfortunately stolen by a wretched postal peon, whose subsequent punishment was of but small consolation, as I could never procure any more.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ON behalf of the Prussian government, Messrs. Asher & Co., of Berlin and London, will publish the official report of the excavations at Olympia, under the general editorship of Prof. Ernst Curtius and Dr. Friedrich Adler. The work will consist altogether of five quarto volumes of text, printed in German only, together with six folio volumes of plates, and an atlas of maps and plans. Volume IV.—which will be the first to appear, probably before the end of the present year—will contain a description of the bronzes and other smaller finds, prepared by Dr. Adolf Furtwängler, and will be illustrated with seventy-one heliogravures and numerous zinc etchings. The architecture will be treated by W. Dörpfeld and others; the stone sculptures by Georg Treu; the inscriptions by Wilhelm Dittenberger and Karl Purgold; while Prof. Curtius will himself write the general history of Olympia and of the excavations. The subscription-price of the whole work is about £50; and the edition will be a limited one, except of the volume dealing with inscriptions.

LEADER SCOTT, the author of several works on Italian art, has in the press a book descriptive of the Castle of Vincigliata and the archaeological and artistic objects contained therein, as also of the villa Temple Leader at Majano, a typical example of the Italian villa in the Renaissance times. The book, which will be richly illustrated, is to be published by Barbèra, of Florence.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: (1) the thirty-fifth annual winter exhibition at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, consisting of a representative collection of the works of Mr. B. W. Leader—this has been postponed for a fortnight, owing to the death of the proprietor of the gallery and veteran art-dealer, Mr. Henry Wallis; (2) the eighth annual black-and-white exhibition of Mr. J. P. Men-doza, at the St. James's Gallery, in King-street; (3) a loan collection of mezzotint engravings in Messrs. J. and W. Vokins's gallery in Great Portland-street; and (4) an exhibition of works by members of the Cercle Artistique of Belgium, in the Burlington Gallery, Old Bond Street.

At the meeting of the Ruskin Society, to be held at the London Institution on Friday next, November 14, at 8 p.m., Mr. Sydney Robjohns will read a paper on "The First Two Volumes of Modern Painters."

The next meeting of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland will be held at Dublin on Tuesday next, November 11, when several papers will be read on Irish crosses—among others, one by Dr. Graves, Bishop of Limerick, on "The Resemblance between Early Irish and Egyptian Crosses." On the following day a visit will be paid to the chapter-house of St. Mary's Abbey, which is the only relic surviving of a monastery said to have been founded in the ninth century.

THE Munich Academy of Arts, in celebration of the name-day of the Prince Regent, has elected the following English artists as honorary members: Messrs. Oulless, Reid, and Guthrie, painters; Mr. Thornycroft, sculptor; and Mr. Macbeth, etcher.

THE STAGE.

"BEAU AUSTIN" AT THE HAYMARKET.

No disinterested person, with a proper understanding of the stage and its present conditions, can have anything but commendation for Mr. Beerbohm Tree's courage in breaking down, to some extent, the now long-established custom of unbroken runs. At some financial loss, in the first instance, in all probability—but with a certainty of added distinction—Mr. Tree gives himself and his company the refreshment and the fillip that comes to them through performing on one night of every week some piece other than that which is in the regular bill. This change tends, unquestionably, to make performances less mechanical; and by that fact, as well as by the opportunity to see at reasonable intervals some fresh things, the playgoer, like the actor, undoubtedly gains. Now that the innovation has been accomplished, we welcome it, as we welcomed months ago the first announcement of it.

Mr. Tree himself sees—as he has already said—in this new arrangement an opportunity for putting before the public certain plays which are spoken of with infinite tact when it is said of them that they are of too delicate a texture to stand the wear and tear of a long run. Silk is tolerably delicate, yet it does not wear badly. "Le Passant" is delicate, and so is "Il faut qu'une porte soit ouverte ou fermée," yet both the play of M. François Coppée and the play of Alfred de Musset have been played many hundreds of times. In reality the manager must have been referring, in terms of guarded politeness, to deficiencies, rather than to mere delicacies, of texture. Mr. Tree's plan permits him to put upon the stage comedies which, along with merits which justify their presentation, have faults which forbid their long continuance. Such pieces we shall be glad to see. They will be the work, very probably, for the most part of known and interesting writers, somewhat lacking in stage experience and in proper stage craft. This is the case, at all events, with the "Beau Austin" of Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Henley. The story is told by a man of genius and by a clever person; a part of it is told with great vigour. Then that which had been so promising fades off into a disappointment. The end is not equal to the beginning. It is good writing for the most part, though, as writing, it would have been more remarkable several years ago—when it is understood to have been composed—than it can be to-day, when the stage is more familiar than it was then with the qualities of the real writer—with the dramatic instinct of Mr. Sydney Grundy and his unfailing force; with the masculine seriousness and poetic fancy of Mr. Herman Merivale; with that abounding wit of Mr. Pinero against which the humour of Messrs. Stevenson and Henley may seem, as shown in "Beau Austin," a little thin and a little forced. Again, as regards "Beau Austin"—tolerable as the work is to those who follow literature closely—nothing short of a genius they have not shown would have thoroughly justified the writers in expecting (and perhaps they do not expect) that the great public would be content to watch, through four acts, the development of a story in which a man whose inconsistencies we cannot reconcile, and which are a little too gigantic for us to believe in them, deliberately neglects, and then suddenly worships and elects to marry, a by no means extraordinary young woman, who months ago he had been at the trouble of seducing. No doubt the spectacle of the repentant Beau is more edifying and more sympathetic than the spectacle of the Beau who was callous—of the Beau who was a cad. But I take leave to question—as I took leave to question in the case of Mr. Pinero's "Profligate"—whether the entirely callous becomes so soon the entirely chivalrous. The reformation of the inner character of Mr. Pinero's hero came about—if I remember rightly—through his having been permitted to spend a fortnight in the Engadine with a person he was fond of, and to whom he happened to have been married. The reformation of the Beau of Messrs. Henley and Stevenson is even less explicable. His whole plan of life—nay, his whole ideal of life—is altered, modified, reversed, in the course of a morning call.

To the ordinary playgoer, "Beau Austin" would be more acceptable if the presentation of its story began at the beginning instead of in the middle, and showed the Beau's triumphant wickedness as well as his repentance. To the unbiassed student of humanity's ways, it would be more acceptable were it endowed with the power to convince him of its probable truth. The popularity of Mr. Stevenson—the more distinguished of its two authors—will, nevertheless, suffice to provoke enough curiosity about the piece to satisfy Mr. Beerbohm Tree's modest aims in producing it. And it will be recognised that the dialogue, though it may display little beauty and little original observation, is on the whole sufficiently dexterous. It is true that the writers' idea of the manner of talk of the year of grace 1820 seems to be that in 1820 men were wont to alternate between the idioms and the oaths of 1770 and the idioms and the oaths of our day. In other words, the dialogue is not altogether worthy of Mr. Stevenson at his best, but it is without the too obtrusive and self-assertive smartness which has become a not unfrequent note of Mr. Henley's later writing. Mr. Henley is quite a clever man, and he is not accustomed to allow the public that he addresses to forget it. His method reminds me, when I come across it, of a certain chorus in a comic opera which I never willingly miss. "Just look at this," sing the young ladies in the "Cloches de Corneville," displaying in the market place their strong and comely arms. "Just look at that!" they sing again, displaying their neat ankles. "Just look at this!" cries Mr. Henley, with a paradox that takes one's breath away. "Just look at that!"—it is his voice again, directing one's attention to a showy antithesis. Now, of this method one sees comparatively little in the play that has at last been submitted to a London audience.

Everything that can be done for "Beau Austin" by the actor's art is done for it through the efforts of Mr. Tree and his company. Alike in the serious passages and in the scenes which the humour of the artist makes comic, Mr. Tree is inventive and natural; broad, yet finished. The woes of the heroine are illustrated by Mrs. Tree with more variety and more of force than I have ever before seen her employ. In the part of Dorothy Musgrave, she finds an opportunity to which she does ample justice. Inevitably graceful and intelligent, she has yet been known to be tepid in the expression of strong feeling. Of this deficiency of warmth and vigour there was in the performance of Monday night no trace. Miss Rose Leclercq is admirably fitted for the part of the young lady's aunt. Some actresses would have made the part ridiculous, because they would at all costs have wrung out of it a broader comic effect. With Miss Leclercq the thing belongs, as it should belong, to gentle comedy. Miss Aylward is both pretty and earnest as Miss Foster's maid. Mr. Brookfield, who is sometimes given to exaggerate in order that he may amuse, is chargeable with no fault whatever, that I know of, in the part he now plays. Mr. Edmund Maurice represents Dorothy's brother, with the befitting indignation and impulsiveness; and Mr. Fred Terry is interesting, hearty, and sympathetic, in the part of a lover who behaves with perfect chivalry in the matter of his love.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

ACTOR and manager are nowadays born with a ready aptitude for collaborating with a mere writer in the authorship of a play. Indeed, a mere writer—when the manufacture of a play is on the tapis—gets, nowadays, but a very little way without them. Mrs. Lancaster Wallis is, as we learn, the last helpful and necessary partner in what was wont, long ago, to be a task of pure literature. The lady and Mr. Malcolm Watson are joint authors of a play which comes out at the Shaftesbury so soon as the piece now playing there shall be withdrawn.

MR. R. C. CARTON'S "Sunlight and Shadow"—brought out at the Avenue Theatre on Saturday—will demand longer notice than we can this week accord to it. We say for it in brief to-day that it was distinctly successful—that it pleased in virtue of a well-told story and of a skilled performance, in which Mr. George Alexander, Miss Marion Terry, and Miss Maud Millett took leading parts.

MR. D'OYLY CARTE'S new theatre at Cambridge Circus is ready for opening in about a fortnight's time.

THE PRINCESS'S production of "Antony and Cleopatra," with Mrs. Langtry as Cleopatra, will take place on November 18.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE Shinner Quartet gave a concert at the Prince's Hall last Thursday week. Apart from the Popular Concerts, it is not often that one has the opportunity of hearing good programmes well performed. With the exception of the vocalist, Fräulein Fillunger, all the artistes, including the pianist, Miss Fanny Davies, were English ladies: our countrywomen are distinguishing themselves, not only in science and literature, but also in art. The rendering of Mozart's Quartet in C for strings by Miss F. Shinner (Mrs. F. Liddell), and the Misses Stone, Gates, and Hemmings, presented many praiseworthy points: the intonation was pure, the playing intelligent and expressive, and the players seemed to be working together for good, to be listening the one to the other, and not, as sometimes happens, wrapped up in themselves. The programme, consisting of concerted works by Brahms and Dvorák, pianoforte solos, and songs, was, as hinted above, of the best quality. There was a large and enthusiastic audience.

M. Paderewski made his first appearance at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon, when he took part in Schumann's Concerto in A minor. His reading of this work was thoughtful and interesting, and yet it was scarcely the right one. It is, of course, customary to compare any interpretation of this work with that made familiar to us by Mme. Schumann, and especially by her pupil Miss Fanny Davies, and to condemn it in proportion as it differs from that standard. But, although the widow of the composer had the best opportunity of learning the composer's intentions, and possesses the gift of being able to convey them to others, still, one ought to admit that the same feeling or mood may be expressed in a variety of ways, and that a certain freedom should be allowed to each interpreter. But M. Paderewski gave us Schumann's music in Chopin dress, and this mixture of styles is surely not permissible. Certain exaggerations of tone, time, and rhythm, quite in place in some Mazurka or Nocturne of the Polish composer's, are not suited to the pianoforte Concerto in question. From a technical point of view, the Cadenza in the opening movement was not altogether satisfactory, and there was a lack of tone and brilliancy about the Finale. The pianist afterwards played a solo of his own and a Liszt Rhapsody, with great success. The programme also included Brahms's Symphony in F, No. 3, one of his finest and most attractive works. The performance was excellent. Mr. Ben Davies was the vocalist.

Senor Sarasate gave his second orchestral concert at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon. The eminent player has more admirers than the hall can accommodate, and many had to go away disappointed. Senor Sarasate played Saint Saëns's Concerto in B minor, a work admirably calculated to show off to advantage the performer's technique and skill, but not one of great artistic interest. The first movement, in spite of an attractive second theme is not effective, the Barcarolle is decidedly graceful and well-scored, but the Finale is common. The concert-giver played also the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, taking the Finale, as usual, at a furious pace, and some solos. The orchestra, under Mr. Cusins's direction, gave the "Tannhäuser" Overture and the Peer Gynt Suite, the last movement of the latter being encored.

Mr. Leonard Borwick appeared at the Popular Concerts on Monday evening, and played as a solo Beethoven's Variations in C minor. It is easy to understand why pianists choose this piece, but there are other works in the same form by the composer with as much technical display and much more poetry. Mr. Borwick played with skill and intelligence, but with a certain agitation, the result, possibly, of nervousness. He was well received, and for an encore gave, and exceedingly well, a movement from Bach's Partita in C minor. The programme included Beethoven's Quartet in A (Op. 18, No. 5), led by Mme. Néruda, and Schumann's pianoforte Trio in D minor. Mr. Ffrangcon Davies sang with much effect Dr. Stanford's "La belle dame sans merci." This setting of Keats's ballad is a fine dramatic composition.

On Monday evening Mme. Patti sang at the Albert Hall, attracting a large audience, and obtaining the usual number of encores. So long as the public runs after the prima donna, so long may one expect concerts in which art is but a secondary feature. There were, as usual, many excellent artists, including Miss Douilly, Miss Rees, and Messrs. Lloyd, Lely, Foote, and Schönberger, but the public go principally to see and hear Mme. Patti. The orchestra was under the direction of Mr. Ganz.

Master Isidore Pavia gave his second pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. We were unable to notice his first, which took place in the Norwich Festival week. Master Pavia has good execution, although he is by no means note-perfect. His phrasing is not always clear, and he has a tendency to hurry. This was specially noticeable in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and Chopin's Fantasia in F minor. His two best pieces were Scarlatti's Sonata in A and Mendelssohn's Scherzo (Op. 16, No. 2).

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THERE are some remarkable relics in the Hohen-zollern Museum at Montbijou Castle, near Berlin; among them a double harpsichord, one of two made by Tschudi, the founder of the house of Broadwood and Sons, for Frederick the Great in 1765. In 1773 Tschudi and Broadwood supplied a similar harpsichord to Frederick's antagonist, Maria Theresa. This instrument is also in existence.

A SERIES of orchestral and chamber music concerts, under the direction of Dr. Stanford, has commenced at the Guildhall, Cambridge, and will be continued during the month up to February 25, 1891. The programmes are interesting. Dr. Stanford's "Irish" Symphony will be performed on January 28, and a new Quartet for pianoforte and strings in E flat (Op. 87), by Dvorák, in February.

IN the review of "Wagner's Letters" last week mention ought to have been made of the Index specially prepared by Mr. William Ashton Ellis, editor of Die Meister. It contains nearly 600 headings, and more than 6,000 separate references.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

GREEK PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By J. P. Mahaffy, M.A., D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, Author of "Social Life in Greece," "Greek Life and Thought," "Rambles and Studies in Greece," &c. With 2 Maps, and many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges.

"Unquestionably the best book of the kind which has yet appeared. Dr. Mahaffy knows Greece as few Englishmen know her."—St. James's Gazette.

"We linger over the pages of text and illustration, and no doubt many will be similarly fascinated if they adopt our advice to read and mark every portion of this, one of the most delightful books of the 'Pen and Pencil Series.'"—Queen.

"The 'Pen and Pencil Series' has received a charming addition through the publication of 'Greek Pictures' by Professor Mahaffy. This admirable volume is bound to prove a universal favourite."—Daily Chronicle.

"Altogether a very charming volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By the Rev. Richard Lovett, M.A., Author of "Norwegian Pictures," "Irish Pictures," &c. Profusely Illustrated. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges.

"The handsome form of the book, with its admirable printing, is fully justified by the interesting nature of its contents."—Times.

"This pleasant, chatty account of London—with just enough archaeology and history to instruct, and yet not to bore—is the very book to interest both the dweller and visitor to the Metropolis."—Record.

EVOLUTION, MODERN IDEAS of, as RELATED to REVELATION and SCIENCE. By Sir

J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., Author of "Acadian Geology," "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," "Egypt and Syria: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History," &c. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

"It embodies the thoughts of an eminent geologist on some of the chief flaws and discrepancies in what he justly styles the 'hypothesis' of evolution. If there is anything calculated to arrest the cocksure young scientist, who is always the young man in a hurry, this book will do it. Perhaps nothing but a counterblast—and Sir William Dawson's book is too well reasoned to deserve the term—can be expected to shake the unfaltering confidence of the middlemen of science, who purvey Darwinism, or what they consider to be Darwinism, to the intelligent multitude."—Saturday Review.

ANCIENT EPHEBUS, MODERN DISCOVERIES on the SITE of. By the late J. T. Wood, F.S.A.,

Author of "Discoveries at Ephesus, including the Site and Remains of the Great Temple of Diana." By-paths of Bible Knowledge, No. 14. With 13 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

EARLY BIBLE SONGS. By A. W. Drysdale, M.A. "By-Paths of Bible Knowledge," No. 15.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

THE ENGLISH REFORMATION of the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. With Chapters on Monastic

England, and the Wycliffite Reformation. Illustrated by Maps, showing where all English Monastic Institutions were situated, over what districts Lollardy spread, and where the Martyrs were burnt in the persecution under Mary Tudor; and also by many portraits of such leaders as Tyndale, Cranmer, More, Latimer, &c. By the Rev. W. H. BECKETT. Church History Series, No. 7. 3s. 6d., cloth.

PIONEERS of ELECTRICITY; or, Short Lives of the Great Electricians. By J. Munro, Author of "Electricity and its Uses." With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d., cloth boards.

HOW LONDON LIVES: the Feeding, Cleansing, Lighting, and Police of London. With Chapters on Post Office and other Institutions. By W. J. GORDON. The Leisure Hour Library, New Series, No. 1. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

FOUNDRY, FORGE, and FACTORY. By W. J. Gordon. "The Leisure Hour Library," New Series, No. 2. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

ROMANCE of REAL LIFE: True Incidents in the Lives of the Great and Good. With Illustrations by well-known artists. Large 4to, 3s. 6d., cloth boards.

NEW POPULAR ANNUALS.

These Annuals form a most attractive series of Gift Books. They each contain SERIAL STORIES BY WELL-KNOWN WRITERS, which when published separately will sell for nearly as much each as is now asked for the Volumes containing several of them. Besides Stories and most useful, interesting, and instructive general articles, there is a profusion of Illustrations, and a very attractive binding.

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL for 1890. 856 pp., imperial 8vo, profusely Illustrated, 7s., in handsome cloth.

THE SUNDAY at HOME ANNUAL for 1890. 828 pp., imperial 8vo, profusely Illustrated by Coloured and Wood Engravings. 7s., in handsome cloth.

THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL for 1890. The Twelfth Volume of the "Boy's Own Paper." 832 pp., with 10 Coloured and upwards of 500 Wood Engravings, 8s., in handsome cloth.

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL for 1890. The Eleventh Volume of the "Girl's Own Paper." 832 pp., profusely Illustrated, 8s., in handsome cloth.

* * A New Volume of each of the above Popular Periodicals Commences with NOVEMBER MONTHLY PART.

THE LEISURE HOUR for November,

Price SIXPENCE, CONTAINS—

THE STORY of FRANCIS CLUDDE. Chaps. 1-2. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf." Illustrated by F. Dadd.

THE INCOMPLETE ADVENTURER. Chaps. 1-3. By TIGHE HOPKINS, Author of "The Nugents of Carriconna," &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne.

EVERYDAY LIFE on the RAILROAD.—The Time-Table. By W. J. GORDON.

THE "MONT DE PIETE" in PARIS: its Origin and Administration—How the Pawning is Done—The Storerooms—Why the Dressmakers Pawn—Suggested Changes. By M. S. VAN DE VELDE. With Engravings from the Painting of Ferdinand Heilbuth.

HOUSEKEEPING in PUNJAB. Illustrated from Original Sketches.

WINTER RAMBLES in SEARCH of MICROSCOPIC LIFE.—The Contents of a Pail of Water. By W. H. SHIRUSOLE, F.G.S. With many Drawings from under the Microscope.

FROM VANCOUVER to TORONTO. By W. J. BLAIRIE, D.D., LL.D. Illustrated.

PRESENTED to the KING: the Harmonies of Little Gidding. By MARY E. PALGRAVE.

UNDER DISCUSSION.—I. The Case of Amy Parker. By the Author of "Voices from the Highways," "Not by Bread Alone," &c.

"YANKEE DODGES."—Elevated Railroads—Ferries; &c. By W. E. BUCK.

VARIETIES: Educated Apes—A Fiji Jubilee—Carbonised Peat; &c.

HOUSEHOLD QUERIES.—Answers to Correspondents.

Frontispiece—HIS FETE DAY. By FRANK W. W. TOPHAM, R.I.

LONDON: 56, PATERNOSTER ROW; AND OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 933 pp., 32s.

THE JOURNAL OF SIR WALTER SCOTT,

FROM THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT AT ABBOTSFORD.

ANNOTATED AND ILLUSTRATED FROM HIS "LIFE" AND CORRESPONDENCE.

WITH 2 PORTRAITS, FACSIMILES, &c.

"Lest it should be supposed that the extracts given in Lockhart's 'Life' represent the greater part of what was worth reproducing from Sir Walter's Journal, it may be stated that nearly half of the matter in the two printed volumes is now made public for the first time, while much that is familiar to the readers of the 'Life' had passed through the editorial alembic and undergone a change in the process."

"Sir Walter Scott resembles the best of those knights in the olden days of chivalry that excited his imagination and inspired his pen. Like them, he lived without fear and died without reproach, his honour being dearer to him than his life-blood. We realise this better after perusing the vivid and instructive pages of his Journal. While reading it he seems to stand before us again as he was in the flesh, and we almost forget that his hallowed dust has long since mingled with that of his ancestors in Dryburgh Abbey. Although many of the details are melancholy, yet the interest of the whole is entrancing, and the Journal is a most precious relic of Sir Walter Scott."—Quarterly Review, Oct., 1890.

EDINBURGH: DAVID DOUGLAS, 10, CASTLE STREET.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., LTD.

THE ARENA.

NOVEMBER.—Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE FUTURE AMERICAN DRAMA. DION BOUCAULT.
SEX in MIND. Rev. CYRUS A. BARTOL, D.D.
THE AFRICAN ELEMENT in AMERICA. Prof. N. S. SHALER.
A GLANCE at "THE GOOD OLD TIMES." Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.
TURGENIEF as a POET. N. H. DOLE.
A NEW BASIS of CHURCH LIFE. W. LARREMORE.
FIDDLING HIS WAY to FAME. W. A. DROMGOOLE.
SUNSET on the MISSISSIPPI. V. F. BOYLE.
DESTITUTION in BOSTON.
OBJECTIONS to WOMAN SUFFRAGE CONSIDERED. Rev. F. A. MARSH.
THE DRAMATIC TALENT. M. J. WRIGHT.
A RARE LETTER. F. E. WILLARD.
BRENTANO'S, 430, Strand.

THE EXPOSITOR, for November, contains the third and concluding Article of Mr. ARTHUR W. HUTTON on CARDINAL NEWMAN. The highest Catholic authority in England says:—"It is a photograph, singularly accurate and truthful, and not unkindly done."

The Three Numbers sent post-free for 3s.

London:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. IV. No. 9. NOVEMBER. 1s. 6d.

Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

THE BIRTHPLACE of PROPHECY. W. Y. SELLAR.
PROF. TARBELL on SOPH. A.J. 651. G. E. MARINDIN.
THE LATIN AORIST SUBJUNCTIVE. E. A. SONNENSCHNEIN.
MR. GLADSTONE on HOMER and the ASSYRIAN TABLETS.
CECIL TOWN.
APPARATUS CRITICUS to CICERO'S DE NATURA DEORUM.
P. SCHWENKE.
SHORTER NOTICES.
NOTES.
OBITUARY—
PROFESSOR ALLEN. C. L. SMITH.
PROFESSOR SELLAR. LEWIS CAMPBELL.
ARCHAEOLOGY—
ANCIENT ATHENS, by Mrs. VERRALL and Miss HARRISON.
F. B. TARBELL.
SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS
BIBLIOGRAPHY.
D. NUTT, 270 and 271, Strand.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.;
And all Booksellers.

Now ready, price 5s.

SIGNA CHRISTI:

Evidences of Christianity set forth in the Person and Work of Christ.

By JAMES AITCHISON, Minister of Erskine Church, Falkirk,

Author of "The Chronicle of Mites," &c.

CASSILL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, 600 pages, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

HOMES of FAMILY NAMES in GREAT BRITAIN.

By HENRY BROUGHAM GUPPY, M.B. Edin., F.R.S. Edin., &c.
"Should have attractions for a very large number of people." "It fills a gap in the reference library and certainly enriches the literature of nomenclature."

London: HARRISON & SONS,
Booksellers to the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, 89, Pall Mall, S.W.

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A PROTEST AGAINST AGNOSTICISM.

By P. F. FITZGERALD, Author of "The Philosophy of Self-Consciousness," and "A Treatise on the Principle of Sufficient Reason."

"As ably reasoned as it is profound in thought."—Literary World.

"Beneath the profusion of philosophical and poetical quotations, there is a distinct vein of thought."—Mind.

"Successful as a protest against the excessive study of physicists."—Saturday Review.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Ltd.

Now ready, in wrapper, price 1s.

IS ENGLISH a GERMAN LANGUAGE?

By Prof. Dr. GEORGE STEPHENS, F.S.A. Lond. and Edin., Hon. Dr. of Letters, Camb. Author of "The Old-Northern Rune Monuments of Scandinavia and England" (3 vols., folio), "Studies on Northern Mythology," &c., &c.

WM. ALLEN & STORR, Caxton House, Paternoster Square, London.

Fourth Edition, in 8vo, 21s., cloth, now ready.

ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY.

FROM THE TEUTONIC CONQUEST to the PRESENT TIME. Designed as a Text-Book for Students and others. By T. P. TASWELL-LANGMEAD, B.C.L., formerly Vinerian Scholar, Oxford, and late Professor of Constitutional Law and History, University College, London. Fourth Edition, Revised, with Notes and Appendices by C. H. CARMICHAEL, M.A. Oxon.

London: STEVENS & HAYNES, 13, Bell Yard, Temple Bar.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book. Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 294 pp., hand-made paper, price 10s. 6d.

SACRED and SHAKESPEARIAN AFFINITIES: being analogies between the writings of the Psalmists and of Shakespeare. By CHARLES ALFRED SWINBURNE. Bickers & Son, 1, Leicester-square, London, W.C.

Price 2s. 6d., post free.

ON FISTULA and its Radical Cure by Medicines. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D. London: JAMES ERIS & Co., 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

Vol. III., New Series, now ready. 320 pp., with 80 Illustrations, 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

OLD YORKSHIRE.

Edited by WILLIAM SMITH, F.S.A.S.

With an Introduction by JAMES W. DAVIS, F.S.A., &c.

"It is one of those books that are god-sends on wet days." Saturday Review.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING

for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 2s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York Street, W.C.; and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery Lane, W.C.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES.

By EMIL BEHNKE, Lecturer on Vocal Physiology and Teacher of Voice Production, and CHARLES W. PEARCE, Mus. Doc. Cantab. In separate books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone and Bass. Price 1s. 6d.; in cloth boards, 3s.

"Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility." Sir FREDERICK A. G. OUSELEY.

"Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen." Sir ROBERT STEWART.

"I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious."—Dr. STAINER.

CHAPELL & Co., 50, New Bond Street, W.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,

with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

And all Booksellers.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN of BOTH BRANCHES of THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.

Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by R. C. Carton, entitled

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 8, NERVES.
Misses Vane Featherstone, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venn; Messrs. Edward Righton, Kemble, W. Wykes, and Charles Hawtreay.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MADCAP.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.
Every Evening, at 8.

THE CABINET MINISTER.

Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, F. Farren, Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington, Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.

STILL WATERS RUN DEEP,

by Tom Taylor.

Mr. Chas. Wyndham, Messrs. W. Blakeley, A. Elwood, S. Valentine, F. Emery, F. Atherley, S. Hewson, G. B. Phillips; Miss Mary Moore, and Mrs. Bernard Beere.

Preceded, at 8.10, by W. Gordon's Comedietta, entitled DEAREST MAMMA.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. GEORGE PAGET.
Every Evening, at 8.15, THE BLACK ROVER.

Messrs. William Ludwig, Hogarth, LeHay, Collette, Shiel Barry, Philips-Tones, Erylne; Misses Effie Chapuy, Lloyd, and Giulia Warwick.

Preceded, at 7.30, by an Operetta, THE CRUSADER AND THE CRAVEN,

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BRENNUM-TREE.
On Monday next, November 10, and every Evening, at 8,

Messrs. Hugh Conway and Conyns Carr's successful drama, CALLED BACK.

Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Fred Terry, F. Kerr, Allan, C. Hudson, Webster Lawson, Robb Harwood, Tapping, &c.; Mesdames Blanche Horlock, E. H. Brooke, Aylward, and Julia Neilson.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15. LA CIGALE.

Messrs. Lionel Brough, E. W. Garden, Michael Dwyer, Eric Lewis, John Peachey, Geo. Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Effie Clements, Annie Rose, Schubert, Adelaide Newton, St. Cyr, and Lila Clay.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act

Farce, entitled THE JUDGE.

Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H. Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E. Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.

Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

Acting Manager, Mr. ARTHUR YATES.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 8, CAPTAIN THERESE.

Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, Henry Ashley, Harry Parker, T. A. Shale, A. T. Hendon, George Marler, and Harry Monkhouse; Miss Violet Cameron, Madame Anadi, and Miss Phyllis Broughton.

Preceded, at 7.30, by THE GYPSIES.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Lessee, Miss KATE SANTLEY.
Every Evening, Mr. Robert Buchanan's latest and most popular comedy, founded on Miss Rhoda Broughton's famous story of "Nancy," and entitled

SWEET NANCY.

Messrs. Alfred Bucklaw, G. W. Garthorne, E. Hendrie, Esmond, Hallard, Smithson, Walters; Mesdames Annie Hughes, Jennie McNulty, Ethel Hope, B. Ferrar, and Miss Harriett Jay.

Preceded, at 8, by PEPPER'S DIARY.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
This Evening, at 8.

THE SIXTH COMMANDMENT.

Mrs. Lancaster-Wallis (Miss Wallis), Mesdames Marion Lea, E. Robins, M. Brennan, Richardson, St. Ange, Bernard, Cowen; Messrs. Lewis Waller, Herbert Waring, W. Herbert, Watson, Lockton, De Lange, Easing, Sedon, and M. Marius.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

THEATRES—continued.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

Messrs. Rutland Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, W. Brownlow, Metcalf, Barrett, De Pledge, Burbank, Lewes, and Courtice Pounds; Mesdames Talliser, R. Brandram, Decima Moore, Lawrence, Saumarez, Bernard, Cole, and Jessie Bond.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. EDWARD TERRY.
Every Evening, at 8.30.

SWEET LAVENDER,

Messrs. Edward Terry, H. Reeves Smith, H. Dana, Julian Cross, Prince Miller, Fred W. Irish, and W. H. Vernon; Mesdames Dolores Drummond, Marie Linden, Elinore Leyshon, and F. H. Macklin.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.
Lessee, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

Every Evening, at 8.45.

TWO RECRUITS,

by Mr. Frank Wyatt.

Messrs. Albert Chevalier, H. S. Eversfield, W. Cheesman, Guise, Henry W. Brame, F. Kaye; Mesdames R. Rutland, V. Thornycroft, Julia Seaman, Leigh, and Delia Carlyle.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with us to Printing and Publishing.

Estimates and all information furnished.

Contracts entered into.

BIRKBECK BANK,

ESTABLISHED 1851.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FRY'S

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J S. FRY & SONS

Financial year ends 20th November.
All persons now insuring will receive an additional share of profit at the next Division in 1892.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.
INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FURNISH direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND

COMFORTING.

MADE SIMPLY WITH
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.
BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed.

Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopaedia

Brit., says "PROF. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus, containing opinions of pupils who have

MEMORY PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic,

Clerical, etc., professions, post free from

Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and

Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen,

2s.; or very best Irish Linen,

2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White

Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d.,

5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape,

2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry.

Warm, durable, and comfortable.

Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker

Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., and 7s. 9d.

WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen

Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the heapest to the best qualities made.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.

COCOA

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LONDON LETTERS and SOME OTHERS. By George W. Smalley. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.
Vol. I. Personalities—Two Midlothian Campaigns. Vol. II. Notes on Social Life—Notes on Parliament—Pageants—Miscellanies.

LEADERS in the NORTHERN CHURCH. Sermons preached in the Diocese of Durham. By the Right Rev. J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., late Bishop of Durham, &c. Published by the Trustees of the Lightfoot Fund. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

ORDINATION ADDRESSES and COUNSELS to CLERGY. By the Same. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS.—Part I., S. CLEMENT of ROME. A Revised Text, with Introductions, Notes, Dissertations, and Translations. By the same. A New Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s. [Next week.]

WILD BEASTS and THEIR WAYS: Reminiscences of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. From 1845–1888. With Special permission dedicated to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. By Sir SAMUEL W. BAKER, M.A., F.R.G.S., F.R.S., Author of "The Nile Tributaries of Abyssinia," "The Albert N'yanza, Great Basin of the Nile," &c. With Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.
The ROD and GUN says: "Wild animals themselves the author has studied from his youth, and, being a close observer of Nature, he has acquired an intimate knowledge of their ways and characteristic movements. The book teems with diverting anecdotes and hair-breadth escapes.... Sir Samuel Baker's account of black buck hunting with the cheetah is full of interest."
The FIELD says: "Since the publication of 'The Rifle and Hound in Ceylon,' Sir Samuel Baker has gained a vast amount of experience respecting the habits of large game in the four great continents and the best method of securing them. The relation of this experience, along with the more interesting details of adventure in the pursuit of the wild animals, constitutes the bulk of the two volumes before us.... The great charm of the volumes as most pleasant and practical reading is the graphic description of the habits of the various animals, and the relation of the perils and adventures encountered in their pursuit."

GLIMPSES of OLD ENGLISH HOMES. By Elizabeth Balch. With 51 Illustrations. Globe 4to, 14s.
The Old English Homes described in this Volume are: Penhurst—Arundel Castle—Hinchbrook—Eridge Castle—Chiswick House—Berkeley Castle—Highclere Castle—Osterley Park.

THE GREEK WORLD under ROMAN SWAY. By the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, M.A., D.D., Fellow and Professor of Ancient History in Trinity College, Dublin, and Hon. Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford; Author of "Social Life in Greece from Homer to Menander," "Greek Life and Thought from the Age of Alexander to the Roman Conquest." Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Next week.]

THE METEORITIC HYPOTHESIS of the ORIGIN of COSMICAL SYSTEMS. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S., Correspondent of the Institute of France, Foreign Member of Academy of the Lincei of Rome, &c., Professor of Astronomical Physics in the Normal School of Science. With Illustrations. 8vo, 17s. net.

PROBLEMS of GREATER BRITAIN. By the Right Hon. Sir Charles W. Dilke, Bart. Fourth and Cheaper Edition, Revised. 1 vol. Extra crown 8vo, with Maps, 12s. 6d.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S POETICAL WORKS. A New and Complete Edition in One Volume. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE POEMS of CHRISTINA ROSSETTI. A New Collected Edition, in 1 vol., with 4 Designs by DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.
A CIGARETTE-MAKER'S ROMANCE. By F. Marion CRAWFORD, Author of "Mr. Isaacs," &c. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

PUNCH says:—"Permit the Baron to strongly recommend Marion Crawford's 'A Cigarette-Maker's Romance.' Slight indeed is the plot, and few the dramatis personae; but the latter are drawn with a Meissonier-like finish, and the simple tale is charmingly and touchingly told. The wonder is that so little to tell should have occupied two volumes; and a greater wonder remains, which is, that, at the close, the reader should wish there were a third. This novel of Mr. Crawford's goes forth to the world with the Baron's best imprimatur."

The TIMES says:—"A very pathetic relation is this between the Count and Viera. With all her plainness and poverty, she is as adorable a heroine as ever sighed.... The idea is original in a striking degree. The Count's dignity in the midst of adversity is exquisite. His companions, too, afford Mr. Crawford plenty of opportunity for excellent studies of homely Russian character."

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.
KIRSTEEN: the Story of a Scotch Family Seventy Years Ago. By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "Neighbours on the Green," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

The TIMES says:—"In our judgment this novel is better than anything Mrs. Oliphant has given us for a long time. The characters are clearly cut, and in their conduct and speech there is none of that flabbiness and vagueness which render many of her tales exasperating to straightforward people.... But the actual career of 'Kirsteen,' though abounding in telling situations, by no means sums up the many excellencies of the book. The portrait alone of the Laird of Drumcarro, the 'auld slave-driver,' is enough to recommend the story; but all the accessories are good and intensely Scotch."

The WORLD says:—"Mrs. Oliphant has written many novels and many good ones; but if she has hitherto written one as good as 'Kirsteen' we have not read it.... The highest praise we can give, when we say that there are passages in it which, as pictures of Scottish life and character, it would be difficult, perhaps impossible, to match out of Sir Walter's pages."

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW BOOK FOR CHILDREN.
THE CHILDREN of the CASTLE. By Mrs. Molesworth, Author of "Carrots," "The Cuckoo Clock," "The Rectory Children," &c. With Illustrations by Walter Crane. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. SERIES.—New Volume.
THE HERIOTS. By Sir Henry Cunningham, K.O.I.E. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SIXPENNY EDITION.
CHARLES KINGSLEY'S NOVELS. A New Issue in Monthly Volumes. Vols. I.—III. ready, 6d. each. WESTWARD HO! | HYPATIA. | YEAST.

MACMILLAN'S SCHOOL ATLAS, PHYSICAL and POLITICAL. Consisting of 80 Maps and complete Index. Prepared for the Use of Senior Pupils. By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., &c. Royal 4to, 7s. 6d.; half-morocco, 10s. 6d. [Next week.]

ARE the EFFECTS of USE and DISUSE INHERITED? An Examination of the Views held by Spencer and Darwin. By WILLIAM PLATT BALL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (Nature Series.)

A MANUAL of PUBLIC HEALTH. By A. Wynter Blyth, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., Fell. Chem. Soc., Fell. Inst. Chem.; Barrister-at-Law, Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst for St. Marylebone, &c. 8vo, 17s. net.

A SYSTEM of SIGHT-SINGING from the ESTABLISHED MUSICAL NOTATION: based on the Principle of Tonic Relation, and Illustrated by Extracts from the Works of the Great Masters. By SEDLEY TAYLOR, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Author of "Sound and Music," &c. 8vo, 5s. net.

MANUAL of LOGARITHMS, Treated in Connection with Arithmetic, Algebra, Plane Trigonometry, and Mensuration, for the Use of Students preparing for Army and other Examinations. By G. F. MATTHEWS, B.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge. 8vo, 5s. net.

Third Edition.
CURIOUS MATHEMATICA. Part I.—A New Theory of Parallels. By CHARLES L. DODGSON, M.A., Student and late Mathematical Lecturer of Christ Church, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s.

Now ready, Vol. II., in 2 Parts, 4s. 6d. each.
A HISTORY of CLASSICAL GREEK LITERATURE. By the Rev. J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A., D.D., in 2 vols., crown 8vo. Vol. I. THE POETS. With an Appendix on HOMER by Professor Sayce. Second Edition. 9s. Vol. II. THE PROSE WRITERS. New issue in Two Parts. 4s. 6d. each. Third Edition, Revised throughout. Part I. HERODOTUS to PLATO. Part II. ISOCRATES to ARISTOTLE.

LONGINUS on the SUBLIME. Translated into English by H. L. HAVELL, B.A., formerly Scholar of University College, Oxford. With Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

FIFTY POEMS of MELEAGER. With a Translation by WALTER HEADLAM. Fcap. 4to, 7s. 6d.

CLASSICAL LIBRARY.—New Volume.
PINDAR.—THE NEMEAN ODES. Edited, with Introduction and Commentary, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Dublin. 8vo. [Next week.]

CLASSICAL SERIES.—New Volume.
AESCHINES.—IN OTESIPHONTA. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by the Rev. T. GWATKIN, M.A., and E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES.—New Volume.
Edited by ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Survey.
A GEOGRAPHY of EUROPE. By James Sime, M.A. With Illustrations. Globe 8vo, 3s.

Second Edition, Revised.
A TREATISE on ALGEBRA. By Charles Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge; Author of "Elementary Algebra," "Conic Sections," &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MONOGRAPH of the BRITISH CICADÆ or TETTIGIDÆ. By GEORGE BOWDLER BUCKTON, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.C.S., F.E.S., &c., Cor. Memb. Nat. Hist. Soc. of Philadelphia, Memb. de la Soc. Ent. de France. Illustrated by more than 400 Coloured Drawings. In 2 vols. Vol. I., in Four Parts, with Index, &c., 8s. each, net.; or in 1 vol., 88s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 967.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

NATURAL HISTORY OF THE ANIMAL KINGDOM.

For the Use of Young People. Translated by W. F. KIRBY, from the German of Professor VON SCHUBERT. Fully Illustrated in Colours, and numerous Woodcuts in the Text.

Part I.—MAMMALIA. With Thirty-one Coloured Plates. Paper boards, 6s. 6d.

Part II.—BIRDS. With Thirty Coloured Plates. Paper boards, 6s. 6d.

Part III.—REPTILES, AMPHIBIA, FISHES, INSECTS, &c. With Thirty Coloured Plates. Paper boards, 6s. 6d.

The Three Parts in one volume, half-bound, £1 1s.

This Volume forms a truly valuable Gift-Book for the Young. The Pictures will at once delight and instruct them.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM.

Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By Professor C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d. [In the press.]

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d. [In the press.]

The following have already appeared:—

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

MONUMENTAL HISTORY of the EARLY BRITISH CHURCH. By ROMILLY ALLEN, Esq. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHURCH of ENGLAND (THE TITLE-DEEDS of the). By the Rev. T. P. GARNIER. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

HERBERT'S POEMS. New Edition in Red and Black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

INDIA (THE HISTORY of). New Edition. By L. J. Trotter, Esq. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

STAR ATLAS. By Dr. H. I. Klein. Text Translated and Adapted by the Rev. E. McClure, M.A. Imp. 4to, with Eighteen Charts and Eighty Pages Illustrative Letterpress, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

TOILERS in the SEA. By M. O. Cooke, M.A., LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES. By Professor Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

A SKETCH of the HISTORY of EUROPE, CHIEFLY INTERNATIONAL. From the Beginning of the Roman Empire to the Present Day. By ARTHUR REED ROPES, M.A. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

WELLINGTON; or, the Public and Private Life of Arthur, First Duke of Wellington, as told by Himself, his Comrades, and his Intimate Friends. By G. LATHOM BROWNE. With Portrait, Plans, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

ARISTOTELIANISM. Part I. THE ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By the Rev. I. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Part II. THE LOGICAL TREATISES, the METAPHYSICS, the PSYCHOLOGY, the POLITICS. By the Rev. W. GRUNDY, M.A. The Two Parts in 1 vol. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, satcen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes, Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap 8vo, satcen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

PHOTO-RELIEF WALL MAPS.

ENGLAND and WALES. Size 56 inches by 46 inches. Mounted on Canvas, roller and varnished. 12s.

[This Map is eminently adapted for Schools. It presents the Country as if in actual relief. The Ordnance Survey contouring has been followed.]

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

[A Set of Works designed to present the Chief Races of Europe as they emerge out of pre-historic darkness into the light furnished by their earliest recorded words. The Literature dealt with covers a period stretching from its beginning until the Middle Ages.]

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic Literature."—Scotsman.

* * Others in preparation.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth Rector of Wrington, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON BRITAIN. By Grant Allen, Esq., B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"If any reader wishes to obtain, in a small compass, a general view of our Anglo-Saxon language, literature, and laws, he cannot do better than study this careful and conscientious epitome of those subjects."—Spectator.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry III. to the Revolution of 1688. By HENRY G. HEWLETT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

[A Series of Manuals which furnish in a brief and popular form an Accurate Account of the Great Non-Christian Religious Systems of the World.]

ISLAM as a MISSIONARY RELIGION. By C. R. Haines, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

* * Six other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

EARLY CHRONICLERS OF EUROPE.

[The object of this Series is to bring readers face to face with the Sources of Early European History, and thus enable them to obtain a more intelligent grasp of the subject than can be had from second-hand compilations.]

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, each 4s.

ITALY. By Ugo Balzani.

"Its literary merits are very considerable."—Scotsman.

ENGLAND. By James Gairdner, Author of "The Life and Reign of Richard III."

"The book is well and thoroughly done, and makes a very valuable addition to the stock of historic manuals."—Athenaeum.

FRANCE. By the late Gustave Masson, M.A., Univ. Gallic, Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School, &c.

"Full of exceedingly interesting and valuable matter."—Guardian.

* * Others in preparation.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
LECKY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, I., by R. DUNLOP . . . . .	441
THE REAR GUARD OF THE EMIN RELIEF EXPEDITION, by A. H. KEANE . . . . .	442
ARCHDEACON WATKINS'S BAMPTON LECTURES, by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND . . . . .	441
THE HENRY IRVING SHAKSPEARE, by T. TYLER . . . . .	445
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH . . . . .	446
SOME VOLUMES OF BIOGRAPHY . . . . .	447
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	448
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	449
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A November Note," by ALFRED AUSTIN . . . . .	449
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	449
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	450
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Proposed Emendations in Harl. MS. 2252 , by H. Oskar Sommer; Norfolk Manor Court Rolls (The Darwick MSS.) , by Paget Toynbee; Bacon's Essays , by the Rev. S. H. Reynolds; "Cockney," by H. Wedgwood . . . . .	450
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	452
RECENT BOOKS ON PHYSICS . . . . .	452
THE NINTH ORIENTAL CONGRESS . . . . .	453
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Inscription of Toramana Shdha , by Sir ALEXANDER CUNNINGHAM . . . . .	453
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	454
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .	454
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .	454
TWO WINTER EXHIBITIONS, by F. WEDMORE . . . . .	455
WILD ANIMALS IN VIGO STREET, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . . . .	455
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	455
GLUCK'S "ORFEO" AT COVENT GARDEN, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . . .	456
RECENT CONCERTS . . . . .	456

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

WANTED.—Post of PRIVATE SECRETARY, Tutor, or Librarian, by a Gentleman, author of several learned works, well acquainted with French, German, Latin. Highest possible testimonials.—Address W. W., Post-office, St. Helens, Isle of Wight.

TO PUBLISHERS, &c.—An ENGAGEMENT, in any responsible position, is desired by ADVERTISER, who has had many years' general business experience in PUBLISHING, ADVERTISING, &c. Highest references.—Address ADVERTISER, care of Mr. Wm. Rice, 86, Fleet Street, E.C.

WANTED, SUB-EDITRESS for "THE VEGETARIAN." See the paper and state qualifications.—Editor, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, E.C.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Clues found; Pedigrees traced; Registers searched; Papers and Wills collated, condensed, copied, or translated in any language from manuscript or type. In British Museum, Record Office, Local Registries, &c.—PACOCK & PACOCK, 1, Doughty Street, W.C.

FOR SALE.—19 vols. of "HOUSEHOLD WORDS"; also 9 vols. "ALL THE YEAR ROUND," conducted by Charles Dickens. Perfect condition.—KNIQT, Chetwynd House, Stafford.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 15 stamps.—B. BRASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threescore Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT & FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

SESSION 1890-1891.

The FIRST EVENING MEETING of the above Session will be held at 32, ALBEMARLE STREET, W., on WEDNESDAY, the 19th NOVEMBER, 1890, at 8 p.m., when the OPENING ADDRESS will be delivered by G. L. GOMME, Director of the Society.—J. J. FOSTER, Hon. Sec.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—FOUR LECTURES on the "HISTORY OF THE LITERATURE OF BABYLONIA AND ASSYRIA" will be delivered by Mr. G. BERTIN, M.R.A.S., on the TUESDAYS, DECEMBER 2ND, 9TH, 16TH, and 23RD, at 3 p.m. Tickets, 1s. for the four lectures, from Clarke, stationer, 35, Museum-street; or at the British Museum, in the lecture room, before the lectures.

For Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, &c., see page 458.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH LEADERS OF RELIGION. CARDINAL NEWMAN. By R. H. HUTTON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with Portrait, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

BY S. BARING-GOULD.
SECOND SERIES.
HISTORIC ODDITIES AND STRANGE EVENTS. Second Series. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah." Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Ready.]

A LOST ILLUSION. By Leslie Keith. Author of "The Chilcotes," "A Hurricane in Petticoats," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.]

THE HONOURABLE MISS: a Tale of a Country Town. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Scamp and I," "A Girl of the People," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.]

A DOUBLE KNOT. By G. Manville FENN, Author of "The Vicar's People," "Eli's Children," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.]

TWO BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

A GIRL OF THE PEOPLE. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Scamp and I," &c. Illustrated by R. Barnes. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Ready.]

DUMPS and I. By Mrs. Parr, Author of "Dorothy Fox," &c. Illustrated by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Ready.]

TWO BOOKS FOR BOYS.

SYD BELTON; or, the Boy who Would Not Go to Sea. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "In the King's Name," &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. [Ready.]

MASTER ROCKAFELLAR'S VOYAGE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. [Ready.]

THE WORLD OF SCIENCE. Including Chemistry, Heat, Light, Sound, Magnetism, Electricity, Botany, Zoology, Physiology, Astronomy, and Geology. By R. ELLIOT STEEL, M.A., F.C.S., Senior Natural Science Master in Bradford Grammar School. 147 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOW READY.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE TEMPLE LIBRARY. "May fairly rank as an edition de luxe.....The publishers well deserve the gratitude of all book collectors." Athenaeum.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES. 2 vols. post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE, and with Two Etchings by Herbert Ralston.

The text includes the exceedingly rare "Improvisatore," and several Poems now for the first time printed from the MS. in the possession of the late Mr. Robert Browning. The edition is limited to 500 copies. There is also a Large-Paper Edition of 125 copies, but it is already completely out of print at the Publishers.

The following is a List of Works already issued in this Library:—

LAMB'S ESSAYS OF ELIA. Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. (Only fifteen copies remain unsold.)

POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLD-SMITH. Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON.

SELECTED ESSAYS of Dr. JOHNSON. Edited by BIRKBECK HILL.

LANDOR'S PERICLES and ASPASIA. Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

Each having Six Etchings by Herbert Ralston. All the Large-Paper Copies of the above are completely out of print; and very short numbers of the Small-Paper remain.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES. ANNOTATED AND ACCENTUATED. With Illustrations of English Life in Chaucer's Time. By JOHN SAUNDERS.

"No better edition of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales' has been produced for many a day.....The illustrations from the Ellesmere MS. are capital guides to the student, as giving an authoritative glimpse into the life of Chaucer's time. A special word of recognition must be awarded to the scholarly essay under the title 'Concluding Remarks,' in which the author briefly but powerfully surveys what Chaucer did for his own time, for ours, and for remotest posterity. The volume forms a thoroughly trustworthy text-book."—Daily Telegraph.

J. M. DENT & CO., ALDINE HOUSE, 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET, E.C.

BY S. BARING-GOULD.
OLD COUNTRY LIFE. By S. Baring-GOULD, M.A. Second Edition, with 65 Illustrations, large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
"As healthy, wholesome reading, full of breezy life and movement, full of quaint stories vigorously told, will not be excelled by any book to be published throughout the year. Sound, hearty, and English to the core."—World.

BY E. LYNN LINTON.
THE TRUE HISTORY OF JOSHUA DAVIDSON, Christian and Communist. By E. LYNN LINTON. Tenth and Cheaper Edition. Post 8vo, 1s. [Ready.]

METHUEN'S NOVEL SERIES. Three Shillings and Sixpence. Crown 8vo, well printed and handsomely bound. NEW VOLUMES now ready.

DISENCHANTMENT: An Every-Day Story. By F. MABEL ROBINSON, Author of "The Plan of Campaign." [Ready.]

ARMINELL: a Social Romance. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c.

JACQUETTA. By S. Baring-Gould, Author of "Mehalah."

DERRICK VAUGHAN. By Edna LYALL, Author of "Donovan." A New Edition. With Portrait of the Author.

ELI'S CHILDREN. By G. Manville FENN.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES.
THE INDUSTRIAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. With Maps and Plans. By H. R. B. GIBBINS, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"A careful and lucid sketch."—Times.
"The writer is well-informed, and from first to last his work is profoundly interesting."—Scots Observer.

BALLADS of the BRAVE. Poems of Chivalry, Enterprise, Courage, and Constancy, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. Edited, with Notes, by Rev. F. LANGBRIDGE. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.
"A capital Christmas gift for a boy."—Graphic.
"This charming volume is a healthy book for boys, including old boys."—Echo.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

LORD TENNYSON'S POETICAL WORKS.

J. M. DENT & CO. are now supplying LORD TENNYSON'S WORKS (Macmillan's 7s. 6d. Edition), with 12 Etchings by Herbert Ralston and John Jellicoe, price, in cloth extra, gilt top, 12s. 6d.; and in various extra leather bindings, of which they will be pleased to forward lists to the Trade.

These Etchings can also be supplied bound up with the Eight-Vol. Edition in leather bindings.

CHARLES LAMB'S ESSAYS OF ELIA.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. With an Etching by Herbert Ralston. New and Cheap Edition. Cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

"This edition of the Gentle Elia is one of the most dainty that has been issued for a long while. The style is decidedly artistic, the paper of the best, and the editing most judicious."—Bookseller.

WITH the POETS. A Selection of English Poetry. By ARCHDEACON FARRAR. New and Cheap Edition. With 10 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Has long taken its place in the first rank of selections of English poetry."—Bookseller.

SONGS from TENNYSON. 16mo, cloth, gilt edges, 1s. 6d., with six photos, 2s. 6d.

REVERIES of a BACHELOR; or, a Book of the heart. By IK MARVEL, with an Etching by Percy Moran. A volume of delicate Essays, elegantly printed. Cloth extra, with special design on back and side. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

DREAM LIFE: a Fable of the Seasons. By the Author of "Reveries of a Bachelor," with an Etching by Percy Moran. Cloth extra to match above volume. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW LIST.

NEW EDITION OF HOLLAND'S JURISPRUDENCE.

Just published, Fifth Edition, 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ELEMENTS OF JURISPRUDENCE.

By T. E. HOLLAND, D.C.L., Professor of International Law and Diplomacy, Oxford.

"Has in fact superseded Austin's Treatise."—Law Magazine and Review."A book which may fairly be regarded as one of the few triumphs of legal literature."—Albany Law Journal.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SONG OF LEWES. Edited, with Introduction and English Notes, by C. L. KINGSFORD, M.A.

Just published, Third Edition, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LOOKER'S CONDUCT OF THE UNDERSTANDING. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &amp;c., by THOMAS FOWLER, D.D., Author of "The Elements of Deductive Logic," "The Principles of Morals," &amp;c. Third Edition, corrected and revised.

"I cannot think any parent or instructor justified in neglecting to put this little treatise in the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed."—Hallam's Literature of Science.

Just published, post 8vo, cloth, 6s.; or in 4to, for marginal notes, 10s. 6d.

ARISTOTELIS ETHICA NICOMACHEA.

Recognovit Brevique Adnotatione Critica Instruxit I. BYWATER, A.M., Coll. Exon. Soc.

* This Edition differs in some important particulars from its predecessors. The text has been subjected throughout to a revision which brings it generally into closer conformity with the Laurentian MS. known as Kb; new readings also have been introduced in several passages from the recently published "Commentary of Aspasius" and other sources. A brief Adnotatio Critica at the foot of the page records the more important variants of Kb, as well as the readings which were taken by Bekker from the inferior class of MSS. Appended to the volume is an Index verborum of 40 pages, containing upwards of 6,000 references.

Just published, 2 vols. 8vo, half-bound, 21s.

THE GILD MEROHANT: a Contribution

to British Municipal History. By CHARLES GROSS, Ph.D., Instructor in History, Harvard University.

* The present Work is based mainly on manuscript materials, and in it the author aspires to throw light on the development, not merely of the gilds, but also of the municipal constitution. Much fresh and classified material illustrating general municipal history will be found in the text and notes.—From the PREFACE.

New and Cheaper Edition.

Crown 8vo, cloth bevelled, gilt lines, 4s. 6d., and in various superior bindings.

THE TREASURY OF SACRED SONG.

Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries; with Notes, Explanatory, and Biographical. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry, Oxford.

* Also an Edition printed on the Oxford Thin India Paper, making an exceptionally light and handy volume. Extra cloth, 10s. 6d., and in superior bindings.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues Post-free on Application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, 1s.

THE OLD TESTAMENT SCRIPTURES.

By HENRY HARRIS, B.D., Rector of Winterbourne Bassett, late Fellow and Tutor of Magdalen College, Oxford; Author of "Historical Religion and Biblical Revelation," "The Scripture Doctrine of the Two Sacraments," "A Plea for Unity," "The Scripture Doctrine of the Atonement and its Place in the Christian System," &amp;c.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, AMEN CORNER, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

CAPTAIN SIR RICHARD BURTON'S

ARABIAN NIGHTS. The New Series.

Supplemental Nights to the book of the Thousand Nights and a Night, with Notes, Anthropological and Explanatory. By RICHARD F. BURTON. Six vols., 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. 1884-1888.

These Supplemental Nights are now out of print, and have, like the forerunner in 10 vols., risen in price. This New Series will be preferred to the first, as containing old favourites like "Ali Baba" and "Aladdin, or the Wonderful Lamp," not comprised in the first.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, Piccadilly, London.

CAPTAIN SIR RICHARD BURTON'S

THE LUSIADS OF CAMOENS. Englished

by RICHARD FRANCIS BURTON. 2 vols., 12mo, XXI., and 471 pp., cloth, rare, 1890. Vols. 3-4. Life and Commentary, 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, reduced to 6s., 1881; Vols. 5-6. The Rhythms, or Lyrics of Louis de Camoens: Sonnets, Canzons, Odes, and Sextines, literally Englished by RICHARD F. BURTON. 2 vols., 12mo., cloth, reduced to 7s. 6d., 1884; the same, 6 vols., 12mo., cloth, reduced to 61 11s. 6d., 1890-84.

Burton's Translation of the Lusads is the best English version extant. The Commentary contains the History of the First Settlement of the Portuguese in India, and Captain Burton's Travels in the footstep of Camoens.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, Piccadilly, London.

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A PROTEST AGAINST AGNOSTICISM.

By P. F. FITZGERALD, Author of "The Philosophy of Self-Consciousness," and "A Treatise on the Principle of Sufficient Reason."

"As ably reasoned as it is profound in thought."—Literary World."Beneath the profusion of philosophical and poetical quotations, there is a distinct vein of thought."—Mind."Successful as a protest against the excessive study of physicists."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, &amp; Co., Ltd.

BLACKIE &amp; SON'S PUBLICATIONS.

JUST COMPLETED.

In 8 vols., small 4to, cloth, gilt top, £4 4s.; Roxburgh, £5.

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE.

EDITED BY

HENRY IRVING and FRANK A. MARSHALL.

With a General Introduction and Life of Shakespeare,

By Professor DOWDEN.

With 550 Illustrations in Text and 37 Etchings

By GORDON BROWNE,

W. H. MARGETSON, MAYNARD BROWN, and FRANK DADD.

BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA.

Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

With numerous Pictorial Illustrations and a Series of Maps. In 8 vols., square 8vo, cloth, 6s. each; or half-morocco, 8s. 6d. each. Vols. I. to VII. now ready. Vol. VIII., completing the Work, on 1st December.

A SELECTION from the LIBER

STUDIORUM of J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. For Artists, Art Students, and Amateurs. Comprising 4 Facsimile Reproductions in Mezzotint by Photogravure, 51 Facsimile Reproductions of the Etchings, including 7 Rare Unpublished Plates; and 37 Text Reproductions of the Finished Engravings. In Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in Portfolio, £2 12s. 6d.

each; or complete in Portfolio, £2 12s. 6d.

ANIMAL PAINTING FOR BEGINNERS.

(VERE FOSTER'S Water-Colour Series.) Consisting of Twelve Simple Studies in Colours, drawn from Nature by STEPHEN T. DADD and E. B. STANLEY MONTEFIORE, with numerous Pencil Illustrations and Practical Directions. In 1 vol., 4to, cloth extra, 4s.

Fortieth Thousand.

THE UNIVERSE: or, the Infinitely

Great and the Infinitely Little. A Study of Contrasts in Creation, and Marvels revealed and explained by Natural Science. By F. A. POUCHET, M.D. With 273 Engravings on Wood, of which 56 are Full-Page size. Medium 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

THE IMPERIAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. A Complete Encyclopedic Lexicon, Literary, Etymological, Scientific, Technological, and Pronouncing. By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D. New Edition, carefully Revised and greatly Augmented. Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated by above 3,000 Engravings on Wood. In 4 vols., imperial 8vo, cloth, £5; or half-morocco, £6 6s.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

BY G. A. HENTY.

By England's Aid; or, the Freeing of the Netherlands (1585-1604). With 10 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

By Right of Conquest; or, With Cortez

in Mexico. With 10 Page Illustrations by W. S. Stacey, and 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

Maori and Settler; a Story of the New Zealand War. With 8 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

A Chapter of Adventures; or, Through the Bombardment of Alexandria. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. H. Overend. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

BY GEORGE MAC DONALD.

A Rough Shaking. By GEO. MACDONALD,

LL.D., Author of 'David Elginbrod,' 'At the Back of the North Wind,' &amp;c. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

BY GORDON STABLES.

'Twixt School and College: a Tale of Self-reliance. With 8 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

BY G. NORWAY.

Hussein the Hostage; or, a Boy's Adventures in Persia. With 8 Page Illustrations by John Schönberg. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

LONDON: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

BICKERS &amp; SON'S

SPECIAL LIST OF IMPORTANT BOOKS,

OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

All New and Perfect.

Published at

Offered at

Palestine Illustrated. By Sir Richard

4 s. d. TEMPLE. With 32 Coloured Plates, reproduced &amp; s. d.

1 11 6 By Chromo-lithography. Large 8vo, cloth... 0 10 6

Cyprus; its Ancient Cities, Tombs, and Temples. A Narrative of Researches and Excavations during Ten Years' Residence in that Island.

By LOUIS P. DI CESNOLA. Illustrations.

Medium 8vo. ... 0 17 6

Medieval Architecture in England. By

G. T. CLARK. With 140 Illustrations of Old

English Castles. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth ... 0 18 6

History of Rome and the Roman People.

From its Origin to the Establishment of the Christian Empire. By VICT. DURUY. Edited by the Rev. J. P. MAHAPPY. With 2,500 fine

Engravings, 100 Maps and Plans, and numerous

Chromo-lithographs, 6 vols., imperial 8vo ... 4 4 0

Aristotle. By George Grote. Second

Edition, with Additions. 8vo. ... 0 7 0

Roberts's The Holy Land. Lithographed

from the Original Plates. With Historical Descriptions by the Rev. DR. CHOLLY. 4to, cloth gilt ... 1 5 0

*Schliemann (Dr.), Ancient Mycenæ.

500 Illustrations ... 1 1 0

Troja. Results and Discoveries on the Site of Homer's Troy, &amp;c., 1882. 150 Illustrations ... 1 1 0

Ilios: the City and Country of the Trojans. Researches and Discoveries on the Site of Troy, &amp;c., 1871-9. 1,800 Illustrations ... 1 1 0

Tiryns: the Prehistoric Palace of the Kings of Tiryns. 24 Chromos, &amp;c. ... 1 1 0

* All to be had separate except "Myconæ," which is only supplied when the other three are taken. Very few copies left.

The Maritime Alps and their Seaboard.

By the Author of "Vera." Profusely Illustrated. ... 0 6 6

Don John of Austria; or, Passages from the History of the Sixteenth Century, 1547-1578.

By Sir WILLIAM STIRLING-MAXWELL. With numerous Illustrations. 2 vols., royal 8vo ... 1 2 6

Florence: its History. The Medicis:

The Humanists; Letters; Arts. By CHARLES

VILLARTE. 500 Engravings. Translated by C. B.

PITMAN. Large imperial 4to, half-morocco, gilt edges ... 1 10 0

Holbein Society's Publications: a complete Set. 16 vols., 4to and folio. Scarce ... 10 10 0

Art of the Saracens in Egypt. By

STANLEY LANE-POOLE. With 105 fine Woodcuts. Large Paper. Only 200 printed ... 1 1 0

A History of Ancient Geography among the GREEKS and ROMANS from the Earliest

Ages till the Fall of the Roman Empire. By E. H.

BUNBURY. 2 vols., with Illustrative Maps ... 0 18 6

The Cities and Cemeteries of Etruria. By

G. DENNIS. 2 vols., Map, Plan, and Illustrations

0 14 0

Chinushigura; or, the Loyal League: a

Japanese Romance. 20 Engravings in Colours by Japanese Artists, printed on Japanese Paper.

Royal 8vo ... 0 5 0

The Life and Feats of Arms of Edward the BLACK PRINCE. By CHANDOS HERALD.

A Metrical Chronicle in Old French. With

English Translation and Notes by FRANCISQUE-

MICHEL ... 0 8 6

Fisheries of the Adriatic and the Fish thereof. With List of Adriatic Fauna. By G. L.

FABER. Numerous Illustrations. 4to ... 0 8 6

Cate's Dictionary of General Biography.

Third Edition, Revised throughout. With nearly 400 Memoirs of Persons recently Deceased. Thick

8vo, cloth ... 0 12 6

* Strongly bound in half-russia ... 0 18 6

Turner's The Seine and Loire. With

61 fine Engravings on India Paper. Folio, half-morocco ... 2 16 6

* These Plates are in fine condition, having been used only once before.

Well-worn Roads of Spain, Holland, and Italy, travelled by a Painter in Search of the Picturesque. By F. HOPKINSON SMITH. Fine

Plates. Cloth elegant ... 1 5 0

Spain—Baron Ch. D'Avillier's "Spain."

With 340 Designs by Gustave Doré, half of which are Full-Page size. Elegantly printed on superfine rolled paper. Royal 4to, cloth gilt ... 0 17 6

Shakespeare Scenes for the Young. A Set of Coloured Illustrations, a valuable work for help in getting up Fancy Balls or Children's Theatricals. Folio, cloth gilt ... 0 5 0

Victorian Hymns. English Sacred Songs of Fifty Years. Post 8vo, cloth, gilt top ... 0 3 0

Sacred Allegories. By Rev. W. Adams.

Illustrated with Woodcuts. 4to, cloth, gilt edges ... 0 6 6

Shakespeare's Songs and Sonnets. Illustrations by Sir John Gilbert, some Coloured. 4to fancy boards ... 0 1

All Books in General Literature supplied at

3d. in the Shilling discount; Law and Medical Books at 2d. in the Shilling. Orders by post receive prompt attention.

1, LEICESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

THE JOURNAL OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

FROM THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT
AT ABBOTSFORD.

ANNOTATED AND ILLUSTRATED FROM HIS LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE.

"This book is one of the greatest gifts which our English literature has ever received."—Spectator.

"Reads like a romance."—Scotsman.

"The story is as thrilling as any tragedy."—Times.

"Although many of the details are melancholy, yet the interest of the whole is entrancing, and the 'Journal' is a most precious relic of Sir Walter Scott."
Quarterly Review.

"It may be doubted if during the present century anything more truly pathetic has been published."—Glasgow Herald.

"The publication of the 'Journal' will only serve to make Scott's name more illustrious."—Dundee Advertiser.

"It will be read everywhere and by every one with the deepest curiosity and interest."—Irish Times.

"What we have there is Sir Walter's confession to Sir Walter—a piece of self-revelation, that is to say, unique in literature, and as absolutely assured of immortality as the best and bravest of those admirable achievements in romance which mark an epoch in the literature not only of Britain, but of Europe and the world."
Scots Observer.

"Sir Walter keeps nothing back, and his admirers have no reason to be ashamed of his frankness.....This final work by Sir Walter Scott is as instructive and welcome as any which he penned."—Athenæum.

"The portion of the public which only looks at new books will assuredly find the diary perfectly new to them. The students of Scott will take pleasure in observing the pages which Lockhart for various reasons omitted."

Saturday Review.

"Certainly all who read these volumes will rise from their perusal with a deepened admiration for one of the noblest and best of men."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS, 10, Castle Street.

London: SIMPKIN MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & Co. Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES

And Other Lectures.

A SEQUEL TO THE "FAIRYLAND OF SCIENCE."

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. Fisher).

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with 3 Plates and 94 Woodcuts, price 6s.; bound in calf extra, 11s.

CHAP.

CONTENTS.

- I. The Magician's Chamber by Moonlight.
- II. Magic Glasses and How to Use Them.
- III. Fairy Rings and How They are Made.
- IV. The Life-History of Lichens and Mosses.
- V. The History of a Lava Stream.
- VI. An Hour with the Sun.
- VII. An Evening with the Stars.
- VIII. Little Beings from a Miniature Ocean.
- IX. The Dartmoor Ponies
- X. The Magician's Dream of Ancient Days.

Works by the same Author.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE. Twenty-third Thousand. 6s. Calf, 11s.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN. Thirteenth Thousand. 6s. Calf, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE. 2 vols. 4s. 6d. each.

SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE. Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d. Calf, 14s.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE LIBRARY. Consisting of the above four works uniformly bound, Roxburghe style, and inserted in a neat cloth box. Price 31s. 6d.

"The secret of Miss Buckley's success as a popular expounder of the abstruse results of the highest scientific research is her own mastery of the processes and results. She is content with no second-hand knowledge; she has in all cases gone to the fountain-head."—Times.

EDWARD STANFORD, 26 & 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

To be published November 17th.

A MOST CONCISE AND USEFUL BOOK OF REFERENCE.

In Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 320 pp., price 1s., half-roan, postage.

BARKER'S FACTS AND FIGURES FOR THE YEAR 1891.

Edited by THOMAS P. WHITTAKER.

Containing a large Amount of Information Alphabetically arranged. Relating to Commerce, Government, Insurance, Agriculture, Population, Education, Finance, Health, Religion, Railways, Wealth, and the General Moral, Social, Physical, and Economic Condition of Nations and Peoples; with Especial Reference to those Matters which most Interest and Concern the Inhabitants of the United Kingdom.

LONDON: FREDERICK WARNE & CO., 15, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

And of all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
AND
2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By
A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book.
Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 294 pp., hand-made paper, price 10s. 6d.

SACRED and SHAKESPEARIAN
AFFINITIES; being analogies between the writings of the Psalmists and of Shakespeare. By CHARLES ALFRED SWINBURNE.

BICKERS & SON, 1, LEICESTER-SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

JOHN C. NIMMO'S NEW BOOKS FOR THE AUTUMN OF 1890.

A NEW UNIFORM AND LIMITED EDITION OF THE WORKS OF THE LATE SIR WILLIAM STIRLING-MAXWELL, BARONET.

In small 4to, cloth, gilt top, price 21s. per Volume net. Also a few Large-Paper Copies, with the Engraved Illustrations in duplicate, and the Initial Letters and Rules of the Text printed in red, cloth, uncut. Each copy of both Editions numbered, and the Type distributed.

ANNALS OF THE ARTISTS OF SPAIN. In Four Volumes.

Edited with the Author's latest Additions, Corrections, and Annotations, and illustrated by the original Wood Blocks and Steel Engravings; also Twelve additional Engravings from subjects chosen by him.

"VELAZQUEZ and his WORKS," of which an enlarged and improved Edition was separately published, is, with the Author's voluminous Additions and Emendations, incorporated in its proper place in the "ANNALS," where it originally appeared.

THE CLOISTER LIFE OF THE EMPEROR CHARLES THE FIFTH.

In One Volume.

Edited, with Corrections and large Additions, by the Author, and fully illustrated by new Engravings and Wood Blocks from subjects chosen by him. There will be included in this volume "NOTICES of the EMPEROR CHARLES the FIFTH in 1555 and 1556," not previously published.

A VOLUME OF MISCELLANIES.

Comprising a Memoir of the late Sir WILLIAM STIRLING-MAXWELL, and a complete Bibliography of his Works and his Literary and Artistic Productions, as well as a Selection of his Privately-Printed Pamphlets on various interesting subjects of Art, &c.

NOTE TO THE READER.

"Many Alterations and Additions made by my father, and referred to in the Editor's Preface, have been carefully incorporated in this New Edition of his Works; and the Illustrations now added are chosen from many which he had collected for that purpose."

POLLOK, Sept. 1890.

JOHN STIRLING-MAXWELL.

In demy 4to, on superfine laid paper, cloth, gilt top, illustrated with 30 Original Painters' Etchings, price Three Guineas net. 260 copies printed. Each numbered and Type distributed.

THE THAMES, FROM OXFORD TO THE TOWER.

By WILLIAM SENIOR (RED SPINNER). Illustrated with 30 Original Painters' Etchings by FRANCIS S. WALKER, R.H.A., R.P.E.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.—The Thirty Original Sketches in Oil, from which the Etchings were made, can be seen at the Publisher's. Price for the set, 150 Guineas net.

In large post 4to, 480 pp., with 22 facsimiles of early printing, cloth, uncut edges. 250 copies printed for England, and 250 for America. Type distributed. Price 42s. net.

THE VENETIAN PRINTING PRESS.

AN HISTORICAL STUDY BASED UPON DOCUMENTS FOR THE MOST PART HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.

By HORATIA F. BROWN. With Twenty-two Facsimiles of Early Printing.

EXTRACT FROM AUTHOR'S PREFACE.—"In this study I trace the history of the Venetian press from its introduction, through the sixteenth century—noting especially how press legislation grew up, preceded by custom and practice, and then formulated in law; how the Government dealt with such questions as copyright, protection, and censorship; how the Guild of Printers and Booksellers was founded and governed; how the book trade came under the influence of the Index and the Inquisitorial censorship, and how the Republic endeavoured to protect the trade, thereby involving itself in a long struggle with the Church of Rome—till we reach the slow decline of the Venetian press through the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, in spite of the legislation which was designed to preserve it."

In 2 vols., small 4to, with 18 Illustrations, bound in half German calf, gilt top, price 42s. net, each copy numbered.

THE MEMOIRS of COUNT CARLO GOZZI. Translated into English by JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

With Essays on Italian Impromptu Comedy, Gozzi's Life, the Dramatic Fables, and Pietro Longhi. By the TRANSLATOR. With Portrait and Six Original Etchings by Adolphe Lalauze; also eleven subjects illustrating Italian Comedy by Maurice Sand, engraved on Copper by A. Manceau, and Coloured by hand.

NOTE.—520 copies printed for England. Also a few large paper copies, with Ad. Lalauze's Etchings in duplicate, one as India proof, cloth, uncut edges. Each numbered and type distributed.

In imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 35s. net, with over 100 Engravings on Wood.

THE CHOUANS. By H. DE BALZAC. With 100 Engravings on Wood by Leveille, from Drawings by Julien Le Blant. Newly Translated into English by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

In imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 35s. net, with over 100 Engravings on Wood.

A CHRONICLE of the REIGN of CHARLES IX. By PROSPER MÉRIMÉE. With 110 Engravings on Wood from Drawings by ÉDOUARD TOUDOUZE. Newly Translated into English by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

In oblong folio, half bound elegant, with 60 Coloured Plates of Horses, and 134 Vignettes in the Text, all Coloured by hand, 520 copies printed, each numbered, price £5 5s. net.

RACE HORSES. PEDIGREE—DESCRIPTION—HISTORY. Also HISTORY of CELEBRATED

ENGLISH and FRENCH THOROUGH-BRED STALLIONS and FRENCH MARES which appeared on the Turf from 1764 to 1887. By S. F. TOUCHSTONE. Preceded by a Preface from the DUKE of BEAUFORT. Illustrated by 60 Coloured Plates of Horses, by V. J. Cotillon, L. Pénicaud, and Le Nail. Also 134 Vignettes in the Text by Crafty, Cotillon, Le Nail, Arsenius, Pénicaud, Cousturier, &c. Coloured by hand.

In demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 130 Illustrations, price 12s. 6d. net; also a few large paper copies, bound in half German calf, gilt top, each copy numbered.

CURIOUS CREATURES in ZOOLOGY. With 130 Illustrations throughout the Text. By JOHN ASHTON.

In demy 4to, half German calf, parchment sides, gilt top, price 12s. 6d. net, 520 copies only printed for England and America, combined, each copy numbered.

THE SHEPHERDES CALENDER. By EDMUND SPENSER. The Original Edition of 1579 in Photographic facsimile, with an Introduction. By H. OSKAR SOMMER, Ph.D., Editor of the New Reprint of Carton's Edition of the 'Morte d'Arthur.'

London: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, King William-street, Strand.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, STRAND.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

ENGLISH FAIRY TALES.

Collected by JOSEPH JACOBS. Illustrated by J. D. Batten. Small demy 8vo, pp. xvi.—253, fancy cloth, price 6s.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

(First week.)

Daily Telegraph.—"This new and charmingly illustrated volume."

Daily Graphic.—"As a collection of fairy tales to delight children of all ages ranks second to none."

Globe.—"A delight alike to the young people and their elders."

Star.—"Prettily and brightly adapted."

England.—"A most delightful volume of fairy tales."

Speaker.—"A number of charming English fairy tales."

Manchester Guardian.—"Mr. Jacobs may be congratulated alike on the matter and form of his book."

Daily News.—"A more desirable child's book..... has not been seen for many a day."

THE EXEMPLA; or, Illustrative

Stories from the Sermones Vulgares of Jacques de Vitry. Edited, for the first time, with Introduction, Analysis, and Notes, by Th. F. CRANE, Professor of the Romance Languages in Cornell University. Demy 8vo, pp. cxvi. (Introduction), 1-131 (Latin Text), 135-269 (Translation and Notes), 273-303 (Indexes). Cloth, 13s. 6d. net.

THE HANDBOOK of FOLK-

LORE. Edited by G. LAURENCE GOMME. 16mo, 193 pp., cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

Contents: What Folk-Lore is—Superstitions connected with great natural objects—Trees and Plants—Animal World—Goblinhood—Witchcraft—Leechcraft—Magic and Divination—Future Life—Superstitions generally—Festival Customs—Ceremonial Customs—Games—Local Customs—Folk Tales—Hero Tales—Drolls—Creation—Deluge—Fire and Doom Myths—Ballads and Songs—Place Legends and Traditions—Jingles, Nursery Rhymes, Riddles, &c.—Proverbs, Nicknames, Place Rhymes, &c.—The Way to Collect Folk-Lore—Library Work.

THE PALACE of PLEASURE.

Elizabethan Versions of Italian and French Novels from Boccaccio, Bandello, Cinthio Straparola, Queen Margaret of Navarre, and others. Done into English by WILLIAM PAINTER. Now again Edited for the fourth time, with Introduction, Biographical Notice, Inedited Documents relating to Painter, and Analytical Table of Contents, by JOSEPH JACOBS.

3 vols., 4to, xcv.—363, 428, 428 pages. Sumptuously printed on thick paper, with wide margins, bound in cloth, £2 10s. net. A few copies left on Large Paper (50 printed), at £5 5s. net.

Times.—"A reprint of a work of this character, so rare and yet standing in so intimate a relation to the finest flower of English literature, should certainly be welcome."

WORDSWORTH and COLE-

RIDGE.—LYRICAL BALLADS. Reprinted from the First Edition of 1798. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D., Professor of English Literature in the University of Dublin. 16mo, xxiv.—228 pages, 1890, half-vellum, boards, 7s. 6d. net. Nearly out of print.

The Nation (New York).—"A pure delight without and within."

Speaker.—"We heartily thank Professor Dowden for setting up for us this great literary monument of one of the greatest spiritual growths of our own times."

THE CHRISTIAN WOMEN of

TURKEY, their Folk-Lore, Domestic, Social, and Political Position. Reminiscences of Eight Years' Sojourn and Travel in the European and Asiatic Provinces of the Turkish Empire. By LUCY M. G. GARNETT, Part Author of "Greek Folk-Songs." With an Ethnographical Map, and Introductory Chapters on the Ethnography of Turkey; and Folk-Conceptions of Nature, by J. S. STUART GLENNIE. Medium 8vo, cloth, xxx.—381 pp., 10s. 6d.

Academy.—"A good subject for special study, and Miss Garnett is well qualified for the task."

Literary World.—"Mr. Stuart Glennie supplies a learned introduction, in which he broaches certain important theories as to the common origin of all civilisation."

Asiatic Quarterly.—"Admirable.....A most valuable ethnographical introduction."

Scotsman.—"A work of much general interest and of great anthropological and ethnological value."

Glasgow Herald.—"Bright and entertaining.....The reader is certain to be fascinated with it."

Daily Telegraph.—"Abounding in interest..... Graceful in setting.....Comprehensive in treatment."

Manchester Examiner.—"A very charming contribution to the literature of folk-lore."

Colonies and India.—"Miss Garnett has struck out new veins of literary treasure."

Saturday Review.—"A good general view of the condition of women in Turkey, and a fair analysis of their folk-lore."

Speaker.—"For Miss Garnett's part of the book we have nothing but praise."

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY (Author of "A Book of Verses," Second Edition, 5s. net, and Editor of the Scots Observer).

VIEWS and REVIEWS: Essays

in Appreciation, Literature. 16mo, xii.—235 pages. Printed by Constable. Cloth top, gilt, 5s. net.

Speaker.—"Robustness of tone, magisterial finality of deliverance, uncompromising utterance of personal conviction."

Spectator.—"One of the most remarkable volumes of literary criticism—in more senses than one it is the most striking—that have appeared for a number of years."

Tablet.—"There is force, there is selection, there is simplicity without blankness, and elaboration without cramp."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"He has read widely and well, he has thought for himself, he has the courage of his opinions, and he has a genuine love for all that is best and worthiest in literature."

Scottish Leader.—"Vividness, freshness, concision, boldness and felicity in epithet."

Glasgow Herald.—"Mr. W. E. Henley.....one of the ablest and beyond all question the most merciless of art critics."

WAIFS and STRAYS of

CELTIC TRADITION. Demy 8vo, cloth.—FOLK and HERO TALES. Collected, Edited (in Gaelic), and Translated by the Rev. D. MAC INNES; with a Study on the Development of the Ossianic Saga and copious Notes by ALFRED NUTT. xxiv.—497 pages. Portrait of Campbell of Islay, and 2 Illustrations by E. Griset. 1890. 15s.

Highland Monthly.—"The most important work on Highland Folk-lore and Tales since Campbell's world-renowned Popular Tales."

HECTOR MACLEAN.—"Never before has the development of the Ossianic Saga been so scientifically dealt with."

THE TUDOR LIBRARY.

Large 8vo volumes sumptuously printed on thick paper, in an Edition of 500 Small and 50 Large Paper Copies, with wide margin and uncut edges. These volumes will never be reprinted.

GIOVANNI PICO DELLA

MIRANDOLA: his Life by his Nephew GIOVANNI FRANCESCO PICO. Translated from the Latin by Sir THOMAS MORE. Edited by J. M. RIGG, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 10s. 6d. net.

Saturday Review.—"A reprint of Wynkyn de Worde is always acceptable, and a translation by Sir Thomas More has a value both to students of history, literature, and language."

Scotsman.—"The reprint is from a rare black-letter quarto in the British Museum, printed originally in 1510 by Wynkyn de Worde. Mr. Rigg has edited it with a very interesting essay upon Pico, which defines with critical ability his place among the schoolmen..... Printed in a limited issue, and will doubtless soon become a bibliographical rarity."

Manchester Examiner and Times.—"Excellent and scholarly critical introduction."

DAPHNIS and CHLOE. Ex- cellently describing the Weight of Affection, &c., finished in a Pastoral, and therefore termed the Shepherds' Holiday. By ANGEL DAY, 1587. Edited by JOSEPH JACOBS. 10s. 6d. net.

Scotsman.—"The new volume of Mr. David Nutt's 'Tudor Library' appeals only to the small circle of ardent book-lovers; and its appeal is all the stronger to those who like such books.....The book is as rare as rare can be; but if this were not enough to make bibliophiles eager to have it, the reprint is introduced by an account of the romance, written by Mr. Joseph Jacobs, who mingles learning, bibliography, criticism, literary history, and a genial love of books into a most delightful compound of reading."

VOL. III. OF THE TUDOR LIBRARY.*THE STRIFE of LOUE in a

DREAME, the Elizabethan Version of "Poliphili Hypnerotomachia," Edited by Mr. A. LANG, will be ready before Christmas. Prospectus will be sent out shortly.

THE FABLES of ÆSOP, as first printed by William Caxton in 1484, with those of Avian, Alfonso, and Poggio, now again Edited and Induced by JOSEPH JACOBS, with Introductory Verses by Mr. ANDREW LANG, a History of the Æsopic Fable, a Pedigree Chart of the Æsopic Fable, an Index of the Fables, and a Synopsis of Parallels, Frontispiece by Mr. H. Ryland, and reproductions from the Woodcuts of the original. 2 vols. 304, 326 pages. 1889. 14s. net.

MONS. A. BARTH in Mélanges.—"Ces deux volumes de la 'Bibliothèque de Carabas' (Bidpai et Æsop) constituent l'examen le plus complet et le plus savant qui ait été fait depuis Benfey de cette grande question de l'origine et de la migration des fables, et la critique de l'auteur s'y montre partout aussi sage que bien informée."

MALORY'S MORT DARTHUR.

Caxton's Edition. Reprinted by Dr. H. O. Sommer, with Critical and Literary Introduction. In 3 vols., royal 8vo, £1 10s. net. Vols. I. and II. (Text and Critical Introduction) out; Vol. III. (Literary Introduction) Easter, 1891.

* * A few Large-Paper Copies left at £5 5s.

STANDARD BOOKS PUBLISHED BY MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.

By Lord MACAULAY.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James the Second.

POPULAR EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 5s.
STUDENT'S EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.
CABINET EDITION, 6 vols., post 8vo, 48s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 5 vols., 8vo, £4.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS.

STUDENT'S EDITION, 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 8s.
TREVELYAN EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 9s.
CABINET EDITION, 4 vols., post 8vo, 24s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 3 vols., 8vo, 36s.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS.

With LAYS of ANCIENT ROME. Complete in 1 volume.

AUTHORISED EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., or 3s. 6d. gilt edges.
POPULAR EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME, &c.

Illustrated by G. Scharf, fcap, 4to, 10s. 6d.

Bijou Edition, 12mo, 7s. 6d. gilt top.

Popular Edition, fcap, 4to, 6d. sewed; 1s. cloth

Illustrated by J. R. Weguelin, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. cloth extra, gilt edges.

Cabinet Edition, post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Annotated Edition, fcap, 8vo, 1s. sewed; 1s. 6d. cloth.

COMPLETE WORKS of LORD MACAULAY.

LIBRARY EDITION, 8 vols., 8vo, £5 5s.
CABINET EDITION, 16 vols., post 8vo, £4 16s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of LORD MACAULAY.

By the Right Hon. Sir G. O. TREVELLYAN, Bart.

POPULAR EDITION, 1 vol., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

STUDENT'S EDITION, 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

CABINET EDITION, 2 vols., post 8vo, 12s.

LIBRARY EDITION, 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada. 12 vols., crown 8vo, 42s.

The ENGLISH in IRELAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

SHORT STUDIES on GREAT SUBJECTS. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

CÆSAR: a Sketch. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

OCEANA; or, ENGLAND and her COLONIES.

With 9 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. boards; 2s. 6d. cloth.

THE ENGLISH in the WEST INDIES; or, the Bow of Ulysses. With 9 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. boards; 2s. 6d. cloth.

THOMAS CARLYLE: a History of his Life. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

1795—1835, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s.

1834—1881, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s.

By WILLIAM E. H. LECKY.

The HISTORY of ENGLAND in the EIGHTEENTH

CENTURY. 8vo. Vols. I. and II., 1700—1760, 36s. Vols. III. and IV., 1760—1784, 36s. Vols. V. and VI., 1784—1793, 36s. Vols. VII. and VIII. (with Index to the Complete Work), 1793—1801, 36s.

HISTORY of EUROPEAN MORALS, from

AUGUSTUS to CHARLEMAGNE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

HISTORY of the RISE and INFLUENCE of the SPIRIT of RATIONALISM in EUROPE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

By Sir ERSKINE MAY.

(LORD FARNBOROUGH.)

The CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND, since the Accession of George III., 1760—1870. 3 vols., crown 8vo, price 18s.

By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James I. to the Outbreak of the Civil War, 1603—1642. 10 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

By EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of EUROPE. With 65 Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.

By HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ENGLAND and FRANCE, SPAIN and SCOTLAND. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK.

The ORIGIN of CIVILISATION and the PRIMITIVE CONDITION of MAN. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, price 18s.

By SPENCER WALPOLE.

HISTORY of ENGLAND from the CONCLUSION of the GREAT WAR in 1815 to 1858.

LIBRARY EDITION, 5 vols., 8vo, £4 10s.

CABINET EDITION, 6 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

By G. G. CHISHOLM.

HANDBOOK of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.

With 29 Maps, 8vo, 16s.

By HEINRICH EWALD.

THE HISTORY of ISRAEL. Translated from the German. 8 vols., 8vo. Vols. I. and II. 24s.; Vols. III. and IV. 21s.; Vol. V. 18s.; Vol. VI. 16s.; Vol. VII. 21s.; Vol. VIII. 18s.

By P. M. ROGET, M.D.

THESAURUS of ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES, Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. Recompiled throughout, Enlarged and Improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by the Author's Son, JOHN LEWIS ROGET. Crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

By JOHN STUART MILL.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY.

LIBRARY EDITION, 2 vols., 8vo, 30s.

PEOPLE'S EDITION, crown 8vo, 5s.

A SYSTEM of LOGIC, Ratiocinative and Inductive.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

ON LIBERTY. Crown 8vo, 1s. 4d.

ON REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT. Crown 8vo, 2s.

UTILITARIANISM. 8vo, 5s.

NATURE, the UTILITY of RELIGION, and THEISM, Three Essays. 8vo, 5s.

EXAMINATION of SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON'S PHILOSOPHY. 8vo, price 16s.

By ALEXANDER BAIN.

MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE: a Compendium of Psychology and Ethica. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE SENSES and the INTELLECT. 8vo, price 15s.

THE EMOTIONS and the WILL. 8vo, 15s.

PRACTICAL ESSAYS. Crown 8vo, 2s.

LOGIC, DEDUCTIVE and INDUCTIVE.

Part I. DEDUCTION. 4s.

Part II. INDUCTION. 6s. 6d.

Edited by T. C. SANDARS.

THE INSTITUTES of JUSTINIAN. Latin Text, with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes. 8vo, 18s.

By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A.,

Canon of Canterbury, &c.

THE HISTORY of PHENICIA. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, 24s.

By JOSEPH GWILT, F.S.A.

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA of ARCHITECTURE.

Illustrated with more than 1,700 Engravings. Revised by WYATT PAPWORTH, 8vo, £2 12s. 6d.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: a Review of Public

Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1889.

* Volumes of the ANNUAL REGISTER for the Years 1863—1888 can still be had.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS

THE THIRD EDITION OF THE LETTERS AND DIARIES OF MAJOR BARTTELOT,

Commander of the Rear Column of Mr. Stanley's Expedition.

Being an Account of his Services for the Relief of Candahar, of General Gordon, and of Emin Pasha.

With Portrait and Maps. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

THE LIFE OF THOS. SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

BY MR. BEALE.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

Musical Reminiscences of Half a Century. By WILLERT BEALE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

BY COLONEL CORBETT.

AN OLD COACHMAN'S CHATTER.

With some Practical Remarks upon Driving. By a Semi-Professional, Colonel CORBETT, late Shropshire Militia. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with 8 Illustrations by Sturgess, 15s.

BY EDWARD BARKER.

WAYFARING in FRANCE; or, High-

ways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 18s.

BY MAJOR FISHER.

THROUGH STABLE and SADDLE-

ROOM: A Practical Guide for all concerned in the Ownership or Management of Horses. By ARTHUR T. FISHER, late Major 21st Hussars. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

BY MISS WALKER.

MY MUSICAL EXPERIENCES. Containing Reminiscences of Sir Sterndale Bennett, Tausig, Sgambati, Liszt, Deppe, Scharwenka, Henselt, &c. By BETTINA WALKER. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

FIVE NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."

A DAUGHTER OF THE PYRAMIDS.

By LEITH DERWENT,
Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c.
3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA!"

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Ardath," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton,

Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," "Nancy," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS."

LOVER OR FRIEND.

By ROSA N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "EAST LYNNE."

THE HOUSE of HALLIWELL.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD, Author of "The Channings," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

TWO NEW ADDITIONS TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

MISS SHAFTO. By W. E.

NORRIS, Author of "Thirby Hall," &c.

HERIOT'S CHOICE. By Rosa

N. CAREY, Author of "Wee Wife," &c.
Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

J. ROSE TROUP.

With Stanley's Rear-Column

By J. ROSE TROUP.

Demy 8vo, with Portraits and Illustrations, 16s.

[Now ready.]

ROUND the CALENDAR in PORTU-

GAL. By OSWALD CRAWFURD, C.M.G., Her Majesty's Consul at Oporto. With numerous Illustrations. Royal 8vo, price 18s.

A JOURNALIST'S JOTTINGS. By

W. BEATTY KINGSTON, Author of "A Wanderer's Notes," "Monarchs I have Met," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

SKETCHES of INDIAN LIFE. By

W. W. LLOYD, late 24th Regiment, Author of "On Active Service." 4to, printed in Colours, 6s. [This day.]

CITY BOYS in the WOODS; or, a

Trapping Venture in Maine. By HENRY P. WELLS. Crown 4to, with 137 Illustrations, price 9s.

THE EWE-SPEAKING PEOPLE of the SLAVE COAST of WEST AFRICA. By Major A. B. ELLIS, Author of "The Tshi-Speaking People." Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Saturday Review of October 25th, says: "A really valuable book—a book that will be an almost necessary adjunct to the libraries of African students and politicians interested in Africa .....exceedingly interesting."

LIFE of SUVÓROFF. By Lieutenant-

Colonel SPALDING. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Spectator of October 25th says: "One of the most interesting and striking characters in history. ....Colonel Spalding has done his work well. ....From first page to last, the book is intensely interesting. ....The book ought to be read, and ought to be popular."

THE GOLDSMITH'S WARD. By Mrs.

C. A. READ. Crown 8vo, with 27 Illustrations. [Shortly.]

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

AN HONOURABLE ESTATE.

By LOUISA CROW.

2 vols., crown 8vo. [Next week.]

SUNDORNE. By Bertha Thomas.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

"There are many reasons why 'Sundorne' should make not only a success but a sensation. ....this remarkable story. ....is intensely interesting. ....Every sentence is full of vitality, and does something towards completing a really powerful and able work of fiction: one of the cleverest novels of the day." Court Journal.

IDOLATERS. By Robert Haigh.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

IN LOW RELIEF: a Bohemian Transcript. By MORLEY ROBERTS. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and charming story. ....On almost every page there is something to mark this as the work of no ordinary novelist. ....Mary Morris is a perfectly charming heroine." Speaker.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THIRD EDITION, NOW READY.

THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G.

By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, D.C.L., being the First Volume of "THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS" SERIES," Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"There is something in Mr. Froude's account even of those years which will be new to Lord Beaconsfield's admirers as well as to his critics and will contribute to the final estimate of his place in the annals of our generation."—Times.

"We believe that Mr. Froude's estimate of Lord Beaconsfield, on the whole, will be the one accepted by posterity. It is the man's character which interests us; and this, we think, Mr. Froude has exhibited in its true light, and in colours that will not fade."—Standard.

SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME TO MR. STANLEY'S
"IN DARKEST AFRICA."

EMIN PASHA and the REBELLION

at the EQUATOR. A Story of Nine Months' Experiences in the last of the Sudan Provinces. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Stanley's officers. Written with the Revision and co-operation of HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c. A Preface also by Mr. STANLEY. With Map and numerous Illustrations, two of which are specially drawn by Mrs. H. M. Stanley. SECOND EDITION. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, ONE GUINEA.

"Mr. Jephson's story is told with excellent temper and taste, with a self forgetfulness and genuine modesty which do infinite credit to the narrator. And it is full of the most vivid interest from first to last." The Times.

"A narrative of absorbing interest."—Leeds Mercury.

NEW WORK BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

NELSON'S WORDS and DEEDS: a

Selection from his Despatches and Correspondence. Edited by W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" and numerous other Sea Stories. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GREAT MUSICIANS' SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

CHERUBINI. By Fredk. J. Crowest.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West

Middlesex. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasing. .... Few recent novels have maintained so high a standard of excellence throughout." Athenaeum.

NEW BOYS' BOOKS.

THE PURCHASE of the NORTH POLE:

A Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon."

By JULES VERNE.

Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

STORIES of STRANGE ADVEN-

TURES. By Capt. MAYNE REID, and others. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW YORK to BREST in SEVEN

HOURS. By ANDRE LAURIE, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

JULES VERNE'S WORKS.

NEW EDITIONS.

In uniform 8vo volumes, fully illustrated, price 3s. 6d. each.

ADRIFF in the PACIFIC.

NORTH against SOUTH.

Ready on the 20th inst., price 1s.

Complete in itself.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Containing numerous Original Stories and Articles by well-known writers, and full of beautiful Illustrations.

Orders should be sent at once.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1890.
No. 967, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

History of England in the Eighteenth Century.
Vols. VII. and VIII. By W. E. H. Lecky.
(Longmans.)

(First Notice.)

THE uncompromising attitude of hostility on the part of Mr. Lecky towards the Home Rule movement, viewed in the light of the opinions expressed by him in his Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland, in regard to the Act of Union and the methods by which it was carried, gives to these two volumes an interest quite apart from their historical value.

To many people Mr. Lecky's position doubtless appeared an untenable one; and a rumour announcing the indefinite postponement of the publication of the conclusion of his work naturally seemed to favour the view that he was unwilling by the weight of his authority to strengthen the arguments of those to whom he was politically opposed, and who, in his opinion, were doing their utmost to undermine the Act of Union. Even now there are probably many intelligent persons who, while ready to applaud what they regard as an act of moral courage, fail altogether to understand Mr. Lecky's position. And yet there does not appear to be any valid reason why the most strenuous opponent of Home Rule should not give a fair and impartial account of the Act of Union and its proximate causes; for there is, in my opinion, nothing more unmistakably clear than that the Act of Union and the methods by which it was carried have not in the remotest degree anything to do with either the justification or the condemnation of Home Rule.

Apart, however, from this consideration, the attitude taken up by Mr. Lecky possesses considerable interest as indicative of the point of view from which he regards Irish history. In this respect there are perhaps no two statesmen for whom he has a greater regard, and by whose methods of thought he has himself been more influenced, than Burke and Grattan. His view of history and of the progress of civilisation is essentially Whiggish. Nowhere, indeed, does his abhorrence of extreme measures manifest itself more, and nowhere does it, in my opinion, lead him so entirely to misapprehend the significance of the most important movement of modern times, than in his chapters on the French Revolution. The same dislike of everything savouring of Jacobinism is equally apparent in his narrative of Irish affairs. But if he has no sympathy with the United Irishmen, he has even less with those who, like Lord

Clare, would have desired to stifle all human progress whatever. It is the same spirit, which led him as an historian to condemn the suppression of the Irish Parliament as a measure unwarrantably extreme, which leads him as a politician to resist a movement that, in his opinion, threatens to be equally extreme for its restoration.

The period covered by these two volumes, from 1793 to 1800, embraces the episode of Fitzwilliam's administration, the rise and progress of Defenderism and Orangism, the development of the United Irish movement, the Rebellion of 1798, the French expedition under Humbert, and the Union with England. It is a period of which there is hardly a page, as Mr. Lecky says,

"which is not darkened by the most violently contradictory statements. It is marked by obscure agrarian and social changes, by sudden, and sometimes very perplexing, alterations in popular sentiment, which can only be elucidated and proved by copious illustration. It is also a period of great crimes and of great horrors; and the task of tracing their true causes, and measuring with accuracy and impartiality the different degrees of provocation, aggravation, palliation, and comparative guilt, is an extremely difficult one."

That Mr. Lecky has accomplished his difficult task with impartiality and in a manner worthy of his reputation will, I think, be admitted by everyone who has any independent acquaintance with the original sources of his information. To admit this is not necessarily to imply absolute agreement with all his conclusions, but it is to acknowledge that he has never wilfully suppressed any fact material to the arguments of those who differ from him. In one respect Mr. Lecky has had considerable advantages over his predecessors. Sources of information not available to the ordinary student, including the "secret and confidential" correspondence of the Irish Government ranging over the eventful years of 1795 to 1805, the despatches in the French Foreign Office, and several private collections of papers have been opened to him without reservation. In this way he has been able to throw much additional side-light on the events of his narrative, especially as regards the United Irish conspiracy, but not, I think, in any material degree to modify the facts of which we were already possessed. On the subject of the Fitzwilliam episode, Mr. Lecky's position is very characteristic; but I am doubtful if his argument, that the Catholic question was not altogether foreign to Fitzwilliam's recall is entitled to much weight as against the deliberate assertion of Burke, supported by Grattan, Ponsonby, and Fitzwilliam himself, that it was a mere pretence to veil a reason which, to use Grattan's words, was "too despicable or too criminal to be mentioned," viz., the dismissal of Beresford. Certainly, if Mr. Lecky's suggestion be correct, it must seriously affect our judgment as to the sincerity of Pitt's conduct towards the Catholics during the negotiations pending the Union. Mr. Lecky is loth, as everyone must be who is acquainted with the details of this intricate affair, to attribute the blame of Fitzwilliam's recall to any particular individual. But if it is difficult to decide on whose shoulders the responsibility chiefly rested at this critical time, it is not difficult to see how misapprehensions should have arisen between men of the most indisputable honour, when it is recollected that the negotiations relative to Fitzwilliam's appointment were carried on almost entirely by conversations. When this happens to be the case, as Mr. Lecky well points out,

"the general drift of propositions is remembered, but qualifications and limitations by which they had been guarded are neglected or underrated. Something is tacitly assumed on one side which the other side had not meant to concede; and men who, starting from opposite points, are anxious to come to an agreement, will often half unconsciously omit, attenuate, or evade topics of difference."

The one person whose conduct at this time seems to me obscure and deserving of fuller investigation than Mr. Lecky has accorded it is the Duke of Portland, the leader of the dissentient Whigs, and the viceroy under whom Ireland had secured her legislative independence.

Fitzwilliam's recall, the appointment of Lord Camden, and the defeat of the Catholic Bill, mark a critical period in Irish history. And though it is impossible to forestell, as Mr. Lecky fully admits, whether the disasters that followed might have been averted by a timely concession of the Catholic claims, "it is not too much to say that the undecided and contradictory policy of these critical years was a leading cause of the rebellion of 1798 and of the fatal consequences that flowed from it." This being the case, it seems idle in my opinion to lay so much stress as Mr. Lecky does on the progress of Jacobinical principles, or to stigmatise the United Irishmen as crack-brained enthusiasts. Enthusiasts they undoubtedly were, for without enthusiasm men will not risk life and all they hold dear for the sake of a political principle; but it may be questioned whether the wildest excesses of the United Irish policy could have produced consequences more fatal and lasting than those which resulted from the policy of Lord Clare and his associates. Of all the dangers, real and imaginary, that menaced England at this time, the most chimerical was probably the fear of the conquest of Ireland and its annexation to France. To urge this danger as justifying, or at any rate as palliating, the measures of repression pursued by the government, is, in my opinion, not only to misinterpret Irish history, but to misapprehend the course of human progress. Agitation is doubtless an evil, but it is a mere commonplace of history to say that without agitation all human progress would be at an end. No agitation of the dimensions of the United Irish movement, it may safely be asserted, was ever set on foot without the existence of some real and fundamental grievance which it was intended to remedy. The province of government is to guide agitation into constitutional channels, and not, in the graphic words of Grattan, to close the doors of the constitution against it. To do as the government of Lord Clare did was simply to force a constitutional agitation into illegal courses, and to lay up a fresh stock of grievances for the future. Trite though they may appear, those remarks are by no means irrelevant. The very impartiality of Mr. Lecky's narrative, laden as it is with a mass of conflicting evidence, is of itself sometimes calculated to mislead the reader and blind him to the real points at issue. On the agrarian changes of the period Mr. Lecky has collected some interesting evidence as to the effect which the high price of food in England during the war, combined with other causes, was having on the subdivision of land and the rapid rise of rents in Ireland; and the parallel he institutes between the state of things in Ireland and that which parliamentary inquiries have recently disclosed as existing in the poorer quarters of London and other great towns is no less instructive than curious.

"We find there," he says, "all the leading features of the Irish agrarian system at the close of the eighteenth century; landlords who have let their land for a long period and have thus lost all power of management and control; leaseholders who, as the pressure of population becomes more intense, find it to their interest to subdivide their holdings into minute fractions; a whole race of speculators in poor men's dwellings; rents forced by the competition of the very poor to an enormous height; an excessive congestion of population; an utter neglect of the conditions of comfort and health."

As to the conduct of the Irish government at this time, the general judgment, as Mr. Lecky says, will vary much according to the character and political predisposition of the reader. For his own part, he is strongly convinced that, though the state of affairs, especially in the North, called for drastic treatment, and though even the burning of houses might be defended as a military measure, the faults of the government were enormously great:

"By habitual corruption and the steady employment of the system of nomination boroughs, they had reduced the Irish legislature to a condition of despicable and almost ludicrous subserviency, that a policy which was probably supported by the great majority of educated Irishmen could not command more than twenty or thirty votes in the House of Commons. They had done this at a time when the French Revolution had made the public in the highest degree sensitive to questions of representation; at a time when the burden of war was imposing extraordinary hardships on the people. They had resisted the very moderate Reform Bills of Ponsonby and Grattan, which would have left the overwhelming preponderance of political power in the hands of property, loyalty, and intelligence; as strenuously as the wild democratic schemes of the United Irishmen; and they had thus thrown into the path of treason a crowd of able and energetic men, who might have been contented by reform."

That the determined attitude of hostility on the part of the government to every scheme of reform, no matter how moderate, should have exasperated Grattan beyond measure is hardly to be wondered at; but it is scarcely fair, I think, to describe his language as having "assumed a more distinctly party character." Standing as he did between two parties, between the government on the one hand and the United Irishmen on the other, combating at the same time the treason of the rebels and the treason of the ministers, "which was infinitely worse," he, if any one, represented the truest and best interests of the nation. Violent his language undoubtedly was; but it was the violence of a man struggling desperately and against overwhelming difficulties to rescue the constitution from its enemies, to awaken parliament to a sense of its true danger, and recall it to a sense of its duty. That the voice of moderation should have been lost amid the storms of angry passions was only natural, but it is deeply to be regretted that he should have followed the example of Fox and seceded from parliamentary life. By doing so he irreparably weakened his argument against the Union, and, in my opinion, furnished the strongest proof of the utter rottenness of the constitution of 1782.

There are many other points of importance in the first of these two volumes to which the reader will turn with interest, and on which Mr. Lecky has thrown additional light, as, e.g., the origin and progress of the Orange Society, the influence of foreign affairs on Ireland, the intrigues of the United Irishmen, the trial of William Orr, the growth of Defenderism and agrarian outrage, the diplomatic relations between the English Government and the Vatican. But what will probably strike him as the most remarkable and, perhaps, disagreeable feature in the book is the extraordinary evidence collected by Mr. Lecky as to the important part played by government spies and informers during this period. One of the most notorious of these was Leonard McNally, the legal adviser of the United Irishmen, to whose "uncompromising and romantic fidelity" Curran bore emphatic testimony, but who was at the very time engaged in betraying to the government the line of defence contemplated by his clients, and in communicating the substance of every letter, and sometimes the letters themselves, that arrived from Napper Tandy, Hamilton Rowan, and Reynolds.

"The interest, the singularity, and the melancholy of his career," says Mr. Lecky, "will certainly be enhanced by reading his letters. Written for the most part in great haste, without regular beginning or ending, but in the most beautiful of handwritings, and in the tersest and happiest English, they reveal with great fidelity a strangely composite character, in which the virtues of impulse seemed all to live, though the virtues of principle had wholly gone."

Another, but far less important government spy was a Catholic priest, of Carrickfergus, named McCarry, of whom it was said that, notwithstanding his vocation, "he would go to hell for money." Francis Higgins, "the sham squire," and proprietor of the Freeman's Journal, more than once rendered service of transcendent importance to government, owing to the opportunities he possessed of obtaining information from secret sources. "Nearly 140 letters from his pen," says Mr. Lecky, "are preserved in the government records, and they furnish valuable materials for the history of the times." But from no channel did the government derive more ample and accurate information regarding the intrigues of the United Irishmen abroad immediately preceding the outbreak of the rebellion than from a certain Samuel Taylor, himself a United Irishman, who escaped to the continent in the summer of 1797, and managed to worm himself into the confidence of the French government, and whose communications were all the more valuable because they were quite free from that anxiety to screen individuals which was manifest in the letters of McNally.

R. DUNLOP.

THE REAR GUARD OF THE EMIN RELIEF EXPEDITION.

The Life of Edmund Musgrave Barttelot, Commander of the Rear Column of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition, from his Letters and Diary. By Walter George Barttelot. (Bentley.)

Five Years with the Congo Cannibals. By Herbert Ward. (Chatto & Windus.)

IN his introductory chapter, the editor of Major Barttelot's letters and diary tells us that not a line of this book would ever have been written had even partial justice been shown by Mr. Stanley to "the officers left at Yambuya with his impedimenta, his stores, and his sick." The work thus avowedly assumes the character of a biography with a purpose; and, in fact, takes the form of a heavy indictment against the leader of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition, its object being to vindicate the memory of the commander of the Rear Column from the aspersions supposed to be cast upon it by Mr. Stanley in his published account of the events connected with the collapse of the Rear Guard and the tragic fate of Major Barttelot. Hence, in noticing such a work, it is obviously impossible to avoid all reference to the painful questions at issue; and the editor, a brother of the deceased, and, like him, a major in the British service, doubtless expects the book to be criticised from the standpoint of its merits as a polemical essay. It so inevitably invites controversy that its appearance has been followed by a still raging storm of angry discussion, which threatens to be shifted from the forum of public opinion to the sterner tribunal of a court of justice.

Judged apart altogether from the statements that have since been made on both sides, this vindication must be pronounced a failure, and even a mistake. Such is the eagerness of the editor, not so much to defend his brother as to crush his assumed antagonist, that at the very outset he makes the huge blunder of attempting to deprive Mr. Stanley of his geographical discoveries, and crediting them to Emin Pasha. A letter from Emin to Dr. Felkin, dated Wadelai, October 26, 1886, is quoted to prove that

"Mr. Stanley's Mountains of the Moon [Ru-wenzori] are Emin Pasha's already discovered Usongora Mountains, and Mr. Stanley's Sem-likli River is Emin Pasha's already discovered Kakibi or Dueru River. Surely Emin should not lose the credit of his discoveries, as well as his province and his wealth, as the result of the expedition for his relief."

Certainly "not a line of these words should ever have been written"; and in the interest, not of Stanley or Emin or Barttelot, but of historic truth, it is necessary to state that Emin made no geographical discoveries of any kind in the Albert basin. He circum-navigated the lake, but that feat had been executed years before by Gessi, Mason, and others; he sighted its southern affluent, the Kakibi or Dueru, which is Stanley's Semliki; but Gordon and Mason had already steamed one hour up that river nine years before. It was Stanley and Stanley alone who identified the Semliki with the Kakibi, surveyed its upper course, and approximately determined the extent of its basin. In his ignorance of what had previously been done by others in this region, Emin speaks of his work, the chief result of which he states to be "the discovery of a new river flowing from the Usongora Mountains." But this discovery was no discovery, while he does not even pretend to have discovered the Usongora Mountains, which again are Stanley's Ruwenzori, and which Stanley was again the first to see and roughly survey. What Emin and others before him saw from the lake was doubtless a northern spur of Mount Ajif, about fifteen miles south of the lake, which Stanley first named, estimating its height "at about 6000 feet" (Darkest Africa, ii., 234).

In the above-quoted unfortunate passage, the editor speaks of the loss of Emin's "wealth," the reference being to the accumulated stores of ivory, which were valued at £112,000, but which were the property, not of Emin, but of the Egyptian Government. Was it also in connexion with this ivory that the editor roundly charges Stanley with "playing a deep game" with Tippu-Tib (p. 325), and elsewhere asserts that "there were other objects in view . . . than the relief of Emin Pasha (p. 207)?"

Hitherto it was generally understood that Emin complained of having been rescued against his will. Now, however, we are told that Emin is abandoned by Stanley, who leaves him "to be captured by the rebels" (p. 266). Such reckless advocacy can but harm a client, already sufficiently damaged by the publication of letters and diaries, much of which should never have seen the light. Was it wise, for instance, to publish the following:

"These village kings are very arrogant and childish. I went to King Gondana and told him, giving him a smart prod with a stick, that unless guides were forthcoming in five minutes the soldiers would burn his village. The guides came in a twinkling, and we got to Kwar-mouth," * &c.

This "prodding with a stick" seems to have been a familiar process, and is stated to have led ultimately to the Major's death, though this is still a moot point.

On the other hand, Stanley is represented more or less as a maniac, in one place "as usual, jumping, shouting, and finding fault with everybody"; in another, addressing the men in Ki-Swahili, and telling them to disobey their officers, and if any orders be issued "to tie them to trees (referring to Jephson and Stairs), lastly offering to fight Jephson;" elsewhere flinging himself out of his tent, flogging Ulich, cuffing the Somalis, and making himself "ill with passion."

* The curious Cockney forms, Kwar, Kwar-mouth, for Kwa, Kwamouth, occur in several places. With them may be compared Fiort for Fiot, and the spelling of Malagasy words in old Drury's vocabulary.

It is difficult to reconcile pictures of this sort with the character of a man who has twice led a devoted band of followers across the Continent, and one of whose most conspicuous qualities is coolness in moments of extreme danger. That he should demean himself in this absurd fashion under circumstances of ordinary trouble, the public will be slow to believe without the corroboration of living witnesses, and especially of Mr. Stanley's surviving officers.

In Five Years with the Congo Cannibals, Mr. Herbert Ward, one of these officers, makes no reference to the points here touched upon, for his book is in no way controversial. In the Preface, however, he deals summarily with the causes that led to the demoralisation of the Rear Guard, to which he was attached in a subordinate position. On this subject he writes sensibly and soberly, and is no doubt right in attributing the disaster mainly to Tippu Tib's procrastination in furnishing the promised carriers.

"Tippu Tib promised to collect the men together at once, and assured us that in a few weeks at least we should receive the necessary men. From that time the tragedy of the Rear Guard commenced. Tippu continued to procrastinate; the Zanzibaris and Sudanese, unused to the food of the country, sickened and died. Each of the five officers was in turn stricken down at death's door with malarial fevers and dysentery. No news whatever reached Yambuya from the Advanced Guard. Month after month of horrors passed, and still no aid was sent us from Tippu Tib, and we were soon rendered powerless to act in any way on account of the emaciated condition of the Zanzibaris and Sudanese. . . . Unfortunately there are conflicting opinions upon the actions of the Rear Guard. No doubt Mr. Stanley suffered a great shock upon learning the sad tale of Yambuya with its hundred graves; but in Darkest Africa he takes much too harsh a view of a portion of his expedition that endured great hardships while doing their best."

This view of the case may perhaps be accepted as substantially correct, though many things remain to be explained, which might have been allowed to rest but for the attitude assumed by the editor of Major Barttelot's papers. Elsewhere Mr. Ward refers to Stanley's relations with Tippu; but so far from suggesting any velleities or "deep games," he evidently considers that the bargain was the best that could be made under the circumstances. Tippu hoped, through Stanley's influence with the Free State, to obtain recognition of his political status in the Stanley Falls district, with the ultimate view of obtaining an outlet for his ivory down the Congo to the Atlantic, instead of the costly and tedious overland route to Zanzibar. Stanley, on his part,

"wished to see the authority of the State re-imposed at the station he had himself founded years before; and he also desired that friendly relations might be established between white men and Arabs on the Upper Congo, so that, with the advancing influences of commerce and civilisation, the slaver might recognise that legitimate trade in ivory and the produce of the interior could bring with it rewards as great as those he now derived from the infamous traffic in human beings" (p. 215).

These words should be well weighed before Mr. Stanley is hastily censured for the steps he took, with the sanction of the Free State authorities, to secure the neutrality of the "Bismarck of Africa" * during the progress of the Relief Expedition. But Tippu, who at present holds the balance, as it were, between the rival Christian and Mohammedan parties in Bantuland, is surrounded by Arab influences, while the Free State vacillates, or makes but a feeble attempt to resume its authority by the appointment of an unsupported "Commissaire de District." The consequence is that affairs in the Congo Basin have entered an extremely critical period, and a conflict may at any moment be precipitated, involving in its issue the gravest interests of a large section of the human race.

Among Mr. Ward's numerous original illustrations is an excellent likeness of Tippu, whom he met several times at the Falls, and of whose remarkable career he gives an interesting account, gathered chiefly from Selim bin Mohammed, "an Arab factotum of Tippu's." This is perhaps the most valuable part of the book, which has less to do with cannibalism than might be concluded from its sensational title. Incidentally, however, abundant proofs are given of the prevalence of the practice, especially in the Ubangi and other fluvial valleys along the right bank of the Congo above Bolobo. This section of the great artery, developing the arc of a circle with the equator as its chord, flows mainly through the very heart of the true cannibal zone, which extends northwards beyond the Congo-Nile and Congo-Chad water-partings, and stretches east and west from the headstreams of the Welle-Makua to the Ogoway delta. Throughout the whole of this vast region we now know, from the concurrent testimony of all recent explorers, that anthropophagy exists, not merely as a religious rite or as a class privilege, as has been pretended, but as a recognised social institution, with its fattening grounds, shambles, dead and live meat markets, supplied by organised razzias among hostile populations. Hence, even at Bangala, on the fringe of the black zone and one of the earliest Free State stations, "almost weekly some savage act of cannibalism" occurred during Mr. Ward's administration, while in the remoter villages

"cannibalism is still openly indulged in, and a man will boast of the number of enemies he has devoured, hang their bleached and whitened skulls from a tree by his doorway, or arrange them in line on the roof-tree of his house as silent testimonies of his importance and valour."

Higher up the river he was offered, as proofs of good-will, a plump dog and some lumps of human flesh, dog being second only to man in the estimation of the native gourmet. Hearing of a cannibal settlement on the lower Aruwimi,

"I started one morning for this village. On arriving there, almost the first man I saw was carrying four large lumps of human flesh, with the skin still clinging to it, on a stick; and through Fida I found that they had killed a man this morning and had divided the flesh. Subsequently I came across a party of men squatting round a fire, before which this ghastly flesh, exposed on spits, was cooking" (p. 162).

* This expression, curiously enough, was first applied by the Germans to Stanley himself, and afterwards by others to Tippu.

In March 1888, some months after Mr. Stanley's expected return to Yambuya, Mr. Ward was sent down the Congo to telegraph home for instructions under the critical state of affairs in the Rear Guard camp. The chapters devoted to a description of this and a subsequent voyage down the river, involving altogether 2500 miles of fluvial navigation in open boats, occupy a large part of the volume, and are full of incidents throwing much light on the present political and social condition of the regions nominally within the jurisdiction of the Free State officials. After the withdrawal of Sir Francis de Winton in 1885, his successor, Gen. Jannsens, adopted the short-sighted policy of replacing the English pioneers by inexperienced and often utterly incompetent Belgian military officers. The result is even at the stations a partial reversion to the primitive savagery, as prevalent before the opening of the Congo basin to European influences. Thus, when Mr. Ward reached Bolobo on his last voyage in 1888, he found that the chief, Stanley's old friend Ibaka, had died seven days before,

"three of his wives being buried alive with him. They had already decapitated six slaves, and an execution of another of these poor wretches had just occurred a few minutes before my arrival; indeed, the children were still mimicking the ghastly twitchings of the poor victim's features after the head had been cut off. Other slaves were yet to suffer, for Ibaka had been a great chief, and must enter the next world with a suitable retinue" (p. 302).

Fighting and raiding were going on all the way down the Congo; a warlike expedition of 1000 men was passed on the way; at Bangala several State buildings had been destroyed, and a soldier slain in battle had been dug up and eaten by the hostile natives; farther down a great fight was going on, hundreds of huts were in flames, and "the burning villages extended along the river banks for upwards of two miles" (p. 298).

In the midst of such scenes as these one asks in amazement where the beneficent influence of the Congo Free State and its Belgian administrators comes in? The one European nation which is absolutely without experience in colonial government has assumed a heavy responsibility in undertaking the exclusive control of forty million African savages, needing more tact and administrative skill than double the number of any other race.

A. H. KEANE.

Modern Criticism considered in its relation to the Fourth Gospel; being the Bampton Lectures for 1890, by Henry William Watkins. (John Murray.)

DR. WATKINS's able and eloquent Bampton Lectures on Modern Criticism and the Fourth Gospel will, undoubtedly, be read with the deepest interest, but at the same time, it may be, with a feeling of some disappointment, when it is found how strictly their scope is limited to the external evidence, whether favourable or adverse. It might have been thought that the time was come for a full and exhaustive treatment of the entire subject from the conservative side, showing conclusively, on grounds both of internal evidence and of witness from without, that the Fourth Gospel can be the work of no other than John, the fisherman, the son of Zebedee; but this is not the task which the author has essayed. He takes for his text a remark of the late Dr. Keim, which expresses, he says, in the deliberate words of a man who was as reverent as he was learned, the conviction that "Our age has cancelled the judgment of centuries;" and the main object of his lectures is to show that this statement, which was made with special reference to the Fourth Gospel, cannot be substantiated, but that, rather, the course of recent investigation has tended to refute and invalidate Dr. Keim's dictum. It is not to be supposed, however, that the eight lectures of which the volume consists are confined exclusively to this single point. Besides giving a most interesting and probably nearly exhaustive* sketch of the history of opinions concerning the Fourth Gospel since the first doubts were raised by the Pro-babilia of Bretschneider, Dr. Watkins takes us back once more to the earliest witnesses, and reproduces the old arguments which we all know so well, strengthened, however, by the new evidence which is supposed to lend so much support to the case. That evidence he treats with great fulness and learning; and then, in a closing lecture, he admirably accounts for the special characteristics of the Gospel by the life and surroundings and personal experience and character of the assumed author. In a literary and historical point of view, Dr. Watkins's lectures will be admitted to possess a high interest and value, even though he may practically have left the question very much as he found it.

For what is it that Dr. Watkins has proved? Does he think that a question of this kind, which is one of pure criticism, and can be settled only in accordance with the evidence, ought to be decided by the mere weight of authority? Let it be granted that a certain reaction has taken place from the extreme opinions of forty years ago, and that, of critics who are entitled to a hearing on such a question, there are fewer now than there were some time back who can be quoted against the genuineness of the Fourth Gospel. It is proved, of course, that the date assigned by Baur—160-170—is an impossible one, and that the Gospel must have been in circulation as (probably) an inspired work before the middle of the century. That is proved by the discovery of the Diatessaron, and so far there has been solid gain. But there is still a wide gap between the earliest extant testimony and the lifetime of the Apostle. There is a wide difference, moreover, between assenting to well-established facts and accepting a literary judgment which depends on a vast number of nice considerations, and which even the most impartial minds can scarcely approach without bias. Nor, while we have in England Martineau, Carpenter, and Abbott, in France Renan and Sabatier, in Holland Scholten, in Germany Hilgenfeld, Holsten, the two Holtzmanns, Schürer, Wendt, Pfeiderer, and Weizsäcker, to mention no others, among those who question or deny direct apostolic authorship, can it be said that the weight of learned opinion has so very decidedly inclined to the positive side. And in the meantime, in this country at least, it might not perhaps be very hazardous to conjecture that there is at present a greater mass of intelligent as distinguished from academic opinion against the authenticity than in favour of it.

* He has, however, strangely overlooked Pfeiderer, one of the ablest and most trustworthy critics of our day.

Let us come, however, to the earliest witnesses. It is perfectly certain that the Fourth Gospel was in circulation and generally accepted, not only as one of the holy quaternion, but as the undoubted work of the apostle John, in the time of Irenaeus—say, from about the commencement of the last quarter of the second century. Going backward, we find that it was made use of by Tatian in his Digest of the Four Gospels, which he commences in the very words of John; this fact, as already noted, being now happily established. At a still earlier date, about the middle of the century, we see that the Gospel was known to Justin Martyr; that is, if it be conceded that this question, so long sub lite, may now be regarded as finally settled in the affirmative. But it is surely remarkable—it is a point which Dr. Watkins naturally seeks to minimise—that Justin, who expressly names Peter in connexion with certain Memoirs, and who also mentions John as the author of the Apocalypse, nowhere distinguishes the Fourth Gospel as a separate composition, nor assigns to it any authorship; and that, while he reproduces a large part of the story of Christ from the Synoptics, he has only one or two direct quotations from John. It may also be admitted, at least I should have no disposition to question, though Dr. Martineau seems to be still unconvinced, that the Gospel was known to the author of the Clementines; it thus appearing that its recognition was not confined to any single party in the Church. Can we trace it any farther back? Dr. Watkins is clear that it was quoted by the heretic Basilides; and here he appeals with some confidence to the literary judgment of such accomplished critics as M. Renan and the late Matthew Arnold. On such a point some may think that Dr. Martineau, forty years ago, was as competent a judge as either of the writers just named. Has Dr. Watkins not seen his exhaustive essay on the "Refutation of all Heresies," printed in the Studies of Christianity; or is he, in trying to depreciate Dr. Martineau as a Biblical scholar, having his revenge upon him for the severe strictness with which that essay opens on the easy good-nature of the university of Oxford in so readily accepting as Origen's a work which manifestly was not his? Of course, everything depends on the degree of accuracy which is ascribed to the author of the Philosophumena. It seems scarcely questionable that we have this second-hand evidence that the Fourth Gospel was known to Basilides, but it is at least possible that the writer confounded Basilides with his followers. Let it be so, however, and let it be granted that the Fourth Gospel was in circulation, though still unconnected with any name, as early as the reign of Trajan. This, at any rate, is the very earliest point to which it can be doubtfully traced. But admitting that the facts as thus stated are not wholly irreconcilable with the hypothesis of genuineness, are they not entirely what we should expect in the case of a pseudonymous work? The Gospel, published in the early years of the second century, or even it may be in the last decade of the first, rapidly gained favour with those who, as converts from the Gentiles, had learned to take a more exalted view of Christ's person than that presented by the Synoptics. Nor was there any occasion to enquire too particularly into the credentials of a work which spoke with authority, and which, on the face of it, claimed to proceed from an eyewitness. Gradually, however, the opinion grew that the author could be no other than the unnamed disciple of the Gospel, and that this greatest of the Gospels accordingly is the work of John the son of Zebedee, the disciple whom Jesus loved. It was not, however, till far on in the century that this came to be the received opinion. The Fourth Gospel, it must be remembered, like its companions, was, and remains, an anonymous work. I have, indeed, always taken the view that there is a tacit claim on the part of the author to be himself the disciple whose name he seems modestly to withhold, but whom otherwise he does not hesitate to distinguish as in closest intimacy with the Incarnate One, and that so far as this is not the case there is a suggestio falsi; but I admit that another view is possible. Another writer in contact with John, or one who even wished to create the impression of being in contact with him, might so have written.

In the last very interesting lecture in this volume there is much with which, if it had been a little differently expressed, it would have been quite possible to agree. Dr. Watkins does not fail to recognise "the marked differences between this Gospel and the Synoptics," nor does he doubt that those differences constitute "a prolem" which must be met. He does not admit, of course, that they are fatal to the veracity of one narrative or the other; but his statement that "they find their explanation in the circumstances under which the Gospel was written," is one to which no exception can well be taken:

"The key to the Fourth Gospel," says Dr. Watkins, "lies in translation, or, if this term has acquired too narrow a meaning, transmutation, re-formation, growth; nor need we shrink from the true sense of the terms, development and evolution. I mean translation in language from Aramaic into Greek; translation in time extending over more than half a century, the writer passing from young manhood to mature old age; translation in place from Palestine to Ephesus; translation in outward moulds of thought from the simplicity of Jewish fishermen and peasants, and the ritual of Pharisees and priests, to the technicalities of a people who had formed for a century the meeting-ground, and, in part, the union, of the philosophies of East and West.

"If we earnestly attempt to realise the life of the Apostle and the circumstances under which the Gospel was composed, it will lead us to understand how this process of development must have taken place in the inspired writer, and how absolutely essential it was to the purpose of his writing" (pp. 426, 7).

Precisely so. The one thing which may be considered absolutely certain about the Fourth Gospel is that it is widely separated in character and purpose from the Synoptics, that its Christ is an ideal figure, that its narration is a perversion, in a dogmatic interest, of the genuine tradition, and that its discourses are theological disquisitions freely composed by the author, mingled it may be with some authentic reminiscences. For my own part, I confess I have never thought it so wholly incredible that even a companion of Jesus, after the lapse of many years, when the experiences of his early manhood had become faint in his memory, when new scenes, new interests, the discussions he was listening to every day, a new home and a new language, had all wrought their effect upon his mind, might have written such a Gospel as this. But it is scarcely possible; and on the whole I am inclined to agree with those who hold that the author was one of a younger generation who may have been more or less closely associated with John the Apostle, but who depended mainly on the earlier narrative which he knew how to handle to make it answer his own purposes.

What then has Dr. Watkins proved? That the statement of Dr. Keim, in its application to the Fourth Gospel was somewhat too sweeping; but nothing more. The problem of the Fourth Gospel remains where it was. That book, so spiritual, so mystical, so tender, so impossible as history, so sweet as religion, so curiously related to the Synoptics, so dependent on them for its materials, and yet so distinct from them in its method and aim, remains as an enigma on which the mind of man will ever delight to exercise itself, but which, perhaps, it will never be able to solve.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

The Works of William Shakspeare. Edited by Henry Irving and Frank A. Marshall. Vol. VIII. (Blackie.)

PREFixed to this, the concluding volume of the "Henry Irving Shakspeare," in a prefatory note, Mr. Irving pays a tribute of respect to the memory of his colleague, Mr. Frank Marshall, who, however, had not only been the virtual editor of the work, but had actually written very much of it, until "failing health made such stress of work impossible for him." The "General Introduction," which in this volume precedes "Hamlet," "Henry VIII.," "Pericles," and the Poems, was, it seems, to have been written by Mr. Marshall; but, in consequence of his death, this part of the work has been executed by the practised hand of Prof. Dowden. I should, perhaps, give the preference to the Shakspeare Primer, by the same writer, in Macmillan's series. But the newly published Introduction wears less the aspect of a scientific manual, and would probably be preferred by the ordinary reader. It is enriched, too, from the results of recent discoveries, as, for example, that of a sketch of the interior of the Swan Theatre, found in the university library at Utrecht.

M. James Darmesteter, in his recent work on Shakspeare, follows the scheme adopted by Prof. Dowden in the Shakspeare Primer, so far as relates to dividing the years of Shakspeare's literary activity into four periods, but differs somewhat in the names he assigns to these periods:

"According to M. Darmesteter, the first period extends from 1588 to 1593; he names it 'Les Années d'Apprentissage'; it is succeeded by the 'Période d'Épanouissement' (1593-1601); upon which follows the 'Période Pessimiste' (1601-8); and the great career closes with the rolling away of clouds and the outbeaming of a serene sun in the 'Période Optimiste' (1608-13)."

But Prof. Dowden carefully warns the reader "against the notion that at any time either what we now term 'pessimism' or what we term 'optimism' formed the creed, or any part of the creed, of Shakspeare." But what is it, may be asked, that we now term "pessimism"? I am afraid that if in our description we strive after τὸ ἀκριβές we shall certainly fail. We must say of pessimism what Aristotle says of friendship, that it admits of no exact definition; there is no precise limit where pessimism begins or ends. Shakspeare, Prof. Dowden tells us, was "a penetrating student of man's heart, who would deny neither the evil nor the good." But it may be doubted whether anyone ever seriously believed that there is not something of good in both man and the world. Swift declares that he ever hated all bodies of men; but nevertheless he found individuals whom he could cordially love. Schopenhauer could find in music a soothing anodyne for Weltschmerz; and, alike for the individual and for the race, there was at least a hope of nirvana, a cessation of existence. Prof. Dowden's objection to Shakspeare being called a pessimist proceeds, I should say, in great measure from a dislike of the name. He says,

"All the indications derived from Shakspeare's writings seem to point to the conclusion that there was a period of his life when, as Hallam says, 'his heart was ill at ease and ill-content with the world or his own conscience.'"

And at this period Prof. Dowden is inclined to place the composition, among other works, of "Troilus and Cressida," a play which he characterises as "a satire on human existence thrown into dramatic form." "In Troilus and Cressida life lies before us like an unweeded garden, 'things rank and gross in nature possess it merely.'" This play is "Shakspeare's nearest approach to what we call pessimism." I should doubt, indeed, whether the satire on human nature contained in "Troilus and Cressida," taken together with "Hamlet," is one whit less acrid than that of Swift's Gulliver, even in that last part where the Yahoos of Houyhnhnm-land are portrayed. Whether for the years of Shakspeare's literary history, 1601 to 1608, preference should be given to Prof. Dowden's designation "Out of the Depths," or to M. Darmesteter's "Période Pessimiste," seems to me a matter of but slight importance. But whether we should admit that there was such a full swing of the pendulum as is implied in the transition to a succeeding "période optimiste," according to M. Darmesteter, or from "Out of the Depths" to "on the Heights," according to Prof. Dowden, is another question. We may admit the reality of the change from "Hamlet" and "Troilus and Cressida" to "The Tempest" and "The Winter's Tale." But that strange and remarkable character Caliban would never have been drawn by an optimist "on the heights." The name "Caliban," as was seen long ago, is derived from the title of Montaigne's essay "Of the Canibales"; and the portraiture of Caliban is certainly so drawn as to offer a designed contrast and contradiction to the optimistic view of man's original condition set forth by Montaigne. George Eliot's "meliorism" would furnish a better title for Shakspeare's last literary period.

The special Introduction to "Hamlet" was written mainly by Mr. Frank Marshall; but it concludes with an interesting extract from an address by Mr. Henry Irving, delivered early in the present year at Wolverhampton. This extract is concerned mainly with the great scene between Hamlet and Ophelia (Act iii., sc. 1). Mr. Irving speaks of "shafts tipped with cynic poison," and of "lines almost gross in their libel of humanity"; but he seems unable or unwilling to recognise the full meaning of the language employed in the play. When Hamlet declares that "virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it," Mr. Irving considers that Hamlet is specially alluding to his mother, and to vicious tendency thence inherited. But Hamlet's mother is not represented as originally and radically vicious, rather as having easily yielded to temptation, in accordance with that pessimistic utterance in the first soliloquy, "Frailty, thy name is woman." No; the "old stock" is not specially Hamlet's mother, but original human nature. "Get thee to a nunnery" Mr. Irving interprets as an exhortation to Ophelia to betake herself to a sanctuary where her purity may be sheltered from the contaminations of the world. But surely Hamlet explains his meaning clearly enough when he says, "Get thee to a nunnery; why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners. . . . What should such fellows as I do crawling between heaven and earth?" And it is in close connexion, and as related to the "breeding of sinners," that what follows with regard to Polonius must certainly be taken, "Let the doors be shut upon him that he may play the fool nowhere but in his own house." The usual peeping out from behind the arras by the King and Polonius may be an effective piece of stage business; but there is not the slightest indication that Shakspeare intended anything of the kind when he used the expression "playing the fool"; in fact, the words of Polonius which follow are inconsistent with such an intent:

"You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all."

The commentary on "Hamlet," from Act i., sc. 4, to the end, has been written by Mr. Arthur Symons. On the more difficult problems of the play, whether philosophical or philosophical, I have not found that it throws any new and important light. One grave fault is the scant use made of the very important materials for the interpreter furnished by the Quarto of 1603. And this is so, though Mr. Marshall in the Introduction had spoken of this Quarto as giving more or less Shakspeare's first draft of the play. Of Hamlet's conduct towards Ophelia, when he came to her in her chamber (Act ii., sc. 1), looking

"As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors,"

Mr. Symons offers no explanation. It is, however, on a comparison of the First Quarto with the later text, and the evidence there furnished of change and development in Shakspeare's conception, that we are enabled to discern, with regard to Hamlet's madness, that "there is method in it." We have here, in fact, an allegorical representation of the pessimistic philosopher. From the horrors of a loathsome dungeon Hamlet comes forth to treat Ophelia as a dear friend, suffering internally from a hopeless malady. The First Quarto has no indication that Hamlet was a prisoner. He merely comes "with a distracted look,

His garters lagging downe, his shooes vntide."

It is in the later text that the stockings "down-gyved" and other indications of the prisoner appear. At the same time, the later text (Foll.) describes the world as a goodly prison, with "many confines, wards, and dungeons" (Act ii., sc. 2). As to Ophelia's internal disease, it is the First Quarto which tells us of Hamlet "holding her pulse"; but it is the later text which contains those remarkable words, "the most beautified Ophelia."* On this Mr. Symons does observe that the change from "beautiful" in the First Quarto "has evidently been made deliberately." But the other variations which I have mentioned, and more of which I cannot now speak, should certainly have been indicated. These are not minute and unimportant differences; and no commentary on "Hamlet" which disregards them can claim a reasonable completeness.

I must refrain from discussing "Henry VIII." and "Pericles," though both plays present points of very great interest for the Shaksperian student. The "Poems" were intrusted to Mr. A. Wilson Verity; and, on account of the interest lately exhibited with regard to the Sonnets, one is particularly anxious to see how these have been dealt with. Here the notes seem to me by far the best part of Mr. Verity's performance; the Introduction is a strange piece of work. With respect to the all-important and fundamental question whether the Sonnets are concerned with facts, and whether they disclose the actual feelings and sentiments of the poet, Mr. Verity says in one place:

"Under all the imagery and artificial elaboration of the poems the deepest feeling is—meo [sic] judice—always present; Shakspeare is the real speaker in every line, and here, if nowhere else, he 'abides our question.'"

But four pages further on we read,

"Some of the Sonnets are obviously artificial, verbal essays in the conventional sonneteering of the period. This is especially true of the

* With respect to these words, see ACADEMY, September 12, 19, and 26, 1885.

"dark woman" series. In these poems the merit is purely artistic. What is said amounts to very little."

But Mr. Verity's achievement with regard to the Sonnets is surpassed by his Introduction to "A Lover's Complaint." The thought may suggest itself whether this Introduction was not composed under circumstances and conditions similar to those in which Coleridge is said to have written his "Kubla Khan." We might thus account not only for the assertion that a poem, in places rough and possibly unfinished, is "wholly charming," but even for the supposition that there is a passage in it where "the deserted Ariadne describes the faithless Theseus," though there is not the slightest mention of or allusion to either of these famous personages: "Beautiful, too, is the elaboration and preciousness (almost) of the style in the purely descriptive passages, as where the deserted Ariadne describes the faithless Theseus."

The numerous illustrations are, as might be expected, of varying merit. One of the best in the volume is, I should say, that of Hamlet and the Ghost on the platform (p. 37). The engraving from the Chandos portrait which serves as frontispiece can scarcely be regarded as successful; and a similar remark may be made with regard to the reduced representation of the Droeshout engraving in the First Folio.

THOMAS TYLER.

NEW NOVELS.

Blind Fate. By Mrs. Alexander. In 3 vols. (White.)

Our Pleasant Vices. By Milner Macmaster. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

The Last of the Fenwickes. By Helen Shipton. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Locusta. By W. Outram Tristram. (Ward & Downey.)

Dramas of Life. By George R. Sims. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Girl of the People. By L. T. Meade. (Methuen.)

Rosalba. By F. G. Wallace-Goodbody. (W. H. Allen.)

MRS. ALEXANDER, who does not generally dive deep into the sensational elements of life, has taken a murder as the basis of her new story, Blind Fate. Whether a crime is enough upon which to hang three volumes of what is chiefly detective lore may be matter of opinion. But we will at once frankly say that Mrs. Alexander wraps up her mystery in a masterly manner; and there are few, if any, readers who would guess the secret before the author chooses to reveal it. Colonel Callander, an elderly officer, has a young and beautiful wife, who is persecuted by the attentions of a certain Randal Egerton. On one occasion, Mrs. Callander's sister, Dorothy, hears a violent altercation between these two, because Mrs. Callander will not desert her husband for her lover. The latter threatens her, and leaves her in indignation. The next thing described is the murder of Mrs. Callander. She is stabbed by some thin-pointed weapon in the neck, and found dead. A hue and cry is raised, and a detective is set to work. Meanwhile, the Colonel attributes the deed to Paul Standish, the guardian of Dorothy, who is utterly incapable of such an action, as the sequel shows. Dorothy, and all those who know Egerton, believe on the contrary that he is the murderer. After all, the Colonel himself confesses that he has killed his wife to preserve her from the betrayer's hands. Such a revelation was quite unexpected; whereas, from Egerton's appearance and antecedents, nobody would have been surprised had the tragedy been brought home to him. Standish and Dorothy, who have all through been blind to each other's love, suddenly discover it and are made happy. In order to escape the gallows, a fatal accident or a suicide is necessary for the Colonel; but the manner of his death is left an open question. Egerton, who has nothing to live for after the terrible failure of his plans with regard to Mrs. Callander, leaves England. These are the salient points in the story, which is written with power, and is unquestionably interesting. But why will Mrs. Alexander commit such solecisms in language as "Who do you suspect?" and "You have a right to ask who you like": and why should she make Othello say, "My occupation's o'er," instead of "gone"?

Mr. Macmaster is not a practised writer, judging by Our Pleasant Vices; but if he has few pretensions to style, he writes with some verve and animation. But he will make deadly enemies of the critic and the reader unless he curbs his tendency to voluminousness. His present story is just double the length warranted by the substance of the tale he has to unfold. A young lady is falsely charged with a paltry theft of £17, after she has refused to marry a man with £5000 a year; and two whole volumes are occupied with the efforts on the one hand to prove her guilty, and the still more strenuous efforts on the other hand to establish her innocence. She is an interesting figure, all the more because she is beautiful and makes havoc of the hearts of the legal and other authorities against her; but her experiences and those of her friends might well have been compressed into half the space. It is true that, in the course of the unravelment of the conspiracy against Belle Carlisle, we come across many clever touches of character as it is to be met with in Australia, where the incidents of the novel occur; but these do not justify the undue elaboration. A melodramatic actor, a rich squatter, and a wealthy merchant are all suitors for Miss Carlisle's hand; and the details of their wooing are often really funny. There is sufficient promise in the work to encourage the author to proceed. But why he should call his story Our Pleasant Vices is not very apparent. A far better title, as it seems to us, would have been "A Conspiracy Against Beauty," for Miss Carlisle arrays all the plain women against her.

A very considerable game of cross purposes is unravelled in The Last of the Fenwickes. For the details of the complicated family histories unfolded by Miss Shipton readers will probably not greatly care; but they are certain to be interested in the fortunes of Alwyn Crawford and Isabel Fenwick. These lovers are sundered by a very trivial incident, which seems utterly to blight the lives of the chief parties concerned. Then Crawford leaves his home and goes out into the world, thinking there never was a case in the history of mankind so hard as his own, until he meets Lord Harry Sartoris, and learns what a brave and noble life he is leading while under the shadow of a perpetual sorrow. He becomes Lord Harry's private secretary, and plunges with him into "the universal-philanthropy-mind-your-neighbour's-business line." Sartoris is voted an erratic politician, but his heart is in the right place. So, like Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, the noble lord and his secretary ride forth for the redress of grievances. People said that Sartoris would ruin his parliamentary career by always worrying the world in general, and the House in particular, about wrongs that were of no interest whatever except to a few hundreds of poor wretches who were being ruined by them; but he went on his way notwithstanding. In course of time, Crawford finds his own horizon lighten; difficulties and misunderstandings are cleared away, and he marries Isabel, as indeed we always felt he would. Without manifesting originality, or any special power, Miss Shipton's novel is decidedly bright and readable.

The dark and terrible days of the Overbury poisonings are dealt with in Mr. Tristram's Locusta. He accepts the theory, now abandoned by the best historians, that the eldest son of James I., the noble and accomplished Prince Henry, was murdered, and actually makes his royal and pedantic father the chief criminal. James even writes to Sir Thomas Overbury: "Let the grapes, good Sir Thomas, to be bestowed on our son be sugared, if they be not ripe." Overbury, accordingly, applies to the infamous poisoner of Paternoster Row, Mrs. Turner, who was in league with the beautiful Countess of Somerset in many a dark deed. Prince Henry was "removed"; but his friend and preceptor, the Sieur Vasta d'Amalos, sets himself to work out a terrible vengeance. It takes some years to effect this; but it is at last accomplished, and four of the miserable conspirators against the Prince are brought to a tragic end. The two still remaining, the Earl and Countess of Somerset, are put on their trial, but only after a threat on the part of d'Amalos to expose the King himself if he thwarts the course of justice. The Earl and his licentious and heartless wife are doomed to a living death which is worse than the scaffold. Mr. Tristram is rather too severe in his delineations of the drunken monarch and the debauched Overbury; but his sketch of the virtuous Prince Henry is no more than tradition warrants. By eschewing the incidents which are not historical the reader will be able to enjoy Mr. Tristram's volume. If charged with the gloom of death and revenge, it is powerfully written.

Mr. Sims's sketches of the seamy side of existence, entitled Dramas of Life, are in his usual graphic style. They contain some genuine surprises. "The Millionaire's Secret," for example, relates how a burglar discovers, while engaged in his profession at Colston Hall, that its owner, Thomas Smith, Esq., J.P., the richest man in the county, is none other than an old "pal," who in days gone by had committed a serious crime. Mr. Smith buys the burglar's silence with £10,000 and an annual pension. The incident is far-fetched, but not impossible. Among other striking stories are "The Last Letter" and "A Bijou Residence." Some curious revelations of the detective service are to be met with in this volume.

A touching story of womanly devotion in the humblest ranks of life is told by Miss Meade in A Girl of the People. The scene is laid in Liverpool, where the very wealthy and the very poor are to be found in close proximity. Our author takes us among the slums; and there is something very moving in the way in which poor Bet Granger—a newspaper girl—guards her young brothers from a drunken father's cruelty after their mother's death. She also remains true to her sweetheart, the worthy sailor Will Scarlett, when he is unjustly thrown into prison. Miss Meade awards them happiness at last, and this is but fair after they had borne their oppressive burden of misery. This little volume throws a strong light upon the simple annals of the poor.

One scarcely knows what to make of Rosalba, a story of the Apennines. The heroine, at the opening, is a foolish, wealthy Swiss girl, who seeks to entice a poverty-stricken Italian noble into marriage by lending him large sums of money. The marquis takes her money, but has no intention of marrying her; and when she discovers this, she twice attempts to commit suicide. Finally, she loses her reason, and only recovers it to die of consumption in the arms of a faithful English lover. There is a Father Massimo in the story, whose good deeds are only equalled by his capacity to swallow theological dogmas. The narrative is gracefully written in some parts, but it is difficult to see what Mr. Wallace-Goodbody is aiming at. If he is aiming at nothing, he has certainly scored a bull's eye.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME VOLUMES OF BIOGRAPHY.

A Short Life of Cardinal Newman. By J. S. Fletcher. (Ward and Downey.) This is a brief, pleasant, and unpretentious biography, the work of a Catholic, who aims rather at telling a plain story than at controversial display. There is little in it that calls for criticism: as far as possible, the Apologia has been followed or quoted; and for the subsequent history, Mr. Fletcher has accurately and conscientiously referred to Newman's published letters, prefaces, and speeches. There are no great mistakes in matters of fact, as will be seen, if we point out the only two errors that have struck us: Littlemore is not upon the London road; and Mr. Fletcher tells us that seventeen bishops were present at the Cardinal's funeral, though his list contains but fifteen names. Perhaps Mr. Fletcher, in his praiseworthy zeal for Newman, goes a little out of his way to criticise Kingsley and Mr. Justice Coleridge. The one was culpably impetuous, and the other wanting in judgment. But the Apologia came of the first encounter; and a characteristic exposure of a certain Protestantism from the latter. Speaking about the result of the Achilli trial, Mr. Fletcher writes: "The popular Protestantism of the day, the Protestantism of Exeter Hall, and the unwashed mob, received its death-blow." This reminds us of "the unwashed boor," the phrase for a certain kind of Protestant, which critics have found objectionable in Mr. Patmore's great Odes. Mr. Fletcher proceeds: "It became impossible for educated Protestants to have part or lot with hordes of ruffians," and so forth. Surely this is somewhat indiscriminating. Uneducated fanaticism is pardonable; but the fanaticism of "Exeter Hall," and of what that represents, professes to be educated and rational. It has never been the fanaticism of the ignorant populace that has unjustly injured Catholics and their faith, but the traditions and prejudices and passions of cultured and otherwise honourable Englishmen. An excellent feature in this book is its incidental sketches of distinguished men, such as the devoted Passionists, Fathers Dominic and Igratius Spencer. And many readers, unacquainted with the vast literature of Tractarianism, will welcome the few lines, in which Ward, Oakley, Froude, Pusey, Keble, Palmer, Rose, Marriott, and others are each delineated. The descriptions are fair and interesting. Equally so are Mr. Fletcher's accounts, simply and truthfully written, of Newman's attitude towards his fellow Catholics upon occasions of doubt and difficulty. He does not ignore the fact that there were differences, very painful and deplorable; but he does not willingly dwell upon them, nor wilfully exaggerate them. The reminiscences of Mr. Arthur Hutton, recently published in a contemporary magazine, offend grievously by their petty love of trifles and disagreeable topics. The modern habit of producing full biographies, notices, memorials, anecdotes, gossip, and fiction about the great dead, before they have been one year in the grave, is most undignified in the living and disrespectful to the dead. But if such things must be, let them be done with the quiet respect, the serious spirit, of Mr. Fletcher's short Life. One word upon the style of the book. It is undistinguished, but plain and harmless. Yet Mr. Fletcher has occasion to consider the following passage from Mr. Lang's Life of Lord Idlesleigh: At the time of the Washington Treaty upon the Alabama claims, the English Government telegraphed to their Commissioners that "they could not endure adverbs between 'to' (the sign of the infinitive) and the verb. The purity of the English language they boldly and courageously defended." Nor should Mr. Fletcher speak of a "mutual friend," although Dickens has done his best to immortalise the blunder; and though it is the one example of bad English to be found in the works of Miss Austen.

"EMINENT WOMEN SERIES."—Mrs. Shelley. By Lucy Madox Rossetti. (W. H. Allen.) Mrs. W. M. Rossetti has been exceptionally unlucky; for, after spending much time and conscientious labour in the preparation of this little monograph, she had the disappointment of seeing its interest discounted—indeed, altogether forestalled—by the larger and fuller work of Mrs. Julian Marshall. There was room for one biography of Mary Shelley, but not for two; and unfortunately for Mrs. Rossetti, the work of her competitor has other and more permanently potent advantages over her own than the advantage of being first in the field. In the literary struggle for existence a little book, whensoever published, will have a good chance when pitted against a big one, if the former be superior or even equal to its rival in fulness of information, symmetry of construction, and charm of style; but, we regret to say, these qualifications for success are one and all wanting in Mrs. Rossetti's memoir. The mere arrangement of the volume testifies to its deficiency in the first two of them. Before the death of her husband, Mary Shelley was simply the wife of an eminent man whose personality overshadowed hers. Frankenstein had certainly been written, but even that tour de force did not suffice to give her a claim to a separate eminence of her own. Her independent life, in which alone she manifested her full individuality of character and capacity, began with her widowhood; and it is in the record of the twenty-nine years which elapsed between Shelley's death and her own that we must seek for the entries which entitle her to a place among "eminent women." It is almost incredible, but it is a fact, that of Mrs. Rossetti's 238 pages only sixty-five are devoted to this important period, and many even of these are occupied not by narrative, but by summaries of Mrs. Shelley's various novels. Such a blunder as this is so obviously fatal that we feel relieved from the obligation to animadvert upon the weakness of Mrs. Rossetti's style, which is generally slipshod, occasionally tawdry, and not infrequently even ungrammatical. The author has good feeling and enthusiasm, but that to these things she adds literary aptitude cannot be said.

Alexander Heriot Mackonochie: a Memoir. By E. A. T. Edited by Edward Francis Russell. (Kegan Paul & Co.) It is unfortunate that Mr. Mackonochie's name should have been so largely associated with ritual litigation that his self-denying labours among the poor are in danger of being forgotten. A more single-minded man it would be difficult to find; but, as his biographer admits, it was this very single-mindedness which prevented him from seeing both sides of a question, and made him stiff and over-confident in his opinions. He could not but be a thorough partisan. Of his genuineness and sincerity there can be no question; and those who followed his course, both before he became vicar of St. Alban's, Holborn, and during the twenty years of his vexed incumbency, felt for him a degree of respectful admiration which this well-written memoir of his career fully justifies. We can believe that "he had that element of fanaticism which resolves itself into an unconscious aloofness from other men's minds." He could be intimate with those to whom he looked up or who looked up to him, but with his equals he was reserved. Without being, in any sense of the word, eloquent, he impressed his hearers with the reality of his words; and his tragic death on the snow-covered mountains of Glencoe called forth a loud expression of regret from people of every rank.

"STATESMEN SERIES." Léon Gambetta. By Frank T. Marzials. (W. H. Allen.) Materials such as only private correspondence can supply are at present wanting for a Life of Gambetta, but Mr. Marzials has given an interesting sketch of his public and of some parts of his private career. Gambetta's faults and merits as a statesman are clearly stated and fairly weighed against each other, and justice is done to the native generosity of his character. Half Italian, half French, by descent, he blended what Macchiavelli calls the "furor" or impetuosity of the Frenchman with the "ordine" or method of the Roman. France owes him two things for which Frenchmen of all parties should be grateful—the proof which she gave of her vitality in prolonging an armed resistance after Sedan, and the discipline which to some extent he introduced into the advanced Republican party. Mr. Marzials's book is mainly based upon M. Joseph Reinach's edition of Gambetta's speeches. It is interesting to note what that great patriot thought of a Franco-Russian alliance. His thoughts may be inferred from the speech which he delivered in the French Parliament on the subject of the Egyptian question:

"For the last ten years there has been a Western policy in Europe represented by England and France, and allow me to say here that I know of no other European policy likely to avail us in the most terrible of contingencies we may have to face hereafter."

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are informed that Mr. Albert Letchford—an English artist resident in Trieste, whose picture of Sir Richard Burton was on view at the Stanley Exhibition, and who recently completed a full-length portrait in oils of the great orientalist and explorer—took a very successful plaster cast of the head and shoulders shortly after death, from which he is about to make models in bronze and marble.

ONE of the rarest of modern books is the little volume of his poems which Mr. Ruskin collected from the magazines and issued for private circulation in 1850. All of these poems were written before he was twenty-six. But Mr. Ruskin has from time to time written others, which have never appeared in print. He has, however, now given permission to Mr. W. G. Collingwood, his former secretary, to edit all of his poetical work that he himself deems worthy of preservation. The new matter is nearly as large again as that contained in the volume of 1850. The whole will be arranged in chronological order and approximately dated, so as to furnish, together with notes, a sort of autobiographical commentary on the author's life. The mode of publication will be in two volumes, of about 230 pages each, with twenty-five plates from drawings by Mr. Ruskin never before published, illustrative of places mentioned in the poems, besides facsimiles. Three editions will be issued, ranging in size from large quarto to small octavo. Mr. George Allen, of Orpington, hopes to have the work ready early in the new year.

MR. CHARLES WORTHY, the well-known antiquary of the Western counties, proposes to print a series of abstracts of early wills and administrations proved and granted in the diocese of Exeter. The calendars at Exeter begin late in the sixteenth century; but Mr. Worthy's researches have enabled him to discover in other old books many transcripts of wills of an earlier date. Unlike the volume of Wells Wills, just edited by Mr. F. W. Weaver (Kegan Paul & Co.), Devonshire Wills will not consist of a continuous series for a definite number of years, but of a selection covering a much longer period, and Cornish wills are included. The work will be published in a limited edition by Messrs. Bemrose & Sons. It will form a volume of over 500 pages royal octavo, with a full index to all the names mentioned.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish next year an English translation, by Miss Hannah Lynch, of M. Perren's History of Florence under the Medicis.

MR. HORACE HUTCHINSON's novel, "That Fiddler Fellow," which originally appeared in Murray's Magazine, will be published in volume form in a week or two by Mr. Edward Arnold. The scene is laid in the ancient city of St. Andrews during the early part of the present century.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish in a few days Judge Brewster's Life and Works of the Earl of Beaconsfield, giving an analysis of every one of his books.

A SYMPOSIUM upon the future life, contributed by several well-known writers, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title Our Dead: Where are They?

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will issue on December 1 a biography of Isaac Pitman, the inventor of phonography, by Mr. Thomas Allen Reed, illustrated with woodcuts and facsimiles.

MR. RICHARD VASEY, of Bradford, will publish immediately a poetical drama, entitled Psilorite; or, Life under the Cross and the Crescent. It is around Psilorite, the crest of the ancient Ida, that the interests of the poem turn, treating of the sufferings of the Christians, the atrocities of the Turks, and the daring and endurance of the Greek patriots.

THE one hundred and thirty-seventh session of the Society of Arts will be opened on Wednesday next, November 19, by an address from Sir Richard Webster, chairman of the council.

THE first meeting of the present session of the Royal Statistical Society will be held on Tuesday next, November 18, at the Royal School of Mines, at 7.45 p.m., when the president, Dr. F. J. Mouat, will deliver an inaugural address.

THE annual series of winter lectures at the London Institution will begin next week, when Sir Robert S. Ball will lecture on Monday upon "An Astronomer's Thoughts about Krakatoa," and Sir John Stainer on Thursday upon "Carols, English and Foreign," with musical illustrations. The usual Christmas course of four lectures for juveniles will be given by Prof. Vivian Lewes, who has chosen for his subject "Rain and Fog." In connexion with the Travers endowment, Prof. R. K. Douglas will lecture on "Commercial Relations with China;" and Mr. Aubrey J. Spencer on "The Law of Joint Stock Companies." Among other arrangements may be mentioned: "Prosper Merimée," by Mr. Walter Pater; "British Ballads," by Mr. Edmund Gosse; "Mrs. E. Barrett Browning," by the Hon. Roden Noel; "Succession of Ideals in the Ancient World," by Mr. W. M. Conway; "The Orientation of Ancient Temples," by Mr. Norman Lockyer; "Herod and Cleopatra," by Prof. Mahaffy; "Alexander and His Successors," by Prof. R. S. Poole; "Asoka," by Prof. Rhys Davids; "The History of Medicine in London," by Dr. Norman Moore; and "The Partition of Africa," by Mr. J. Scott Keltie.

THE Freemasons who compose the literary and archaeological society known as the lodge of the Quatuor Coronati, No. 2076, held their installation meeting on Saturday last, November 8, at Freemasons' Hall. Mr. W. M. Bywater was placed in the chair, and those of the wardens were filled by Prof. T. Hayter Lewis and Dr. W. Wynn Westcott. Mr. Walter Besant was reappointed treasurer, and Mr. G. W. Speth, of Margate, secretary. Twenty-three new members were admitted to the correspondence circle, which now numbers over a thousand. A paper was read by Mr. E. Macbean on "The Formation of the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1736."

MR. LEVI H. ELWELL, of Amherst College, Massachusetts, has sent us an elegantly-printed quarto pamphlet, containing a paper which he read at the last meeting of the American Philological Association, now printed for private distribution among folklorists. It consists of the well-known legend of Rhapsnitus, as told by Herodotus, with three variants from the most distant quarters. These are: (1) a Tibetan version, from Ralston's translation of Schiefner—there is, apparently, none to be found in Páli; (2) "The Tale of the Shifty Lad, the Widow's Son," from Campbell's Popular Tales of the West Highlands; and (3), what is probably not so well known in this country, "Buh Lion, Buh Rabbit, Buh Fox, and Buh Rocoon," from Col. Jones's Negro Myths from the Georgia

Coasts. In an appendix he gives a synopsis of the main points of difference and agreement, and also references to other versions. Mr. Elwell has treated the subject in a manner which is at once so scholarly and so interesting that we trust he will fulfil his promise of discussing hereafter the general question of the origin and diffusion of the story.

THE book descriptive of Major Skinner's fifty years of work in Ceylon, announced in the ACADEMY of October 25, is being edited by his daughter, Miss Skinner.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. A. H. SAYCE leaves Oxford this week, in order to spend the winter, as usual, in Egypt. He has resigned not only the deputy-professorship of comparative philology, but also his other offices in the university, retaining only his fellowship at Queen's College. For some time to come his address will be simply Cairo.

PROF. EWING, of University College, Dundee, has been elected to the chair of mechanism and applied mechanics at Cambridge, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Stuart.

IN reply to the appeal of the vice-chancellor for outside pecuniary assistance, in his address at the opening of term at Cambridge, Mr. Frank McClean, formerly of Trinity College and now of Tunbridge Wells, has offered a capital sum amounting to about £12,000, for the purpose of founding three university studentships in connexion with the sciences of astronomy and physics. He proposes that they shall be called the Isaac Newton studentships, and that they shall be specially devoted to gravitational astronomy and physical optics, one studentship to be filled annually and to be tenable for three years. The candidate elected is to be a bachelor of arts under twenty-five years of age, and to be of the highest attainments in the subjects named and in the branches of mathematics applicable to them. Trinity College is to be the trustee of the fund, which—it is not unworthy of mention—consists of ordinary stock of the two great London gas companies.

AT the next meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, to be held on Wednesday, November 19, Mr. Duff will exhibit and describe a fragment of an unknown book, printed in the type of John Lettou, the first London printer, lately discovered at Cambridge; and Prof. Ridgeway will raise the question whether the Cambridgeshire Dykes are referred to in Tacitus, Annals, xii., 31.

AT the meeting of the Ashmolean Society at Oxford, on Monday next, the Rev. Frederick Smith will read a paper on "The Velocity of the Propagation of Sound."

THE Headmaster's Conference, which had been originally fixed for Clifton, will meet at Oxford on December 23. It is stated that the principal subject of discussion will be the teaching of Greek in public schools.

AT the Oxford Union last week, a motion expressing sympathy with the Nihilist movement in Russia, brought forward by Mr. H. E. A. Cotton, and supported by Lord Ampthill and Mr. Magee, was carried by a majority of 45 votes against 23.

THE Oxford Magazine of November 12 contains a weighty letter from the Rev. Dr. T. Fowler, president of Corpus Christi College, in favour of shortening the honours course from four years to three, and suggesting a system of post-graduate study, such as already exists in some American universities. The same number also contains an historical article on the jurisdiction of the Chancellor's (or Vice-Chancellor's) Court.

AT the meeting of the court of Victoria University last week, a proposal to institute an examination for degrees in divinity (questions on controversial subjects to be rigidly excluded), was rejected by a majority of 18 votes to 13.

MR. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL is announced to deliver a course of six lectures at the university of Pennsylvania during December and January on "Early English Dramatists."

WE have received the first Part of the Proceedings of the Maine Historical Society, founded in April of the present year, in the university of Madras, for the study of Indian institutions and of questions of constitutional history and political economy in their bearing on India. The president is the Hon. T. Muttuswami Aiyar, judge of the high court; and the vice-presidents include four European professors at the several colleges affiliated to the university. The committee consists entirely of natives; and among the members we notice only one representative of the civil service. The first paper read before the society, which is here printed in full, was by Mr. John Adam, principal of the old foundation known as Pachaiyappa's College. The title is "Chingleput and the Village Community"; and it contains a very able and thorough defence of the immemorial rights of the agricultural class in a part of India where one would hardly expect to find them so deeply rooted.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A NOVEMBER NOTE.

I.

WHY, throstle, do you sing
In this November haze?
Singing for what? for whom?
Deem you that it is Spring,
Or that your woodland lays
Will stave off Winter's gloom?

II.

Then did the bird reply:
"I sing because I know
That Spring will surely come:
That is the reason why,
Though menaced by the snow,
Even now I am not dumb."

III.

"But few are they that hear,
And fewer still that feel,
The meaning of my song,
Until the note be clear,
Re-echoed be the peal,
Early, and late, and long."

IV.

"But you have heard and owned
The sound of my refrain,
Yet tentative and low.
Thus, poet, be intoned,
You own foreshadowing strain,
Trusting that some will know:"

V.

"That some will know and say,
When greetings of the Spring
Wake Winter from its bed,
This is the self-same lay
We overheard him sing
When dead hearts deemed him dead."

ALFRED AUSTIN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

WE may mention together two new quarterly reviews which have recently appeared. The Monist, a quarterly magazine of philosophy, religion, science, and sociology, is a continuation of the Open Court, of Chicago, which is probably best known to our readers as having been chosen by Prof. Max Müller as the organ for publishing some of his occasional papers.

The exact meaning of the title is nowhere explained, except so far as the "great problem" is described as "a unitary conception of the world, free from contradictions, and based upon the facts of life." Probably "monism" is intended to be a protest against dualism so-called on the one side, and against materialism and spiritualism on the other. Whatever may be the particular "-ism" of the editor, he promises to bring together "the noblest aspirations and the highest abilities of human thought." The most notable articles in the first number are—a reply by Prof. G. J. Romanes to Mr. Wallace's criticism of his theory of physiological selection; an article by M. Alfred Binet on "The Immortality of Infusoria," which leads to no very clear conclusion; and a somewhat conservative pronouncement by Prof. E. D. Cope on "The Material Relations of Sex in Human Society." All these, it will be observed, deal with the higher problems of natural science. Psychological questions are discussed by Dr. Paul Carus (whom we assume to be the editor-in-chief), Prof. Ernst Mach, M. Max Dessoir (who contributes a very interesting study of the mode of divination known as the magic mirror), and Mr. W. M. Salter (reviewing Prof. Harald Høffding, of Copenhagen). Finally, there is a too-brief sketch of the courses of philosophy in the several universities and colleges of America. The Monist is published at Chicago, but may be obtained in this country from Messrs. Watts & Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street.

THE Critical Review of Theological and Philosophical Literature (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark) is of less ambitious scope. If we may judge by the first number, it is to consist mainly of reviews of books, signed by the writers, who belong, for the most part, to the liberal school of Scotch Presbyterianism. The editor is Prof. Salmond, of Aberdeen, whose name is a guarantee both for learning and for moderation. The longest reviews in the present number are those of Martineau's "Seat of Authority in Religion," by Principal Rainy; and of the translation of Erdmann's "History of Philosophy," by Dr. Hutchison Sterling. The difference between New Testament criticism in Germany and here is well shown by the reviews of two parts of the "Hand-Commentar," by Principal Reynolds and Prof. Marcus Dods. Personal interest is sustained by notices of Dr. Dollinger, Canon Liddon, Prof. William Wright, and Dr. Hatch; but the name of Newman is practically ignored. The price of the Critical Review, we may add, is exceptionally cheap.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERTRAND, Joseph. Blaise Pascal. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 CONCHES, Feuillelet de. Les Salons de conversation au 18e Siècle. Paris: Didier. 3 fr.
 DU CAMP, Maxime. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
 GRISIER, A. Les armes et le duel. Paris: Ducher. 12 fr.
 GRUER, A. Musée du Louvre: Voyage autour du Salon carré. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 50 fr.
 GUYDON, l'Amiral Comte de. Idées maritimes d'hier: réformes maritimes de demain. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 KLEIST, H. Bilder aus Japan. Leipzig: Friedrich. 6 M.
 KLINGENBERG, F. Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte d. Realismus im französischen Roman d. 19. Jahrh. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 30 Pf.
 KÖHN, A. Theodor Körner. Sein Leben u. seine Dichtgn. Berlin: Slottko. 4 M.
 LANGKOBONSKI, le Comte Ch. Les Villes de la Pamphile et de la Pisside. T. 1. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 100 fr.
 PICARD, Ernest. Discours parlementaires. T. 3. Ministère Ollivier: la République, 1870—1877. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 RISS, M. Quellenstudien zu Thomas Murners satirisch-didaktischen Dichtungen. I. Th. Berlin: Heinrich. 1 M. 30 Pf.
 SAVIGNY, M. Le mouvement socialiste, en Amérique et en Allemagne. Paris: Marecq. 1 fr. 50 c.
 SCHLOSSER, R. Zur Geschichte u. Kritik v. F. W. Gotter's Merope. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
 SCHOENBACH, A. E. Ueb. d. Grazer Handschrift lateinisch-deutscher Predigten. Graz: Leuschner. 3 M. 20 Pf.

- SCHULTZ, A. Alltagsleben e. deutschen Frau zu Anfang d. 18. Jahrh. Leipzig: Hirsch. 6 M.
 TAVIRNE, R. Mon voyage au continent noir. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
 WEISS, J. J. Essai sur l'histoire de la littérature française. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 WERNER, R. M. Lyrik u. Lyriker. Hamburg: Voss. 12 M.
 WIEDMANN, Th. Die religiöse Bewegung in Oberösterreich u. Salzburg beim Beginn d. 19. Jahrh. Innsbruck: Wagner. 8 M. 40 Pf.
 WISENBURG, de, à Ingolstadt (1870—1871): souvenirs d'un capitaine prisonnier de guerre. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 4 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- DELITZSCH u. v. HOFMANN. Hrg. v. W. Volek. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 5 M. 60 Pf.
 NIKEL, J. Die Lehre d. Alten Testaments üb. die Cherubim u. Seraphim. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 ROSENTHAL, L. A. Ueb. den Zusammenhang der Mischna. 1. Thl. Straßburg: Trübner. 2 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BASSKING, E. Die Sendung Augustins zur Bekehrung der Angelsachsen. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 BELLSHEIM, A. Geschichte der Katholischen Kirche in Irland. 2. Bd. 1609—1890. Mainz: Kirchheim. 16 M. 60 Pf.
 DENIS, Ernest. Fin de l'indépendance bohème. 1. Georges de Podiebrad. 2. Les premiers Habsbourg. Paris: Colin. 15 fr.
 DIEMER, H. Untersuchungen üb. die Schlacht bei Lützen (16. Novbr. 1632). Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 GOTHEIN, E. Wirtschaftsgeschichte d. Schwarzwaldes u. der angrenzenden Landschaften. 1. Lfg. Straßburg: Trübner. 2 M.
 HELPERT, Fhr. v. 1814. Ausgang der französischen Herrschaft in Ober-Italien u. Brescia. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 30 Pf.
 HOROY, Gratien, auteur du "Decretum" et fondateur de l'enseignement canonique. Paris: Marecq. 2 fr. 50 c.
 KELLNER, C. A. H. Chronologie Tertullianae supplementa. Bonn: Hanstein. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 KOTELMANN, L. Gesundheitspflege im Mittelalter. Hamburg: Voss. 6 M.
 MEISTER, A. Die Hohenstaufen im Elsass. Straßburg: Trübner. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 MENSI, F. Fhr. v. Die Finanzen Oesterreichs von 1701 bis 1740. Wien: Manz. 13 M.
 NATHANSEN, W. Zur Geschichte der Hamburger Schützen-gilde. Hamburg: Meissner. 1 M.
 PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 43. Bd. Urkundenbuch zur Reformationsgeschichte d. Herzogth. Preussen. Hrg. v. P. Tschackert. 1. Bd. Einleitung. Leipzig: Hirzel. 9 M.
 RADY, J. B. Die Reformatoren in ihrer Beziehung zur Doppelde d. Landgrafen Philipp. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Foeser. 2 M. 25 Pf.
 REITZENSTEIN, K. Fhr. v. Der Feldzug d. J. 1632 am Oberrhein u. in Westfalen bis zur Schlacht v. Wimpfen. 1 Hft. München: Zipperer. 2 M. 80 Pf.
 TAINÉ, H. Les origines de la France contemporaine. Le régime moderne. T. 1. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
 VARGES, W. Die Gerichtsverfassung der Stadt Braunschweig bis zum Jahre 1874. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 VOLLMANN, F. Ueb. das Verhältnis der späteren Stoa zur Sklaverei im römischen Reiche. Regensburg: Bauhof. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DIOPHANTUS v. ALEXANDRIA. Die Arithmetik u. die Schrift üb. Polygonzahlen. Uebers. u. m. Anmerkyn. begleitet v. G. Wertheim. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 FRECH, F. Die Korallenfauna der Trias. I. Die Korallen der juvavischen Triasprovinz. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 50 M.
 GRASSMANN, R. Das Gebilde d. Wissens. 1. Bd. 1. Th., u. 2. Bd., 2. Th. 18 M. Die Logik u. die andern logischen Wissenschaften. 3 M. 50 Pf. Stettin: Grassmann.
 GRIMM, E. Zur Geschichte d. Erkenntnisproblems. Von Bacon zu Hume. Leipzig: Friedrich. 12 M.
 RUKTMAYER, L. Uebersicht der oocänen Fauna v. Egerkingen. Basel: Georg. 3 M.
 TOULA, F. Geologische Untersuchungen im östlichen Balkan. Leipzig: Freytag. 8 M. 80 Pf.
 VOLT, J. G. Das Wesen der Elektrizität u. d. Magnetismus auf Grund e. einheitlichen Substanzbegriffes. 1. Th. Leipzig: Wiest. 8 M.
 ZITTEL, K. A. Handbuch der Palaeontologie. II. Abth. Palaeophytologie. 9 Lfg. München Oldenbourg. 7 M. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- ABEL, E. Scholia in Pindari Epinicia. Pars III. Scholia recentia. Vol. I. Scholia in Olympia et Pythia. Berlin: Calvary. 15 M.
 ARISTOPHANIS comediae. Adnotationes criticae etc. instruit F. H. M. Blaydes. Pars IX. Nubes. Halle: Waisenhaus. 10 M.
 BLAYDES, F. H. M. Adversaria in comicorum graecorum fragmenta. Pars I. secundum editionem Meinekianam. Halle: Waisenhaus. 5 M.
 CZYCKIEWICZ, A. De Tacitei sermonis proprietatibus, praecipue quae ad poetarum dicendi genus pertinent. Pars I. Brody: West. 1 M.
 ETIENNE, E. La Langue française depuis les origines jusqu'à la fin du XIe Siècle. T. 1. Phonétique, déclinaison, conjugaison. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
 REINISCH, L. Die Kuna-Sprache in Nord-Ostafrika. III. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M.
 REACH, A. Kritische Studie zu den sibyllinischen Orakeln. Leipzig: Freytag. 6 M. 80 Pf.
 SCHNELLER, Ch. Tirolische Namenforschungen. Innsbruck: Wagner. 8 M.
 SWOBODA, H. Die griechischen Volksabscüsse. Epigraphische Untersuchgn. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 WAITZ, H. Die Fortsetzungen v. Chrestien's Perceval le Gallois nach den Pariser Handschriften. Straßburg: Trübner. 2 M.
 WINKER, E. Die Voralberger Dialectdichtung. Innsbruck: Wagner. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROPOSED EMENDATIONS IN HARL. MS. 2252.

6, North Crescent, Bedford Square, W.C.:
Nov. 11, 1890.

In the course of my studies on the sources of Sir Thomas Malory's "Le Morte Darthur" I was led to pay special attention to ff. 86-133* of Harl. MS. 2252, containing the English metrical romance "Le Morte Arthur," or an account of the events which took place after the achievement of the Holy Grail and previous to the tragical end of King Arthur. A close examination of the contents of this romance convinced me that ll. 832-951 are, as they stand at present, misplaced. In the first half of the romance two distinct episodes are observable. The first I shall style "Launcelot and the Fair Maiden of Ascalot," the second "Guenever and Mador de la Porte."

As the MS. is at present, one cannot fail to notice that the narrative is interrupted after l. 831, as the facts related by lines 832 ff. treat of quite a different subject. The drift of the narrative is again taken up in ll. 952-1181, which indeed ought to follow immediately after l. 831, in order to make the first episode complete in itself.

According to Messrs. Furnivall*, Ellist†, and Ward‡, the Harl. MS. lacks one or two leaves after fol. 102. I have satisfied myself by an examination of the binding of the portion of the volume which contains "Le Morte Arthur" that the MS. wants one leaf. It is thus arranged:—

1. Ff. 86-101 form a "gathering" of eight sheets, i.e., sixteen leaves.
2. Fol. 102 is a single leaf.
3. Ff. 103-74 form a "gathering" of six sheets, or twelve leaves.
3. Ff. 115-130 form a "gathering" of eight sheets or sixteen leaves.
5. Ff. 131, 132, 133, and 133* represent two sheets, or four leaves.

It is obvious from this analysis that it was intended to write the MS. on paper arranged in "gatherings" of eight sheets. On fol. 102 another handwriting begins. The new scribe, probably forgetting the intended arrangement, did what often happens, viz., he wrote on the second leaf of the next sheet, of which fol. 102 is the first half, and the second leaf is the very folio missing in the MS. If it had been otherwise, there ought to be a corresponding leaf missing between ff. 114 and 115, which is not the case.

The gap which is caused by the deficiency of the folio can as nearly as possible be filled up by ll. 832-951, which are, as above stated, misplaced. By transposing these lines into the gap after fol. 102, the episode of "Guenever and Mador de la Porte" becomes a complete whole, if we omit ll. 912-927, because they are to a certain extent repeated by ll. 1318-1331; (comp., e.g., ll. 916, 917, and 919 to ll. 1318, 1320, and 1321), and also ll. 928-951 as being an apparent contradiction to ll. 1467-1503.

How did this confusion arise? I venture to think that I can satisfactorily answer this question. The poet, while transcribing the French prose into English verse, finding that he had so far abandoned his source that it was impossible for him to connect his narrative with the ensuing events, rewrote a part of his work, and very likely marked the portions which he wished to be omitted. The scribes afterwards neglected or did not understand his indications, and so the Harl. MS. contains a certain portion twice, which varied only in the end. Thus, the folio missing after 102 evidently contained ll. 832-911+2 lines rhyming with ll. 1318 and 1319—and completing ll. 1318-1323 to a stanza of eight lines—or eighty-two lines, the exact number of lines contained by several folios of the Harl. MS.

* Le Morte Arthur. Edited from the Harleian MS. 2252 in the British Museum, by F. J. Furnivall, with a preface by the late Herbert Coleridge (London and Cambridge, 1864).

† George Ellis, Specimens of Early English Metrical Romances (3 vols., London, 1805), vol. iii., pp. 308-387.

‡ H. L. D. Ward, A Catalogue of the Romances in the MSS. of the British Museum.

If these proposed emendations are accepted, the episode of "Guenever and Mador de la Porte" would consist of (1) ll. 832-910; (2) 2 lines + 1318-1671, and thus arranged would be in accordance with the account given of the episode by the various MSS. of the "Launcelot" in the British Museum, and with that of Malory's "Le Morte Darthur," book xviii., chaps. iii. to viii., viz.:

Ll. 832-911.

Guenever has yet to suffer greater misfortune than the loss of Launcelot. A squire in her service, who dislikes Gawayn, wishes to destroy him by poison. At an entertainment, which the queen gives to her knights, he poisons one of the largest apples, hoping that Guenever will present it to Gawayn, of whom she thinks most after Launcelot. It happens, however, that this apple is given to a Scotch knight, who is present as a guest. No sooner has he tasted the apple, than he falls down dead. The knights arise horrified, of course thinking that the queen had intentionally poisoned the knight. All attempts to revive him prove in vain. He is buried in a chapel, and a tombstone is erected upon his grave, with an inscription to the effect that Guenever has poisoned him. One day Mador de la Porte comes to the chapel to pray. Finding his brother's tomb with the inscription, he resolves to avenge him. He goes to Arthur and accuses the queen of treason, and demands that she should be burnt, unless she could find a knight to fight for her.

4 lines + 1318-1618.

The queen hearing this terrible accusation is nearly out of her mind; she understands that she has to suffer death, if no knight will prove her innocence by his valour. The king is deeply grieved, but with all his regal power he cannot save his wife, and must allow justice to take its course. He consults with Gawayn. The queen implores Boes, Lionel and Ector, in vain for help. At last Boes declares himself ready to take up her cause. One day Boes and Lionel go into a wood to pray; there they find Launcelot, who asks them how the queen is; they reluctantly tell him what has happened. He resolves to rescue the queen. He overcomes Mador in battle, and the queen's honour is re-established. The squire then confesses his crime and receives the due punishment.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

NORFOLK MANOR COURT ROLLS (THE BARWICK MSS.).

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Nov. 3, 1890.

By the kindness of Mrs. Seymour I have had an opportunity of examining these rolls, the discovery of which at her residence at Barwick, near King's Lynn, was briefly announced in the ACADEMY of November 1.

They are nine in number, and in a very good state of preservation, with the exception of a few paper sheets, which are somewhat tattered. Two of the rolls consist of the Stanhoe manor accounts ("compoti") for the reign of Henry VIII. and for four years of Edward VI.; the remaining seven contain the records (more or less incomplete) of the manor court of Stanhoe for portions of the reigns of Henry IV., V., VI., VIII., Elizabeth, James I., Charles I. (the Commonwealth), and Charles II. The entries mostly relate to the leasing and surrender of lands, tenements, &c.; but some few of them are of more general interest, and afford instructive glimpses of the life and ways of the time.

Records of this nature not being very readily accessible, a few extracts may be acceptable to readers of the ACADEMY. I give them in the original Latin, with the contractions expanded.

We get from the following a curious picture of the doings of a country vicar, one Richard Hooker, in the reign of Henry VIII. First he is fined 3d. for letting his farm-stock into his neighbours' corn-fields:

[22 Hen. VIII.] "Jurati presentant quod Ricardus Hoker, clericus, fecit dampnum cum averiis suis in grano tenentium domini in magnum prejudicium domini et tenentium ejus, ideo in mercia iij<sup>d</sup> et preest ei ne amplius sic agere sub pena xij<sup>d</sup>."

Then 6d. for carting away the tithes belonging to the parish church adjoining:

[25 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Ricardus Hoker, clericus vicarius de Bermer [now Barmer, about two miles from Stanhoe] minus juste intravit cum caruca sua infra solo et terra domini hujus manerii vocati Esthallfelde in Stannowe, et ibidem injuste cepit diversas gerbas [divers sheaves] existentes decimalem pertinentem ecclesie de Stanhowe, ubi de jure sic facere non debet, in magnum prejudicium domini et in malum exemplum aliorum, ideo in mercia vi<sup>d</sup> et preest ei ne amplius sic agere sub pena vi<sup>d</sup> viij<sup>d</sup>."

Again 6d. for letting his cows into his neighbours' corn:

[26 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Ricardus Hoker, clericus, fecit dampnum cum vaccis suis in grano tenentium domini ad grave dampnum predictorum tenentium domini, ideo in mercia vi<sup>d</sup> et preest ei ne amplius ita agere sub pena iij<sup>d</sup> iij<sup>d</sup>."

We next find him selling land without leave of the Court:

[29 Hen. VIII.] "Jurati ex officio presentant quod Ricardus Hoker, clericus, alienavit et vendidit Richardo Phelyps unum juclum cum crofto continens viij<sup>d</sup> acras terre native quondam Downynge in Stannowe sine licencia, ideo preest retinere."

And lastly he is mentioned as having surrendered his land just before his death—this passage may serve as a specimen of the law Latin of the day:

[29 Hen. VIII.] "Et quod predictus Richardus Hoker, clericus, jacens in extremis, ante obitum suum extra Curiam sursum reddidit ['surrendered'] in manus domini per manus Petri Bokenham, nativi tenentis, in presencia Roberti Jekelyn et Johannis Miller, scilicet nativorum tenentium, unum juclum continens iij<sup>or</sup> acras terre vocatas Downynge, et iij<sup>or</sup> acras terre jacentes in crofto ejusdem jucli et nuper hic sursum cepit ex concessione domini, ut patet, in Curia hic tenuta die lune post festum Omnium Sanctorum anno regni regis Henrici octavi xviii<sup>o</sup> ad opus Ricardi Phelyps cui liberata est inde seisina ['possession'] tenenda sibi hereditibus et assignatis per virgam ad voluntatem domini per servitium et consuetudinem, salvo jure cujuslibet, et dat domino de fine et fecit fidelitatem."

A culprit of a different class was John Day, labourer, who was continually in trouble, either for letting his pigs stray unringed ("inanulati") and his geese, or for neglecting to keep his tenement in repair, or for the (to us) more serious offence of poaching. On the first charge he is fined 6d.:

[26 Hen. VIII.] "Jurati presentant quod Johannes Dey, laborer, est communis malefactor cum porcis suis non anulatis et ancis suis in grano tenentium domini, ideo in mercia vi<sup>d</sup> et preest ei ne amplius ita agere sub pena ij<sup>d</sup>."

For poaching rabbits to the number of sixty odd, he is let off with what seems the light fine of 3d.:

[27 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Johannes Dey, laborer, minus juste ac contra formam statuti venatici fuit infra hoc dominio et idem Johannes habuit in custodia sua ad unum tempus infra isto anno decem viverras ['ferrets'] et cum illis interfecit cuniculos ['rabbits'] domini ad numerum sexaginta, et plures, ut jurati affirmant, per veredes ['snares?'] suos, videlicet supra ffeodum hujus manerii in magnum prejudicium domini ac in malum exemplum aliorum, ideo ipse in mercia iij<sup>d</sup> et preest ei ne deinceps ita agere sub pena xv<sup>d</sup>."

In the next entries he is cautioned, under a penalty of 1s., to complete certain repairs within a given time:

[27 Hen. VIII.] "Quod predictus Johannes Dey, laborer, jure Cecilie uxoris sue, nuper uxoris Johannis Bale, et Petrus Bukkenham bene inceptum reparare vastum tenementorum suorum nativorum post ultimam Curiam, tam in carpentario quam in dawberio ['in the wood-work and plaster'], sed ad tecturam inde perficiendam adhuc ex gratia Curie habent diem usque proximam Curiam sub pena uniusque eorum xij<sup>d</sup> domino forisfacti."

[32 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Johannes Day, laborer, non reparavit tenementum suum nativum in Stanhoe quod est ruinosum ob defectum reparationis, et preest ei reparare dictum tenementum citra proximam Curiam sub pena xij<sup>d</sup>."

This failure to keep their premises in repair seems to have been a frequent source of trouble with tenants in those days, the penalty in many cases being forfeiture of the holdings complained of and of all others held by the same tenant.

Further extracts I reserve for another occasion.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

BACON'S ESSAYS.

London: Nov. 5, 1890.

I wish, with your kind permission, to make one or two remarks about a criticism, in the ACADEMY of October 18, on my edition of Bacon's Essays.

Your critic observes, correctly, "it is a wholly new opinion that Bacon's style is obscure"; but he is not correct in giving this as my opinion, or in saying that I give instances in proof of it. I have spoken of Bacon as a great master of style, or, more exactly, as a master of many styles; but that there are some obscure passages in his writings, and in the Essays among the rest, I certainly do say. I find, for example, in one of his early letters:

"The meanness of my estate doth somewhat move me; for though I cannot accuse myself that I am either prodigal or slothful, yet my health is not to spend nor my course to get." (Letters and Life, i. p. 108.)

This seems obscure to the point of being unintelligible. Again, in the Essay of Negotiating:

"If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance is all; which a man cannot reasonably demand, except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before; or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing; or else that he be counted the honestest man."

The most careful reader will be a little puzzled to find his way through this jungle of pronouns. Again, in the Essay of Riches:

"Riches gotten by service, though it be of the best rise, yet when they are gotten by flattery, feeding humours, and other servile conditions, they may be placed amongst the worst."

This is hardly clear writing. I think, pere your critic, that it may pass as "a lengthy involution where grammar loses itself."

I will now pass to your critic's censure of what I wrote on some of Bacon's quotations. Bacon, he says, writes: "It is foretold that when Christ cometh, he shall not find faith upon the earth"; and Mr. Reynolds objects that Christ only asked a question without stating a fact, whereas the question asked does, to your critic's "nice ear," imply a delicate negative. Undoubtedly it does. The Greek is conclusive thus far, apart from any second-hand help from Beza or the Vulgate. But Bacon surely goes a little beyond the fact by turning this into an absolute prediction, and a prediction of what?

—of the general prevalence of falsehood and breach of faith, as if this were the implied fault; and he makes a further assertion that this is to be the last peal to call down the judgments of God upon men; of all which there is not one word expressed or implied in the question.

Again, I cannot see, says your critic, that, in the Essay on Beauty, the omission of etiam in the quotation pulchrum (etiam) autumnus pulcher makes any difference to Bacon's purpose. Let us see, however, what Bacon's purpose is. He is giving evidence for his assertion that persons in years have many times a beauty above that of the young; and the shortened quotation admits of being so translated as to bear out the remark. The full quotation says no more than that, where there has been beauty in youth, even the autumn of life still keeps a certain beauty of its own. The insertion of the omitted etiam thus spoils it for Bacon's purpose. I think your critic's nice ear has a little failed him for once.

There are other points of interest rising out of the review, on which I should wish to remark, especially on your critic's condemnation of modernised spelling, on the sufficient reason for the practice which he condemns, and on the overwhelming authority in favour of it; but I cannot do this without trespassing unduly on your space.

S. H. REYNOLDS.

"COCKNEY."

94, Gower Street: November 10, 1890.

It was from no want of respect for Dr. Chance's instructive communications that I omitted any direct reference to his letter of July 5. But in that instance he offered only a number of suggestions, in none of which did he himself seem to have much confidence, while they would have taken a great deal of space to answer in detail. No doubt, however, I ought to have adverted expressly to the intrusive syllable an or en which veils the exact correspondence of the English "cockanegg" or "cokeney" with the cackie of the German nursery. My belief is precisely that which Dr. Chance summarily rejects as "not in the least likely"—vis., that this syllable is simply a euphonic amplification without grammatical significance, as in "Jackanapes" for "Jackape," a monkey; or in "John-an-okes" (John-a-Nokes) in the legal jargon of an action of ejectment. So also in popular speech, Thomas Becket and Thomas Didymas were amplified into "Thomas-a-Becket" and "Thomas-a-Didymas." Why the intrusive syllable should have found a place in "cockanegg" and not in "baa-lamb" or "moo-cow" I am unable to say; and I must leave it to others to judge whether the foregoing view is more or less probable than Dr. Chance's conclusion, that Florio's "cockanegg," signifying an egg, perhaps a new-laid egg, is to be analysed either as a "cocking (i.e., cackling) -egg," or as a "cock's egg."

H. WEDGWOOD.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 16, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Systems of Tribal Policy among the Bantu Races in South Africa," by Mr. J. Mackenzie.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Truth to Self," by Mr. G. F. Stout.
MONDAY, NOV. 17, 5 p.m. London Institution: "An Astronomer's Thoughts about Krakatoa," by Sir R. S. Ball.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Selected and Restricted Palettes," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Categories of Scientific Method," by Mr. R. B. Haldane.
8.30 p.m. Westminster Abbey: Commemoration Service of Westminster School.
TUESDAY, NOV. 18, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: Inaugural Address by the President, Dr. F. J. Mouat.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Steam on Common Roads," by Mr. John McLaren; "The Vibratory Movements of Locomotives," by Prof. John Milne and Mr. John McDonald.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A Catalogue of the Reptiles and Batrachians of Barbary, based chiefly upon the Notes and Collections made in 1880-84 by M. Fernand Lataste," and "The Chinese Alligator," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger; "Some New Species and Two New Genera of Araneidea," by the Rev. O. P. Cambridge; "Some Upper Cretaceous Fishes of the Family Aspidorhynchidae," by Mr. A. Smith Woodward.
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 19, 8 p.m. Microscopical: Adjourned Special General Meeting—Alteration of Bye-Laws; "The Tube-Building Habits of Terebella littoralis," by Mr. A. T. Watson; "A New Marine Annelid," by Dr. V. Gunson Thorpe.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Opening Address by Sir Richard Webster, Chairman of the Council.
THURSDAY, NOV. 20, 7 p.m. London Institution: "Carols, English and Foreign," with Musical Illustrations, by Sir J. Stainer.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Chemistry of Painting—Methods," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Linnean: "A Brown Sea-weed, Punctaria (Grev.)," by Prof. T. Johnson; "A Variety, Alectona Millari (Carter), by Mr. A. Vaughan Jennings.
8 p.m. Chemical.
8.30 p.m. Historical: "Aryan Relations to Egyptians and Chaldeans," by Mr. J. S. Stuart Glennie.

SCIENCE.

RECENT WORKS ON PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Theory of Light. By Thomas Preston. (Macmillan.) The title of this book is somewhat misleading. In the first place, it is not a treatise on light based upon any single theory, which, perhaps, could only nowadays be the electro-magnetic theory; but we have a number of elementary hypotheses adopted each to explain one or more of the chief phenomena. In the next place, it is more a physical than a theoretical handbook. If we put on one side the last chapter of the work on "Electro-Magnetic Radiation," we are left with a book the general lines of which are somewhat akin to Glazebrook's Physical Optics, and the theoretical investigations of which stand largely on the same basis as Airy's Tract or Lloyd's Treatise. We have nothing to say against another elementary treatise on light, if only the reader remembers that the "more complicated mathematical theories" are excluded from the work and scarcely a reference given to the original memoirs in which they may be studied. In particular, the German references are extremely sparse (even Helmholtz being quoted from a French translation!). We can quarrel with no writer on light who refuses to accept to-day the elastic solid theories—we at once suppose him to pin his faith to Maxwell; but when Fresnel's theory of double refraction is reproduced in preference, say, to Boussinesq's; when MacCullagh's theory of quartz is stated as if there were not at least two better ones; when the same author's theory of metallic reflection is cited without reference to Lord Rayleigh's or Sir William Thomson's memoirs; when reflection and refraction of light are treated in the vague manner of Fresnel or MacCullagh—when all these woeful old makeshifts reappear—then we prefer to think of the ether as a jelly, even if we have to believe the jelly fixed to the sides of its infinite mould! Perhaps it is in his discussion of dispersion, particularly anomalous dispersion, that Mr. Preston is most heart-rending. Not a bit of theory here, not even a deduction of Cauchy's good old formula, which pleased our fathers so; Helmholtz and Kettler barely cited as names, and Sir William Thomson's beautiful molecules wholly forgotten! Have all the memoirs of Voigt no longer a place in the Theory of Light? But we are saying too many unkind things of Mr. Preston on the strength of his title. For, when we read it on the back of his volume, we dreamt of a glorious book with one connected electro-magnetic theory used to explain and classify all phenomena; and then we found Mr. Preston, alas! after reproducing in his last chapter a bit of Herz, referring us for all the rest to "special treatises on electricity"! It is our disappointment, not Mr. Preston's omissions, which makes us turn severely critical. We were hoping for a treatise like Lord Rayleigh's on "Sound," and complain because we have only found the best student's text-book on light yet published! For that is indeed what Mr. Preston has provided. Well printed, clearly expressed, and wonderfully free from errors, we can imagine no better work for the physical students at our university colleges, if they will only supplement Mr. Preston's historical chapter—which admits no elastician to historical fame—by a perusal of Glazebrook's British Association Report. Above all, the introduction to English readers of Cornu's graphical methods of treating diffraction, as well as the discussion of the recent experiments of Michelson or Morley on aberration, deserve special notice. The perusal of the book will also suggest many points worthy of investigation to those who would have delighted in a more complete mathematical treatment.

Reflections on the Motive Power of Heat. From the original French of N. L. S. Carnot. Edited by R. H. Thurston (Macmillan). This is a translation of Sadi Carnot's Réflexions sur la puissance motrice du Feu, with numerous appendices. The publisher's note contains the following words:

"It could not be presumed that a very large proportion of even the men of science of the English-speaking world would be sufficiently familiar with the subject, or interested in its origin, to purchase such a relic of a primitive period as is this little book. Nor could the translation of the work, or the gathering together by the editor of related matter, be supposed likely to be productive of any form of compensation."

We are sorry to have to differ from this opinion of the publishers. We believe that a well-edited English translation of Carnot's classical work would have a wide sale; and that even the present edition, in default of a better, will meet with a demand it does not deserve. Mr. Thurston, besides translating the Réflexions and some almost as valuable extracts from Carnot's memoranda and manuscripts, has reproduced M. H. Carnot's life of his brother, has dedicated his work with unnecessary verbosity to President Carnot (not forgetting, of course, "our own first president, George Washington"), and has attempted to measure Carnot's historical position. It is in this latter part of the work that Mr. Thurston seems to us to have specially failed. A good historical sketch, fairly expressing the merits of Carnot and his exact relations to his successors, would have rendered this translation invaluable; but this is very far from being supplied by the section entitled: "The work of Sadi Carnot," or by the republication of Sir William Thomson's memoir of 1849. We are not likely to underrate the services of Carnot to science, but it is not history to speak of "his grandest work of the century in his province of thought," or to say that:

"It is this man . . . who has thus made it possible to construct a science of the energetics of the universe, and to read the mysteries of every physical phenomenon of nature; it is this man who has done more than any contemporary in his field, and who thus displayed a more brilliant genius than any man of science of the nineteenth century."

These are but samples of the exaggeration which loses all sense of historical proportions. Positive error seems to appear in such a sentence as the following:

"The exact experimental data needed for numerical computations in application of Carnot's principles were inaccessible at the date of his writing; they were supplied, later, by Mayer, by Colding, by Joule, and by later investigators."

The contributions of Mayer and Colding to the science of thermodynamics hardly consisted in "exact experimental data." Again, Carnot indeed speaks of la puissance motrice where we should speak of "work," but this hardly justifies Mr. Thurston's use of the term "amount of power" in modern English for a number of footpounds. Nor must the American reader who comes across the following passage

"Only now and then, in the centuries, does such a genius come into view. . . . Fourier, Thomson, Maxwell, and Clausius were such in mathematical physics."

believe that our great British scientist is not still among us in the heyday of his power and activity. This want of history and grammar is not fully atoned for by Mr. Thurston when he reprints Sir William Thomson's luminous paper of 1849 on "Carnot's Theory of the Motive Power of Heat." At the date when the latter published his Réflexions, he adopted (although he scarcely believed in) the hypothesis of the materiality of heat; and this led him into the error, first pointed out by James Thomson, in his statement of the cycle of operations of a reversible engine. This error had not been noted in 1849; and although Sir William Thomson in his footnotes of 1881 makes the necessary corrections, his memoir was written from Carnot's standpoint, and in some respects cannot be so helpful to a beginner without knowledge of the history of this science as a treatment of the subject de novo (with the use, of course, of this and later memoirs of Sir William Thomson) might easily have been. If we turn however, from Mr. Thurston to Carnot, there is so much to fascinate the English reader in him that he cannot fail to be widely appreciated even in such a garb. This is notably the case with the memoranda from Carnot's papers in Appendix A. Here we find Carnot abandoning the hypothesis of the materiality of heat, and stating concisely why it must be abandoned. He postulates with great clearness the principle of energy as it relates to heat and mechanical work, and suggests experiments, which were afterwards independently devised and carried out by our own Joule. These memoranda demonstrate, however, not only what the scientific world lost by Carnot's early death, but they bring before us the more human side of the man. They show us that Carnot was not only ahead of his time and its experience in physics, but that he was groping towards a rationalism in religion, a socialism in political economy, and the principle of the survival of the fittest in natural history in a manner equally advanced and remarkable. Take only the following as a sample:

"In some respects medicine is directly opposed to the will of nature, which tends to perpetuate the strongest and best of the species, and to abandon the delicate to a thousand forms of destruction. This is what occurs among animals and savage men. Only the most robust attain the adult age, and those only reproduce the species. Medicine and the aids of the social state prolong the lives of feeble creatures whose posterity is usually equally feeble. Among the Spartans barbarous regulations put an end to the existence of malformed infants, that the strength and beauty of the race might be preserved. Such regulations are antipathetic to our customs; nevertheless, it might be desirable that we should devote ourselves to the preservation of the human race from the causes of weakness and degeneracy."

These words, it must be remembered, were written before 1832! As we commenced by criticising Mr. Thurston somewhat severely, so we must conclude; his translation appears to be neither careful nor adequate.

"ENCYKLOPÄDIE DER NATURWISSENSCHAFTEN." Handbuch der Physik. 4-6 Lieferung. (Breslau: Trewendt; London: Williams & Norgate.) This part contains the main portion of the treatment of "Hydromechanics," and maintains a fairly average level, scarcely, however, as good as the chapters on "Elasticity." It is by the same writer, F. Auerbach, whom it is hard to expect should be a specialist in two such comprehensive subjects. He does not appear to have met with Basset's recent treatise; and his theory, which must be, of course, more circumscribed, is not always very well done, and might have been more helpful had references been given to Basset. On the physical side, of course, he often gives authorities and material which we should have been glad to see in the latter's volumes. Of rather inferior work we must note his discussion of the metacentre—pitiable—and of rotating masses of liquid. The theory of waves and tides is, perhaps, passable for a work of this kind, but there ought to have been more ample reference to Boussinesq and to the posthumous memoirs of Saint Venant. We may note that Helgoland already appears as a "German" harbour. Better done with copious references, especially to British memoirs, is the section on the motion of solid bodies in a fluid. Vortex motion has the physical details, which are so wanting in Basset's treatise, but without anything like such an ample discussion of theory as the latter work. The first "Lieferung" ends with a very full discussion of "Capillarity," which seems excellently complete on the physical, and good on the theoretical side. It concludes with a copious bibliography. We may note the omission of any reference to Sir William Thomson's paper on capillary attraction (Popular Lectures, vol. i.), the curves of which certainly deserved notice in the text. This article is by F. Braun, who rises much above the level of F. Auerbach. The Handbuch next deals with gases. The Boyle-Mariotte law is discussed by L. Graetz from the physical rather than the theoretical standpoint—Van der Waal's formula appearing without any consideration as to its theoretical deduction. "Aéromechanik" is neither suggestive nor interesting; but it is good to see Helmholtz's exposition of the real difficulties of guiding balloons reappearing in a popular text-book. The internal friction of liquids and gases is then discussed with considerable experimental detail by L. Graetz. The equations for the motion of a viscous fluid appear to be attributed to O. E. Meyer in a paper of 1861. They were, however, given by Sir G. Stokes in 1845 and by Navier and Poisson still earlier. The identification of the coefficient of viscosity ("Reibungscoefficient") as conceived by Maxwell with the coefficient which appears in the equations of Stokes and Meyer is by no means clear from the statements on p. 577. The external friction of solid bodies—apparently on the ground that it has more importance for the technician than for the physicist—is contemptibly treated on p. 603; even Coulomb's conclusion that the coefficient of friction is independent of the speed of the bodies in contact being reproduced! The next long article, on "Diffusion," by K. Waitz, is very interesting reading, and details of a wide range of experiments are given. The theory discussed, due to Fick and Stefan, can hardly be considered as fully established. "Absorption" is then treated, without much theory—which, indeed, is still to seek—by F. Auerbach. On the whole, these articles in Parts V. and VI. of the Handbuch supply a good deal of information not readily accessible in any English text-book. Part VI. has the first 80 pages of the articles directed to Acoustics, but we prefer to leave all criticism till the treatment is completed in subsequent parts.

THE NINTH ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

AS readers of the ACADEMY are probably aware, the disputes connected with the Scandinavian congress of last year have resulted in the formation of two independent committees, each of which claims to control the organisation of the ninth International Congress of Orientalists. It is apparently agreed on all sides that the congress should be held in England. The main dispute, apart from difficulties about persons, is whether it should be held in 1891 or in 1892.

One of the two committees, of which Sir Patrick Colquhoun is president, and Dr. G. W. Leitner the organising secretary, bases its authority mainly upon the delegation to it of the rights of initiative vested in the French founders, and partly also upon the support of about 350 signatories who approved the original circular of protest against some of the proceedings of the Scandinavian congress. This committee proposes to hold the next meeting of the congress in London in 1891.

The other committee, which arose out of a split in the former, has resolved that the congress should not be held until 1892. It has also elected Prof. Max Müller as president, not of the committee, but of the future congress; and he took the chair at a meeting held last Monday in the rooms of the Royal Asiatic Society. At this meeting, letters of support were read from (among others) Profs. Dillmann and Kuenen, the two surviving presidents of former congresses; and a statement was adopted for circulation among the French founders. Arrangements were also made for the organisation of sections. We understand that Prof. Robertson Smith will probably preside over the Semitic section; and that there will be a special section for Assyriology, with Mr. Sayce for president, and Mr. T. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, for secretary.

In the interests, not only of good fellowship among scholars, but also of oriental learning—the two objects which the system of congresses was intended to promote—it is greatly to be desired that all controversial questions on either side should be eliminated, that the two committees should unite their forces, and that our friends on the continent should receive a joint invitation to come to London in whatever year may be found most convenient. A heavy responsibility will rest upon those who may constitute themselves irreconcilables; for it is manifest that two oriental congresses in London in successive years are out of the question, and no less manifest (to outsiders) that the points in dispute do not involve any matter of fundamental principle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE INSCRIPTION OF TORAMĀNA SHĀHA.

London: Nov. 10, 1890.

The suggestion of Prof. J. Karabacek that the Toramāna may be a Turkish name, as türamān means "a rebel or insurgent," leads me to suggest that the Toramāna of our Indian inscriptions may perhaps be identified with the "rebel" general, A-fu-chi-lo, who retired from the Oxus, and set himself up as "Khan of the White Huns," as recorded by D'Herbelot (iv. p. 89), about A.D. 494. As A-fu-chi-lo is only a Chinese mode of writing Afthal, or Ephthalite, I think that this successful "rebel" may be the same as the general Ephthalanus who conquered Firoz the Sassanian king some years previously.

Dr. Bühler, who translates the inscription, is doubtful about his identity with the Toramāna of the Eran inscription. But a reference to my Gwalior inscription of Mihirakula, the son of Toramāna, seems to offer a very satisfactory evidence that the Toramāna Shāha of the Western Panjab must be closely connected with the Shāhi Mihirkul of the coins which are found in the same district. As the Mihirkul of the Mandasor inscriptions had been conquered before 532 A.D., his date may be fixed at 510-530 A.D., and that of Toramāna, his father, at 480-510 A.D., which agrees with the time of the rebel A-fu-chi-lo.

As many of the coins of Mihirkul spell the name as Mihir-gul, I think it very probable that he may be the Gollas of Kosmas Indikopleustes, who was reigning on the Indus in 530 A.D. This Gollas possessed 1000 elephants, which leads me to suppose that he may be the very king who was reigning in Gandhāra in 520 A.D., when the Chinese pilgrim Sung-yun was there, and who possessed 700 elephants.

I am not quite satisfied with Dr. Bühler's reading of the tribal name as Jaūvla. I had previously read it as Jarūkhva or Jarūvla.

A fine silver coin of Mihirkul may be seen in Thomas's Prinsep (vol. i. p. lii. No. 5). The inscription is jayatu Mihirakula, which Thomas failed to read.

A. CUNNINGHAM.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Journal of the Anthropological Institute for November contains papers dealing with a great diversity of topics, but none calling for notice as exceptionally important. Prof. Flowers describes some ancient skulls from a cave in Jamaica; Mr. Francis Galton explains his ingenious device for measuring the rate of movement of the limbs; Mr. H. Balfour, of Oxford, has an illustrated paper on the old British pibcorn, or hornpipe; the Rev. J. Macdonald writes on the customs of certain South African peoples; Dr. Mouat on the French system of measuring criminals; Mr. MacLean has something to say on the ancient peoples of Ireland and Scotland; Dr. Leitner deals with the language of Hunza; and Mr. Skerchly describes and figures some ingenious traps used for snaring game in Borneo.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AFTER a short break, Prof. James Darmesteter has again undertaken the task of reviewing the progress of oriental learning in France in an annual report to the Société Asiatique. His report for the last two years, which was submitted in June last, has just been issued as a pamphlet of 160 pages by the Imprimerie Nationale, with all the advantages of excellent type and paper. M. Darmesteter first mourns the losses sustained by French orientalism during the two years, the names most familiar in England being those of Abel Bergaigne, the Sanskrit; Pavet de Courteille, the Turkish; and Arthur Amiaud, the Assyrian scholar. He then proceeds to summarise, with equal sympathy and brilliance, the results of the works published by Frenchmen—whether in separate volumes or in numerous reviews, bulletins, &c.—in the eight following departments of oriental learning: (1) India and Indo-China; (2) Persia, under which M. Darmesteter pardonably includes Afghanistan; (3) Phœnicia, Judæa, and Syria—a section much more full than would be the corresponding one for English work; (4) Arabia and the Musalman World, including Morocco and even the Sudan; (5) Assyria; (6) Egypt (without any trace of chauvinism); (7) Turkey, where no Englishman would expect to find mention of Burmese; and (8) China, Annam, and Japan. Perhaps the most instructive feature to us in this survey is the extent to which oriental studies in France are both bound together and propagated by the teaching institutions of Paris, which have at present no parallel in London.

THE last number of Trübner's Record does not contain very much that is important. J. J. reviews Dr. A. Führer's "Sharqi Architecture of Jaunpur," to which review is appended another by Mr. W. H. White, reprinted from the Journal of the Royal Institute of British Architects. There is an excellent obituary notice, compiled from various sources, of Dr. Emmanuel Forchhammer, whose early death is an irreparable loss to Burmese archaeology. There is also an interesting sketch of a living Bengali Pandit, Chandrakānta Tarkālankāra, known by his official title as the Mahāmahopādhyāya. We observe also that the paper which Prof. Bühler sent to the ACADEMY of April 19, concerning the new Jaina inscriptions found by Dr. Führer at Mathurā, is here reprinted, with the statement that it is quoted from the Vienna Oriental Journal.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

NEW SHAKSPEARE.—(Friday, Oct. 24.)

DR. F. J. FURNIVALL, president, in the chair.—Mrs. Stopes read some notes bearing on Shakspeare and his contemporaries, gleaned from recent research in the literature of that period.—The chairman read a paper upon "The Lover's Complaint," which, he said, must be taken as an act of penance and a recantation. In the "Leopold Shakspeare" he had set this down as spurious; a mistake the result of hurry and want of time, as such mistakes generally are. He was now convinced of its genuineness. The poem was evidently of very early date, and the printing of it at the end of the Sonnets was the first thing likely to mislead a student. The story, such as it was, was of the type of "Lucrece"; the lines on the Horse took us at once to "Venus and Adonis"; while the number of conceits, once-used words, &c., combined to place the poem very early—say, 1594. It contained a number of characteristic phrases, which struck him as exclusively Shaksperian. He could give them to no other writer of the time. Such were—e.g., plaintful story—sistering vale—storming her world—descended her sheaved hat—in top of rage—the ruffle knew Of court—I attended a youthful suit—nature's outwards—maiden-tongued he was—did livery falseness—not in his case—he had the dialect—and dialogued for him—my own fee-simple, not in part—as some my equals did—his plants in other orchards grew—vows were brokers to defiling—with acture they may be—kept hearts in liveries—the encrimsoned mood—the annexions of fair gems—his inbred properties—pensive and subdued—you enpatron me—their distract parcels—whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote—the aloe of all forces (for bitterness)—that strong-bonded oath—chill extincture—there my white stole of chastity I doffed—he preached pure maid—so loved. All these, he thought, were most distinctive, and could not be assigned to any other living writer of that time. As against these—not against the authorship, but in contrast to their character, and often beauty—were to be set the conceits which, with their falsity, disfigured the poem. The "sheaved hat," which was a "hive of straw"—"levelled eyes their carriage ride"—"silken parcels" (of hair)—"phœnix down"—"that termless skin whose bare outraged the web it seemed to wear"—"talents of their hair"—"the broken bosoms," and the like, were all regrettable, and most evident signs of very early work.—In the discussion which followed, Mrs. Stopes regretted Dr. Furnivall's conversion on the subject of the authorship of the poem, and was unable to see evidence of Shakspeare's hand in it.—Mr. W. Poel gave an account of a performance of "King Lear," which he had recently witnessed in Munich. In this performance there was a careful effort to reproduce, so far as possible, all the circumstances of an Elizabethan theatre, as shown in the three trumpet-calls which preceded the play, in the arrangement of curtains and "tableau-curtains," and the second or back stage with three steps leading up to it. No word or detail of the original play was omitted, even the tearing out of Gloucester's eyes being given. The Lear was essentially the Shaksperian Lear, not him of the modern English stage; and all the smaller parts were taken by good men, and thoroughly well acted.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Nov. 3.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The president delivered the annual address, taking as his subject "The Laws of Associations." The functions of the subject or Psyche, considered simply as a conscious agent, may be exhaustively divided into (1) sense-presentation; (2) spontaneous redintegration, with its two branches, representation of sense-presentations, and presentation and representation of emotional feelings; and (3) volitionally re-active redintegration with its two stages, immanent and transient action. The laws of association belong solely to the second of these divisions, spontaneous redintegration. Now redintegration, like presentation, depends upon neuro-cerebral processes; and it is impossible to give any intelligible account of its phenomena, much more to ascertain its laws, without referring them to the brain processes upon which they depend. A mere analysis and classification of these phenomena, as states and processes of consciousness alone, give no account of the how or why of the phenomena; and indeed, without that reference, the phenomena are not reducible to any intelligible order at all. The speaker then selected a hypothetical instance of association for examination, and showed from its analysis that the commonly received laws of similarity and contiguity entirely failed to account for the association. Not similarity and contiguity in the ideas, but similarity and continuity in the brain processes supporting them, were shown to be the true explanation of the phenomena. From the same analysis it was also shown that there is a third law of association, which is usually left unnoticed; namely, that which is evidenced by the emotional interest in objects and events once experienced. Emotional interest is an apparent determinant of associations, quite as much as similarity and contiguity of ideas. But all alike are apparent only, the real determinants in every case being the brain processes underlying them. But these three laws carry us but a very little way in explaining the cause actually followed in any particular instance of spontaneous redintegration, or in enabling us to predict it. They say nothing whatever as to which of the three will be the law that rules at any particular juncture. They are simply laws under one or more of which all associations take place, whatever may be the course which they follow. To know the course likely to be taken by any train of association, we must know the particular character and history of the person who is the subject of it. The known laws of association are therefore of a highly general character, expressing only the most general conditions to which spontaneous redintegrations are found to conform.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, Nov. 6.)

T. H. BAYLIS, Esq., Q.C., in the chair.—Mr. J. P. Harrison read a paper on "The Eastern Character of the Ornamentation in Churches built by Richard II., Duke of Normandy." He exhibited photographs of capitals in the south aisle of the choir of the desecrated Abbey Church at Bernay, founded in 1013 by Judith of Brittany, Richard's wife, but built, as we learn from his charter, by him from the foundations, on her death in 1017. The ornament is different from any in Normandy of this date, and three of the capitals exhibit features evidently derived from palm branches. Greek and Armenian bishops and monks are known to have visited Richard II., owing to his fame as a church builder; and the chronicles of Verdun Abbey, in particular, record a visit which was paid by Symeon, Abbot of Mount Sinai, and some of his monks, about the time that Bernay Church was in progress; and one, a "famulus" named Stephen, it appears, remained at Rouen with the abbot for two years, while a church founded at his instance, in the suburbs of that city, was being erected. A capital that belonged to it is preserved in Rouen Museum. Work of a similar kind attributed to Richard exists at Evereux and Mont St. Michel; and the ground plans of the latter church and Bernay Abbey are identically the same. At Fécamp, which is the first church recorded to have been built by Richard, in 1001, it is of consequence to note that the ornament in the portions still surviving is quite different, and resembles early features in the choir of Oxford Cathedral, the capitals being ornamented with twining stalks.

FINE ART.

TWO WINTER EXHIBITIONS.

SIR JAMES LINTON'S contributions to the exhibition of the Institute are interesting as departures from his usual themes. They are rustic subjects, and treated of course with taste and skill; but it is not probable that they represent anything more than the temporary excursion of their author into a new and possibly refreshing field. Mr. Thomas Collier, the leading spirit at the Institute in landscape, sends nothing to the present exhibition; but Messrs. Wimperis, Waterlow, Alfred East, Orrock, Earle, Dillon and others are represented by excellent and characteristic work; and among painters of the sea Mr. Edwin Hayes finds no difficulty whatever in holding his own, for no one knows his subject better, and few men possess more completely the secrets of composition and of safe and harmonious colouring. With these virtues Mr. Hayes combines a dash and spirit which are rare. His art, ever sterling, is likewise ever vivacious. It is a picture of the Solent and the sea-front of Portsmouth that he contributes to the present show. The strongest architectural man at the Institute is, as usual, Mr. John Fulleylove. He sends but three slight and small things, all of which represent, from different points of view, the town and towers of Ely. Small as they are, and comparatively unimportant to the eye of the untrained or the unobservant, they are indeed charming little masterpieces of design, of draughtsmanship, of perspective, and of illumination.

Of the figure pictures, one of the most prominent is a "domesticity," by Mr. Arthur Hacker, called "His Daughter's Bairn." It is a picture of sentiment, old enough indeed in motive, yet treated with rare feeling, and therefore justified. Mr. Haynes-Williams has a canvas of great elegance and charm, and of extraordinary dexterity of workmanship, called "Sweet Silence." The "silence" is maintained without difficulty—so eloquent are the looks that are exchanged by the two youthful and enamoured people whom, in the quaint dress of the beginning of the century, Mr. Haynes-Williams has elected to paint. It is asserted, and we think with truth, that Mr. Weguelin's portrait group of two sisters is the most refined and the freshest of the exhibited portraits. Mr. John Collier's head and shoulders of himself is a very thorough piece of work; and there could hardly be more attractive flesh-painting than in Mr. Kennington's "Study" of a reddish blonde, seen in profile, the nape of the neck drawn exquisitely, and the graceful and not too opulent figure modelled with admirable cunning. Of unobtrusive excellence, and dealing with very old material, is "A Song of Long Ago," by Mr. Bacon, with whose work we seem to make acquaintance for the first time. The exhibition, it is almost needless to say, contains, besides those things we have been led to mention, a great many works which may fairly interest the visitor.

At the Society of British Artists, the show, it is allowed on all hands, is distinctly above what one may call the recent average. An improvement began to be discerned last summer, and we are glad that it is followed up this autumn. At the same time, the exhibition is not without its share of those works which appeal primarily to the second-rate artist and to the lover of second-rate painting. We shall not, in a notice brief as the present one, feel under the responsibility of condemning these in detail. The presence of Mr. Watts's portrait of Lord Tennyson—a head and bust, facing the spectator, and arrayed in peer's robes—would suffice to bestow a certain distinction upon the exhibition. The veteran artist has shown no failure of hand—still less any failure or lack of the wonted nobility of conception—in setting down for us the visage of the veteran poet. Worthily indeed has this latest of so many tasks been performed by the painter. Perhaps, in presence of such a portrait as this one, no other portrait in Suffolk-street can be said to urgently claim notice. Did any obtain it, it would be, in all probability, a work which in every particular is as unlike as possible to that of Mr. Watts—we mean Mr. R. Parker's counterfeit presentment of young Mr. Arthur Haynes, content with the world and his cigarette. The canvas is cleverly wrought, and the subject has been unflinchingly beheld and rendered. Mr. Cook's scenes of modern London street life—children dancing to the tunes of a travelling organ, and one old chum gently evading another, when prosperity and adversity have established too wide a gulf for any one to bridge with comfort—are of a kind to attract attention, and not unworthily to hold it.

In works concerned with the picturesque rendering of architecture—Gothic architecture especially—the president, Mr. Wyke Bayliss, is facile princeps at Suffolk-street. We like him best, perhaps, in his "Orvieto"—a water-colour. To mention it is to be reminded that not a little of the most interesting work in the galleries is water-colour work. Such are several vivid, though by no means faultless, sketches by Mr. Nelson Dawson, whose greatest effort is, nevertheless, a fine oil picture, "The Sunset Breeze"—memorable alike for colour and for wave-drawing. Such are the landscape sketches by Mr. R. B. Nisbet, who, admirable as are his methods, has nothing so good as the best of his contributions last summer. To pastel—not to water-colour—belongs Mr. Titcomb's portrait of a seated child. We do not know the model; but it would hardly be rash to vouch that Mr. Titcomb's is a complete rendering of her character. Coming back again to work in oil, Mr. Dudley Hardy's sleep-abandoned figure—lying white and dreamful in a darkly shadowed room—is an instance of fine colouring and brush-work; while of Mr. Brangwyn's "We therefore commit his body to the deep," it must at least be said that it shows in this young artist a dramatic power, the existence of which can only have been hinted at by his earlier essays. The fine and accurate observation and the good craftsmanship of Mr. Brangwyn have, in this picture, been at the service of a genuine imaginative gift. Such works ought to be the property of some modern corporation gallery.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

WILD ANIMALS IN VIGO-STREET.

AMONG the smaller exhibitions of this season there will be probably few more deservedly popular than that of Mr. J. Nettleship's pastels, now on view at Mr. Dunthorne's in Vigo-street. The artist is well known for his poetical pictures of wild animal life, in which he has often, like Landseer, struck that chord of sympathy betwixt man and brute which is one of the characteristics of the modern as apart from the "old" masters. But in these pastels, for the most part, although there is much of that semi-affectionate feeling with which we watch the animals at the Zoo., there is little of imported sentiment; they are studies of animal action and animal expression, done simply from the life.

As might be expected from Mr. Nettleship, the lion is the subject of many of these studies, and of, perhaps, the best of them. There are certainly few if any finer than the grand group of a lion and lioness, (2) the very picture of power in repose, with that intellectual look and noble presence which, more than any real nobility of character, have earned for the lion the title of the "king of beasts." Fine studies also are the "Lion's Head" (25) and the "Lion Roaring" (28), both of which we prefer to the "Lioness carrying Cub" (51), in which the massiveness of the creature appears to be exaggerated. But it is not only Lions and Tigers that are to be seen here; we have Bears and Foxes, Stags and Zebras, Swine and Otters, Macaws and Eagles, and many another bird and beast beside. Among the best of these are the Polar Pears (44 and 55), the Ibises (7 and 36), the Otters (14 and 15), the Bison (22), and the "Leopards Dozing" (27); but there is great scope for variety of opinion. There are tame as well as wild animals, and there are several drawings of ponies and foals which are not by any means the least to be desired. Perhaps the "Ponies of Dartmoor" (6, 34, 35, 37, 52) are not, strictly speaking, tame; but their manners, if uneducated, are charming, and they seem to point to an undeveloped side of Mr. Nettleship's feeling, as an artist, that is well worth cultivating. One drawing (37) is more than a study, it is a beautiful picture, and makes one feel that whenever Mr. Nettleship may wish for a change it is in his power to become a delightful painter of pastorals. Besides the pastels there are a few water-colours, and one picture in oil which deserves to be repeated on a larger scale. The subject is "Narcissus," but what is Mr. Nettleship's precise adaptation of the fable we will leave his visitors to discover.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. J. ELIOT HODGKIN and Miss Edith Hodgkin—of Childwall, Richmond-on-Thames—propose to publish by subscription a limited number of copies of a Catalogue of all those named, dated, and inscribed pieces of early English pottery which are preserved either in public museums or in private cabinets. The catalogue is intended to be, so far as possible, exhaustive; and it will contain descriptions of not less than six hundred pieces. It will be printed on special paper, quarto size, and will be handsomely bound in imitation of "slip" decoration. The illustrations will include a coloured frontispiece (representing one of the most interesting examples of English pottery in existence), and about 170 reproductions from photographs printed in the text. It is hoped that the work may be ready for issue to subscribers early in the new year.

THE collection of bronzes and porcelain made by the late Commissary-General Pirakis during his twenty-three years' residence in China will be sold at Christie's on Wednesday next, November 19. Among the porcelain is a vase dating from the Ming Dynasty (1426) in perfect preservation.

MR. GEORGE BERTIN will deliver a course of four lectures at the British Museum, on Tuesdays during December, upon "The History of the Literature of Babylonia and Assyria," illustrated by translations from the cuneiform documents in the museum.

THERE will open next week the sixth annual exhibition, at Messrs. Howell & James's, Regent-street, of antique Italian and Spanish brocades and embroideries, and of ancient Greek, Italian, and Sicilian pulled linen and lace; and also, at Mr. Harding's, in Piccadilly, an exhibition of original designs for Christmas cards, &c., including a series of water-colour drawings illustrative of the upper reaches of the Thames.

THE Archaeological Institute of America has published (Cambridge, U.S.: University Press) a paper read before the New York branch by Prof. Augustus C. Merriam, of Columbia College, on "Telegraphing among the Ancients." He has here collected the references among classical authors not only to beacon fires but also to other modes of signalling for military purposes. The whole is preliminary to a fresh discussion of the well-known passage in the Agamemnon, describing the arrival of the news of the fall of Troy. Prof. Merriam suggests that the course of the "courier fires," from Cithaeron through the Megarid to Argos, is a reminiscence of contemporary events, connected with the alliance of Athens, Argos, and Megara against Sparta and Corinth. He has also taken much pains to calculate the distance of the several stations and their visibility one from the other. Incidentally, he claims to have found a lake in the Megarid, now called Mavrolimne, which satisfies the requirements of the Gorgopis of Aeschylus.

MUSIC.

GLUCK'S "ORFEO" AT COVENT GARDEN.

WHEN this opera was given last May at Cambridge, under the direction of Dr. Stanford, we spoke of Gluck as no longer popular; Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and especially Wagner, having made it difficult for the public to appreciate the simplicity of this composer's dramatic music. But now "Orfeo" is drawing crowded houses at Covent Garden, and it would, perhaps, seem as if we ought to modify, if not retract, our statement. We shall certainly not retract it, and only modify it so far as to say that when the title rôle is presented by such an accomplished actress and singer as Mlle. Giulia Ravogli, interest is revived for a time in the work. The very contrast of the music to that in vogue at the present day makes a pleasing novelty. But this successful revival of Gluck's opera will, we believe, only be a passing one. When it was given in Paris in 1859 with Mme. Viardot in the leading part, the work began to have "une vogue inquiétante." Thus wrote Berlioz, the enthusiastic admirer of the composer. But his admiration did not interfere with his judgment, and he saw clearly that Gluck would not become à la mode. Still, though the present success of "Orfeo" may be only a temporary one, we would not for a moment underrate its interest or importance. The development of music, and particularly of dramatic music, since the time of Gluck has been singularly rapid—rhythm, harmony, orchestration, everything has become more complicated; and recitative and song are now so mixed that one cannot always say where the one begins and the other ends. One may wonder at times whether all this development represents a real advance. When we peruse some old work in which the simplicity is mere commonplace, in which form rather than matter predominates, then the old appears old indeed. But when we turn to Gluck and feel the charm of his music and the truthfulness of its expression, the very simplicity seems a merit, and almost a condemnation of modern art. The presentation, then, of "Orfeo," enabling us to compare the past with the present, is of immense interest to thoughtful musicians. And it is of no less importance. Gluck has been often described as the pioneer of Wagner, inasmuch as the former, like the latter, tried to reform opera. The present generation listens to Wagner, but has only read about Gluck. An opportunity of hearing his music-drama, quite apart from any pleasure it may give or curiosity it may satisfy, is of educational value. It is through Gluck that one ought to approach Wagner.

With regard to the second Covent Garden performance last Tuesday, we may at the outset express regret that the showy Aria of Bertoni, so unlike, and so ill-suited to, the rest of the music, was sung. Dr. Stanford wisely omitted it at Cambridge, for the composer introduced it only to pacify Legros, the famous tenor. Gluck intended the act to end with a very brief orchestral symphony. Mlle. Giulia Ravogli as Orpheo is exceedingly fine. She sings with dramatic power and feeling, and there is intensity without extravagance. Her gesture throughout was admirable, and she threw wonderful pathos into the "Che farò." After a fine rendering of this Aria, it was pardonable on the part of the audience to ask for an encore, but scarcely so for so excellent an actress to accept it. Her sister, Mlle. Sofia Ravogli, was good as Eurydice, and at her best in the duet in the last act.

The chorus was far from satisfactory, and the piece was mounted in heterogeneous fashion. The orchestra, under Signor Bevnigani, was good in some numbers, but not in all.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

SEÑOR ALBENIZ, the Spanish pianist, gave the first of two orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall on Friday, November 7. The first piece was a Moorish Fantasia for orchestra by Chapi. This composer studied at the Madrid Conservatoire. He has written several operas and a symphony. The Fantasia includes a Tournament March, a Réverie, a Serenade, and Finale. The music is bright and tuneful, and the orchestration effective, though at times more suitable for open-air than for concert performance. The various themes both in character and rhythm have Eastern colour. The "Serenade," a clever little movement, was encored. This work was followed by a Symphony in E flat, composed by T. Breton, a native of Salamanca, born in 1850. He, too, studied at the Madrid Conservatoire, where he gained the Prix de Rome. It was in this city that he wrote the Symphony in question. It is not Spanish in character; and the form is quite orthodox. Throughout the first movement the influence of Beethoven is unduly prominent; it seems, indeed, as if the composer had so studied the "Erisca" as to have become imbued not only with its spirit, but with its very letter. The Andante contains some good music, but is too much spun out. The light Menuetto Scherzando is a pleasing movement; and the Finale, though lacking in distinctive character, contains solid writing and clever counterpoint. The programme included also M. Breton's Serenade, "En la Alhambra," and the prelude of the opera "Guzman el Bueno." The latter is simple in construction, consisting merely of short sections representing themes from the work. The composer conducted not only his own pieces, but the rest of the programme. Señor Albeniz played Mozart's pianoforte Concerto in D, the one written in 1788. He entered thoroughly into the spirit of the melodious and graceful music, his reading being pure and delicate, and without a trace of affectation. His interpretation of the Schumann Concerto was less satisfactory. He also gave some solos of his own composition.

The programme of last Saturday's Crystal Palace concert included Mr. Frederic Cliffe's "orchestral picture," entitled "Cloud and Sunshine." This tone-poem is not sufficiently interesting in its subject matter, but the writing is clever, and the orchestration effective. It was produced last May at a philharmonic concert. It was admirably given, under Mr. Manns's direction. Mme. Schmidt-Köhne, from the Royal Opera, Berlin, sang Mozart's Scena and Aria, "Mia speranza adorata," in a pure and expressive manner: the runs were very clear and distinct. Mr. Lloyd obtained an encore for his rendering of Mr. Manns's graceful Romance, "Minnie"; the pleasing viola obligato was played by Mr. H. Krause. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

M. Paderewski played Schumann's "Carneval" last Monday at the Popular Concerts. This pianist seems devoted to Schumann's music; and yet, for reasons stated last week, we cannot approve of his readings. The faults noticeable in the Concerto were still more marked in the Carneval. And then his tempi were wrong, many of the numbers being taken at too slow a rate. The Papillons, Pantalon et Colombine, and Paganini, on the other hand, were well rendered. The tone in the concluding March was loud, but not full. The programme included Dvorák's beautiful Quartet in E flat, splendidly played with Mme. Néruda as leader. Mr. Oswald sang a new song, "A silent voice," by Mr. Frederic Cliffe, words by Mr. J. Bennett: it is not very attractive, and towards the close becomes commonplace.

M. Paderewski gave a pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111) opened the programme. The first movement was played in a flurried manner, and the repeat was not taken; but the Arietta with variations was interpreted with great charm and poetry, and the technique was excellent. The pianist also gave Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor. The first two movements were very good, only the tones were at times hard. The March was not dignified, and its Trio affected. The difficult and mysterious Finale was a triumph of technical skill. M. Paderewski likewise played some Schubert-Liszt pieces, including the Erlkönig, given with extraordinary vigour, two Chopin Etudes from Op. 25, and some difficult and clever variations of his own. The concluding piece was Liszt's "Don Juan" Fantasia. This was played with skill and brilliancy; but as M. Paderewski is not a pupil of Liszt's he might surely have spared himself and his audience a "mauvais quart d'heure."

The Albert Hall Choral Society opened their season on Wednesday evening with "Elijah." To say that Mr. Barnby's choir did their best is equivalent to saying that the choral portions of the work had full justice done to them. One must travel to Leeds to hear renderings equally fine of the "Baal" choruses and of the "Thanks be to God." Mme. Schmidt-Köhne sang "Hear ye, Israel" exceedingly well. She has a voice of pleasing quality, and her soft notes are clear and penetrating. In the "widow" music her reading was, however, somewhat stagey. Mme. Svitlovsky certainly did not do justice to the "Jezebel" scena, or to "O rest in the Lord." Her voice was unsteady, her words doubtful, and her style of singing unsuitable. Mr. Watkin Mills sang the "Prophet" music coldly, though correctly. Mr. Ben Davies sang successfully. Miss Maggie Davies and Miss F. Bethell both deserve a word of commendation. Mr. Barnby conducted as usual.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 17 4	0 8 8

NEW SERIES OF THE MONTHLY PACKET. ESTABLISHED 40 YEARS.

In January, 1891, will commence a NEW SERIES of the MONTHLY PACKET, Edited by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE and CHRISTABEL COLERIDGE.

The Editors have to call attention to a NEW DEPARTURE in the Management. While retaining those special characteristics which old Subscribers have a right to expect, the scope of the Magazine will be widened, and greater variety introduced in its contents; while improvements in the type and general appearance will render it more attractive.

PROGRAMME FOR 1891.

COMPLETE SERIAL STORIES, to appear during the year, have been arranged for—viz., "LILIAN and LILI," by the Author of "Mademoiselle Mori"; "TWILIGHT," by HELEN SHIPTON; "THAT STICK," by C. M. YONGE.

Special features will be: a Series of Articles, entitled "WORK and WORKERS," dealing with professions and employments open to Girls and Young Women by persons actually engaged in them—Unpublished Marginalia, by SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE—Some Letters of Mrs. Barbourd—Greek Forerunners of Christ, by Rev. PETER LILLY.

SHORT STORIES AND MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES by well-known Authors, including— Doctor Garnett, Andrew Lang, W. W. Fowler, Arthur Benson,	Mrs. Oliphant, Mary E. Hullah, Lucy Lillie, F. M. Peard,	Esme Stuart, M. Bramston, Elizabeth Sewell, Hon. Eva Knatchbull-Hugessen, Walter Smith, Author of "Olrig Grange," F. T. Palgrave, Author of "The House of the Wolf," And others.
--	---	--

COMPETITIONS, DISCUSSIONS, and CORRESPONDENCE, conducted by "Chelsea China," and "Bog Oak."

Price ONE SHILLING.

COMPLETE PROSPECTUS POST-FREE ON APPLICATION.

NEW STORIES.—JUST READY.

SHREDS and PATCHES. By E. N. Leigh Fry. Illustrated, 5s.

"The children are admirably drawn, as good as any we have seen in fiction for a long time. Altogether 'Shreds and Patches' is a good bit of work."—Spectator. "The author has a thorough knowledge of little people's literary needs—will give great pleasure to many young readers, which will be shared by some of their elders."—Morning Post. "The prettily bound and pleasantly illustrated stories in 'Shreds and Patches' will delight the children they are written for. They are bright, simple, and natural relations of everyday occurrences. The talk is the talk of children, and the life is child-life, which cannot often be said of these things in children's books."—Academy. "The characters of the children are sketched with a pretty and natural azivette, and at times their adventures become quite thrilling. Is an excellent book, and as a Christmas Gift should have a popular season before it."—Scottish Leader. "A charming book for children, charmingly illustrated."—Paternoster Review. "Very amusing—the illustrations by Edith Ellison are excellent."—Church Times.

MADemoisELLE. By Frances M. Peard. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"One of the pleasantest studies of family life that even this agreeable writer has published. As carefully written as it is agreeable."—Spectator. "Mademoiselle is a pleasing character. Her kindness toward the other and lowlier heroine, the pluck and patriotism she shows throughout the book, her noble and gentle character, win a reader's affection."—Speaker.

LITTLE PRINCESS ANGEL. By Stella Austin. Crown 8vo, 5s.

LEAL SOUVENIR. By Alice Weber. Crown 8vo, 5s.

TRUTH with HONOUR. By C. R. Coleridge and M. Bramston. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"It is finely drawn, its tone is lofty throughout, and it is an effective demonstration that an attractive story does not need either sensational incidents or high-wrought passion so much as truth, fidelity to nature, and the combination of ethical purpose with sympathetic imagination."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NATURE and WOODCRAFT. By John Watson, Author of "Sylvan Folk," "A Year in the Fields," &c. Illustrated by G. E. Lodge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

 "Those who know the open air and life of animated nature, will enjoy the skill with which Mr. Watson translates its aspects and its actions into literary expression. Those who dwell in cities will enjoy it because the papers induce the illusion that one is in the country."—Scotsman. "It is long since we have met with a more delightful book on rural subjects than 'Nature and Woodcraft.'"—Times.

DRAWING-ROOM PLAYS FOR CHILDREN.

A NEW VOLUME NOW ADDED TO THIS POPULAR SERIES—

THE DOLL DRAMAS. By Constance Milman.

1. The Doll's Drama.

2. A Midsummer Day Queen.

3. "Mistress Mary, Quite Contrary."

4. The Princess and the Swineherd.

5. The Lucky Sixpence.

6. The Revolution in Sugar-Candia.

"The plays are simple and easily organised, ample directions being given."—Grajan. "They are brightly written, and some of the songs are really clever."—Morning Post. "All the little dramas are light and sparkling in their nature, and not above the reach of the class they are intended for."—Queen. "All of them are well suited for the Theatre Royal Nursery."—Scotsman. "They are full of fun, and easily within the capacity of the little clients for whom they are written."—Church Times. "Is sure to find wide favour with all who have children and like to see them happy."—Court Journal.

TERRA-COTTA PLAYS. By C. M. Prevost.

1. The Sleeping Beauty.

2. Snowdrop and the Seven Dwarfs.

3. The White Cat.

4. Jack and the Beanstalk.

HALF-HOUR PLAYS. By Amabel Jenner.

1. Rumpelstiltskin.

2. Tommy Trout and the Owl.

3. Jack and the Beanstalk.

4. Silverlocks and the Three Bears.

5. The Snow Queen.

6. Little Prit.

Each of the above volumes 2s. 6d.; or any of the Parts separately, Sixpence. Detailed list of each Play on application.

POPULAR BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

PAUL'S FRIEND. By STELLA AUSTIN. With 16 full-page Illus. by S. B. Gates. 5s.

SOAP-BUBBLES. By ISABELLA WEDDLE. With 8 full-page Illustrations, by T. Pym.

THREE LITTLE MAIDS; or, the Chronicles of Acacia Garden. By MARY BATHURST DEANE. With Illustration. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Remarkably amusing, admirable in tone . . . one of the most delightful books of the season. We had made up our minds to say as much before reading half of it, and yet went on to the end. A hard-working reviewer struggling against the torrent of gift books can hardly pay a better compliment."—Spectator.

A HOUSEFUL of GIRLS. By SARAH TYTLER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

By the AUTHOR of "Tip-Cat," etc.

LIL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TIP CAT. Cheap edition, with two Illustrations, by RANDOLPH CALDECOT. Small Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR LITTLE ANN. With two Illustrations. Small Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PEN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By ALICE WEBER.

"Miss Weber has a superior, she has hardly a rival, in the particular walk of fiction which she has selected for herself."—Spectator.

ANGELA; A Sketc. 4to, parchment wrapper, with Illustration by T. Pym. 2s. 6d.

IN the SPRING TIME. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"An advance even on that most delicate study, 'Angela.'"—Spectator.

IN HIDING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

COLONEL RUSSELL'S BABY. By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Clever, brightly written, and agreeable; deserves to be classed with 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

PRINCE VANCE. By ELEANOR PUTNAM and ARLO BATES. With numerous Illustrations by Frank Myrick. 3s. 6d.

By C. R. COLERIDGE.

MAKERS of MULLING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A PLUNGE into TROUBLED WATERS. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE CONSTANT PRINCE. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE FACE of CARLYON, and other stories. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

By J. A. LEPROV.

MISS MARGERY'S WAYS. With Illustration. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"We are obliged to the author for allowing us to make her acquaintance."—Spectator.

"The book is charming."—Literary Churchman.

"A most delightful story. Children will delight in this book, and their elders will be found reading it also."—Ecclesiastical Gazette.

WINGS without FEATHERS. Foolscap 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"One of the most entertaining little books that has ever come in our way. The hero of the story is a quite delightful child; to read about him is almost incomparable."—Spectator.

THE MONTHLY PACKET CHRISTMAS NUMBER, 1890. Demy 8vo, price 2s.

CONTENTS.—The Satin Gown, by Edith Carrington—Mulberry Leaves, by Madame Galletti di Cadillac—Transforming a Mulberry Leaf, by Beatrix F. Cresswell—Touched and Gone, by Mary Bramston—Kit and Ken, by C. R. Coleridge—Only an Old Maid, by F. A. W.—The Doom of the Grants, by F. E.—Hide and Seek—The Lazy Foot of Time, by Eadgyth—Myrtle Pork, by Marnel Hubert—The Story of a Walk, by Miss Field—The Mistress of Rythorpe Hall, by Melicent Wyan—A Gavotte by Glück, by F. C. Playne—A Love Picture in Three Strokes, by S. M. Crawley-Boevey—Tout Vient à Qui Sait Attendre, by Mrs. Dawson—Ancelet and his Journey, by Spinning-Jenny.

NOTES and QUESTIONS compiled from the WORKS of DR. PUSEY. By Rev. Arthur Brinckman. Undertaken with the approval and authority of the late Canon LIDDON. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [In preparation.]

LONDON: WALTER SMITH & INNES, 31 AND 32, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

EDITED BY
EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A.
Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Large Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s; Roxburgh, 6s.

The above is a collection of Biographical Studies of the Lives and Work of a number of representative Historical Characters about whom have gathered the great traditions of the Nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted, in many instances, as types of the several National Ideals. With the Life of each typical character will be presented a Picture of the National Conditions surrounding him during his career. Each Volume will be handsomely printed in large crown 8vo, and will contain numerous full-page Illustrations and Maps.

Now Ready.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS, and the STRUGGLE OF PROTESTANTISM FOR EXISTENCE By C. E. L. FLETCHER, M.A., late Fellow All Souls College, Oxford.

HORATIO NELSON, and the NAVAL SUPREMACY OF ENGLAND. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.

To be followed by—

PERICLES, and the GOLDEN AGE OF ATHENS. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

THEODORIC the GOTH, the BARBARIAN CHAMPION OF CIVILISATION. By THOMAS HODGKIN, Author of "Italy and her Invaders," &c.

ALEXANDER the GREAT, and the EXTENSION OF GREEK RULE AND OF GREEK IDEAS. By Prof. BENJAMIN J. WHEELER, Cornell University.

Full prospectus will be sent on application.

HOLLAND and its PEOPLE. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian by CAROLINE TILTON. New revised edition, printed from new plates. With 77 Illustrations. Pp. 460, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—Holland—Zealand—Rotterdam—Delft—The Hague—Leyden—Haarlem—Amsterdam—Utrecht—Broek—Zaandam—Alkmaar—Helder—The Zuyder Zee—Friesland—Groningen—From Groningen to Arnhem.

LIBERTY and a LIVING. How to Get Bread and Butter, Sunshine and Health, Leisure and Books, without Slaving away One's Life. By P. G. HUBERT, Jun. Cheap Edition, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

SEVEN THOUSAND WORDS often MISPRONOUNCED. A Guide to Correct Pronunciation. By W. H. P. PHYFE, Author of "How Should I Pronounce?" "The School Pronouncer," &c. New Popular Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 491 pp., 2s. 6d.

DUST and its DANGERS. By T. M. PRUDEN, M.D., Author of "The Story of the Bacteria," &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

This little book has been written with the purpose of informing people, in simple language, what the real danger is of acquiring serious disease, especially consumption, by means of dust-laden air, and how this danger may be avoided.

"The Pride of American Book-making."

THE KNICKERBOCKER NUGGETS. A Selection of some of the World's Classics, uniquely and tastefully printed by the Knickerbocker Press, and offered as Specimens as well of Artistic Typography as of the best Literature. 32mo, cloth extra, gilt top.

New Volumes.

THE GARDEN, as considered in Literature by certain Polite Writers. Edited by WALTER HOWE, with Portrait by WILLIAM KENT. 2s. 6d.

THE SAYINGS of POOR RICHARD. Being the Prefaces, Proverbs, and Poems of Benjamin Franklin. Originally printed in "Poor Richard's Almanac" for 1733-1758. Collected and Edited by PAUL LEICESTER FORD. 2s. 6d.

THE BOYHOOD and YOUTH of GOETHE. Comprising the first eleven books of his Autobiography (Truth and Poetry from my own Life). Two vols., 5s.

HISTORY of NORWAY. By Hjalmar H. BOYESEN, Professor of German Language and Literature at Columbia College. With seventy-nine Illustrations and Maps. Crown 8vo, 560 pp., cloth extra, 6s.

Full List sent on Application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON, AND NEW YORK.

SCHOOLS COLLEGES &c. OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

BISHOP BERKELEY FELLOWSHIP
(Value £100 for one year, and renewable for a second year)

At least two are offered for award in December next. APPLICATIONS must be sent to the Registrar on or before NOVEMBER 24th. Evidence of ability to prosecute some special study or research in any of the following subjects must be presented:—

Classics.
English Language and Literature.
History.
Philosophy.
Economic Science.
Pure Mathematics.
Applied Mathematics.
Engineering.
Physics.
Chemistry.
Botany.
Zoology.
Geology (including Palaeontology).
Physiology.
Pathology.
Pharmacology.

A fuller statement of Particulars and Conditions will be forwarded on application.

HONORARY RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS.

A limited number of Appointments will be made in December next. Applications must be made on or before NOVEMBER 24th.

There are no emoluments attached to these fellowships, but Fellows have equal opportunities for research in scientific subjects to those enjoyed by the Bishop Berkeley Fellows.

A fuller statement will be forwarded on application.

HENRY Wm. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.

There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at examining unprepared Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of Youths for Colonial Life. The College owns and farms a fine Seaside Estate of 1,330 acres. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 17th or 18th JANUARY, 1891. In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at Queen's College, Birmingham; University College, Cardiff; the Royal Medical College, Epsom; the Training College, New City Road, Glasgow; the Yorkshire College, Leeds; the Wigan School, Wigan; the School of Science and Art, Newcastle-on-Tyne; the High School, Newcastle-on-Tyne; the School of Art, Portsmouth. Every Candidate is required to apply to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination.

ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar.

November 5th, 1890.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter).

PATRON—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
PRESIDENT—THE LORD ABERDARE, G.C.B.

THURSDAY, 20th NOVEMBER, at 8.30 p.m.

The following paper will be read:—"ARYAN RELATIONS to EGYPTIAN and CHALDEAN," by J. S. STUART GLENNIE, M.A., F.R.Hist.Soc.

20, HANOVER SQUARE, W.
N.B.—Attention is called to the change of address.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES. By

EMIL BEHNKE, Lecturer on Vocal Physiology and Teacher of Voice Production, and CHARLES W. PEARCE, Mus. Doc. Cantab. In separate books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone and Bass. Price 1s. 6d.; in cloth boards, 3s.

"Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility."

"Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen."

"I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious."—Dr. STAINER.

CHAPPELL & Co., 50, New Bond Street, W.

Now ready, price 5s.

THE JOURNAL of the ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.

Vol. XX, No. II, NOVEMBER, 1890.

Contains Communications from Professor Flower, C.B., F.R.S.; Rev. James Macdonald; Henry Balfour, M.A.; Hector Maclean; Isidore Spielmann, F.R.S.; F. J. Mouat, M.D.; Francis Galton, F.R.S.; G. W. Leake, Ph.D.; and S. B. J. Skutchell, F.G.S. With Anthropological Miscellany.

London: TRUNNER & Co., Ludgate Hill.

Fourth Edition, in 8vo, 21s., cloth, now ready.

ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

from the TEUTONIC CONQUEST to the PRESENT TIME. Designed as a Text-Book for Students and others. By T. F. TAYLOR-LANGMEAD, B.C.L., formerly Victorian Scholar, Oxford, and late Professor of Constitutional Law and History, University College, London. Fourth Edition, Revised, with Notes and Appendices by C. H. CARMICHAEL, M.A., Oxon.

London: STEVENS & HAYNES, 13, Bell Yard, Temple Bar.

208 pp. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

VULGAR VERSES

IN DIALECT, AND OUT OF IT.

By JONES BROWN.

London: RENNYS & TURNER, 194, Strand, W.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, pp. 179, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

OCCAM'S RAZOR:

The Application of a Principle; to Political Economy; to the Conditions of Progress; to Socialism; to Politics.

By F. W. BAIN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

"The razor of this new Occam appears to us to be edged with keen wit, and to be finished and mounted with consummate literary workmanship. Mr. Bain challenges comparison with Mr. Burke, whose Letter to a Noble Lord his essay may recall by points of resemblance less superficial than the title. Mr. Bain has effected an elevation of our ideals by this brilliant essay."—Academy.

"Mr. Bain's logical method carries him unerringly to the root of things in both of these admirable essays. Nothing we have read approaches the 'Refutation of Socialism' in neatness and completeness. It attacks the central positions of Marx and Lassalle, and demolishes them by a very pretty and thorough sapping of the foundations."—Spectator.

"Seldom has so much earnest thinking upon modern topics of speculation been compressed into so little space."—Scotman.

"These admirable essays." Saturday Review.

"Ein kleines meisterstück."—Abendblatt des Peter Lloyd.

PARKER & Co., Oxford; and 6, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

Now Ready. Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF

THE CRITICAL REVIEW

OF
THEOLOGICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE.

Edited by PROFESSOR S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

Published Quarterly. Annual Subscription Six Shillings.

This Magazine is designed to furnish a Critical Survey of current Literature in Theology and Philosophy. The Reviews of Recent Publications will be signed, and are contributed by Scholars of recognised ability. It will not be the Organ of any particular Section of the Evangelical Church, but will be conducted in the interest of all its branches, and will address itself to all, whether Clerical or Lay, who give intelligent attention to the Religious questions of the day.

Subscribers' Names received by all booksellers, or by the Publishers.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRASURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by HOLL, R.A.; OULESS, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

SPENCER BLACKETT'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "ENGAGED TO BE MARRIED."

At all Booksellers and Libraries, crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

JUST A LOVE STORY. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Daddy's Boy," "Scamp and I," &c. With numerous Full-Page Illustrations.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MICAH CLARKE."

At all Booksellers and Libraries, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SIGN of FOUR. By A. Conan DOYLE, Author of "The Firm of Girdlestone," "The Captain of the Polestar," &c.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF G. A. HENTY'S BOOKS.

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE CURSE of CARNE'S HOLD. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "All but Lost," "Gabriel Allen, M.P." &c. With numerous Illustrations by Charles Kerr.

London: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, St. Bride Street, E.C.

HIBBERT LECTURES, 1888

Just Published, 8vo., Cloth, 10s. 6d.

REV. DR. HATCH.—THE INFLUENCE of GREEK IDEAS and USAGES upon the CHRISTIAN CHURCH. By the late Rev. Dr. Hatch. Edited by the Rev. Dr.
FAIRBAIRN, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden London; and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING
for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York Street, W.C.; and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery
Lane, W.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo., 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other
Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.
And all Booksellers.

Price 2s. 6d., post free.

ON FISTULA and its Radical Cure by
Medicines. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D. London:
JAMES ERSS & CO., 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

Price 1s., post free.

INDIGESTION: its Causes and Cure.
By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.—London: JAMES ERSS & CO., 170, Piccadilly; and 48, Threadneedle Street.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free,
on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APART-MENTS THROUGHOUT

ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1863.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

THROAT
IRRITATION

AND

COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms
use EPPS'S GLYCERINE
JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.
In boxes, 7½d.; tins, 1s. 1½d., labelled
"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homeopathic Chemists."

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and
Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen,
2s.; or very best Irish Linen,
2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White
Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d.,
5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape,
2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry.
Warm, durable, and comfortable.
Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker
Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., and 7s. 9d.
WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST*NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENTINVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTBD. 1835.

THEATRES.*AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by
R. C. Carton, entitled
SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9. A farcical comedy in three acts, by Sydney Grundy, entitled
MAY AND DECEMBER.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.
Every Evening, at 8.
THE CABINET MINISTER.

Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney,
Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, F. Farren,
Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence
Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington,
Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. GEORGE PAGET.
Every Evening, at 8.15, THE BLACK ROVER.
Messrs. William Ludwig, Hogarth, LeHay, Collette, Shiel
Barry, Philips-Tomes, Erlayne; Misses Effie Chapuy, Lloyd, and Giulia Warwick.

Preceded, at 7.30, by an Operetta,
THE CRUSADER AND THE CRAVEN.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBOHM-TREE.
Every Evening, at 8 (Mondays excepted), Messrs. Hugh Conway and Comyns Carr's successful drama,
CALLED BACK.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Fred Terry, F. Kerr, Allan, C.
Hudson, Webster Lawson, Robb Harwood, Tapping, &c.;
Mesdames Blanche Horlock, E. H. Brooke, Aylward, and Julia Neilson.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE

Managers, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act
Farce, entitled
THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H.
Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E.
Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.
Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed.
Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopedia
Brit., says "PROF. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus, containing opinions of pupils who have
PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic,
Clerical, etc., professions, post free from
Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so
well."

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONSCOCOA

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

SOPHOCLES.—THE PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo.
Part III. ANTIGONE. Second Edition. [Nearly ready.] Part IV. PHILOCTETES. 12s. 6d. [Now ready.]

EURIPIDES.—ION. The Greek Text, with a Translation into English Verse, Introduction, and Notes, by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. The Ion has been selected for representation in the Cambridge Theatre in November. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PRONUNCIATION of ANCIENT GREEK. Translated from the Third German Edition of Dr. BLASS by W. J. PURTON, B.A., Pembroke College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 6s.

ATLAS of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY, to Illustrate Dr. Mill's Elementary Commercial Geography. By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., etc. With Introductory Notes by H. R. MELL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E. 4to, 3s.

"The Atlas is, so far as we know, the first work of its kind devoted entirely to a subject which is coming very much to the front. . . . The maps are very tastefully executed, and the general physical aspects of the regions dealt with are well brought out."—Times.

NEW AND RECENT VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

VERGIL.—THE COMPLETE WORKS. With Introduction and Notes by A. SIDGWICK, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 2 vols. Vol. I., Text, 3s. 6d.; Vol. II., Notes, 4s. 6d.

"Mr. Sidgwick's Vergil is, we believe, on the whole, the best school edition of the poet." Guardian.

LIVY.—BOOK V. With Map, Notes, and Introduction by L. WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI. BOOK I. Edited, with Notes and Map, by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. 3s.

XENOPHON.—CYROPAEDEIA. BOOKS VI., VII., VIII. With Introduction and Notes by the Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D.

MILTON'S COMUS and ARCADES.—Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., some time Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

AN APOLOGIE for POETRIE. By Sir Philip Sidney. Edited, with Illustrations and a Glossarial Index, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. The Text is a Revision of that of the First Edition of 1596. [In the press.]

PLATONIS APOLOGIA SOCRATIS. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By J. ADAM, M.A. 3s. 6d.
"A worthy representative of English scholarship."—Classical Review.

PLATONIS CRITO. By the same Editor. 2s. 6d.
"The commentary is excellent, both in scholarship and in exposition of the subject-matter and of Socratic Philosophy in general; it contains much that is not merely valuable to students of the rank of undergraduates reading for honours, but also interesting to mature scholars."—Saturday Review.

LUCRETIIUS. BOOK V. With Notes and Introduction. By J. D. DUFF, M.A. 2s.
"Every thing which can be wanted will be found here; the notes are short and always to the point, and the introduction excellent. This book must supersede any others in the field as an introduction to the study of a poet who might with advantage be more studied than he is at schools."—Journal of Education.

PITT PRESS MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. (With Answers to the Examples.) Edited by W. W. ROUSE BALL, M.A., Fellow and Mathematical Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge. 4s. 6s.

EUCLID.—ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY.—Books III. and IV. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and formerly Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

PITT PRESS SERIES, ABRIDGED.

MOLIÈRE.—LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES. With Introduction and Notes, by E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 1s.

RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS. With Introduction and Notes, by E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 1s.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. With Maps, Introduction, and Notes, by Karl Hermann Breul, M.A., University Lecturer in German. 1s. 6d.

THE SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS.

With Maps, price 1s. each volume.

"This new series of smaller handbooks is intended to meet the requirements of junior and elementary schools, just as the 'Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges' and the 'Cambridge Greek Testament' supply the needs of senior classes and older students. It is hardly necessary for us to say that the notes give evidence of the accurate scholarship conspicuous in the larger volumes; and the condensation and simplification of the commentaries seem, in most instances, to have been skilfully accomplished."—Educational Times.

FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D.

SECOND BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D.

FIRST and SECOND BOOKS of KINGS. By the Rev. Professor LUMBY, D.D. [Preparing.]

GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A.

GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MARK. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D.

GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. LUKE. By Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.

GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. JOHN. By the Rev. A. PLUMMER, D.D. [Preparing.]

THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. By Rev. Prof. Lumby, D.D.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

THE EPISTLE to the GALATIANS. By the Rev. E. H. Perowne, D.D. 1s. 6d.

THE BOOK of REVELATION. By the late Rev. W. Simcox, M.A. 3s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

Printed by ALFAXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 968.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.—BY ALPHONSE DAUDET and HENRY JAMES.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin.

By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by HENRY JAMES.

Numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Myrbach, Rossi, and Montégut. Square 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections. By

Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. Author of "The Autocrat at the Breakfast Table," "One Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Next week.]

A SPLENDID ART GIFT-BOOK.

THE SONG of HIAWATHA. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Numerous Illustrations from

Designs by FREDERIC REMINGTON. Demy 8vo, 21s.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

IN DARKEST AFRICA. By Henry M. Stanley, D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Being the Official Publication

recording the Quest, Rescue, and Retreat of Emin, Governor of Equatoria. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 150 Illustrations and 8 Maps, in handsome cloth binding, TWO GUINEAS. TIMES.—"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers, and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever was told by man."

SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME TO MR. STANLEY'S "IN DARKEST AFRICA."

EMIN PASHA and the REBELLION at the EQUATOR: a Story of Nine Months' Experiences in the last of the Soudan Provinces. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Stanley's officers. Written with the Revision and co-operation of HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c., &c. A Preface also by Mr. STANLEY. With Map and numerous Illustrations, two of which are specially drawn by Mrs. H. M. Stanley. SECOND EDITION. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, ONE GUINEA.

"Mr. Jephson's story is told with excellent temper and taste, with a self forgetfulness and genuine modesty which do infinite credit to the narrator. And it is full of the most vivid interest from first to last."—Times. "A narrative of absorbing interest."—Leeds Mercury.

THIRD EDITION, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G. By James Anthony Froude, D.C.L. Being the First

Volume of "THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS SERIES," Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "There is something in Mr. Froude's account even of these years which will be new to Lord Beaconsfield's admirers as well as to his critics, and will contribute to the final estimate of his place in the annals of our generation."—Times. "We believe that Mr. Froude's estimate of Lord Beaconsfield, on the whole, will be the one accepted by posterity..... It is the man's character which interests us; and this, we think, Mr. Froude has exhibited in its true light, and in colours that will not fade."—Standard.

NEW WORK BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

NELSON'S WORDS and DEEDS: a Selection from his Despatches and Correspondence. Edited by W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" and numerous other Sea Stories. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHERUBINI. By Fredk. J. Crowest. Being the New Volume in the "Great Musicians Series."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

NOW READY, AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE SNAKE'S PASS. By Bram Stoker. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

KILGROOM: a Story of Ireland. By J. A. Steuart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Mr. Gladstone says of this book: "I find it truthful, national, and highly interesting. The praises deservedly given to Miss Lawless for her 'Hurriah' are due to you, but in a higher degree for a fuller and better adjusted picture."

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D. Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone,"

&c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasing..... Few recent novels have maintained so high a standard of excellence throughout."—Athenaeum.

THE PURCHASE of the NORTH POLE: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon." By Jules Verne.

Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

STORIES of STRANGE ADVENTURES. By Capt. Mayne Reid, and others. Illus. Cr. 8vo, cl., 5s.

NEW YORK to BREST in SEVEN HOURS. By Andre Laurie, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

NOW READY, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE: CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Complete in itself. Full of Beautiful Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

AS YOU LIKE IT. By ANDREW LANG. With 10 Illustrations, drawn by E. A. ABBEY.
A CHRISTMAS PRESENT: a Story. By PAUL HEYSE. Illustrations drawn by C. S. REINHART.
THE WINTER of OUR CONTENT. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Illustrations drawn by W. H. GIBSON, H. BOLTON JONES, and J. D. WOODWARD.
FLUTE and VIOLIN: a Story. By JAMES LANE ALLEN. With 21 Illustrations, drawn by HOWARD FYLK.
A PRE-RAPHAELITE MANSION. By THEODORE CHILD. With 10 Illustrations, from Paintings by G. F. WATTS, DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, BURNE-JONES, and Drawings by H. D. NICHOLS.
JACK'S LITTLE WOMAN: a Story. By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.
PLASKI'S TUNAMENT. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE.
WOMEN and HOME LIFE in JAPAN. By PIERRE LOTI. With 8 Illustrations, from Paintings by H. HUMPHREY MOORE.
GIBBLE COLT'S DUCKS: a Story. By RICHARD MALCOLM JOHNSTON.
A SPEAKING GHOST: a Story. By ANNIE TRUMBULL SLOSSON.
&c. &c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

DOLLINGER'S STUDIES IN EUROPEAN HISTORY, by ARTHUR GALTON	467
MACKAIL'S EPIGRAMS FROM THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY, by Prof. LEWIS CAMPBELL	469
BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S SERMONS, by CANON ISAAC TAYLOR	470
CAPT. TROTTER'S LIFE OF WARREN HASTINGS, by H. G. KEENE	471
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY	472
GIFT BOOKS	473
NOTES AND NEWS	474
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	475
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	475
OBITUARY: Sir John Davis, by J. S. C.; Justice O'Hagan, by T. W. R.	475
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Elf," by Miss E. D'Esterre-Keeling	476
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	476
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	476
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Order of Letters in the Runic "Futhork," by Prof. Skeat; "Cross" and "Crosier," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew; "The Memorials of St. Edmundsbury," by T. Arnold; Bacon's Essays, by Lionel Johnson; Proposed Emendations in Harl. MS. 2252, by Dr. H. Oskar Sommer	477
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	479
BRUGMANN'S COMPARATIVE INDO-EUROPEAN GRAMMAR, by A. H. SAYCE	479
THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY	479
OBITUARY: A. Y. FRASER, by J. S. M.	480
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Some Words in the Asoka Inscriptions, by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris	480
SCIENCE NOTES	481
PHILOLOGY NOTES	481
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	481
MACKLIN'S MONUMENTAL BRASSES, by W. M. CONWAY	482
THE RECENT FIRE AT SALONICA	482
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	483
THE AVENUE COMEDY, by F. WEDMORE	483
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	484

ADVERTISER, aged 29, with several years' experience, and thorough knowledge of all branches of the work, desires APPOINTMENT as PRINCIPAL or ASSISTANT in a LIBRARY. Good references.—Address, Box 240, Willing's Advertising Office, 125, Strand, W.C.

WANTED.—Post of PRIVATE SECRETARY, Tutor, or Librarian, by a Gentleman, author of several learned works, well acquainted with French, German, Latin. Highest possible testimonials.—Address W. W., Post-office, St. Helena, Isle of Wight.

LONDON LETTER.—Advertiser would supply PROVINCIAL PRESS at moderate rate. Highest Literary references.—Address 1st, care of Sinder, Stationer, 3, Ball-street, Kensington VALUABLE MANUSCRIPT FOR SALE. Special opportunity.—TO BE SOLD, large Manuscript (Autograph) of the great philosopher, A. Schopenhauer's chief work, "WELT ALS WILLE," Second Part.—Address H. H. Rookery Nantwich.

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

TO ARTISTS.—Excellent STUDIO, with good top and side lights, in W.C. district, rent moderate; also larger Studio with North light, electric light.—Apply to Mr. THOMAS CLARKE, 63, Chancery-lane, W.C.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Clues found; Pedigree traced; Registers searched; Papers and Wills collected, condensed, copied, translated in any language from manuscript or type in British Museum, Record Office, Local Registries, &c.—PEACOCK & PEACOCK, 1, Doughty Street, W.C.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—B. BRADLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—On and after THIS DAY (NOVEMBER 22), THE SCOTS OBSERVER will appear under the style and title of THE NATIONAL OBSERVER. It will continue as heretofore to be published simultaneously in Edinburgh and London every Saturday. Offices: 115, Fleet-street, London, and 9, Thistle-street, Edinburgh.

THE PROPRIETORS OF THE MAGAZINE OF Art very much regret that through an error they gave currency, in the November number of that periodical, to an announcement of the death of Mr. ALFRED LYS BARNBY, by his own hand. That gentleman, they are happy to learn, is still living. It was through the confusion of his name with that of the late Mr. HARRY LYSER BARNBY, to whom the obituary notice was intended to apply, that the erroneous announcement of his death was made. The Editor desires to add the expression of his regret to Mr. BARNBY for the blunder which has been made, and for any annoyance it has caused him.

TO COMPILERS OF GUIDE BOOKS, LITERARY MEN, ENGINEERS, and ROAD SURVEYORS.

THE CYCLISTS' TOURING CLUB ROAD BOOK. WANTED, an ASSISTANT to act under the Editor in the preparation of the Northern portions of the C.T.C. Road Book. Preference will be given to a practical cyclist having a knowledge of both the North of England and Scottish roads, or to one who has previously been engaged upon the compilation of Route and Guide Books. Applicant must be prepared to devote his whole time to the work. State age, salary required, and qualifications possessed to the Secretary, C.T.C., 49, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

DIED, at Leog House, Lerwick, Shetland Isles, on 14th inst., ARTHUR LAURESON, aged 58 years.

For Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, &c., see pages 464 and 486.

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NEW NOVEL BY H. RIDER HAGGARD AND ANDREW LANG.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD, and ANDREW LANG.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Superior both as a tour de force and as a piece of literary workmanship to 'She' and 'King Solomon's Mines.'"

"It is by no means improbable that this book will be regarded by many as Mr. Haggard's most attractive work. The new romance is rich in passages of sumptuous or sombre beauty which go far to justify such preference."—Manchester Examiner.

A COMPANION TO "THE BLUE FAIRY BOOK"

THE RED FAIRY BOOK.

Edited by ANDREW LANG.

With 4 Plates and 96 Illustrations in the Text, by H. J. Ford, and Lancelot Speed. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A delightful collection of fairy lore.....worthy of a place on the shelf by the side of Hans Andersen and Grimm."

"Mr. Lang follows his 'Blue Fairy Book' with a 'Red Fairy Book,' which is even more welcome. In the former he told in pleasant style all the best-known fairy tales. In the 'Red Book' we have less-known stories equally prettily illustrated, and equally attractive to young and old."—Queen.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "VICE VERSA"

VOCES POPULI.

Reprinted from "Punch."

By F. ANSTEY,

Author of "Vice Versa," "The Pariah," &amp;c.

With 20 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 4to, 5s.

"It is not too much to say that since 'Vice Versa' nothing so laughable has been given to a public much unused to laughter as 'Voces Populi.' Moreover, as in the case of 'Alice in Wonderland,' the author has found an illustrator in marvellous accord with his peculiar humour. The effect of both letterpress and illustrations on ordinary readers is, I regret to say, to make them roar—a very vulgar thing to do!"—Mr. JAMES PAYN, in The Illustrated London News.

NEW BOOK BY MISS A. M. CLERKE.

THE SYSTEM of the STARS. By AGNES M. CLERKE, Author of "A History of Astronomy during the Nineteenth Century." With 6 Plates and 50 Woodcuts in the Text. 1 vol., 8vo, 21s.

THESAURUS of ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES. Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. By PETER MARK ROGET, M.D., F.R.S. Recompiled throughout, Enlarged and Improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by JOHN LEWIS ROGET. New Edition (1890). Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SELECT EPIGRAMS from the GREEK ANTHOLOGY. Edited, with a Revised Text, Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, 8vo, 16s.

"Excellent scholarship in notes and apparatus. . . . Mr. Mackail supplies a most valuable introduction, telling the long history of the book."—Mr. A. LANG in the Speaker.

TOHU-VA-VOHU ("Without Form and Void"): being a Collection of Fragmentary Thoughts and Criticism. By the late ALFRED EDERSEHEIM, D.D. Edited with a Short Memoir by ELLA EDERSEHEIM. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GOLDEN CENSER: being a Selection from the Prayers of the Saints A.D. 69-1890. With Notes and Indices by Mrs. EDWARD LIDDELL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHAMBER COMEDIES: a Collection of Plays and Monologues for the Drawing Room. By Mrs. HUGH BELL, Author of "Petit Théâtre des Enfants" and "Théâtre de la Jeunesse." Crown 8vo, 6s.

POEMS. By V. (Mrs. ARCHER CLIVE), Author of "Paul Ferroll." Including the IX. Poems. New Edition. Fcp. 8vo, 6s.

"The poems by V. form a small book which has the life and soul of a great book."—Extract from the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE'S Article on "British Poetry of the Nineteenth Century" in the Speaker, January 11, 1890.

NEW NOVELS.

VIRGINIE. A Tale of One Hundred Years Ago. By VAL PRINSEP, A.R.A. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

SIDNEY. A Novel. By Mrs. DELAND, Author of "John Ward, Preacher." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We say at once that readers will not be disappointed in 'Sidney.' In some respects it is better even than 'John Ward.' It is certainly one of the most thoughtful and impressive stories that we have read this year. . . . A remarkable book which should add to its author's reputation."—Speaker.

A LIVING EPITAPH. By G. COLMORE, Author of "A Conspiracy of Silence," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A strongly dramatic and interesting story."—Court Circular.
"A strange story. . . . Miranda Dane is a remarkable study."—Scotsman.

On November 24, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—DECEMBER.

CONTENTS:

VIRGINIE: a Tale of One Hundred Years Ago. By VAL PRINSEP, A.R.A. Chaps. LXVII.-LXXII.
THE DECAY OF CANINE FIDELITY. By JAMES SULLY.
LOVE IN A MIST.
SPIDERS. By ARTHUR SOMERSET.
COUNTRY PARSONS. By the Rev. M. G. WATKINS, M.A.
THE MISCHIEF OF MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. IV.-VI.
AT THE SIGN OF THE SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

MRS. SPENDER'S NEW NOVEL.
LADY HAZLETON'S CONFESSION.
By the Author of "Her Brother's Keeper," &c. In 3 vols.
[Ready.]

LUCAS MALET'S NEW NOVEL.
THE WAGES OF SIN. By the Author of "Col. Enderby's Wife," &c. In 3 vols.

DR. PFLEIDERER'S VERY IMPORTANT WORK.
DEVELOPMENT of THEOLOGY in GERMANY and GREAT BRITAIN since 1825. Thick large 8vo, 10s. 6d. After devoting 300 pages to German Theology, the work enters upon a survey of the progress of Theology in Great Britain since 1825, treating of the Schools of Philosophy in their relation to Theology (Coleridge, Carlyle, F. W. Newman, Jas. Mill, Sir W. Hamilton, Mansel, F. D. Maurice, Mat. Arnold, Seeley, Herb. Spencer, J. Caird, T. H. Green, Seth, Flint, Martineau) and Parties and Movement in Theology (J. H. Newman, Froude, Keble, Pusey, Whateley, Arnold, Hampden, Milman, Thirlwall, Hare, F. D. Maurice, Erskine, J. M. Campbell, Kingsley, Jowett, Stanley, R. W. Mackay, Seeley, Edersheim, Davidson, Westcott, Robertson Smith, Hatch).

* * The above work forms the 4th volume of SONNENSCHN'S LIBRARY of PHILOSOPHY, Edited by J. H. MUIRHEAD, M.A.

MONUMENTAL BRASSES. By the Rev. H. W. MACKLIN. With 18 Full-Page Plates (18 Full-Length Figures), and 18 other Illustrations, 2s. 6d. "The manual is the best that has appeared—or is likely for long to appear—on the subject."—Scotsman.

HOUSEHOLD DICTIONARY of MEDICINE. By F. R. WALTERS, M.D. Large 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "Well deserving of success."—Saturday Review. "Is as nearly perfect as possible."—Glasgow Herald.

SECOND ANNUAL ISSUE.
PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEAR-BOOK. A Complete Record of all matters of interest for Parents, Schoolmasters, and Boys. Limp cloth, 2s. 6d. Part II. (ATHLETICS), separately, 1s.

CIVILISATION of the RENAISSANCE in ITALY. By J. BURCKHARDT. Translated by S. G. C. MIDDLEMORE. New Edition. Thick 8vo, 15s. "It already has a European reputation. The translation is admirable, and has, moreover, Dr. Geiger's additions to both text and notes."—Bookeller.

CHEAP EDITION of THOROLD ROGERS'
SIX CENTURIES of WORK and WAGES. Third Edition (Revised). Thick 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANTRY: their Agrarian Condition, Social Life, and Religion. By STEPIAK. Third Edition. Thick 8vo, 15s. "Of extreme interest."—Post.

IMPORTANT NEW POEM BY MR. BARLOW.
FROM DAWN to SUNSET. Book I. The SONG of YOUTH. Book II. The SONG of MANHOOD. Book III. The SONG of RIPER MANHOOD. By GEORGE BARLOW. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ALSO A SECOND (AND CHEAPER) EDITION OF MR. BARLOW'S
THE PAGEANT of LIFE. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

SCHOPENHAUER SERIES.
Edited by T. BAILEY SAUNDERS, M.A. Oxon. Each 2s. 6d.
1. The Wisdom of Life. [Second Edition.]
2. Counsels and Maxims. [Second Edition.]
3. Religion: a Dialogue, &c. [Second Edition.]
4. The Art of Literature. [In preparation.]
5. Studies in Pessimism. [In a few days.]
"Mr. Saunders has done English readers a genuine service."—Athenaeum. "Let your view of Schopenhauer be what it may, you cannot help enjoying and admiring the wealth of observation, reflection, and wisdom."—Truth.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.
Scarlet cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

LAURENCE GRONLUND'S NEW BOOK.
OUR DESTINY: the Influence of Socialism on Morals and Religion; an Essay in Ethics. By the Author of "The Co-operative Commonwealth." English Copyright Edition, bearing Royalty to the Author.

1. Work and Wages ... THOROLD ROGERS.
2. Civilisation: Cause and Cure ... E. CARPENTER.
3. Quintessence of Socialism ... Dr. SCHAFER.
4. Darwinism and Politics D. G. RITCHIE, M.A. (Oxon).
5. Religion and Socialism ... E. BELFORT BAX.
6. Ethics of Socialism ... E. BELFORT BAX.
7. Drink Question ... Dr. KATE MITCHELL.
8. Promotion of Happiness ... Prof. MACMILLAN.
9. England's Ideal, &c. ... E. CARPENTER.
10. Socialism in England ... SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.
11. Bismarck and State Socialism ... W. H. DAWSON.
12. Godwin's Political Justice ... Edit. H. S. SALT.
13. The French Revolution ... E. BELFORT BAX.
14. Co-operative Commonwealth ... L. GRONLUND.
15. Essays and Addresses. B. BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon).
16. Charity Organisation. C. S. LOCH, Sec. Char. Org. Soc.
17. Thoreau's Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers.
18. Self-Help 100 Years Ago ... G. J. HOLYOAKE.
19. State Reformatory of Elmira ... A. WINTER.
20. Common Sense about Women ... T. W. HIGGINSON.

Messrs. SWAN SONNENSCHN'S NEW ANNUAL CATALOGUE (Nov., 1890), comprising over 600 WORKS, will be sent post free on application.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster Sq., London.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

A Homburg Beauty. 3 vols.
By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.

Jack's Secret. 3 vols.
By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

Basil and Annette. 3 vols.
By B. L. FARJEON.

Brave Heart and True. 3 vols.
By FLORENCE MARRYAT.

Blind Fate. 3 vols.
By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

Margaret Byng. 2 vols.
By F. C. PHILIPS and PERCY FENDALL.

Criss Cross Lovers. 3 vols.
By the Hon. Mrs. H. W. CHETWYND.
[Immediately.]

The Freytag Reminiscences.
Reminiscences of My Life.
By GUSTAV FREYTAG.
Translated from the German by KATHARINE CHETWYND.
2 vols., 18s.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL
(SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION).

The FOURTH EDITION OF
HE WENT FOR A SOLDIER.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER, Author of "Bootles' Baby," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
"John Strange Winter has given further proof of her skill in character-sketching, and in producing a most delightful story.... True genius is displayed by the authoress in springing on the reader a surprise near the end of the story."—Manchester Examiner.
"The writer describes barrack life and the life led by children at the seaside with unfailing vividness and grace."—Manchester Guardian.
"It possesses all the pleasing features which have gained for this author so marked popularity as a novelist. The style is fresh and vigorous, and the humorous and the pathetic are both well delineated in the story, which has as its theme the outs and ins of a love affair. Not the least entertaining parts are the sketches of army life in its various phases."—Dundee Courier.
"There is a story to tell, and the author tells it with characteristic vivacity.... The love making is pretty, and the termination is entirely satisfactory."—London Mirror.

AT ALL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS, &amp;c.

"BELGRAVIA" ANNUAL.
(Illustrated), price 1s., containing contributions by JOHN STRANGE WINTER, "RITA," FLORENCE MARRYAT, LADY DUFFUS HARDY, E. S. DREWRY, J. SALT LLOYD, the AUTHOR of "Miss Molly," and others.

"LONDON SOCIETY" Christmas
Number (Illustrated), price 1s., containing contributions by Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON, Mrs. HUNGERFORD (Author of "Molly Bawn"), B. M. CROKER, W. W. FENN, Miss ALEXANDER, JEAN MIDDLEMASS, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, and others.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In crown octavo, cloth, Price One Shilling.

London of the Past: a Picture of the Olden City.

The fundamental object of the book is to depict the past of the City and its surroundings, by grouping together piquant details of its former condition; and by calling attention to the striking differences between then and now; it is not encumbered with comment, nor loaded with petty details; the broad lines only of the picture are drawn, leaving the reader, if he feels sufficiently interested in the subject, to fill them in from other and more pretentious books.

"To those who wish to be instructed in the leading facts of the City's history this little volume will be useful."—Evening News.

In demy 8vo, tastefully printed and bound. Price 11s.

Market Harborough Parish Records.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by the Rev. J. E. STOCKS, Vicar of St. Saviour's, Leicester, formerly (1871-1884) Vicar of Market Harborough, and another of the Trustees of the Market Harborough Town Estate.

"There is much in the work which should be of service to those working on the remains of the past, and who are doing something to make the English people understand better the life and manners of their forefathers. To many it will be quite a treasury of reference."—Public Opinion.

In demy 8vo, tastefully bound in cloth. Price 7s. 6d.

A Monograph on the Gainsborough Parish Registers.

By the Rev. J. GURNHILL, B.A., Vicar of East Stockwith. In the writing of this volume, which is really a history of the Parish, the author has had recourse to the best authorities, and has endeavoured to make the work as interesting and accurate as possible.

In demy 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, 6s. each part.

Index to the First Volume of the Parish Registers of Gainford,

IN the COUNTY of DURHAM. Part I., BAPTISMS; Part II., MARRIAGES; Part III., BURIALS: 1560-1784. By Rev. JOSEPH EDLESTON, LL.D.

"Of great value to students of old parish life in England, and also to those who wish to refer for genealogical purposes to the register."—Morning Post.

NEW VOLUME OF MANY FOLK TALES.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, price 3s. 6d.

Shadow Land in Ellan Vannin:

FOLK STORIES FROM THE ISLE OF MAN.

By I. H. LENEY (Mrs. I. W. Russell).

"Decidedly interesting."—Public Opinion.
"A most acceptable little volume; from the careful and appreciative way in which the writer has woven her materials together, we shall look forward to more."—Spectator.

CHEAP EDITION. Tastefully printed and bound, price One Shilling; also in olive cloth, 2s. 6d., post free.

Shakespeare's Skull and Falstaff's Nose.

A Fancy in Three Acts. By BELGRAVE TITMARSH.

"From first to last ingenious and witty."—Morning Post.

"The general vein of satire is well worked."—Oxford Chronicle.

"Amusing and clever."—Echo.

"The whole thing is very well done; the details are carried out in true Shakespearian style."—Manchester Examiner.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

SCHOOLS COLLEGES &c. THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE EXTERNAL EXAMINERS OF THE UNIVERSITY.

- (T. ARNOLD, M.A., Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland, Examiner in English Language and Literature.
 T. G. BONNEY, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Geology in University College, London, Examiner in Geology and Palaeontology.
 L. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French, Cambridge Examiner in French Language and Literature.
 J. MITCHELL BRUCE, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Materia Medica and Therapeutics in Charing Cross Hospital, London, Examiner in Materia Medica and Pharmacy.
 Sir DYCE BUCKWORTH, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, Examiner in Medicine.
 J. A. EWING, B.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Engineering in University College, Dundee, Examiner in Engineering.
 WILLIAM GARNETT, M.A., D.C.L., Principal of Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Examiner in Physics.
 J. A. PEARCE GOULD, M.S., F.R.C.S., Surgical Tutor in Middlesex Hospital, Examiner in Surgery.
 A. V. HARCOURT, M.A., F.R.S., Reader in Chemistry in the University of Oxford, Examiner in Chemistry.
 G. ERNEST HERMAN, M.B., F.R.C.P., Lecturer in Midwifery in London Hospital, Examiner in Obstetrics.
 VICTOR HORSLEY, M.B., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., Professor of Pathology in University College, London, Examiner in Pathology.
 FRANZ LANGE, Ph.D., Professor of German in the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, Examiner in German Language and Literature.
 G. R. M. MURRAY, F.L.S., Senior Assistant, Department of Natural History, British Museum, Examiner in Botany.
 A. G. PEEKETT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Magdalene College, Cambridge, Examiner in Classics.
 REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer on Modern History in Jesus College, Oxford, Examiner in History.
 G. V. POORE, M.D., F.R.C.P., Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in University College, London, Examiner in Forensic Medicine and Hygiene.
 EDMUND ROBERTSON, M.A., M.P. (late), Professor of Roman Law in University College, London, Examiner in Law.
 W. R. MORLEY, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in University College, Cardiff, Examiner in Philosophy and Political Economy.
 H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and Mathematical Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, Examiner in Mathematics.
 G. D. THANE, M.R.C.S., Professor of Anatomy in University College, London, Examiner in Anatomy.
 PARRY W. THOMPSON, B.A., Professor of Zoology in University College, Dundee, Examiner in Zoology.
 AUGUSTUS D. WALLER, M.D., Lecturer on Physiology in St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, London, Examiner in Physiology.
- The Examiners against whose names a dagger (†) is placed retire at the end of November. Applications are invited for the posts they now fill, which should be sent in on or before November 29th, and may be accompanied by testimonials (copies only) or references at the candidate's discretion. The appointments will be for three years, at the expiration of which Examiners are not eligible for re-election. For further particulars apply to A. T. BENTLEY, M.A., Registrar, Manchester, October, 1890.

GRAY'S INN.—EXAMINATION for the

"BACON" and "HOLT" SCHOLARSHIPS.—NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that an EXAMINATION for these Scholarships will be held in GRAY'S INN HALL, on the 26th and the 27th day of MAY NEXT, commencing at 10 o'clock, a.m. precisely. These Scholarships are of the yearly value of £45 and £40 respectively, tenable for two years, and are open to every Student for the Bar, who, on the 26th day of May next, shall have been a Member of Gray's Inn for not more than Five Terms, and who shall have kept every Term since his admission, inclusive of that in, or before, which he shall have been admitted. In the Examination for the Scholarships there will be set two papers of Questions, viz:—
 1st. One on the CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND from the present time down to the death of Elizabeth.
 2nd. One on the GENERAL HISTORY of ENGLAND from the Accession of Henry VII. to the death of Elizabeth.
 And there will also be given to the Candidates two or more subjects connected with the Constitutional History of England, or with its General History during the above-mentioned period, any one of which subjects a Candidate may select; and on the one which he does select, he will be required to write a short Essay. The time to be allowed for each of these three Papers will be three hours.
 Dated this 6th day of November, 1890.
 Signed JAMES SHEIL, Treasurer.
 ALFRED H. LUSH, Examiner.

LONDON

AND

DUBLIN.

Est. 1852.

I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS.
 II. INDIAN C.S., &c. III. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT, 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W., under T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D., Barr-at-Law. DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.

VOICE TRAINING EXERCISES.

By EMIL BEHNKE, Lecturer on Vocal Physiology and Teacher of Voice Production, and CHARLES W. PEARCE, Mus. Doc. Cantab. In separate books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone and Bass. Price 1s. 6d.; in cloth boards, 3s.
 "Admirable, and doubtless will prove of great utility."
 "Far more precise in plan than anything I have seen."
 "I like the exercises very much; they are scientific, systematic, and ingenious."—Dr. STAINER.
 CHAPPELL & Co., 50, New Bond Street, W.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
 G. BELL & Sons, York Street, W.C.; and the Author, 33, Chancery Lane, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

of all descriptions. MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & F. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTÄEN, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

EDWARD STANFORD'S PUBLICATIONS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES

And Other Lectures.

A SEQUEL TO "THE FAIRYLAND OF SCIENCE."

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. Fisher).

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with nearly 100 Illustrations, price 6s.; bound in calf extra, 11s.

CHAP.

CONTENTS.

- I. The Magician's Chamber by Moonlight.
- II. Magic Glasses and How to Use Them.
- III. Fairy Rings and How They are Made.
- IV. The Life-History of Lichens and Mosses.
- V. The History of a Lava Stream.
- VI. An Hour with the Sun.
- VII. An Evening with the Stars.
- VIII. Little Beings from a Miniature Ocean.
- IX. The Dartmoor Ponies.
- X. The Magician's Dream of Ancient Days.

Works by the same Author, uniform in size.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE. Twenty-third Thousand. 6s. Calf, 11s.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN. Thirteenth Thousand. 6s. Calf, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE. 2 vols., cloth gilt. 4s. 6d. each. (Sold separately.)

SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE. Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d. Calf, 14s.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE LIBRARY. Consisting of the above four works uniformly bound, Roxburghe style, and inserted in a neat cloth box. Price 31s. 6d.

"The secret of Miss Buckley's success as a popular expounder of the abstruse results of the highest scientific research is her own mastery of the processes and results. She is content with no second-hand knowledge; she has in all cases gone to the fountain-head."—Times.

JUST READY.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL BASIS OF EVOLUTION.

By JAMES CROLL, LL.D., F.R.S.

Large Post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, UNIFORM IN SIZE.

CLIMATE and TIME in their

GEOLOGICAL RELATIONS: a Theory of Secular Changes of the Earth's Climate. Large post 8vo, with Illustrations, cloth, 10s. 6d.

DISCUSSIONS on CLIMATE and COSMOLOGY. A Supplementary Volume to "Climate and Time." Large post 8vo, with an Illustrative Chart, cloth, 6s.

STELLAR EVOLUTION and its

RELATIONS to GEOLOGICAL TIME. Large post 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"If Dr. Croll has not finally settled the theory of creation, he has at least made a most substantial contribution towards the discussion of the great problem in physics which yet remains for philosophers of the foremost rank to settle."
Philosophical Magazine.

JUST READY.

THE CANARY ISLANDS As a WINTER RESORT.

By JOHN WHITFORD, F.R.G.S.

With 7 Maps, and 25 Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

MADEIRA: its Scenery, and

How to See It. With Letters of a Year's Residence, and Lists of the Trees, Flowers, Ferns, and Seaweeds. By ELLEN M. TAYLOR. Second Edition, Revised. With Frontispiece, Map of the Island, and Plan of Funchal. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Miss Taylor's volume is an admirable vade-mecum for persons travelling to or in Madeira. . . . An excellent map and a good plan of Funchal greatly add to its practical value."
Saturday Review.

THE BATHS and WELLS of EUROPE: with a Sketch of Hydrotherapy, and Hints on Climate, Sea-Bathing, and Popular Cures. By JOHN MACPHERSON, M.D. Third Edition, Revised, with a Map, post 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A complete guide to pleasant health-restoring places, the peculiar characteristics of each being made thoroughly intelligible to the reader."—Morning Post.

EDWARD STANFORD, 26 &amp; 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, LONDON, S.W.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

IBSEN'S FAMOUS PROSE DRAMAS.

(IN FIVE VOLUMES.)

EDITED BY WILLIAM ARCHER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

Uniform and authoritative edition in English, under arrangement with Henrik Ibsen.

VOL. I.

With Portrait of the Author, and Biographical Introduction. This volume contains—"A DOLL'S HOUSE," "THE LEAGUE of YOUTH" (never before translated), and "THE PILLARS of SOCIETY."

VOL. II.

"GHOSTS," "AN ENEMY of the PEOPLE," and "THE WILD DUCK." With an Introductory Note.

VOL. III.

"LADY INGER of ÖSTRÄT," "THE VIKINGS at HELGELAND," "THE PRETENDERS." With an Introductory Note and Portrait of Ibsen.

Ready 25th inst. VOL. IV.

"EMPEROR and GALILEAN." Translated by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Ready Shortly. VOL. V.

(A Special Interest is attached to this Volume, as it will contain Ibsen's latest Drama.)

"BOSMERSHOLM"; "THE LADY from the SEA"; "A NEW DRAMA," translated by WILLIAM ARCHER.

The sequence of the plays in each volume will be chronological; and the set of volumes comprising the dramas will thus present them, when complete, in chronological order.

JUST ISSUED, SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION OF STEPNIAK'S NOVEL, WITH NEW PREFACE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE CAREER OF A NIHILIST:

A NOVEL.

By STEPNIAK, Author of "Underground Russia," &c., &c. "Deep interest."—Athenaeum. "Its interest is paramount."—Scottish Leader.

RE-ISSUE OF THE ## GREAT WRITERS.

In New Double Volumes.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, price 2s. 6d. per Double Volume.

The following Double Volumes are Now Ready—

- VOL. I. { Life of Carlyle. By Dr. Richard Garnett.
Life of Emerson. By Dr. Richard Garnett.
- VOL. II. { Life of Charlotte Brontë. By Ang. Birrell.
Life of George Eliot. By Oscar Browning.
- VOL. III. { Life of Goethe. By James Sime.
Life of Schiller. By Henry W. Nevinson.
- Ready on 15th December—
- VOL. IV. { Life of Milton. By Dr. Richard Garnett.
Life of Bunyan. By Canon Venables.
- Ready on 25th January, 1891—
- VOL. V. { Life of Scott. By Prof. Yonge.
Life of Burns. By Prof. John Stuart Blackie.

To be followed Monthly by other Double Volumes.

SPECIAL FOR THE CHRISTMAS SEASON.

THREE VOLUME SETS.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES—

- SET No. 1. { The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table.
The Poet at the Breakfast-Table.
The Professor at the Breakfast-Table.

BY WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR—

- SET No. 2. { Imaginary Conversations.
The Pentameron.
Pericles and Aspasia.

THREE GREAT ENGLISH ESSAYISTS—

- SET No. 3. { Essays of Elia (CHARLES LAMB).
Essays of Leigh Hunt.
Essays of William Hazlitt.

THREE GREAT CLASSICAL MORALISTS—

- SET No. 4. { The Morals of Seneca.
The Teachings of Epictetus.
The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius.

Three Volumes, Crown 8vo, neatly and elegantly bound in Cloth, Gilt Top, in Shell Case, price 4s. 6d.; in Pedestal Case, 5s. Also in Maroon, Gilt Edges, in Shell Case, 9s.; in Half-Polished Morocco Antique (in a variety of new reproductions of old tints), and in Full Morocco.

Small crown 8vo. Printed on Antique Laid Paper, Cloth Elegant, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

TALES FROM WONDERLAND.

BY RUDOLPH BAUMBACH.

"The translation has added a little volume of real value to the collections of folk-tales accessible to English readers."

Scottish Leader."The collection may fairly claim to add another to the few books for the young which can be read with pleasure by the no-longer young."—Scotsman.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

WALTER BESANT'S

ARMOREL OF LYONESSE.

3 vols., at all Libraries.

"A fascinating romance; a charming tale, abounding in delightful incidents, and developed with striking skill and strength."—Scotsman."Mr. Besant has seldom, if ever, written a better or more interesting story..... When we compare it with average fiction, we feel almost inclined to fall down and worship the three volumes."—Speaker.

HERBERT WARD'S

FIVE YEARS WITH THE CONGO CANNIBALS.

With 83 Illustrations by the Author, Victor Perard, and W. B. Davis.

SECOND EDITION, royal 8vo, cloth extra, 14s.

"I very much prefer 'Five Years with the Congo Cannibals' to 'In Darkest Africa.' Mr. Ward tells his story in a simple, unaffected style; he indulges in no rhapsodies; he poses as neither prophet, martyr, nor saint. He has a quick eye, he seems fertile of resource, and pen and pencil are equally ready to answer to his call."—Lady's Pictorial.

HOODWINKED. By T. W. Speight, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke." (Being the "GENTLEMAN'S ANNUAL" for 1890.) Demy 8vo, 1s.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S RULES of CIVILITY Traced to their

Sources and Restored by MONCURE D. CONWAY. Fcap. 8vo, Jap. vellum, 2s. 6d.

[Nov. 25.]

FOUR FRENCHWOMEN: Mademoiselle de Corday: Madame

Roland: the Princess de Lamballe: Madame de Genlis. By AUSTIN DOBSON. Fcap. 8vo, half-Roxburgh, 2s. 6d.

"It is many months since we came across a book that gave us so much pleasure as Mr. Dobson's dainty little volume. Everyone should read it; but he should not lend it to his friends, for of a certainty he will not get it back again."—Athenaeum.

THE GREAT TABOO. By Grant Allen, Author of "Strange

Stories," "The Devil's Die," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"On the whole this is a vigorous and exciting story, written by a practised hand, and by no means devoid of originality."—Speaker.

MY SHIPMATE LOUISE. By W. Clark Russell, Author of "An Ocean Tragedy," &amp;c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

"Worthy of Captain Marryat..... This is one of the best stories Mr. Clark Russell has ever written, and its interest is never for a moment allowed to flag."—Leeds Mercury.

"BAIL UP!" a Romance of Bushrangers and Blacks. By Hume

NISBET. With Frontispiece and Vignette by the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Full of stirring interest and reality."—Public Opinion.

"The reader who takes it up will not lay it down till he has finished it..... The interest is never allowed to flag."

Glasgow Herald.

BETWEEN LIFE and DEATH. By Frank Barrett, Author of

"Fettered for Life," &amp;c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

"A novel of intense interest, full of incident, and written in his own terse, crisp, and spirited style..... Mr. Barrett's picture of his young heroine is positively fascinating in its power."—Scotsman.

ARTEMUS WARD COMPLETE. A Cheaper Edition of

ARTEMUS WARD'S COMPLETE WORKS. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.

THE WORD and the WILL. By James Payn, Author of "By Proxy," "The Burnt Million," &amp;c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

"Mr. Payn has written few better stories, if any..... Full of neatly turned points of pleasant fun.... It is a delightful novel, and deserves to be widely read."—Glasgow Herald.

RUFFINO, &amp;c. By Ouida, Author of "Under Two Flags," &amp;c.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Ouida is seen at her best in her short stories..... The workmanship is excellent throughout, and the stories have the positive charms of simple grace and pathos."—Manchester Examiner.

A WARD of the GOLDEN GATE. By Bret Harte, Author of "A

Waif of the Plains," &amp;c. With 50 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"A strong and fresh story, written in Bret Harte's best manner. The story is rich in admirable and delightful men. The minor characters are full of humour. The book has a capital set of illustrations."—Scotsman.

A WEIRD GIFT. By Georges Ohnet, Author of "Dr. Rameau," &amp;c.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"So interesting in its way that few will begin it without reading it through."—Scotsman.

A FELLOW of TRINITY. By Alan St. Aubyn and Walt Wheeler.

3 vols., at all Libraries.

"Certainly the best novel of University life that has appeared for many years."—Spectator.

WHO POISONED HETTY DUNCAN? With Other Detective

Stories. By DICK DONOVAN, Author of "The Man from Manchester," &amp;c. Picture cover, 2s.; cloth 2s. 6d.

"The stories are really clever and interesting, and assuredly they will be read with pleasure by all who care for detective stories."—Scotsman.

LONDON: CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS

THE THIRD EDITION.

THE LETTERS AND DIARIES OF MAJOR BARTTELOT,

Commander of the Rear Column of Mr. Stanley's Expedition.

Being an Account of his Services for the Relief of Candahar, of General Gordon, and of Emin Pasha.

With Portrait and Maps. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

THE LIFE OF THOS. SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

BY MR. BEALE.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

Musical Reminiscences of Half a Century. By WILLERT BEALE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

BY MAJOR FISHER.

THROUGH STABLE AND SADDLE-

ROOM: A Practical Guide for all concerned in the Ownership or Management of Horses. By ARTHUR T. FISHER, late Major 21st Hussars. Demy 8vo, 14s.

BY MR. BARKER.

WAYFARING IN FRANCE; or, High-

ways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

EDITED BY DR. JANSEN.

THE LIFE OF ROBERT SCHUMANN.

as Told in his Letters. From the German by MAY HERBERT. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."

A DAUGHTER OF THE PYRAMIDS.

By LEITH DERWENT,
Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c.
3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA!"

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Ardath," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton,

Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. 3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS."

LOVER OR FRIEND.

By ROSA N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "EAST LYNNE."

THE HOUSE OF HALLIWELL.

By Mrs. HENRY WOOD, Author of "The Channings," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

TWO NEW ADDITIONS TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

MISS SHAFTO. By W. E.

NORRIS, Author of "Thirby Hall," &c.

HERIOT'S CHOICE. By Rosa

N. CAREY, Author of "Wee Wife," &c.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the Five GOLD MEDALS that were awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW BOOKS

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1891.

* * The shape of the University Calendar has now been restored in many respects to that which it bore in the years immediately preceding 1863. The class lists and honour lists are inserted entire, and the names and colleges of the winners of the University Scholarships, Exhibitions, and Prizes, in most cases from the foundation of each, are also given.

Now ready, crown 8vo, roan limp, 10s. 6d.

A FINNISH GRAMMAR. By O. N. E.

ELIOT, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford.
* * The author's object in writing this book has been to give an account of Finnish sufficient to enable anyone to understand the grammatical structure of the written language, and also to place before the student of philology an account of the chief phenomena it presents. The present work is believed to be the only grammar of Finnish in the English language, and to contain the only syntax (except brief sketches) in any language more generally accessible than Swedish.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SONG OF LEWES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. L. KINGSFORD, M.A., St. John's College, Oxford.

* * It is the most complete contemporary statement of the programme put forth by the constitutional party, and it is to this that the song owes its position as an historical document of the first importance.

NEW EDITION OF HOLLAND'S JURISPRUDENCE.

Just published, Fifth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ELEMENTS OF JURISPRUDENCE.

By T. E. HOLLAND, D.C.L., Professor of International Law and Diplomacy, Oxford.

"Has, in fact, superseded Austin's treatise."—Law Magazine and Review. "A book which may fairly be regarded as one of the few triumphs of legal literature."—Albany Law Journal.

Just published, post 8vo, cloth, 6s.; also in 4to form, for marginal notes, 10s. 6d.

ARISTOTELIS ETHICA NICOMACHEA.

Recognovit Brevique Adnotatione Critica Instruit I. BY WATER, A.M., Coll. Exon. Soc.

* * This Edition differs in some important particulars from its predecessors. The text has been subjected throughout to a revision which brings it generally into closer conformity with the Laurentian MS. known as Kb; new readings also have been introduced in several passages from the recently published "Commentary of Aspasius" and other sources. A brief Adnotatione Critica at the foot of the page records the more important variants of Kb, as well as the readings which were taken by Bekker from the inferior class of MSS. Appended to the volume is an Index verborum of 40 pages, containing upwards of 6,000 references.

Just published, 2 vols., 8vo, half-bound, 24s.

THE GILD MERCHANT: a Contribution

to British Municipal History. By CHARLES GROSS, Ph.D., Instructor in History, Harvard University.

* * The present work is based mainly on manuscript materials, and in it the author aspires to throw light on the development, not merely of the gilds, but also of the municipal constitution. Much fresh and classified material illustrating general municipal history will be found in the text and notes.—From the PREFACE.

A NEW EDITION OF BACON'S ESSAYS.

Just published, 8vo, half-bound, 12s. 6d.

THE ESSAYS OF COUNSELS, CIVIL AND MORAL, OF FRANCIS BACON, Lord VERULAM.

Edited, with Introduction and Illustrative Notes, by SAMUEL HARVEY REYNOLDS, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford.

"In the use Mr. Reynolds has made of the contemporary translations, Latin, French, and Italian, for the illustration and elucidation of the English text, he has done what no previous commentator has ever done thoroughly and systematically, and he has prefixed an introduction which is a luminous and masterly piece of criticism—the best in this kind and on this particular subject with which we happen to be acquainted."—Times.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "RULERS OF INDIA" SERIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MARQUESS OF CORNWALLIS: and the Consolidation of British Rule. By W. S. SETON-KARR, sometime Foreign Secretary to the Government of India.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED.

THE MARQUESS OF DALHOUSIE. Sir W. W. HUNTER.

AKBAR. Colonel G. B. MALLESON.

DUPLEX. Colonel G. B. MALLESON.

WARREN HASTINGS. Captain L. J. TROTTER.

* * Other Volumes in active preparation.

NEW EDITION.—Just published, Third Edition, Revised, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LOCKE'S CONDUCT OF THE UNDERSTAND-

ING. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by THOMAS FOWLER, D.D., Author of "The Elements of Deductive and Inductive Logic," "The Principles of Morals," &c.

"I cannot think any parent or instructor justified in neglecting to put this little treatise in the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed."—HALLAM'S Literature of Europe.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth bevelled, gilt lines, 4s. 6d., and in various superior bindings.

THE TREASURY OF SACRED SONG.

Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries; with Notes, Explanatory, and Biographical. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry, Oxford.

* * Also an Edition printed on the OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER, making an exceptionally light and handy volume. Extra cloth, 10s. 6d., and in superior bindings.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent on Application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS
WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

A NEW WORK ON EVOLUTION, JUST READY.

ANIMAL LIFE and INTELLIGENCE.

By C. LLOYD MORGAN, F.G.S.,

Professor of Biology in University College, Bristol, Author of "The Springs of Conduct," "Animal Biology," &c.

With 40 Illustrations, demy 8vo, 52s. pages.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES, JUST READY.

THAT FIDDLER FELLOW.

By HORACE HUTCHINSON,

Author of "My Wife's Politics," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo.

Price Half-a-Crown.

THE FORUM for NOVEMBER is now ready, and contains "THE SHIBBOLETH of PUBLIC OPINION," by W. S. LILLY; "TOLSTOI and the KREUTZER SONATA," by Dr. BARNHART; "RECENT VIEWS about GLACIERS," by Prof. WINCHELL; "DEMOCRACY and WEALTH," by President F. A. WALKER; and other interesting articles.

FOR PRIZES AND READING BOOKS.

DAVID COPPERFIELD, forming

Vol. I. of Arnold's English Literature Series. The Gilt-edged Edition for Prizes, with 4 full-page Illustrations from the Original Plates. Price 2s.

DAVID COPPERFIELD. The Eighteenpence

Edition in plainer binding than the above, but otherwise identical. An admirable reading book for the young.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, forming

Vol. II. of Arnold's English Literature Series. The Gilt-edged Edition, with 4 full-page Illustrations from the Original Plates. Price 2s.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP. The

Eighteenpence Edition in plainer binding than the above, but otherwise identical. An admirable reading book for the young.

DOMBEY and SON, forming Vol. III.

of Arnold's English Literature Series. The Gilt-edged Edition, with 4 full-page Illustrations from the Original Plates. Price 2s.

DOMBEY and SON. The Eighteenpence

Edition in plainer binding than the above, but otherwise identical. An admirable reading book for the young.

* * In preparing the above, large omissions have been made, but continuity of narrative has been preserved by the insertion of occasional summaries in italic type.

A CHARMING BOOK FOR THE YOUNG.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES OF ULYSSES.

With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Handsomely bound as a Prize or Gilt-book, with gilt-edges, 2s. 6d.; or in plainer binding, cloth, square 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"It is not easy to imagine the existence of a generation of children indifferent to the charm of 'Lamb's Adventures of Ulysses'."—Manchester Examiner.

THE LEADING FACTS OF HISTORY

SERIES. Edited by D. H. MONTGOMERY. Each Volume is provided with Maps and Tables, and the matter is arranged in paragraphs, with headings in bold type for the student's use.

THE LEADING FACTS OF ENGLISH

HISTORY. 448 pages, 6s.

THE LEADING FACTS OF FRENCH

HISTORY. Cloth, 6s.

THE LEADING FACTS OF AMERICAN

HISTORY. Illustrated, 412 pages, 5s. 6d.

"As entertaining as a good story-book, yet faithful to the author's three chief objects—accuracy of statement, simplicity of style, and impartiality of treatment."—Saturday Review, Nov. 15th, 1890.

LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES.

Edited for Schools, by Prof. SUMICHRIST. This Popular Edition of which the stock was temporarily exhausted, can now be supplied. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HUDSON'S SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE.

The 23 following Plays edited for Schools by H. N. HUDSON, LL.D., with Explanations and Critical Notes. Each Play separately, in paper covers, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

A Midsummer-Night's Dream.	Henry V.
The Merchant of Venice.	Henry VIII.
Much Ado About Nothing	Romeo and Juliet.
As You Like It.	Julius Cæsar.
Twelfth Night.	Hamlet.
The Tempest.	King Lear.
The Winter's Tale.	Macbeth.
King John.	Anthony and Cleopatra.
Richard II.	Othello.
Richard III.	Cymbeline.
Henry IV., Part First.	Coriolanus.
Henry IV., Part Second.

ROLFE'S STUDENT'S SHAKESPEARE.

SPEARE. This well-known American Edition can also be supplied. Each Play separately, square 8vo, illustrated, paper covers, 2s. 6d. each.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
18, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1890.
No. 968, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Studies in European History: being Academic Addresses delivered by John Ignatius von Döllinger. Translated, at the request of the Author, by Margaret Warre. (John Murray.)

DR. DÖLLINGER'S volume contains twelve essays, and ranges over many subjects. "It is the great excellence of a writer," says Dr. Johnson, "to put into his book as much as it will hold"; and if this opinion be taken as our standard, then is Dr. Döllinger's book very excellent; for each essay contains more information than we find in ordinary volumes, and it is not easy to discuss any one of them adequately within the narrow limits of a review. But the essays fall naturally into groups; the strong mind of the author dominates the various material, and the same tone of thought prevails in all. I propose, therefore, to enumerate the essays, to gather them into their natural divisions, and to review them freely, without a strait observance of their order, or too much regard to the diversity of their names. I wish to be guided by the unity of the volume, rather than by the apparent and superficial difference of the several parts. Of these, two essays are upon dynasties: "The Significance of Dynasties in the History of the World"; "The House of Wittelsbach and its Place in German History." Five essays may be described as mediæval: "The Relation of the City of Rome to Germany in the Middle Ages"; "Dante as a Prophet"; "The Struggle of Germany with the Papacy under the Emperor Ludwig of Bavaria"; "Aventin and his Times"; "On the Influence of Greek Literature and Culture upon the Western World in the Middle Ages." Two essays are devoted to "The Jews in Europe," and "The Origin of the Eastern Question." There is an essay upon "The Political and Intellectual Development of Spain"; and the volume concludes with "The Policy of Louis XIV.," and a study of Mme. de Maintenon, who is described as "The most Influential Woman of French History." These essays are written by the most theological of historians and the most historical of divines; it is also the singular privilege of their author to exhibit most of the virtues and none of the vices of either calling. His theology has the wisdom, the moderation, and the lofty tone of a great historian; and his judgments have none of the low partisanship, the intemperance, or the a priori narrowness which theologians retain too often among their outfit when they embark upon the sea of history. Dr. Döllinger is not only strong in his grasp, and magnificent in his wide view, of human things; he is accurate in details, as well as precise and firm in handling them. But although an author may be precise and accurate, he can manipulate his facts; and Dr. Döllinger is a master in this art. By observing the nice distinctions of light and shade, he has given a character to his production, and conveyed the tone of his own mind through the arrangement of his materials. It has been my business to preserve this tone; and, in recording Dr. Döllinger's opinions, I do not imply that I agree with all of them.

The essay upon the house of Wittelsbach is more interesting to the Bavarians than to us; and I notice a passage in it, only that I may supply two grave omissions in the valuable essay upon Dynasties. They refer to the royal houses of France and England, to whom Dr. Döllinger has been unjust, in his account of dynasties, because he appears to take an extraordinary view of relationship and of descent. The German Hapsburgs, he says, became extinct in the eighteenth century; and he declares in another place that the family of Louis XIV. only came to the throne with his grandfather. This error is shared by those English writers who make a distinction in race between the Plantagenets and the Lancastrians, between the Lancastrians and the Tudors. Neither to a man of science, nor to a deep historian, is Maria Theresa the last Hapsburg. Henry VII. did not reign in England because his father was a Tudor, but because his mother was a Plantagenet. Henry IV. was not the founder of a new dynasty in France; and that Abbé was no less historical than pious who commended Louis XVI. upon the scaffold as "Fils de Saint Louis." The founder of the House of Capet lived in the tenth century, and the male descent of his family has remained unbroken for almost nine hundred years; but Dr. Döllinger says that the house of Wittelsbach, "already famous nine hundred years ago, rose after the year 1180 to fresh importance upon Bavarian soil." "No princely race in Europe is of such ancient extraction; the Capets, the Guelphs, the Ascanians, the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, all came later upon the world's theatre." These words were said upon "the festival of the Wittelsbach Jubilee," in "the great hall of the university of Munich"; perhaps they were necessary to the occasion, but they are more polite than true. We must save the Capets; but we may sacrifice the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns easily to the necessities of the house of Wittelsbach. The imperial greatness of the house of Austria is comparatively modern: with the exception of a brief period in the thirteenth century, it ascends no farther than to Maximilian I. The conspicuous estate of the Prussian family is altogether new. The heir of the Hohenzollerns loves to boast of "My House and the Fatherland"; but his royalty goes back only to 1701, and his imperial rank to 1870: one dates from William III., the other will date from Queen Victoria. But the present sovereign of England is allowed to occupy her throne, not because she descends from the ancient family of Guelf, but because George I. was made illustrious by his ancestor King James. The Stuarts were admitted into England because Margaret Tudor, the mother of James V., was ennobled by the blood and honours of the Plantagenets. These were derived from Henry II., who had been reigning many years when the house of Wittelsbach "rose to fresh importance" in 1180; and in him the English recognised, not a Norman, nor an Angevin, but the representative of their ancient and their native kings. His grandmother, the wife of Henry I., traced her origin, through the line of Alfred, to King Egbert, the first sovereign of the whole of England; and he was the heir of Cerdic, the founder of the royal house of Wessex, which was established upon our shores in the fifth century. It is true that the monarchy of England is, and always has been, elective in theory; and "the people of England, with strong loyalist sentiments, are yet apt to call their monarchs to a strict account." It is also true that the crown of England is hereditary; and in all our revolutions, though we may have preferred one branch or one scion to another, we have never changed our royal family. The kingdom of Wessex grew into the realms of England and of Britain, they have grown into that British empire which exists to-day; and it is unparalleled in history that the same dynasty should preside over fortunes as long, as varied, and as tumultuous as ours have been. It is a lesson to kings that their safety is derived from liberty, and their strength from the attachment of a free and loyal people. "Amor Civium, Regis Praesidium" was the motto of Charles I., but was the conviction of Elizabeth; it explains the power and the glory of her rule, and "the eternitie of her fame."

Dr. Döllinger says many wise things about dynasties and monarchs:

"It is of the highest importance to a state that the unity, the unbroken continuity of the supreme authority should, by embodiment in a ruling family, be preserved in the public view against the unstable wills of passing generations. The king born to the throne, and he alone, is the representative of the nation in past and present. The hereditary monarch not only bears the responsibility of the past, he is accountable also for the future."

The best illustration of these words is in the history of the English kings; and, therefore, I have supplied Dr. Döllinger's omission. No dynasty may compare with ours in bearing "the responsibility of the past." No other nations possess a line of sovereigns more intimately connected with their origin, or more necessary to their future; and it would seem that our monarchy, far from having discharged its office, has a greater destiny before it in preserving and personating the unity of the various and scattered peoples who constitute the British empire. Very different has been the fate of the papacy and of other elective monarchies or commonwealths which ignore the hereditary principle. Dr. Döllinger calls them "beacons of warning in history"; and in the five mediæval essays he has traced the rise and progress of the papacy. Genuine history, he says, has nothing to impart concerning the acts and fate of the popes who preceded Constantine; but even before that emperor Rome became a sacerdotal city; and its history is a record of "the continual struggle of the secular world against priestly government." Dissensions began there in the third century; they originated in theological disputes, but were soon improved into violent quarrels for the papacy itself, which was often conquered, often bought, and sometimes propagated; for the Roman clergy have produced Vicars of Christ in a variety of ways. Rome was possessed by ecclesiastics, "whose theory of government was an absolute monarchy"; and that which could be absolutely enjoyed was worth an intrigue or a battle. The Popes Felix and Liberius were at war; the Roman churches were the scene of their campaigns, and, after a single engagement, "137 bodies were found in one of the basilicas." Twenty-four of these papal wars may be enumerated in the Middle Ages. The orthodox historians call them "schisms"; "Victrix causa deis placuit," and the conquered are always "heretics." In the sixth century, the practice of ordeals was approved. The old severity of penance was commuted into money payments; and, by the ninth century, the whole system of religion assumed that financial character which is still maintained. The Roman clergy expected a payment for every service; in defiance of all the laws of the early Church, the whole system of perquisites and fees arose. The Christian world renewed the accusation of Jugurtha, "Romae omnia venalia"; but their complaint "echoed unheard" in Rome itself, and a great gulf was fixed between the laity and the priesthood, as between Lazarus and Dives. "Mi dimostra, se tutti fur cheri, alla sinistra nostra?" Dante asked, when he saw their torments. The earliest fictions in the Papal chronicles show the endeavour "to exclude the laity from interfering with matters reserved to consecrated hands." "Not a bell-rope, not a church-door key should be touched by a layman"; and Gregory VII. declared that an exorcist was greater than the Emperor himself, "since as an imperator of the spiritual world he subdued demons." The opinion prevailed at Rome that it was not only unnecessary, but pernicious, for the people to understand the offices of public worship. The laity were forbidden to speak upon matters of faith, even in private and among themselves; and, in the course of time, an inquisitorial "delator" exercised his industry in every town. The worst vices of the empire were renewed by these officials; and we may repeat that phrase of Tacitus, where he describes Rome as "Pavida et servitio parata." The clergy became rich by fines and perquisites, and "by the many donations to Saint Peter." The common church property was distributed into separate benefices; the rights of the laity were in time ignored, "and the clergy monopolised all."

"Je connais le gouvernement de Los Padres," says Voltaire, "c'est une chose admirable que ce gouvernement. Los Padres y ont tout, et les peuples rien; c'est le chef d'œuvre de la raison et de la justice. Pour moi je ne vois rien de si divin que Los Padres; cela me ravit."

Dr. Döllinger was also ravished; and, turning from Rome itself, he describes the effects of the Roman policy upon mediæval Europe. The popes judged all the world by the standard of their own dominions, and condemned the secular power as "from the devil"; but in their growing appetite for secular power, they weakened the imperial authority; and the result was a swarm of 1800 sovereigns, who preyed upon the empire. To the popes, Dr. Döllinger charges the failure of the crusades, the loss of Constantinople, and the disgrace of the Turkish provinces in Europe. Their ambition was fatal to Caesar's empire in the East and West; and to them we owe that inflammable Eastern Question, which must be the future standard "to test the ability of our nineteenth century statesmen." History tells of no pope who has brought about any permanent reform in morals or in religion. The intellectual state of Rome was more miserable than the social; and for 900 years not "a single work of any importance" was composed there. The traditions of good Latin were obscured; and some learned scholars of Italy were martyred in the tenth century for preferring the style of Virgil to the Vulgate. Dr. Newman says that heresy is often nothing but impatience; and, in the fifteenth century, these fastidious but impatient Latinists would probably have been cardinals and popes. We learn "from a devoted partisan of the papacy" that in the Roman church there could not be found a single man who was not ignorant, or a simonist, or concubinari. Greek learning had almost disappeared; the Oriental churches were despised as hardly Christian; and the papal forgeries grew in number, in credit, and in impudence, when the best witnesses to primitive belief and discipline were forgotten or condemned. The popes consigned whole towns and provinces to slavery. They read "nihil inde sperantes" instead of "nihil desperantes," in the sixth chapter of St. Luke. Through this blunder usury was condemned by the infallible authority; trade was entangled as in chains or nets; and the merchants found themselves under a yoke "so terrible and oppressive that nothing like it is known in all antiquity." What was forbidden to the Christians was conceded to the Jews, who were encouraged to damn themselves for the convenience of the faithful; and they were charitably prepared for their miserable future by being tormented abominably in the present. The theologians were too ignorant and rude to convert the Jews; their knowledge of Scripture was inadequate, their allegorical interpretations were puerile or monstrous to an Hebrew scholar. The Christian theology itself appeared to be Tritheistic, and the Christian worship to be idolatrous. Dr. Döllinger has written an eloquent essay upon the sufferings of the Jews; and he bears witness to their heroism, their accomplishments, their high and severe morality. The only trade which was unfettered was the trade in benefices; for Dr. Döllinger observes with great subtlety that, although Gregory VII. condemned simony, the unpardonable crime in his eyes was lay patronage, or the simony of laymen. The only effect of his reformation was to transfer the profits from the laity to the clergy: "c'était le chef d'œuvre de la raison et de la justice." The history of England in the thirteenth century, and the ecclesiastical statutes of the Plantagenets, show that clerical simony was universal, and that the popes practised and authorised the trade. What stocks and companies are to us, benefices were to the mediæval clergy; and it was at Rome that the holy speculators went on 'Change. As simony annulled the sacraments, the apostolic succession and the whole fabric of the Church must have been in peril from the duration and the prevalence of the trade in benefices. It has been a custom to describe Prince Bismarck as "the broker of Europe": the term is literally true of the mediæval popes; but whether the epithet "honest" be applicable in either case I may not venture to discuss, "pour moi, je ne vois rien de si divin que Los Padres." Persecution reigned within the Church, and often crusaded beyond its borders; and the Gospel was propagated by fire and sword. Conversion too frequently meant extermination; but from other causes then than now. The heathen of Saxony and the heretics of Languedoc might have adapted the speech of Galgacus, especially the phrase, "Ubi solitudinem faciunt, Ecclesiam appellant." Dr. Döllinger held, with Dante, that the mingling of the sword and crossier has been the cause of infinite misfortune; and, though he has exposed the long series of papal forgeries and profitable fictions, he could repeat with Dante, in another place:

"*Ahi Constantin, di quanti mal fu matre,
Non la tua conversion, ma quella dote,
Che da te prese il primo ricco patre.*"

In what Dr. Döllinger has written, I suppose every word is true; but the facts of history may be accurate, and yet the historian may be unfair. The Roman Church has been all that Dr. Döllinger asserts, and in more healthy ages her own children have never been backward in asserting it; but still there is another side to the whole question. In "Dante as a Prophet," and in the essay upon Aventin, Dr. Döllinger brings out the grief and indignation of Catholics at the abuses of their time; "when incongruities have sprung up between the truth and the expectations of mankind," when facts and theories are in flagrant contradiction. This produces what Dr. Döllinger means by prophecy; and in this sense Dante was a prophet. No one may yield to Dante in his denunciation of clerical abuses; but his fine criticism has saved him from Dr. Döllinger's excessive partiality, which only weakens the cause he tries to serve. Dante presents the good and bad together; and therefore he endures, his witness is irrefragable. It is an old story, that the Roman Church is the synagogue of Satan and the pope his chief minister; but the argument has always recoiled upon its vindicators. To a wise critic, the Roman Church is not wholly Jerusalem nor wholly Babylon; with Horace, he will try to follow "the golden mean," and to find a resting place half way between the assertion of her infallibility and her infamy; but sooner than remain with Dr. Döllinger, he would say, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning."

In the last essays, we are taken from the mediæval world into the eighteenth century, to find the popes in diminished splendour, Europe dominated by Louis XIV., Louis by his mistresses, and the whole of them by the Jesuits. "In that order Louis saw a bulwark of the royal power"; he was more sagacious than Mr. Lilly, who sees in it "the sole palladium of liberty in a servile age." If by "liberty" he means flexibility of conscience, he is right; in the finer senses of the word, he is clearly wrong. And we are shown the secrets of that policy, which, under the Jesuits' direction, led to the ruin of the old government and church of France. Dr. Döllinger has a high opinion of the king, and a higher of Mme. de Maintenon. It is curious to think of her as descended from a Calvinist. Her grandfather describes his son, "vieux et déréglé," as "un fâcheux détail de ma famille." Of Mme. de Maintenon herself, we read: "Il ne fallut pas moins de deux ans pour convertir cet enfant, qui fatiguait les prêtres la Bible en main." At a later time, Ninon de l'Enclos describes her as "trop gauche pour l'amour." And, at the end of her life, the persecutor of the Protestants confessed, "elle aimait beaucoup le chantre des psaumes; elle n'aimait pas la messe." Among the other characters described in the essay, the noblest and most interesting is Fénelon, who in many qualities must have reminded Dr. Döllinger of Cardinal Newman: "In the conflict of two duties, the duty of witnessing to the truth and that of obedience to the Church, precedence was due to the latter." In this verdict the careers of Cardinal Newman and Dr. Döllinger are described and contrasted. Fénelon was accused of writing Télémaque as a satire on the king; and here, again, he resembles Newman, in whose writing it is sometimes difficult to decide whether he is satirising the Church of England or the Church of Rome.

English scholars are much indebted to Miss Warre for her fine rendering of Dr. Döllinger. In many places, the punctuation might be improved; in a few, the vocabulary and the form of sentence might have been less literally German; but, upon the whole, Miss Warre has attained the last excellence of a translator, and her version does not read like a translation.

ARTHUR GALTON.

Select Epigrams from the Greek Anthology.
By J. W. Mackail. (Longmans.)

MR. MACKAIL has achieved an enterprise requiring long and patient labour with eminent felicity and completeness. And the work is one much needed. An edition of the Greek Anthology, which should be more acceptable and popular than the magnum opus of Jacobs, or even the two volumes of Didot, has long been a desideratum in England. Scholars like Mr. Symonds and Mr. Andrew Lang have whetted our curiosity on the subject. Translators have quarried there, as they do in Heine's Book of Songs, with varying non-success; and among educated persons there begins to be a widespread desire to become better acquainted at least with the gems of the collection. Mr. Mackail has satisfied this need, and has done much more. He has presented the English-speaking world with a vivid appreciation of an entire aspect of Greek literary art, such as was only possible for one who had mastered (ὡς ἐνδέχεται) the whole range of Greek literature and the history of European culture. What he says of Meleager's prelude may be applied to his own volume: "The whole is done with the light and sure touch of a critic who is also a poet himself."

The task of selection was in itself no light one, and has been executed with great care. No doubt in the mass of epigrams from which these flowers are sifted much remains that is of curious interest. And Mr. Mackail's readers will in many cases be led by his remarks to search up and down the Palatine collection for themselves. But he has culled out all that is most beautiful; and in glancing over his pages one gains a new impression of the Hellenic charm. He has shown the same happy power of choice in mentioning the one Greek epigram by a modern scholar that will bear comparison with Alexandrian workmanship—that which Gray, soon after leaving Eton, communicated to his friend West, who truly said of it, "Græcam illam ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ mirificè sapit." (There is also one of James Riddell's on a picture by Landseer which runs it hard, and which a late fellow of Balliol might have been expected to refer to.)

Mr. Mackail has further ventured on an arrangement according to subjects, which, without departing too widely from the received order, has certainly the advantage of clearness and harmonious grouping. It would have been a further aid to the student if the editor, to whom the habit of assigning each poem to its proper century has become a second nature, had suffixed to the author's name the number of the period to which he is referred in the excellent and useful Biographical Index. The reader would soon learn to understand by "Asclepiades (iii)," "Agathias (v)," that the writers mentioned belonged to the Alexandrian and Byzantine periods respectively.

At the foot of each page the epigrams printed above are translated into elegant English prose. This is an aid which, in a work like the present, even the best scholars need not despise. In the later epigrams especially there is so much of topical allusion, of intellectual conceit, and of linguistic novelty, that the most intelligent reader will sometimes pause until the solution of his difficulty is flashed upon him from below. Then, without further explanation, all is clear to him. Not that the illustrative notes at the end of the volume, which give it scholarly completeness, are by any means superfluous; but, comparatively speaking, they are a work of supererogation.

There is no subject in which the fallacy that logicians term ignoratio elenchi has played a greater part than in the criticism of translations. Persons form in their minds the ideal of a rendering, say of one of the subtlest of Hellenic writings, which shall at once (1) read like an original, and (2) serve as an interpretative commentary. But this is an ideal only. A little consideration shows that the two ends cannot be fulfilled at once. For if an author has been translated in the former sense—i.e., if his thoughts and imaginings have been transfused out of their original vehicle into a different medium, the process is one which cannot be obvious at a glance. The reader who compares the copy with the original will often have to guess at the exact course of associative invention which the translator has followed, in order to untread the maze which he has trodden. This does not save the labour of construing. But in the rendering that is en regard, as it is termed, it is before all things necessary that the force of every word should be distinctly brought out, and that the student should forthwith perceive the bearing of the English on every shade of meaning in the Greek. The question in the former case is, Can it go alone?—in the latter case, Will it bear to be confronted with the original? It does not follow that, in the translation which is to serve as a commentary, the English idiom should be sacrificed to pedantic verbalism. And Mr. Mackail is highly to be commended for the grace and skill with which, in fulfilling the main requirement, he has managed to convey so much of the spirit and beauty of his originals. Here and there I venture to think that point has been sacrificed to smoothness, as where δυσέπαρε ("unfavourable to love" Z. & S.) is rendered "O unloving." In an epigram on p. 68 of the Introduction, "Pity him who was so beautiful," the word "so," which is in the Greek, is omitted in the appended translation. And occasionally the Greek use of participles and of pronouns is needlessly retained, as, for example, in construing the noble couplet of Simonides the phrase "we lie here obeying their laws" might have been expanded with effect. But the general run of the work is simply excellent. How admirable is the following version of Meleager's epitaph for Clearistè!

"Not marriage, but death, for bridegroom did Cleorista receive when she loosed the knot of her maidenhood; for but now at even the flutes sounded at the bride's portal, and the doors of the wedding-chamber clashed; and at morn they cried the wail, and Hymenæus put to silence changed into a voice of lamentation; and the same firebrands flashed their torches before the bride-bed, and lit the dead on her downward way."

The Introduction, an essay of eighty-eight pages, is in itself an exceedingly valuable contribution to the literature of scholarship. Mr. Mackail's remarks on the Epigram as a poetic form in Greek and Latin, on Hellenic pessimism, on the feeling for Nature in antiquity, on the transition from Greek to Oriental and from Pagan to Christian sentiment, and on the tendencies of recent scholarship, are extremely just and valuable, and the composition of the whole is excellent. The one topic on which the editor speaks with some uncertainty is the great Attic period, in which the Epigram was all but non-existent. One would like to hear him at more length on this. For it is instructive to know how it strikes a poetical mind that has dwelt by preference on the bright and transient glow of Aeolic individualism. Was what he terms the "stiffening" of the mould accompanied with some chilling of the fire? He seems to think so; and yet he speaks with due reverence of Attic genius. It required some boldness, after phrases from it have been poured by Mr. Swinburne into his own luscious rhythm, to speak thus of the ode on Love in the Antigone: "Even if regarded as the language of criticism, it is undeniably frigid." But this may lead some "weak interpreters" to reflect that the little song is not the language of criticism, still less of passion, but of hopeless remonstrance against a cruel and irresistible power, "from whom to be released," said Sophocles in his old age, "is to have escaped from a mad and furious master." Yet the phrases βλεφάρων ἱμερος εὐλέκτρον νύμφας, and ὅς ἐν μαλακαῖς παρείαις νεανίδος ἐννυχέει, do not belong to those who have not known passion. Nor can it be said of Deianira or of Electra or Eteocles that with their actions "personal passion had nothing to do." Is it not a mistake to suppose that personal feeling is less intense because absorbed in the family or the state?

Mr. Mackail's résumé of the epigrams under each heading is often more poetical than his translations are. Some expressions strike me as somewhat over-refined. Why speak of "sundawn"? Or what is meant by a joke that is "highly elliptical in thought"? Is not the expression itself rather "elliptical"? Refinement passes into inexactness in "the final word that has yet been said." But these are trifles.

Mr. Mackail has an enviable knowledge of flowers; and we may take it on trust from him that Meleager chose, with as much truth as gracefulness, the flower appropriate to each poet—"the terebinth of Phaenias," "the blowing windflowers of the son of Sicelides." One sees for oneself that Dioscorides might like to be identified with the cyclamen.

Altogether the book is creditable to English learning and to English literary culture, and—what is also to be considered—will give much and long-continued delight to all English men and women who have a tincture of Greek.

LEWIS CAMPBELL.

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S SERMONS.

Leaders in the Northern Church. Sermons Preached in the Diocese of Durham. By the late Joseph Barber Lightfoot.

Ordination Addresses and Counsels to Clergy. By the late Joseph Barber Lightfoot. (Macmillan.)

THE first of these is no ordinary volume of sermons, but a valuable contribution to Church history. It exhibits the great Bishop of Durham in a new light, as a master of the difficult art of ecclesiastical biography. It begins with admirable sketches of the characters, the lives, and the work of the founders of the Northern Church—St. Columba, St. Aidan, St. Oswald, St. Hilda, St. Cuthbert, and the Venerable Bede. We have a lifelike picture of the trials and troubles of the period of the Reformation in the account of Bernard Gilpin, while in the sermon on Bishop Cosin we have a companion picture of the no less trying times of the Restoration. Richard de Bury stands forth as the patron of mediæval learning, and Bishop Butler as the most profound of Anglican divines.

It is a matter for keen regret that Bishop Lightfoot did not live to complete the scheme which he had planned, and leave us pictures, drawn with a hand so firm and yet so picturesquely vivid, of St. Chad and St. John of Beverley, of Walter de Gray, of Wilfrid, Paulinus, Antony Bek, and Bishop Hatfield, of the Pilgrimage of Grace, of Richard of Hexham and Simeon of Durham, of Caedmon, the father of English poetry, and, above all, of Alcuin, the restorer of learning, and the Northumbrian friend and counsellor of Charlemagne.

The book bears the character of the man. It shows his broad sympathies, his power of understanding those with whom he differed, and his generous appreciation of their work. The style is lucid, forcible, and self-restrained, without a single slipshod sentence. The book abounds with apt illustrations and happy phrases, reminding the reader of some of the best efforts of Dean Stanley in similar fields; and it is interesting from the beginning to the end. It can only deepen our sense of the loss to English literature and English learning entailed by the author's premature death, and it will help to establish Bishop Lightfoot's title to rank behind none of his great predecessors, whose characters and work he has so admirably portrayed. It will, moreover, suggest the thought that he might have accomplished as excellent work in a chair of Ecclesiastical History as he did in that of the Margeret Professorship.

The chief note of the book and its distinctive excellence lies in its eminent fairness and judicial impartiality in dealing with thorny questions of ecclesiastical politics, the warm sympathy exhibited for what is good on every side, the readiness to discern praiseworthy qualities underlying characters by no means faultless, and the recognition of the merits of institutions the need for which has passed away.

Thus, the Bishop frankly acknowledges the debt which Christian Europe owes to pagan Rome; and, while he points out the needfulness of the work which could only have been accomplished by the monasteries, he sees that when they fell it was because they had discharged their functions, and that the time had come for the new order of things which began with the Reformation. In like manner he does full justice to the Puritans, though it is clear that his sympathies are rather with the Anglican divines, whose faults, nevertheless, he does not fail to point out, while urging all admissible excuses for their harshness and intolerance. He insists again and again on the historical fact, which has too often been forgotten, that the true spiritual ancestry of the English Church is to be traced to Iona and Lindisfarne, and not to Rome and Canterbury. Augustine, he well says, "was the Apostle of Kent, but Aidan the Apostle of England"; and he shows in what sense Iona may be regarded as "the spiritual and intellectual metropolis of Western Christendom." We have an acute analysis of the reasons why Columba and Aidan succeeded where Augustine and Paulinus failed, and of the causes which ultimately brought England under the Roman obedience. The bishop sympathises with Iona rather than with Rome, with Colman rather than with Wilfrid. And yet, while seeing the strength of the Culdees as a missionary order, he admits that their loose organisation was unfitted for building a permanent edifice on the foundation they alone could have laid; and he fully recognises the evils which a more prolonged isolation from continental Christianity would necessarily have entailed on the islands of the Western Ocean.

The sermon which describes the death of Bede, dictating with his last breath the final sentence of his translation of the Gospel of St. John, was opportunely preached at the time of the completion of the Revised Version in which Bishop Lightfoot bore so great a part, when the work of so many toilsome years was being received with obloquy and undeserved reproach. In a most pathetic paragraph, evidently coming from the heart, he tells us how, without hope of reward or even of fame, nay, with the certainty of censure, rebuke, and misapprehension, the little band of scholars persevered through so many years in their thankless task, with the single-minded object of setting before all English-speaking peoples the results of enlarged knowledge and extended scholarship.

It was the privilege of the present writer to visit with the Bishop some of the scenes of the events which he has here described, listening, as he recounted them on the spot, to some of the narratives given with greater fulness in this volume. He would point out, for instance, the features of the settlement of St. Columba on the "lonely, sterile, unlovely island" of Lindisfarne, now again as desolate, sterile, and unlovely as it was when Columba chose it for his abode; or he would describe Cuthbert's death on the lonely island, or the monks flying before the Danes from the sacred soil of Lindisfarne, bearing with them St. Cuthbert's body and St. Cuthbert's own copy of the Gospels, till at last they found a new home at Chester-le-Street, and afterwards on the lordly rock of Dunholme. Then he would point out how Cosins had transformed the banqueting hall of the old Prince-Bishops into a noble chapel for the castle, and he would explain the storied scenes with which his own munificence had filled the painted windows—Paulinus at Goodmanham, King Oswald planting the Cross at the battle of Heavenfield, St. Hilda receiving Caedmon, the council held at Whitby, the death of Bede, or the Lindisfarne Gospels being recovered from the waves.

But above all he loved to pace, with a sympathising companion, the sunny terrace which he chose as his daily walk, chiefly because it had been the favourite walk of his great namesake; and as he paused before the characteristic inscription which records the restoration by Josephus Secundus of the work of Josephus Primus, he would laud Butler, as he does in this volume, as the greatest of all his predecessors in the see. Butler was plainly his model; and in the description (given in the sermon preached on the occasion of his installation in Butler's throne) of Butler's purity, humility, meekness, sincerity, candour, reverence, and devoutness, a man at once firm in faith, careless of wealth, temperate, wise, and learned, he has unconsciously drawn the best existing portrait of his own character and his own episcopate.

The second volume at the head of this article, which consists exclusively of addresses ad Clerum, is also of interest as an unintended self-revelation of character. While describing to his ordination candidates the ideal at which they should aim, it is manifest that he has, without intention, described the qualities and motives which gave him so great an influence with the younger clergy, and more especially with those who had been trained in his own house. He is constantly insisting on the value of character as the supreme qualification for the ministerial office. He tells them that the first requisite is character, the second is character, and the third is character. The most essential elements of character are set down as earnestness or truthfulness, uprightness, simplicity or singleness of purpose, temper, and, above all, that total absence of self-assertiveness which was so marked a characteristic of himself. Very interesting are the remarks on St. Francis Xavier as exhibiting the type of the missionary spirit; on the difference between sentiment and sentimentality; and, above all, the account he gives of his own career and of the motives which induced him to leave his work at Cambridge and accept the less congenial work at Durham. Characteristic also is his constant deprecation of party spirit, and the absence of any indications of the school of thought to which he belonged; though from the addresses on the significance of the Incarnation, and on the Idea of the Church, it is plain that he would have shared in some of the views which since his death have been put forward by the authors of Lux Mundi. The sermons on the leaders of the Northern Church may be more popular and interesting, but the ordination addresses contain his profounder thoughts.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

"RULERS OF INDIA."—Warren Hastings.
By Capt. L. J. Trotter. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

Clearly this man will not die. Here is the third book about Hastings that we have had to notice within the last few months; and they are neither the first nor likely to be the last utterances on the subject. All through the impeachment, and ever since, people have been pleading for and against the founder of British India. There have been the polemics of almost all the pamphleteers of the time, and then the pseudo-judicial utterances of the pedantic James Mill, followed by the gushing biography of the Rev. G. R. Gleig, the brilliant Edinburgh article of Macaulay, the cool monograph of Sir A. Lyall, and the impartial testimony of the State papers lately edited by Prof. Forrest (reviewed in the Academy of Aug. 2). Of eulogistic writings, too, there had been already others; among them a Life by Capt. Trotter, published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. in 1878.

It was therefore nothing but proper that the inevitable "Rulers of India" volume on the founder should be confided to the present author. He had already written a workmanlike biography; and the optimistic tone of that work was an obvious recommendation. Untainted by interest and by ignorance, Capt. Trotter's Life gave an earnest that he would give his facts correctly and honestly, but with that choice of a favourable light without which portraiture is almost certain to harden into libel or degenerate into caricature.

The present book is skilfully done—not in the line of argumentative advocacy, but in the form of a well-organised narrative. Commencing with the beginning, Capt. Trotter shows that his hero was well born* and educated, and disposes of the silly fable about his "obscure origin" promulgated by Burke on the authority of Francis. That arch slanderer, again, received the story from Lady Ann Monson, wife of his colleague in the Supreme Council—a lady who, one would have thought, had reason to be chary of such stories, both on account of her ancestry and of her own early adventures. As Dr. Busted observes, that romance of folly and sorrow, "if it had not taught her charity, should at least have suggested the unwisdom of throwing stones." Had Hastings indeed raised himself from the gutter, it would not have been to his discredit; but, after all is said, Englishmen admire race, and Hastings was of the noblest.

Among the events of his early days this book fails to account for his share in the revolution of 1756. At p. 17 we find Governor Drake dropping down to Falta, and Holwell left to the mercies of the Nawab Sirāj-ud-daula; but we are not told that Hastings was with either party, though he had been certainly enlarged from confinement at Murshidabad in June, and was, equally certainly, married at Falta in December. Again, after the battle of Plassy, we are informed (p. 20) that he was made Resident at the court of the new Nawab at Murshidabad; yet, on p. 27, we find it stated that, when promoted to Council, he vacated a place at "the head of the Patna factory," without any explanation as to how he was moved from the first post to the second.

These are almost the only defects that appear in the book. Of course the author is not satisfied with Sir A. Lyall's very dispassionate estimates; and he attaches more value to Prof. Forrest's Selections than Sir Alfred probably would do. But on certain questions of the more and the less we must always expect the best judges to be at variance. What is certain is that Hastings was resolute in the most appalling circumstances, and pure in the most corrupt times. Perhaps he was still the child of his period. And the period was not one of squeamishness in public life. Frederic the Great passed then for a "Protestant hero," and his friend Voltaire for a philanthropic sage; the chivalrous Wyndham was the apologist of cock-fighting and the patron of bear-baiting. In India the lawlessness of native statesmen was frightful. In 1749 the prime minister at Delhi led a marauding expedition into the districts round his own metropolis and wasted them with fire and sword, for no fault and in a time of peace. The treatment of Amin Chand (Omichund) by Clive was a recent event when Hastings began to rule; all his predecessors had filled their bags with ill-got gain. When all these things are considered, the man who founded an empire, and yet lived and died poor, may almost seem a phoenix.

* Capt. Trotter, however, does not seem to have seen the letters in the Academy of February 23 and April 27, 1889, which go a long way towards proving that Hastings's father was not married at fifteen but at about twenty-two, and that his Christian name was not "Pynaston," but "Penyston." The actual date of his birth still remains unascertained; but we are now able to state that in the marriage register he is described as "clerk," i.e., in holy orders, and therefore certainly older than twenty-one.—ED. ACADEMY.

There is not one statesman of his day with whom comparison will not be advantageous to Hastings. Pitt never met with his difficulties, and never produced anything resembling his results. The frustrated schemes of parliamentary reform, the much-debated Irish Union, the unsuccessful war with France, are so many fumbling daubs beside such work as the organisation of Bengal and the campaign that ended with the treaty of Salbai and the foundation of British supremacy throughout India. And, while Pitt had a corrupt House of Commons for his instrument and no really powerful opposition to encounter, Hastings did almost all his work in a minority. If motive and character be taken into consideration, he is a far nobler figure than Napoleon Bonaparte. That belated condottiere had the good fortune to come into a civilised society with the principles of the middle ages, and to cut his way with the most complete disregard of morality and the most unrestrained command of men and money. Yet—although, as Byron wrote in his famous apostrophe to the fallen leader,

"There was a day, there was an hour
When earth was Gaul's, Gaul thine"—

Napoleon left nothing behind him: nothing but a ruinous tradition of "glory" and codes of law which, in fact, were not his. Contrast the record of Hastings as given in the work before us:—

"Hastings had not only given a strong and stable government to Bengal [a country larger and more populous than France], he had gradually raised the company into a commanding place among the chief political powers of India. He made no conquests; but his treaties and subsidiary system paved the way for the final overthrow or defeat of every power that sought to hinder the growth of our Eastern Empire. . . . This work was accomplished by a man who had no special training for such tasks, who was continually hampered by hostile or uncertain colleagues, by fractious or untrustworthy subordinates, by a capitious and distrustful Court of Directors, by unsparing assailants in the House of Commons, and by Ministers who used him as a pawn in their political game. Even Macaulay . . . pays all due homage to his qualities as statesman and ruler, bearing witness to 'his dauntless courage, his honourable poverty, his fervent zeal for the interest of the state, his noble equanimity tried by both extremes of fortune and never disturbed by either.'"

It is impossible for any candid and calm judge to study the story of Warren Hastings without becoming sensible of genuine obligation to the celebrated monograph from which the last sentence is taken. It is easy enough to point to Macaulay's faults—the lime-light treatment which glorifies the points it catches while it blackens the contrasted shadows. But it is not easy to overpraise the dramatic power, the true and sound judgment which, among the temptations of brilliant journalism, paint firmly the general picture. Though it may not, indeed, be proved that Hastings had a hard heart, or even lax principles, we are constrained to admit that such a fortitude, such an indifference to sentimental motives and to popularity, give a look of hardness to the character of their possessor in spite of their intrinsic heroism. Heroes of the cynical type have had these qualities also; but Hastings was one of the few who had them without the defects which almost seem to be their inseparable shadows. It was for this reason that, while above the weakness that makes applause the chief motive of conduct, he won the love of those whose welfare depended upon him, adding to his other acquisitions the sweetness of that unsought reward. And thus his peaceful end was brightened by the grateful homage of races calumniously represented as thankless, by the respect of public men little wont to make gratuitous display of their feelings, and by the unwavering attachment of all those with whom he came into close personal relation.

H. G. KEENE.

NEW NOVELS.

- A Cigarette Maker's Romance.* By F. Marion Crawford. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)
My Shipmate Louise. By W. Clark Russell. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)
A Lost Illusion. By Leslie Keith. In 3 vols. (Methuen.)
A Ward of the Golden Gate. By Bret Harte. (Chatto & Windus.)
Ardis Claverden. By Frank R. Stockton. (Sampson Low.)
Lady Maude's Mania. By G. Manville Fenn. (Frederick Warne.)
Sidney. By Margaret Deland. (Longmans.)
The Winding Way. By J. S. Fletcher. (Kegan Paul & Co.)
Wedding: Stories of the Long Lane that has no Turning. By Robert Overton and Others. (Hutchinson.)
He Went for a Soldier. By John Strange Winter. (White.)

MR. MARION CRAWFORD may have done more ambitious work than A Cigarette Maker's Romance, but he has never done anything pleasanter. Short as the story is (not much longer than one volume of some three-volume novels), we think it might have been shortened still further with advantage; but this is the only unfavourable criticism that it is necessary to pass on the book. The hero, Count Boris Skariatine, half a madman, half a sane and most honourable, though unfortunate, gentleman, is a very agreeable and rather a novel figure; Vjera, the heroine—an angelic, suffering, and rewarded heroine—is equally agreeable if less novel. All the other characters are good, and there is a capital scrimmage in a restaurant. We shall say nothing about the story, because it is worth reading and reading through.

Some people do not like authors that "repeat themselves," as it is called. There are repetitions and repetitions, and when they are the right sort we like them very much. A kind of peace comes over us when, at the fifth line of My Shipmate Louise, the ship "is on a taut bowline heading on a due down Channel course." It grows deeper when, on the third page, there is a sentence of a dozen lines containing the phrases "lagoon of soft indigo" and "spoke of a revolving wheel"; and it becomes really profound when, in the second chapter, a dignified young lady treats the hero rather disdainfully. It is all right; there is no mistake. The author of The Frozen Pirate is there, between the covers of three stout volumes to be tapped anywhere and drunk at discretion. If this seems an irreverent fashion of reviewing, we beg Mr. Clark Russell's pardon, "for such was not our intentions." There are authors whom we regard in this way, and we never regard them with anything but respect and affection. You may not want their wares at a given time—in which case you need not take them. You may want them; and there they are, fresh, copious, turned out in workmanlike manner. We need only add that in this particular parcel there is an Indian and a villain (indeed more than one), and a treasure, and castaways, and an island, and kidnapping, and everything you can desire.

Although there is some good work in A Lost Illusion, there are other things not so good. "The spark of poor best in him was killed out of him" may be a Carlylese expression of a certain jargon of thought and speech (for there is jargon of thought as well as of speech) in the present day, but it is only jargon after all. The book, though it is jargonish in parts, and though the combination of strikes and seduction is very commonplace, has merit for the Quaker heroine Elizabeth is good, and in a considerable degree original, save in the end, where that touch of commonplace united with jargon, which seems to be Miss Leslie Keith's special fault, comes in again. A very original young woman like Elizabeth, by no means a saint in temperament, who had really loved and been loved by a naughty but not commonplace young man, and had lost first "her illusion" about him and then himself, would not be inclined, if she married again at all, to marry a good young man whom she might have married before. At least so we opine; and this it appears is what Elizabeth Dale seems to be going to do when we leave her. But, after all, we may be wrong, both in our general opinion and in our particular supposition.

Mr. Bret Harte can never be other than readable; but we have found him more so than in A Ward of the Golden Gate, even with its tolerably abundant and rather distinct illustrations by Mr. Stanley Wood.

We always like him best in short stories; and A Ward of the Golden Gate, though not exactly long, is not precisely short. But Miss Yerba Buena, the heroine, is decidedly attractive, and Colonel Pendleton is an excellent colonel, and his nigger George one of the best of niggers. And with a good heroine, and a good colonel, and a good nigger, a novel may surely go as far as the majority of novels have any business to be asked to go.

Mr. Frank Stockton's studies of life in the older and Eastern American States are scarcely worse off for a certain abiding touch of interest than Mr. Bret Harte's of the Western States; but, as in the other case, the interest is not always of the same strength. There is a certain reverend liqueur manufacturer who announces on his bottles that, after forty years' study of herbs in the wilderness (varied, we trust, by propagation of the Gospel), he makes three qualities of drink—one for persons not accustomed to alcoholic potations, one for the general drinker, and Number Three for those who are well imbued with alcohol. We have no desire to speak slightly of Ardis Claverden. Mr. Stockton is usually pleasing; and his heroine, who is proposed to as she is painting by a kind of American Mr. Guppy, and wishes to but does not "give him a dab of red paint on the tip of his nose" as he kneels, is not amiss. But when we think of Rudder Grange, nay, even of The Griffin and the Minor Canon, we must, as persons accustomed to the alcohol of fiction, say "This is not Number Three." And, on the whole, we prefer number three when we can get it to numbers two and one, though these may do well enough for the general.

The worst mania that we can perceive in Lady Maude was her spelling her name with an "e," thereby transforming it from one of the prettiest into one of the ugliest. It must, however, be allowed that anything might be expected of a girl who had such an extraordinary set of near relations as Lord Barmouth, Lady Maude's papa; and Lady Barmouth, Lady Maude's mamma; and Lord Diphoos, her brother; not to mention Sir Grantley Welters, her unwelcome lover, and Mademoiselle Justine, her maid, and several other persons of her entourage. Those of them who have titles may be said to be related to the peerage through Cousin Feenix and the Dedlocks, while the whole of them are related to humanity through other persons of Cousin Feenix's creator's creation, but rather distantly. To speak less figuratively, Mr. Manville Fenn has given us one of those curious imaginative studies, by no means stupid or unamusing in parts, which a certain class of writers do give us, because, we suppose, there is a demand for them. If they were never given worse than by Mr. Fenn we should not much object.

We can hardly give a better criticism of the last production of Miss Margaret Deland, author of a book the title of which is said to have been the subject of remarkable confusion, than by observing that before we had time to read it our copy fell into the hands of a very earnest and consistent walker in novel-reading who is not troubled with any nasty critical megrims. There are 429 pages in Sidney, and the copy when we took it in hand remained uncut after p. 152. And the end of this thing was that we admired the pursuing of that pioneer far more than we blamed his or her faintness. Beyond the pioneer's furthest we found the words "It is not enough to know that there is a Meaning." It is not; we are there at one with Sidney. But how much better to know that there is a Meaning than to be perfectly and despairingly certain that there is none, but only a jargon?

The author of Andrewlina has a pretty touch at the shilling dreadful; and we do not know that the amateurs of that kind will quarrel with him for having expanded himself into a stout volume in crown octavo with cloth covers and everything proper. There is a crime, of course. There is a clever American (he is wicked this time, and not good, as he was in Andrewlina). There are death-struggles, solicitors, dreams. We do not think that anyone except those who take it up by mistake for something quite other than itself will be disappointed in The Winding Way.

Wedding (a fruitful subject surely) contains a considerable number of stories by various writers, some old some new, but nearly all of the kind that does duty as short feuilletons in newspapers. They are sometimes not bad so far as their mere incidents go. If you go farther you occasionally meet such a sentence as this, addressed by a young man to a young woman at a "reception":

"I wonder you have never tried the experiment of matrimony, Aubertine, and yet I know why you have not. There was more novelty in the partial subjugation of many hearts than in the total subjugation of one. You found more intoxication in a sip from many glasses than you would find in draining one."

It is needless to say that this is exactly the style in which a young man talks to a young woman, both being habituated members of the world, at a "reception."

There is, thank heaven! no occasion for any nasty sarcastic comment in the author of Boots's Baby. Soldiers and children, children and soldiers—she knows both classes, and can make them talk as they talk and act as they act. "No such great matter," says somebody? Then let somebody go not for a soldier but for a reviewer, and see how often it is done.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

GIFT BOOKS.

English Fairy Tales. Collected by Joseph Jacobs. Illustrated by John D. Batten. (David Nutt.) The Red Fairy Book. Edited by Andrew Lang. With illustrations by H. J. Ford and Lancelot Speed (Longmans). Out of the pile of Christmas books, beneath which our table is at present groaning, fairy tales deserve the place of honour, not only because of their abundance, but because they bear witness to a real revival in literature. The scientific study of folk-lore, after being for some years ridiculed, has at last reached the stage of becoming popular. Here we have Mr. Andrew Lang—"who adorns whate'er he touches, and who touches everything"—collecting, through a number of feminine hands, a second series of fairy tales from foreign sources; and Mr. Joseph Jacobs, editor of Folk-Lore and unwearied bibliographer of the oldest stories in the world, "curbing the liberal hand, sub-servient proudly," and telling to the little ones in simplest language some of the stories that have survived in English folk-speech. Of Mr. Lang's book, it is needless to say more than that it is a companion volume to The Blue Fairy Book, differing chiefly in that it goes further afield among Norse and Slavonic legends. But the other book has a special character, which only requires to be known in order to win exceptional favour. The author's object has been to restore to children some of their dues, by recovering from various quarters old English tales which now, more than at any previous time, are in danger of being forgotten or being spoilt by literary embellishments. The present generation, town-born and nurtured in infant-schools, never hear from nurses and old-wives the stories which their grandparents inherited from countless generations. But English fairy tales, like English dialects, are not yet extinct; and there are workers in the field, busy in rescuing both alike from the doom that appears to await them. Who ever doubts, let him read "Tom Tit Tot," which Mr. Edward Clodd unearthed in Suffolk only a year or two ago. Though many variants of it exist, the superiority of this version suffices to prove that English folk possess the genuine gift of story-telling. The "note" of the English fairy tale seems to be that it has nothing to do with fairies. The lubbar-fiend is the usual hero, not the king or queen of the pixies. And the English nature comes out, not only in the love of bloodshed, but in the peculiarly grim aspect under which the supernatural is conceived. From this point of view, Mr. Jacobs has been very happy in his illustrator, whom not even the unseen can daunt. The publisher, who never issues an ugly book, deserves a final word of praise.

Wanted, a King. By Maggie Browne. With original designs by Harry Furniss. (Cassells.) Since the fair Alice, the Columbus (or should we not rather say the Columbine) of Wonderland, crossed not the Atlantic, but that truly Pacific Ocean of sleep, and discovered a new world of childish romance, many another little girl has essayed the same voyage. None of them have as yet quite succeeded; but among the more fortunate voyagers must assuredly be reckoned Merle, whose adventures are related by Miss Maggie Browne. She at least reached a pleasant shore, the Isle of Nursery Rhymes, which we know is adjacent to the Continent of Wonder. It has been visited before, though it is a year or two since we had authentic news of our old friends. All will be glad to hear that she found them quite well—Jack and Jill still unmarried and still trying to get that pail of water safely down the hill, little Bo-peep still little and still looking after those sheep's tails when she is not napping, little Boy Blue as blue as ever. But she left them much happier than she found them; she, as the title-page boasts, set them all to rights. Let us ask the wisest child, has he or she ever divined why there was so much amiss in that Island of Rhymes? Why, for instance, did Jack break his crown, why was Mary so contrary, why were the children who lived in a shoe forbidden bread with their broth, why couldn't Humpty Dumpty get up after his fall, even with the assistance of cavalry? Well, Merle found it out; it was all because they had a bad king—King G. G.—instead of the only right and proper king for them—King B. B. How Merle managed to destroy the power of the former and to place the latter on the throne is now a matter of history, which all good little boys and girls ought to coach up at once. Mr. Furniss's illustrations will be very useful to the student, being evidently drawn from photographs brought back by Merle. They will be all the more valuable as they are authentic records of a régime which has passed away. King G. G. has probably before this put an end to his miserable existence, Jack and Jill have no doubt got married, and Simple Simon taken honours at the university. We shall look with anxiety for the record of Merle's next visit.

By Right of Conquest. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie.) Having given his boy-readers "With Clive in India," it is not surprising that Mr. Henty should now give them "With Cortez in Mexico." In fact, the surprise should rather be that he has not published an adventure volume dealing with Cortez before. This volume tells how Roger Hawkshaw, a brave Devonshire lad, sailed for the Spanish Main in the early years of the sixteenth century; how, after apparently aiding in challenging, on behalf of England, the right of Spain to the supremacy of the East Indies, he nevertheless formed one of the band with which Cortez conquered Mexico, and came back to Devonshire with a beautiful and wealthy Aztec Princess for his bride. Of course, Roger has no end of difficulties, and this book is full of battles between the Aztecs and the Spaniards. Mr. Henty takes great pains to show how the original Mexican empire fell, in reality, from its own weakness, and to indicate the deficiencies of Montezuma's character. By Right of Conquest is a trifle too long, but it has no other fault. It is the nearest approach to a perfectly successful historical novel that Mr. Henty has yet published.

A Little Candle. By Mary H. Debenham. (National Society.) This is a Scotch story of a very novel kind, inasmuch as it treats of the Covenanting period of the history of Scotland from the Episcopal point of view. Graham of Claverhouse figures in it as by no means a monster, and a fanatical mob is represented as attacking not a minister's, but a parson's house. The "little candle" of the story is Bride Galbraith, the granddaughter of this parson, who smooths over the troubles of her friends both in Scotland and in France, to which they are forced to flee, and who is, therefore, a great deal more of a sunbeam than of a candle. Of course, she has her reward in the shape of a young man who is worthy of her. A good Royalist, Major Ferguson, is remarkably well drawn, and the life of the fugitives in France is rendered both picturesquely and pleasantly. A Little Candle is, everything being taken into consideration, very much superior to the ordinary run of historical novels.

Alexis and his Flowers. By Beatrix F. Cresswell. Illustrated by Henrietta Cresswell. (Fisher Unwin.) "Flower-Lore for Boys and Girls" is the sub-title of this pretty book, and expresses its contents more accurately than "Alexis and his Flowers"—a name which seems to promise some human interest, if not a story. Alexis is a very shadowy little personage; and his dialogues with the flowers in the conservatory, Dame Nature and the rest, are too transparent in their fallacy to be accepted even for a moment by any reader, young or old. Nevertheless, the book is a very pleasant one—a nosegay of those everlasting blooms of fancy which have grown up round flowers in all ages, and retain their freshness and fragrance in spite of time and season.

A Story of Stops. By Mrs. Davidson, of Tulloch. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) "Stopland" is not a very promising playground for the fancy, and it says much for Mrs. Davidson's ingenuity that she has been able to make so much fun out of it. The road to this uncomfortable region is through the ink-bottle, where dwell certain goblins, who pilot Molly and her sister safely to the Land's End. On their journey they fall in with "Question" and "Answer," and "Glittering, the Fisher," a herd of "Clumpers," and all sorts of queer creatures whose connexion with "Stops" and ink-bottles is not very obvious. By dint of imagination, and no little humour, Mrs. Davidson carries the reader on, very sceptical but not unamused, from the first page to the last. The book, in fact (including the illustrations), is clever and original; and, if it only prevents little girls from associating with Ganks, it will not be without its value to parents.

Japanese Play, &c. By the late Thomas R. H. McClatchie. Edited by his Brother, Ernest S. McClatchie. (W. H. Allen.) This is a new edition; but the first was published in Yokohama eleven years ago, and the book is now reprinted here, "in the hope of the rhymes being found of some interest to readers in England." We heartily trust that the editor's hope will not be fulfilled. Those who know the noble romance of Chiusingura, whether as told by Mr. Mitford or in the version of Mr. Dickens, will regard the versification of one of its episodes in the manner of the Ingoldsby Legends as something worse than a literary mistake. A Japanese audience may "show their amusement when an unfortunate woman is murdered by mistake"; but through all the tales in this book the humour is distinctly British, and of an unrefined type.

Peckover's Mill. By the author of "Starwood Hall." (National Society.) This is a very lively story of the great frost of 1739, of highway men and Jacobite intrigues, and of a prolonged dispute as to the ownership of a mill. In point both of incident and of costume, indeed, it is decidedly superior to average historical novels written, not for boys, but for adults. Silas Peckover, alias Captain Jack, the highwayman Jacobite, is a character quite worthy of Ainsworth; and Dickon Stokes, whom Silas is compelled to shoot, is brother to the treacherous ferryman in Rookwood. The family life at the Mill, which is contributed by Ruth, David, and Anthony, is very delightful. It is eminently to Ruth's credit that she almost succeeds in making a better man of Silas.

A Rash Promise. By Cecilia Selby Lowndes (Blackie.) This is a rather too long drawn-out story of the trouble a little girl gets into by promising to a naughty boy not to tell that it is he and not another and better boy who has lassoed and very nearly strangled a dog. Frank and Noel, the two lads, are well contrasted; and the moral of the story, that candour is ever so much better than deceit, is, of course, unexceptionable. The parents and guardians in A Rash Promise are, however, a little too prone to preaching.

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge sends Match-Box Phil, by Phoebe Allen, an amusing story of a street arab finding his way into the country by surreptitiously joining a school treat. The author does not know much about rabbits, as she makes a wild one wake the waif by rubbing against his hand. The Heart of Tommy Titt; or, the Big Man and the Bigger, is written in Mr. P. B. Power's most telling style. It is pathetic and humorous, and, needless to say, conveys an admirable moral. Starting in Life, by M. A. Dibdin, is a good book to give to servants going out into the world.

SIX Sermons on The Christian Character, by the late John Jackson, Bishop of Lincoln, afford a grateful reminiscence to his friends of the affectionate earnestness of his disposition. The illustrations of The Church Catechism with Notes, both woodcuts and chromolithographs, are admirable. The Society is to be congratulated on the aesthetic appearance of this little book, while the notes are terse and to the point. In the volumes of the Society's magazines for 1890, The Child's Pictorial and The Dawn of Day, will be found contributions from the writers most skilled in the fields which these magazines respectively cover. The illustrations here again are capital, especially in the former. It is needless to recommend both for parochial use.

FROM the National Society come The Green Girls of Greythorpe, by C. R. Coleridge, and The Vicar's Trio, by Esmé Stuart. The former is a pleasant story for girls of an endowed school at Greythorpe, which, something after the fashion of Uppingham a few years ago, migrated to the Lakes while improvements were being carried out. The "scree" and "tarns" of Westmoreland are prettily described, and several unknown relationships unravelled. The Vicar's Trio are his three children, who, in a half-unconscious fashion, bring a young lord to a sense of his responsibilities. Both these tales are noticeable for their high moral purpose.

LABOUR disputes and the great dock strike form the staple of The Seed he Sowed, a pleasant tale by Emma Leslie. (Blackie.) In Nut-brown Roger and I, by J. H. Yoxall (Blackie), are a boy's adventures for five days with a highwayman. Probabilities are gloriously ignored, with the result, boys may think, of a better story.

FEW forms of literature are more difficult to write than modern fairy tales. Mr. L. Armitage is not to be altogether congratulated on the eight which he has put together in a volume called The Blue Mountains (W. H. Allen.) They are most of them beyond the comprehension of those who delight in fairy tales. "Prince Apoll's Joke," however, is amusing, and "Fitz's Christmas" pathetic. It is too apparent in the case of the others that the author has read the immortal "Alice."

THE Norfolk Broads have been frequently described of late years; but Noah's Ark, by Darley Dale (Frederick Warne), is a well-written story, containing some pretty accounts of the district. Grace forms a charming heroine against the background of reeds, water lilies, and meadow sweet. Tennyson's "Lady Clare" evidently suggested the dénouement. The tone of the book is admirable.

Hal Hungerford, or the Strange Adventures of a Boy Emigrant, by J. R. Hutchinson (Blackie), is a model book for boys. Smugglers, Indians, snowy forests, moose-hunting, a fierce bulldog, and a bride at the end of the story—what more could a boy desire in the long evenings?

A Chapter of Adventures, or Through the Bombardment of Alexandria, by G. A. Henty (Blackie), is another boys' story. Its author's name vouches that it will not be wanting in interest. Of course, here too the hero ends, after many thrilling escapes, with a bride. Having escaped the terrific cyclone, depicted so sensationally by Mr. Overend, he deserves all earthly happiness.

BY way of science, to balance so much fiction, the S. P. C. K. sends an essay on The Birth and Growth of Worlds, by Prof. A. H. Green. The nebular hypothesis of stars throwing off gases at a high temperature is here contrasted with Mr. Lockyer's investigations by the spectroscope on meteorites. Previous theories, from Burnet to Mr. Crookes's "protyle," are carefully examined; and Prof. Green, as a modern cosmogonist, is well worth listening to.

A NEW and augmented edition of the veteran Mr. Timbs's Book of Wonders, Events, and Discoveries (Dean) gives, among other things, short accounts of the Forth Bridge and Eiffel Tower. It is presumably brought up to the times; but as no date appears on the title page, and it contains neither table of contents nor index, a hapless reviewer gives it up in despair.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE learn that Mr. Th. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, has just discovered a new and important version of the Babylonian Creation story. It is on a tablet brought by Mr. Rassam from Kouyunjik, and forms a kind of introduction to an ordinary incantation. It begins with the time when the abode of the gods, plants, trees, cities, temples had not been made, when nothing had been created. "At that time Eridu was made; E-sagila was built—E-sagila which Lugal-du-azaga founded within the abyss." Then comes the making of Babylon and the earthly E-sagila, after which the gods and the Anunnaki, men and animals, the Tigris and the Euphrates are created. The tablet is unfortunately a fragment; but a considerable portion has been preserved, which it is to be hoped that Mr. Pinches will soon find time to publish with a translation.

WE are informed that the very last work upon which the late Dr. Alexander J. Ellis was engaged was an article on "Phonetics" for the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia. He finished this article so recently as October 10; and it will duly appear in Volume VII.

MRS. OLIPHANT's long-promised book on Royal Edinburgh: Her Saints, Kings, Prophets, and Poets, will be published immediately by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It is uniform with The Makers of Florence and The Makers of Venice. For the illustrations the publishers were fortunate enough to secure the co-operation of Mr. George Reid, who threw himself into the work con amore, and has made the most of the abundant opportunities offered in Edinburgh for picturesque effects. M. Lacour has executed the engravings with his usual skill and delicacy. A limited edition of the book will be issued on hand-made paper.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish next week Adventures in the Life of Count George Albert of Erbach, translated from the German by Princess Beatrice. The Count was captured by Barbary corsairs while on a visit to the Knights of St. John in Malta in the early part of the seventeenth century. The present representative of the family (who is the possessor of the original MS.) is married to the only sister of Prince Henry of Battenberg.

MR. HUGH THOMSON's illustrated edition of The Vicar of Wakefield is now nearly ready for publication. It is uniform with Mr. Caldecott's illustration to "Old Christmas" and "Bracebridge Hall," and will be found no unworthy companion to those famous volumes. Mr. Austin Dobson, who has taken a keen interest in the work throughout, contributes an introduction on previous illustrated editions of the Vicar.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS's Log-book, which tradition says was lost during a violent storm on the return voyage from the new world, has, it is alleged, been recently recovered by a Welsh fisherman while trawling near Tenby. Mr. Elliot Stock is engaged in producing a facsimile of the precious MS., and will issue copies during the present season. The reproduction will give all the appearance which such a volume would have after being submerged during four centuries.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. are about to issue a translation of the Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte, recently published by Prof. Möller, of Kiel, in the "Sammlung Theologischer Lehrbücher," issued by Mohr, of Freiburg.

The distinctive feature of the book is the fulness of the bibliography which accompanies each section. Based on an original study of the sources, it is intended to guide the student to these sources, and provides at each point full reference both to ancient literature and to the voluminous discussions of modern writers. The author's theological standpoint may be said to be that of moderate and enlightened conservatism. While the merits of Baur as a pioneer in early Church history are fully admitted, the views of that great scholar are not stated in the work, and have apparently little influence on it; it is allowed, for instance, that Peter probably was at Rome, and that the Ignatian Epistles are genuine. More is made of the minor development of the thought and life of the Church than of her outward fortunes, though these also receive their due. The translator is the Rev. Andrew Rutherford.

The Tower of Babel, being the first volume of the new collected edition of Mr. Alfred Austin's poetical works, will be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. on December 2. The other volumes will appear at monthly intervals.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week the Government Handbook, by Mr. Lewis Sergeant. Previous issues of this work, which describes the various forms and methods of the governments of the world, have appeared as "The Government Yearbook"; but the present will be its permanent title.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH FARRAN, OKEDEN, & WELSH have ready for immediate publication two new birthday books—"The Tom Moore" and "The Sir Walter Scott." The latter has been compiled by Miss Edith M. Welsh, the daughter of the publisher.

MR. H. DE B. GIBBINS, author of the Industrial History of England, is now editing a new series of works on social science, among the contributors to which will be the Rev. L. R. Phelps, of Oriel College; the Rev. J. Carter, of Pusey House; J. Frome Wilkinson, of Wadham College; Mr. George Howell, and Mr. G. J. Holyoake.

MESSRS. EGLINGTON & Co. are publishing a new volume of their "Lincoln's Inn Library," entitled From Bridge to Bridge, by Mrs. Isabella Gilchrist.

MR. GOSSE's little book on Robert Browning has run into a second edition, which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately. The same publisher has in hand a new edition of Basque Legends, retold by Mme. Montevio, and illustrated in photogravure by Mr. Harold Copping.

THE Scots Observer will henceforth appear under the style and title of the National Observer. The staff of the journal, which is edited by Mr. W. E. Henley, remains unaltered.

A DRAMATIC reading of "Colombe's Birthday" will be given by the Nomad Society at University College, Gower Street, on Thursday next, November 27. Application for tickets should be made to the hon. secretary of the Browning Society, Mr. E. E. Davies, 2, Wallace Road, Canonbury, N.

PROF. REMIGIUS STÖLZLE, of Würzburg, who recently discovered some important writings of Giordano Bruno, has now succeeded also in finding Abelard's treatise, De Unitate et Trinitate Divina, which was believed to have been lost. It is contained in a MS. originally belonging to the Cistercian abbey of Heilsbronn (between Ansbach and Nuremberg), and now to the university of Erlangen. Its title is Petri Albiolardi Capitula Librorum de Trinitate. In an essay by Prof. Stölzle, it is made highly probable, if not certain, that the MS. in question is no other than the treatise for which Abelard was condemned, in 1121, by the Church Council at Soissons.

CORRECTION:—In Mr. Alfred Austin's poem, "A November Note," in the ACADEMY of last week, the third and fourth lines of verse iv. should have been printed as follows:—

"Thus, poet, be intoned
Your own foreshadowed strain."

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE Christmas number of the English Illustrated Magazine will be, as usual, of double size. It opens with an article on Sulgrave, "the ancestral home of the Washingtons," written by Mr. William Clarke, and illustrated by Mr. Ernest G. Beach. The frontispiece is an engraving, by Mr. O. Lacour, from Stuart's portrait of George Washington, now in the possession of Lord Rosebery. Among other articles, we may mention "Inns and Taverns of Old London," by Mr. Philip Norman; "Nooks and Corners of Westminster Abbey," by Archdeacon Farrar; a new rendering of the Batrachomyomachia, by Prof. Kynaston, of Durham; and a Swiss story, by Mrs. W. K. Clifford, entitled "Wooden Tony." All of these are abundantly illustrated.

THE Christmas number of Scribner's will contain the first of Sir Edwin Arnold's articles on Japan, illustrated by Mr. Robert Blum; "The True Story of Amy Robsart," by Mr. W. H. Rideing, with special illustrations of Kenilworth Castle and its neighbourhood; and an historical account of Christie's sale-room and its frequenters, by Mr. T. Humphry Ward, with illustrations by Mr. T. Harry Furniss.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, one of the authors of "Come Forth," will contribute to the Christmas number of the Century a story entitled "Fourteen to One."

MR. ANDREW LANG's version of "The Golden Fleece" begins in the December number of St. Nicholas.

IN the December number of Cassell's Family Magazine, which begins a new volume, the following three serial stories will be commenced: "The Temptation of Dulce Carruthers," by Mrs. Weigall, which obtained the first prize in the recent competition; "A Sharp Experience," by the author of "A Step in the Dark"; and "By Word of Mouth," by Thomas Keyworth. Among other features of the new volume will be "Some Strange Family Histories"; "Hints to Landlords, Tenants, Employers, Servants, &c.," by a family lawyer; "How to Choose your New House"; "My Daughters—their Start in Life, and how they prospered"; "Full Lengths and Thumb-nails"; "Sketches of Life and Character in Town and Country"; "Our Family of Boys, how we launched them in the World"; "New Suggestions for Home Work and Employments, some Remunerative, some Decorative," &c., &c.

MR. CLEMENT SCOTT will contribute an article on "The Worship of Bad Plays" to the December number of the Theatre.

Judy's Annual for 1891, which is entitled "Behind the Scenes," will contain thirty-two stories written by as many actors and actresses, with abundant illustrations.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Congregation at Oxford, on Tuesday last, the proposed statute admitting women to the medical examinations was finally rejected by a majority of eighty-nine votes to seventy-five. This result is largely due to the exertions of Prof. Case, Chandler's successor in the Waynflete chair of moral and metaphysical philosophy.

THE Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies has chosen for the subject of his Hulsean Lectures—to be delivered at Cambridge on Sunday, November 30, and the three following Sundays—"Order and Progress, as involved in the Spiritual Constitution of Society."

THE Oxford University Dramatic Society have, after some vacillation, decided to perform "King John" next term. They had originally proposed a performance in Greek of the "Frogs" of Aristophanes.

MR. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL has accepted an invitation to deliver an address at the annual public meeting of the Russell Club, at Oxford, on Friday next, November 28. He has chosen for his subject "Parties without Principles."

PRINCIPAL FAIRBAIRN is delivering a series of addresses on Sunday evening at Mansfield College, Oxford, upon "Religious Thought in the Nineteenth Century." To-morrow he will treat of Cardinal Newman, and the week following of Matthew Arnold.

MR. JOSEPH FOSTER, whose four volumes of Fasti Oxonienses, based upon the matriculation register from 1714 to 1886, are invaluable to genealogical students, has just issued the first volume (A—D) of another series of the work, covering the period from 1500 to 1713. The admirable Registers of Mr. Andrew Clark stop at present at 1621.

THE Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society will henceforth be published by Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons, at the Cambridge University Press Warehouse. The forthcoming part will contain "Horatiana," by Prof. Postgate and Dr. C. A. M. Fennell; "The Origin of the Latin Pluperfect Subjunctive," by Mr. P. Giles; and Notes on some MSS. of Herodotus," by Mr. G. C. Macaulay.

THE first assembly of the Old Students' Association of University College, London, will be held at the College on Wednesday, November 26, when the president of the association, Mr. Henry Morley, will deliver an address. Former students wishing to join the association should communicate with Mr. Morley, 29, Kylemerer-road, Hampstead.

THE first election will shortly be made to a studentship in English language and literature on the Quain foundation at University College, London. The value of the studentship is £150 a year. Candidates must have attended for at least three terms one or more classes in English at the College.

A FELLOWSHIP in history, of the value of £150 per annum, tenable for two years, has recently been founded at Owens College by bequest of the late Mr. T. E. Jones. The first election will be made in December. Candidates must have been day students in the college for not less than three sessions, and must have obtained a degree in the history honours school of the Victoria University. It is proposed, so soon as the fund permits, to found a second undergraduate scholarship for the promotion of the study of history on the lines of the present Bradford Scholarship.

PROF. G. J. ROMANES is at present delivering a course of six lectures at Edinburgh, as Rosebery lecturer, on "Post-Darwinian Questions."

OBITUARY.

SIR JOHN FRANCIS DAVIS, BART.

By the death of Sir John Davis, which took place at his residence, Hollywood, near Bristol, on November 14, in the ninety-seventh year of his age, we have lost not only a veteran Chinese scholar, but also the last surviving link that connected us with the India of last century.

He was born in India in 1795, being the son of Samuel Davis, himself a distinguished orientalist—one of the founders of the Bengal Asiatic Society, and the first European to make a scientific study of Hindu astronomy. His father happened to be judge at Benares in 1799, when the deposed Nawab of Oudh, Wazir Ali Khan, attacked and murdered the resident, Mr. Cherry. The safety of the other English inhabitants was largely due to the bravery of Mr. Davis, who withdrew his wife and children to a terrace on the house-top, and defended the stair against repeated attacks, armed only with a native pike. Many years later Sir John Davis wrote an account of this incident in a little book which is now rare; and he placed the historic pike as crest above his coat-of-arms when a baronetcy was conferred upon him for his services in China.

Samuel Davis afterwards became a director of the East India Company, and appointed his son at the age of about seventeen to a writership at the Canton factory. Here, from 1813 to 1817, he was thrown into the company of Manning, the Tibetan traveller and friend of Charles Lamb, of whose amiable but eccentric manners he has left a record. He took a prominent part in all the negotiations with China during the first half of the century, being attached to Lord Amherst's embassy in 1816, and again in 1834 being appointed to take the place of Lord Napier on his death. After some years' rest in England, which he devoted to literature, he returned to China in 1843, as chief superintendent of trade and governor of Hongkong, in succession to Sir Henry Pottinger. He finally retired in 1848. His period of service thus bridges over the transfer of our relations with China from the Company to the Crown.

Sir John Davis was ever active in promoting the study of the Chinese language, and of Chinese life and manners, both by precept and example. His house at Hollywood was stored with oriental objects of curiosity, some of which date from the time when his father accompanied as artist Bogle's mission to Tibet, sent by Warren Hastings in 1783.

His first book, we believe, was a translation into English of three Chinese novels—severally entitled "The Shadow in the Water," "The Twin Sisters," and "The Three Dedicated Chambers"—to which were appended Observations on the Language and Literature of China. This passed through more than one edition. He also published Chinese Moral Maxims, "with a free and verbal translation, and the grammatical structure of the language." But his most important work was China: A General Description of that Empire and its Inhabitants (2 vols. 1857), which has not been superseded—especially as regards its account of the popular literature—by the subsequent labours of Wells Williams and Gray. In this work he pays much attention to the Chinese drama, of which he translates, as a specimen, "The Heir in Old Age."

Sir John Davis's memory will be preserved by the Chinese Scholarship at Oxford, founded in 1877 and called by his name, to the endowment of which he himself largely contributed. Now that he is gone, Mr. Brian Houghton Hodgson, his junior by some three years, becomes the de jure of English orientalists.

J. S. C.

JUSTICE O'HAGAN.

THE Hon. Mr. Justice O'Hagan, who died on November 12, was the last survivor but one of that band of Young Irishmen who made the fifth decade of this century so important an epoch for the history and the literature of their country. Imaginative, ardent, and intensely patriotic, they did much to redeem Ireland from the old charge of being "incuriosa suorum," while at the same time there was in them a fund of veracity and good sense which made their organ, the Nation, a determined foe to the unreal and unscholarly theorizing which had so discredited the study of Irish history and antiquities. Besides his prose contributions, many spirited ballads and songs from the pen of John O'Hagan were published in the Nation; and his usual signature, Sliabh Cuileann (the Irish name for the great sugarloaf mountain in County Wicklow), was always looked for with high expectation. Perhaps the finest of his poems is one which was not identified as his until it was re-published some eighteen months ago in the Irish Monthly, a short idyll of rural life, beginning with the lines:—

He came across the meadow-path
That summer eve of eves.

The tenderness of feeling and the exquisite melody of this poem make it a thing apart among the dashing political ballads, to which he devoted most of his talent.

His character, which was a rare mixture of gentleness, sincerity, and gaiety, endeared him to all with whom he became associated throughout his whole life. And at the end, as his early friend McNevin said, he was constantly disturbing his friends' estimate of him by winning success in unexpected directions. After the disastrous end of the '48 movement he turned his main energies to the law, and ultimately attained the highest success in Chancery practice. The great literary work of his later years is his spirited and scholarly translation of the "Song of Roland," of which the first edition was published in 1880. Besides occasional magazine articles, we may also mention a critical memoir (published in 1887) of his friend Sir Samuel Fergusson, the author of poems of heroic power too little appreciated in England.

On the foundation of Mr. Gladstone's Land Commission Court in 1881, Mr. O'Hagan was made one of its judges. In this position his unalterable rectitude, and his resolve to prevent the Land Act from being made an instrument of revolution, made him a mark for public attacks, to which he had hitherto been a stranger, and which he never condescended to notice. It may truly be said, however, that he was followed to the grave, not only by troops of friends, but by the regrets of the whole nation.

T. W. R.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ELF; THAT IS "WHITE."*

A SMALL thing white from tip to toe,
A thing all made of light and snow,
Having a bit of all things white
In earth and heaven that meet the sight:
Across its brow a white sun-ray,
Two whiter moon-beams stowed away
Beneath its hair, where star-beams stray:
A lily's whiteness in its feet,
A poppy's in its eyelids sweet;
A daisy's, pink-tipp'd, in each hand,
The sea-foam's (newly washed astrand)
Upon its knees, with cloud-edge white
Adown its arms that flash in night—
Yes, white thou art from toe to tip—
Nay, stop! thou hast a crimson lip:
Thy starry eyes shoot beams of blue,
Thy sunny hair's of golden hue:
Yet robed and wrapt about with light,
Well may men call thee, small thing, white.

ELSA D'ESTERRE-KEELING.

* I have found only one etymologist who will admit this. He is right. How do I know? Because I have seen an elf. It is the one which I have seen that I describe.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THERE is yet another new quarterly, which we ought to have noticed together with the other two last week. This is the International Journal of Ethics, printed at Philadelphia, and published in this country by Mr. Fisher Unwin. Its chief aims are to promote the study of ethics in its relation to conduct, and to discuss moral problems suggested by the growing complexity of modern life. Perhaps our readers will get a fair idea of its special character when we say that the English editorial committee comprises Dr. Stanton Coit, of the South Place Institute; Mr. John S. Mackenzie, of Owens College, the brilliant author of a recent "Introduction to Social Philosophy"; and Mr. J. H. Muirhead, of the Ethical Society. The first number promises exceedingly well. It opens with an essay by Prof. Henry Sidgwick, of Cambridge, on "The Morality of Strife," in which he discusses, with his usual independence and ingenuity, though without any very definite conclusion, the moral duties connected not only with war but also with political and economic struggles. But undoubtedly the article that will attract most attention is that on "The Law of Relativity in Ethics," by Prof. Harald Høffding, of Copenhagen, whose name, we venture to assert, is destined to become much better known than it is at present in this country. His philosophical standpoint is that of scientific utilitarianism, very similar to that of some of our own younger men. Some of his books have been translated into German, but none (so far as we know) into English. His article alone would make this review worthy of commendation to thoughtful students.

THE Rev. E. Maude Cole contributes an interesting article on "The Entrenchments on the Yorkshire Wolds" to the Antiquary. These earthworks have not been studied as they deserve. They point to a time—or rather times—when those bleak regions must have been thickly populated. It is evident that they belong to widely different periods. Some are possibly as early as the bronze age, others are not improbably as late as the time of the Norse pirates, or even perhaps of our early Norman kings. Mrs. Charlotte C. Stopes has a clearly written and thoughtful paper on Leonard Stopes, a poet who flourished in the reign of Mary Tudor. Very few of his verses seem to have come down to us; but one exists in the form of an unique broadside in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries. It is entitled "Ave Maria, in commendation of our most virtuous Queene." The poetry is not of a high class; but it is poetry, not merely rhyming jingles. Mrs. Stopes has discovered another poem, unsigned, which she attributes to the same author. At present little is known of his life. The few facts that have been discovered concerning him are arranged by Mrs. Stopes; and we trust that her article may lead to further discoveries. Mr. W. H. St. John Hope, the learned secretary of the Society of Antiquaries, contributes a paper on the excavations at Silchester, and Mr. R. C. Hope a continuation of his former articles on "Holy Wells."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BÉRALDI, H. Les Graveurs du XIX<sup>e</sup> Siècle. T. 10. Paris: Conquet. 10 fr.
BOUCHOT, H. Les ex-libris et les marques de possession du livre. Paris: Rue de Seine, 76. 6 fr.
CUCHEVAL-CLARIGNY. Les finances de la France de 1870 à 1891. Paris: Perrin. 7 fr. 50 c.
DUPUY, Ad. L'état et l'université. Paris: Cerf. 3 fr. 50 c.
ENFER, le comte. Problèmes de sentiments. Paris: Flammarion. 3 fr. 50 c.
FAN-TA-GEN. La Cité française, p.p. G. Eugène Simon. Paris: Nouvelle Revue. 3 fr. 50 c.
HERBEL'S, F., Briefwechsel m. Freunden u. berühmten Zeitgenossen. Hrg. v. F. Bamberg. 1. Bd. Berlin: Grote. 12 M.

- LANG, K. Der Papstest. Ein Beitrag zur Kultur- u. Kunstgeschichte d. Reformationsalters. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 4 M.
- MANNFELD, B. Aus Alt-Brosiau u. Schlesien. Oppeln: Franck. 14 M.
- MATAIGNÉ, H. Nouvelle géographie de la France. Paris: Le Soudier. 20 fr.
- QUERNAY, F. Œuvres économiques et philosophiques de, p. p. Aug. Oncken. Paris: Peelman. 25 fr.
- ROSCHER, W. H. Studien zur griechischen Mythologie u. Kulturgeschichte vom vergleichenden Standpunkte. 4. Hft. Ueber Selene u. Verwandtes. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
- ROVINSKI, D. L'œuvre gravé de Rembrandt. Paris: Rapilly. 400 fr.
- SCHREIBER, Th. Die hellenistischen Reliefbilder. 8. Lfg. Leipzig: Engelmann. 20 M.
- SCHULTZ, W. Die Harmonie in der Baukunst. Nachweisg. der Proportionalität in den Bauwerken d. griech. Altertums. 1. Th. Hannover-Linden: Manz. 10 M.

THEOLOGY.

- DORLLINGER, J. v. Kleinere Schriften, gedruckte u. ungedruckte. Hrg. v. F. H. Reusch. Stuttgart: Cotta. 11 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- COLUMBUS, Ch. Logbuch, Aufgezeichnet v. C. M. Seyppel. Düsseldorf: Bagel. 6 M.
- GEORGIUS CYPRII descriptio orbis romani. Accedit Leonis imperatoris diatyposis gemina adhuc inedita. Ed. H. Gelzer. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M.
- HANSEN, E. 2. Abth. 1491-1476. Bearb. v. G. Frh. v. der Ropp. 6. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 23 M.
- HOTMANN, Ch. Studien zur vorgeschichtlichen Archäologie. Mit e. Vorworte v. L. Lindenschmit. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 7 M.
- KURSKA, J. T. Das japanische Geldwesen. Geschichtlich u. kritisch dargestellt. Berlin: Prayer. 2 M. 80 Pf.
- LOGBUCH, das geheim, d. Christoph Columbus. Düsseldorf: Rangette. 5 M.
- MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Legum sectio II. Capitularia regum Francorum, denuo edd. A. Boretius et V. Krause. Tomi II. pars 1. 7 M. Scriptorum, qui vernacula lingua usi sunt, tomi V. pars 1. 24 M. Hannover: Hahn.
- PREISER, F. E. Jurisprudenz Babylonicae quae supersunt. 2 M. Babylonische Verträge d. Berliner Museums. 28 M. Berlin: Peiser.
- QUELLEN u. Forschungen zur Geschichte der Abtei Reichenau. I. Die Reichenauer Urkundenfälschungen, untersucht v. K. Brandl. Heidelberg: Winter. 12 M.
- ROHRBECHT, E. Bibliotheca geographica Palaestinae. Berlin: Reuther. 24 M.
- SCHMIDT, B. Korkyraische Studien. Beiträge zur Topographie Korkyras u. zur Erklärung d. Thukydides, Xenophon u. Diodoros. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- WALAFRIDI STRABONIS liber de exordiis et incrementis quarundam in observationibus ecclesiasticis rerum. Textum recensuit etc. A. Knoepfer. München: Stahl. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- KERRY, B. System e. Theorie der Grenzbegriffe. 1. Thl. Hrg. v. G. Kohn. Wien: Deuticke. 5 M.
- KLEIN, E. Vorlesungen üb. die Theorie der elliptischen Modulfunctionen, ausgearb. v. R. Fricke. 1. Bd. Grundlegung der Theorie. Leipzig: Teubner. 24 M.
- SAGORSKI, E. u. G. SCHNEIDER. Flora der Centralcarpathen. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Kummer. 6 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ALLMER et DISSARD. Musée de Lyon: inscriptions antiques. T. 3. Paris: Picard. 15 fr.
- BAUSCH, J. Aus Epidauros. Eine epigraph. Studie. Leipzig: Hirzel. 6 M.
- BLOCH, A. Phoenicisches Glossar. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- CZYCKIEWICZ, A. De Tacitei sermonis proprietatibus, praecipue qua ad poetarum dicendi genus pertinent. Pars I. Brody: West. 1 M.
- DIETZE, J. Quaestiones Hyginianae. Altona: Lorenzen. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- SITTL, C. Die Gebärden der Griechen u. Römer. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ORDER OF LETTERS IN THE RUNIC "FUTHORK."

Cambridge: Nov. 17, 1890.

I here propose a reason for the order of letters in the runic "futhork," which is, I suppose, a mere notion of my own. It will give occasion for the infallible critics to put me down; or it may, happily, enable some one who understands the matter better than I do to explain the whole story fully. My theory is simply this: that the object of the arrangement was to give the letters the value of a charm, for the purpose of driving away evil spirits, curing toothache, and the like.

I begin by drawing attention to the order of the runes in the poem on the Paternoster called "Solomon and Saturn." This order was avowedly made for the purpose of a charm. The poet says, in Kemble's translation, p. 139—

"he may the hated spirit, the fighting fiend, bring to flight, if thou at first over him earnestly bringest prologa prima, whose name is P," &c. The power of the charm is insisted upon at great length.

The actual order of letters in this Latin charm is: P, A, T, E, R, N, O, S, Q, U, I [inserted by Grein], L and C [which I explain by C, L], F, M, G, D, H. I am not aware that any one has explained this order right through, so as to show why G, D, and H come at the end; but it is easy enough.

Take the words of the Lord's Prayer:

"Pater noster, qui es in celis, sanctificetur nomen tuum, veniat [not adveniat] regnum tuum; fiat voluntas tua sicut in celo et in terra; panem nostrum supersubstantialem da nobis hodie."

Now write down every letter in the order of its occurrence, taking each one once only, i.e., neglecting it when it recurs. We then get this succession: p, a, t, e, r, n, o, s, q, u, i, c, l, f, m, g, b, d, h.

Compare this with the former list, and the two are identical, except that the latter contains b additionally. This is past all accident, and I suppose even the wisest critic will admit at once that I am right so far.

I suppose that the order of the "futhork" was devised by an Englishman; we have already seen that the English knew how to arrange letters to make a charm. I further suppose that the particular "futhork" which he arranged was the longer one of 24 letters, given by Prof. Rhys (Lectures on Welsh Philology, second ed., p. 321). It is as follows: f, u, th, o [or a], r, k, g, w, h, n, i, y, eu, p, z, s, t, b, e, m, l, ng, o, d. How did he arrive at this result? Thus: he took the idea from the Paternoster, but wanted a new letter-order of his own. So he thought he would translate it; and, at the same time, he thought he would simply take out the initial letters, as being easier to get at and to remember. Probably he was a bard, accustomed to deal with initials. His translation was something of this sort, omitting accents:

"Faeder ure, thu on heofonum; halgod-sy [all one phrase] nama thin; thin rice cume; geweorthe willa thin, ge on heofonum ge in eorðan."

He now picked out his initials, omitting every one that recurred; and he got this order: f, u, th, o, h, n, r, c, g, w, i, eo.

Somehow, this order received a slight dislocation; the clause "sanctificetur nomen tuum," giving h and n, was shifted a little further on; and so it came to be: f, u, th, o, r, c, g, w, h, n, i (y), eo. This now agrees precisely with a large portion of the real "futhork"; for it is admitted that y was put in afterwards, after i; If not, I will postulate as much.

And now our ingenious friend saw that he had come to a dead lock. He could not, by such means, get hold of p, b, and other letters at all. What was to be done? He contemplated his next clause, viz., "panem nostrum supersubstantialem nobis da hodie." [I change the usual order of "da nobis."]

But here is the p required. So he changed his tactics, and reverted to the old plan of taking the Latin words, and picking out the letters one by one, as in the first instance. He then got (omitting a and all such as have occurred already) these: p, e, m, s, t, b, l, o, d.

This was also slightly dislocated in the course of tradition; the e and m were shifted further on, to follow the b instead of the p. Also, z and ng, which could not possibly be inserted by either plan, were forcibly put in; the z before the s, the ng near the end. This done, the order became: p, (z), s, t, b, e, m, l, (ng), o, d.

The chances are a thousand to one against this being all mere coincidence. We can actually thus account for the whole alphabet from end to end; and none of the assumptions are at all wild.

The assumptions are: that the order was invented for magical purposes by an Englishman; that he followed the old tradition, which ascribed enormous powers to the Paternoster; that he could not work his translation through to the end, and so fell back on the original; that his system was imperfectly remembered, and dislocated in two places by tradition; and that letters which could not otherwise be got in were put in forcibly where they would best go. This last assumption has been made before. I do not know whether the others have.

Either I have discovered the clue to a long unsolved puzzle, and may claim the credit for it; or else I am all abroad, and deserve to be shown up. Which is it?

WALTER W. SKEAT.

"CROSS" AND "CROSIER."

Oxford: Nov. 7, 1890.

Prof. Skeat states in his Dictionary that "crosier" is ultimately related to the word "cross." His view is that both "cross" and "crosier" are derived ultimately from one and the same pre-Teutonic or Indo-European root SKARK, and that the radical meaning underlying the two words is "bent," "crooked." In the first place, Prof. Skeat derives the Romanic word "cross," through the Prov. croce and Lat. crucem, from the root SKARK. In the next place, he derives the word "crosier," through O.F. croce, from some Teutonic type, the source of our "crook"; and "crook" and its cognates he derives from the same root SKARK.

This can hardly be said to be a satisfactory account of the relation between these two words—"cross" and "crosier." The above derivation of the Lat. crucem is, I believe, due to the ingenuity of Fick (see his Dictionary, i., p. 813). So far as I know, it has not been accepted by any of the later Latin etymologists. Mr. Wharton, in his Etyma Latina, doubts whether crux is a native Latin, or even an Indo-European, word at all. There is, besides, a phonetic objection which might be made to Fick's etymology. Lat. cruc- could not come from a root SKARK or SKREK, as the weak grade of this root would in Latin necessarily be (s)corc- or (s)cure- (see Brugmann, § 295).

The derivation of "crook" (= Icel. krökr) from an Indo-European root SKARK or SKREK is quite out of the question; it is phonologically impossible. Grimm's law forbids it. How can the second k be the Teutonic representative of a pre-Teutonic k? Again, Indo-European initial sk- remains in Teutonic; the combination is never reduced to k. The fact is that the Indo-European root SKREK does appear within the Teutonic domain, as, for instance, in Dutch schraag and Mod. Germ. schräg (see Kluge's Dictionary s.v.), without any dropping off of initial s.

I think that the conclusion of all this must be that any ultimate connexion between "cross" and "crosier" is at least unproved; and that at all events, if any does exist, it is not through a common derivation from a root SKARK. What is the etymology of O.F. croce (pastoral staff)? I believe that it is identical in form with "crutch," O.E. cryce, O.H.G. chruccha—all being from a Teutonic type **kruckjō*. This would become in Romanic **krokja*, **cročja*, hence O.F. croce (see Horning's Introd., § 108). Whether "crutch" can be brought into ablaut relation with "crook" (= Icel. krökr) I do not know. I cannot account for the length of the vowel in the Icelandic word. Perhaps some Icelandic scholar will enlighten me on the vowel relation of krökr with O.H.G. chruccha, and also with Dutch kruck.

A. L. MAYHEW.

"THE MEMORIALS OF ST. EDMUNDSBURY."

Dublin: October 31, 1890.

I have been occupied with the autumn work of the Royal University, and unable till now to attend to my reviewer's reply, in the Saturday Review of September 27, to the letter which I wrote to the ACADEMY (August 23), respecting my "Memorials of St. Edmundsbury." You will, I am sure, consider it only just to allow me space in your columns for a rejoinder, especially as my reviewer does not withdraw the offensive observation on which I commented.

Two points remain, as to which I challenge the assertions of my reviewer—the relationship of Geoffrey of York and William Longsword to Fair Rosamond, and the interpretation of some words on p. 65, bearing on the dispute between Bishop Arfast and the convent.

Far be it from me to assert positively that either Geoffrey or William was the son of Fair Rosamond. But when the reviewer treats this affiliation, in the case of Geoffrey, as "a modern and completely exploded fable," the adoption of which is not "creditable," and so on, it is worth while to show that he is far more positive on the side of denial than the facts warrant. The biographer of Rosamond Clifford and her father, in the Dictionary of National Biography, brings forward no fact which precludes us from supposing that Rosamond was born as early as 1136 or 1135; if that were so, she may have been the mother of Geoffrey, who was certainly born, according to Giraldus, in or about 1151. It is true that Brompton, speaking of her connexion with the king after 1173, calls her "puella;" but on the other hand the language of Giraldus, a contemporary, rather points to a long period of intimacy previous to 1173. (See the passage from the De Principis Instit., quoted in the Dictionary of National Biography.) But there is the assertion of Walter Map in De Nugis Curialium, "that the mother of Geoffrey was one Ykenai, and that not Henry but some unknown person was his father." Of course, my reviewer can believe this if he likes; but I think that most reasonable persons, observing in what a strain of venomous malignity Map always writes of Geoffrey, will look upon the story of Ykenai as a piece of scandalous gossip to which no credit should be attached. At any rate, it is inconsistent with Giraldus's direct assertion that Henry was Geoffrey's father, and that he was the eldest of all Henry's sons (Vita Galfr.).

My reviewer indeed says that Henry's connexion with Rosamond must be dated at least twenty years after 1154, and took place after he had placed his queen in confinement in 1173. Could this be proved, certainly Rosamond could not have been the mother of Geoffrey. But the passage already referred to in the De Principis Instit. of Giraldus (qui adulter antea fuerat occultus effectus postea manifestus), and the corresponding passage in Brompton (p. 1151), show that the connexion existed before the queen's imprisonment, i.e., before 1173; how long before no one can tell. My reviewer's "certainty" that Rosamond was not Geoffrey's mother is therefore misplaced and rash. Bishop Stubbs, as might be expected, writes on the matter with the caution of a true critic; see his note at p. lxxv. of the third volume of Hoveden.

If Rosamond may have been the mother of Geoffrey of York, she may also have been the mother of William Longsword. In 1196 William received from King Richard, his half-brother, the hand of the heiress of the Earl of Salisbury in marriage (Hoveden, iv., 13). If he were then about twenty-six years old, he would have been born about 1170, at a time when, so far as we know, the connexion between Henry and Rosamond might have been on foot.

That historians are silent as to her maternity for five hundred years after her death proves nothing either way. In the case of distinguished men who had the misfortune of being illegitimate, their biographers, till quite recent times, were wont to wrap in a veil of decent silence the names and histories of the frail creatures who gave them birth.

I come now to the discussion of the "fatuous note" on p. 65 of my book. Referring to what I wrote to the ACADEMY, my reviewer says, that I am "angry" with him on this head; but he has no right to say so. I thought and said that his remark was "uncivil and intemperate"; I think and say so still; but that has nothing to do with anger. The question is whether my explanation of the words "ut intelligeret comitatus" as meaning "that the feeling of the county might be ascertained" be absurdly wrong and foolish. I will be as brief as I can; but I wish to make the matter clear, and that cannot be done in a single sentence.

A claim of Arfast, bishop of Thetford, to have jurisdiction over the monastery and town of Bury had to be decided. How should it be done? The monks appealed to exemptions from all episcopal control long before obtained from English kings and from the Holy See. But Arfast turned it into a question of property; he claimed the town as well as the monastery. Gregory VII. in 1073 had written to Lanfranc on his claim, and entirely disallowed it. Arfast did not desist, and began to press it on King William, not without mention of money-payment. The king then sent Lanfranc to Bury, to meet in the hundred-court there (not the "shire-moot," as our reviewer mistakes), deputies from nine counties who were to receive (and give) evidence as to the exercise of jurisdiction there in former times. The object of sending Lanfranc is said to be "ut intelligeret comitatus." This I explain as above stated. Perhaps "opinion" would be a better word than "feeling"; otherwise I believe the explanation to be correct. Ælfwine, the old abbot of Ramsay, testifies that the Abbey was free and independent in Canute's time. The deputies from the nine counties confirm his testimony. But this does not settle the matter. Arfast still solicits the king, who at last orders a regular trial in the Curia Regis. This is held at Winchester, and the claim of Arfast is finally condemned and annulled.

My reviewer's view of the transaction is certainly far different. "The King," he says, "ordered that the matter should be decided in the English fashion by a shire-moot, and the men of nine shires," after hearing evidence, "gave their judgment in favour of the abbey." [What sort of shire-moot this was, in which the men of "nine shires" acted as judges, he does not explain.] All was "in accordance with the legal procedure of the time."

I should like the Bishop of Oxford or Dr. Luard to judge between my reviewer's explanation and mine. He writes as if there were no such thing as a system of canon law and a Roman See. But these powers existed, and had to be reckoned with. The assembly gathered at Bury seems to have been the hundred-môt, strengthened by assessors from nine counties. It could usefully consider Arfast's demand, taken as a claim to property and secular lordship, but it could do little as to the ecclesiastical side of it. Hence its testimony in favour of the abbot settled nothing; the case had to be taken to the Curia Regis. The decision then was final, for it was in agreement with the judgment of the Holy See given in the Bull of Alexander II., ten years before (p. 345).

As to the merits of the system of monastic exemptions, I said what seemed to be necessary in my former letter. My reviewer condemns the system as 'injurious to the interests of the Church of England and of the nation, for it conduced to throw the weight of the monastic houses on the side of Rome, at a time when the Papacy was making aggressions on the liberties of our national church," &c., &c.

This may be sound Anglican doctrine, but it has nothing to do with historical science. At the same time it goes some way towards explaining the "acerbity" of tone of which I spoke in my first letter.

T. ARNOLD.

BACON'S ESSAYS.

London: Nov. 12, 1890.

Allow me to reply, as briefly as I can, to Mr. Reynolds. He calls me incorrect for saying that he considers Bacon's style obscure. I am glad to know that he acquits Bacon of obscurity; but in that case his critical remarks require revision. To say that "almost every page of the Essays bristles with difficulties," that "obscure, pedantic, ungrammatical, are the epithets which Bacon's style frequently calls up," to speak of "his wilfully perplexed style;" this is surely excessive if, after all, Mr. Reynolds does not consider Bacon's style obscure. If these grave charges be true, if "almost every page" bristles with difficulty, if Mr. Reynolds "frequently finds himself obliged to call Bacon obscure," then either I am right in saying what I said, or Mr. Reynolds's own style is infelicitous.

Of the passages quoted by Mr. Reynolds, which he calls "unintelligible," or "puzzling," or "hardly clear," I will only say that they are simple enough to those who are familiar with the usages of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; to modern readers who have not familiarised themselves with that period, no doubt, they are difficult. For example, in the first passage the meaning turns upon the peculiar signification of the word "health." In the other passages the difficulty, if such there be, lies in the closeness of thought, rather than in the obscurity of language. As Coleridge said of Persius, and Mr. Swinburne of Browning, Bacon is hard, not obscure.

Mr. Reynolds next finds fault with me for my defence of Bacon against his charge of "grave distortion," in quoting other authors. To take the first instance. Bacon quotes the words of Christ, recorded by St. Luke, upon faith and its disappearance from the world. The question implies a negative answer. It concludes a passage upon the divine vengeance, following the parable of the unjust judge. Taken so with its context, it has the force of a prediction. It is not a vague, isolated saying. St. Cyprian, as Mr. Reynolds tells us, so interprets the passage. The case stands thus: a negative question about future times in the mouth of an omniscient and infallible speaker—I adopt Bacon's position as to that—can be nothing else than a prediction: a prediction of what? Who is to say? What is the meaning of placet here? What is the logical connexion of the words? Bacon has one view about it; Mr. Reynolds has another. Why should one accuse the other of "grave distortion"? Bacon has every right to turn the form of the words from a question implying a negative to a definite assertion of the negative. He has in no sense distorted the words. As to their application, Bacon has at least given a plausible view. Mr. Reynolds appears to misunderstand my references to Beza and the Vulgate. I did not use them as "secondhand helps" to my poor Greek scholarship, but as examples of various translations of various force in bringing out the negative. Beza does this strongly: the Vulgate delicately and with hesitation, as it were. Here, again, Mr. Reynolds has either changed his opinions or expressed himself carelessly in the first instance. He now acknowledges that "undoubtedly" the question implies a negative. In his preface he wrote: "The question is simply asked whether it will be so or no." One of these statements must give way.

As to the quotation: "Pulchrorum (etiam) autumnus pulcher," I conceive, with all respect to Mr. Reynolds, that he misses my meaning. The fault is mine; I mean that the words (with or without "etiam") state that "the autumn of the beautiful is beautiful." Of course, "etiam" qualifies the statements implying surprise, or some such thing; and, so qualified, Bacon does not accept it. But he might have done so. The old are often more beautiful than the young, says Bacon; even the old age of beauty is beautiful, says the quotation. Bacon seizes upon the confession that there is beauty in the old, which is the common point of agreement. He might have preserved "etiam," and then shown, or left his readers to see, that "etiam" expresses an unnecessary surprise, upon the principles just laid down in his previous sentences. He does not do this, because the literary license of the day in matters of quotation allowed him to omit the word; but its insertion would have made no difference, would not have gone against his argument. Surely this is not "grave distortion"; it is only an economy, justifiable, if one considers the case well.

Finally, Mr. Reynolds claims that "an overwhelming authority" is in favour of modernised spelling. I do not doubt it, if modern authority be meant. But I am content to protest, in the company of Johnson, Lamb, Landor, and Pattison, to name no others, against "so wanton and unnecessary" a practice.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

PROPOSED EMENDATIONS IN HARL. MS. 2252.

London: Nov. 16, 1890.

I am sorry to find in my letter under the above heading, in the ACADEMY of November 15, that some errors of the press were allowed to pass my notice, which somewhat obscure two passages.

On p. 450, read: "3. Ff. 103-114 form a 'gathering'"; ibid., lower down, read: "The new scribe, probably forgetting the intended arrangement, did what often happens, viz., he wrote on the second leaf of the same sheet of which fol. 102 is the first half," &c.; on p. 454, for "Boes" read "Bors."

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 23, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Portugal," by Senhor J. Batalha Reis.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Moral Tales," by Miss Clara E. Collet.

MONDAY, Nov. 24, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Conservation of Paintings and Drawings," by Prof. A. H. Church.

5 p.m. London Institution: "Prosper Mérimée," by Mr. Walter Pater.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Gaseous Illuminants," I., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Matabele and Mashona Lands," by Mr. E. A. Maund.

TUESDAY, Nov. 25, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Vibratory Movements of Locomotives," by Prof. John Milne and Mr. John McDonald.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "The Yuraks of Asia Minor," by Mr. J. Theodore Bent; "Stone Circles in Wiltshire," by Mr. A. L. Lewis.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 26, 8 p.m. Geological: "An Experimental Investigation of the Law that limits the Action of Flowing Streams," by R. D. Oldham; and "The Rocks of North Devon," by Dr. H. Hicks.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Physical Tests in Competitive Examinations," by Mr. Francis Galton.

THURSDAY, Nov. 27, 6 p.m. London Institution: "Pictures of the Year," illustrated, by Mr. Henry Blackburn.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Adjourned Discussion, "The Efficiency of Secondary Cells," and "The Chemistry of Secondary Cells," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton, and Messrs. C. G. Lamb and E. W. Smith.

8 p.m. Browning Society: Dramatic Reading of "Colombe's Birthday," by Members of the Nomad Society.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Nov. 28, 5 p.m. Physical: "Secondary Batteries," by Dr. Gladstone and Mr. W. Hibbert; "An Illustration of Ewing's Theory of Induced Magnetism," by Prof. S. P. Thompson.

SCIENCE.

BRUGMANN'S COMPARATIVE INDO-EUROPEAN GRAMMAR.

Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der indo-germanischen Sprachen. Vol. II. Part 1. By K. Brugmann. (Strassburg: Karl Trübner.)

THE arduous work undertaken by Prof. Brugmann is now drawing to a close. The first part of the last volume has appeared, and it will not be long before the second and concluding part is given to the world. A volume on comparative syntax has been placed in the competent hands of Prof. Delbrück; and when this has been published the comparative philologist of the Indo-European languages will have before him a complete account of the results that have been obtained in his branch of study up to the present time. We shall have, as it were, an accurate map of the present condition of the comparative philology of the Indo-European family of speech.

Prof. Brugmann has at length reached the most difficult portion of his task. So long as he was dealing with phonology alone he had little more to do than register the laws and facts which have been discovered by science. But an investigation of the formation of words and the origin of flexion involves other questions besides purely phonological ones. We have to leave the solid ground of ascertained facts and enter the disputable domain of theory. In such a branch of research other qualities are required from the student besides those of patient inquiry and the power to accumulate materials. He must be accustomed to weigh evidence, to balance degrees of probability, and follow clues however slight. His range of vision, moreover, must not be confined to the narrow circle of the Indo-European family of speech, but extend over the other languages of the world. He must, in short, be a linguistic philosopher as well as a comparative philologist.

I do not think that Prof. Brugmann's strength lies in this direction. He has devoted himself too exclusively to a single group of tongues to escape the restrictedness of vision natural to the specialist. When he touches on the question of the origin of flexion, he shows himself still dominated by the ideas which Bopp translated out of the language of the Hindu grammarians into that of European scholars. No one has done more than himself to demolish the foundations on which those ideas rested, or to substitute a process of creative assimilation for one of mechanical decay. It is true that he speaks hesitatingly, and with a full admission of the impossibility of proving that there ever was a period in Indo-European grammar when agglutination took the place of flexion; but that he should speak thus at all, and give the weight of his name to the attenuated theories of an earlier age of philology, justifies the criticism with which Prof. Fick visited the Neo-grammarians some years ago. I have, however, dealt with the question of the origin of flexion in a review of a former volume of Prof. Brugmann's work, and will not, therefore, enlarge upon it now. I would only ask him how, upon Bopp's hypothesis, it is possible to explain the extremely limited number of flexional suffixes, or the existence of so many which we know to have had their origin in analogy?

The bibliography given by Prof. Brugmann under each division of his subject is full and complete. I am glad to find that it shows no trace of that tendency to refer only to German writers which was observable in his first volume. No one who reads through the list of works cited in the present volume can accuse him of chauvinism. The list is as cosmopolitan as scientific philology itself. Another excellent feature of the book is the comparative paradigms, which have been drawn up with great labour and care. They add considerably to its practical usefulness.

In conclusion, I would congratulate not only Prof. Brugmann, but the public for which he writes, upon a work which will long remain the indispensable text-book of the comparative grammarian. It is a monument of labour, sobriety, and research. And it will teach a lesson which is much needed by students of language, the lesson of the limitations within which the comparative philologist must work. Nowhere else can he learn more plainly how few relatively are the words of which the etymology is indisputable, how impossible it is to reach beyond the materials at our disposal, and above all how definite and clear are the lines which mark off an Indo-European language from the other manifold idioms of the world.

A. H. SAYCE.

THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY.

WE quote the following from the New York Nation:—

"Princeton: October 23.

"The fall meeting of this society was held in the Murray Hall of the Philadelphia Society, Princeton, on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning, the president, the Rev. Dr. Hayes Ward, in the chair.

"President William A. P. Martin, of Peking, read a paper on 'Chinese Ideas of Inspiration.' Dr. Martin emphasized the necessity of clearly distinguishing between the materialism of the Taoist, the idealism of the Buddhist, and the ethical Saduceism of the Confucianist. The Taoist believes that those who attain immortality form a pantheon which rules over the destinies of man. From this belief a system was evolved very similar to our spiritualism. Only the spirits of a favoured few are able to resist the inroads of decay and to defy destruction. Of these the bodies become spirit-bodies and take on new powers. They have the possibility of spirit manifestation and of renewing their intercourse with human beings, especially when in a hypnotic state. One of the chief sources through which spirits manifest themselves is the magic pen, a precursor of the planchette. A large literature, supposed to have been communicated in this way, has grown up which claims to be a revelation.

"The Buddhists in China have adopted this practice of procuring spiritual manifestations, notwithstanding the many protests against the great forgeries committed in its name. For the faithful, however, there is no form of existence higher than that of Buddha, no authority beyond his. For the Buddhist the only question that remains is the authenticity of the writings ascribed to the founder of his religion.

"Confucianism is really the religion of China. Its canon consists of nine books, pre-Confucian and post-Confucian. To the former belong the four books edited by the great master, and the 'Ti-Ki,' the book of rites, which preserves the traditions of earlier ages. Only two sketches therein are claimed to be of supernatural origin. The one is the table of mystic symbols, said to have been brought from the waters of the Yellow River on the back of a dragon-shaped horse. These are the figures on the shell of the tortoise, which ceased to be consulted only when the book was accepted as divine. The other sketch is the outline of a political philosophy, called the Hung-fan, the 'Great Plan,' which was brought to the Emperor Zu from the waters of the river Loh by a similar monster. Both stories are endorsed by Confucius. The 'Book of Odes' (1000 B.C.) goes further, and says that God reveals his will through man, and raises up teachers. These are the Sheng-jin, the 'wise men,' whom posterity honoured as divine messengers. Confucius is the highest of them all. He himself is confident that his teaching comes from heaven, but not by supernatural means. To the Chinese, Confucius is not a god, but a perfect man; not a prophet, but a constant manifestation of ideal excellence. As such his writings are sacred, and not to be altered."

"Prof. H. Collitz (Bryn Mawr) presented an able contribution to the phonology of the European and Indo-Iranian languages, in a paper entitled 'On the Existence of a Primitive Aryan sh.' Dr. A. V. W. Jackson (Columbia), in his paper 'On Avestan aydshahuntā (molten metal) in the Gathas,' showed, by a reference to Bundahish xxx. 17-32, that by this word Zoroaster meant not the sword, but a fiery flood of molten metal. He taught that, at the Judgment, this metal would cleanse the world. In this way we can explain why in later times Khshathra Vairya presided over metals. In another paper, 'Avestan Notes,' Dr. Jackson suggested a parallel for the Gathas to the thought 'weighed in the balance and found wanting.' Dr. W. R. Martin (Trinity), in a paper on 'The Position of the Pahlavi Question,' traced the development of the study of this important question, dwelling particularly upon the method to be pursued."

"Prof. W. D. Whitney (Yale) sent a critique of Boehlingk's edition of the Upanishads, in which he showed the importance and the trustworthiness of this edition of the Sanskrit classic. Prof. M. Bloomfield (Johns Hopkins) explained an obscure passage in the funeral hymn, Rig Veda x. 16, 13-14, by copious allusions taken from the later literature. In a paper 'On Mourning Women in the Atharva Veda,' Prof. Bloomfield showed that there were good grounds for assuming that professional mourners existed as early as Vedic times. The Rev. Joseph K. Wight (New Hamburg, N.Y.) compared the views of Brahmanism and Confucianism in regard to the origin of the universe, in a paper on 'Early Cosmogonies of India and China.'

"Prof. M. Jastrow (Pennsylvania) spoke on 'The Founding of Carthage.' He dwelt on the important part played by Cyprus in the founding of this city, and endeavoured to fix the date at which it occurred. Prof. Jastrow also submitted some advanced sheets of an Assyrian Glossary prepared by the Semitic Seminary of Johns Hopkins University. Prof. G. K. Moore (Andover) explained that the usual translation of Unaan, 'lowland,' rested simply upon an old error. Rosenmüller had been misled by the Latin word demissus in Golius's lexicon. In 1833 Gesenius adopted the explanation of Rosenmüller, and it has in this way become a fixed tradition in our dictionaries. Prof. Moore likewise explained that the place in old Judea called Qirjath Sepher (Josh. xv. 15, etc.) and translated 'Book-city,' should be read Qirjath Sephar, i.e., 'Border-town.' Prof. W. R. Harper (Yale), in 'Notes on the Syntax of the Tiglath Pileser Inscriptions,' gave a study of the syntax of these inscriptions, as compared with the syntax of the Sennacherib (Taylor) inscription. Prof. Harper dwelt specially on the accusative and the attributive adjective. The accusative ending he finds used almost with the rigidity of the Arabic. The use of the adjective is also very rigid. There is little or no disagreement between adjective and substantive. The number of cases of a noun in the accusative followed by an adjective in the accusative is strikingly large. The Rev. W. Muss-Arnolt (Johns Hopkins) sent some 'Notes on Assyrian Etymologies'; Prof. J. D. Davis (Princeton) a paper on 'The Moabite Stone and the Hebrew Records.' Dr. Robert F. Harper (Yale) presented a criticism on Abel and Winckler's Kellschrifttexte zum Gebrauch bei Vorlesungen.

"After a lengthy discussion it was decided that it would be more advantageous for the society to meet but once in the year, and for a longer period of time; and, if possible, to have the business meeting held at other cities in addition to Boston. The question of applying for a national charter was left undecided, as the members of the society were divided as to the advisability of such action."

"At the evening social gathering at Prof. Marquand's house, Dr. Cyrus Adler spoke on the proposed exhibit of oriental life and history at the coming Fair in Chicago. On the motion of Prof. R. Gottheil the following minute was unanimously adopted: 'The American Oriental Society has heard with pleasure that the committee of the World's Columbian Exposition intends to make an exhibit of oriental life and history, and cordially offers any scientific assistance in its power.'

"The society will meet again in May next at Boston. "R. J. H. G."

OBITUARY.

A. Y. FRASER.

WHILE the journals of this and other countries are asserting with more or less assurance that a cure has at last been discovered for consumption, we have the melancholy duty of recording another of its victims. Mr. A. Y. Fraser, the head master of Allan Glen's technical school, Glasgow, died last week. The facts of his career are not difficult to summarise; the expectations kindled by it, and now extinguished by his untimely death, are not so easy to define.

Educated in the parish school of Dufftown, Banffshire, he entered the university of Aberdeen in 1877, and distinguished himself in all his classes. At the close of his curriculum he graduated with first-class mathematical honours. From Aberdeen he came to Edinburgh, in 1881, to be one of the masters in George Watson's College. Thence he was transferred, without solicitation on his part, to the principal mathematical and science mastership in George Heriot's Hospital, when that institution was converted into a technical school. The laboratories and lecture-rooms were fitted up according to his designs; and visitors to Edinburgh, official and competent, have declared that in few places anywhere are the school appliances so good. Three years later he was appointed head master of Allan Glen's technical school. He had barely commenced his first session's work there when he was laid aside by an attack of pleurisy. Medical advice sent him to South Africa, where he was accompanied by his wife, a daughter of the celebrated Scottish singer, David Kennedy. Six months afterwards he returned home, and in high hopes resumed his duties; but his strength was not equal to his resolution. To the governors of the school, who had treated him with much kindness, he tendered his resignation, and made up his mind to quit Scotland for ever. Shortly before the day fixed for his departure, however, he caught a chill, which brought on inflammation of the lungs, and with that came the end.

One of the youngest of our scientific societies, the Edinburgh Mathematical Society, owes its existence mainly to Mr. Fraser. He was one of the founders, if he may not be said to have been the founder; he was its energetic secretary and treasurer for several years, and at the time of his death he occupied the office of president. Among his contributions to its Proceedings may be specially mentioned his description of two mechanical integrators or planimetres which he invented, and his device for the analysis of intervals and chords in music. Several of the mathematical and physical articles in the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia (one may specify Differential and Integral Calculus, and Mariner's Compass) are from his pen; and a specimen of his critical acumen appeared in the ACADEMY (June 20, 1885) in his review of Clifford's Common Sense of the Exact Sciences. It may be noted that, like Clifford, for whom he had a great admiration, he died at the age of thirty-three.

J. S. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME WORDS IN THE ASOKA INSCRIPTIONS.

I.

Dedham, Essex: Nov. 10, 1890.

In D. v. (ed. Senart, ii. pp. 43-46) we find a list of birds, beasts, and fishes, that are forbidden to be killed. Many of these are by no means easy to identify with their Sanskrit names.

1. Among aquatic birds we find gelāta (= gerāta), which may be another form of karatu, karatu, "a crane."

2. Āmbāka-pīlike (v. l. āmbāki-pīlikā, M. Senart takes āmbā as the equivalent of Sk. ambu, "water," and makes kapīlike the same as Pāli kipillika, "an ant," so that the compound would signify "water-ants." There are, however, some phonetic and other difficulties in this identification which make it well-nigh impossible to adopt this ingenious explanation. The variant reading āmbāki-pīlikā seems to point to two distinct words—the first being probably an error for āmdhālī, "eels," and pīlikā = Sanskrit pīlakā, "lizards," or iguanas.

3. The word that follows is dadā, which M. Senart looks upon as equivalent to dudā, "tortoises." The variant lection is dubhi; and, as tortoises are supposed to be mentioned later on among the "four-footed" creatures, the true reading may be dudā = duddā, "lizards." Cf. Pāli deddubha = Sk. duddubha. If for jatākā, "bats," we read jalākā, "leeches," we should get four kinds of non-venomous creatures, forming a group that would naturally come in between the water-fowls and fishes.

4. Anathika-muccha is explained by M. Senart as "a boneless fish." "Le poisson en question étant désigné comme n'ayant pas d'os, peut-être figurement et à cause, par exemple, de sa souplesse extrême." Perhaps a fish resembling what we term "jelly-fish" is here referred to. As far as Sanskrit is concerned, the term "boneless" is not used with reference to fish, but is applied to such "small deer" as bugs, lice, &c. One would like to read a-natthaka, "snoutless"—i.e., not having a long or protuberant snout, like the crocodile, &c.

5. Vedaveyaka is a crux most difficult to solve. M. Senart regards it as standing for **vidarveyaka*, "quelque poisson comme analogue au serpent 'moins le chaperon'" (vidarvī). Were it possible to read vela-vesaka, it would denote a certain kind of fish frequenting the beach.

6. Gaṅga-puputaka. The second element in this term M. Senart connects with Sk. pupputa ("a disease in which there is a swelling at the palate or teeth"), and thinks the epithet denotes a fish in the Ganges remarkable for some protuberance. If puputaka is undoubtedly the correct reading, it may represent a Sk. **pupputaka* (cf. pupphula), "puffing," "blowing," and be applicable to crocodiles, &c. But, bearing in mind (1) the similarity of the letters p and s, (2) the frequent allusions elsewhere to the Gangetic porpoise (Delphinus gangeticus), we ought, perhaps, to read Gaṅgāsūsaka, where the latter part of the compound corresponds to Sk. çūka, "a porpoise."

7. Saṃkūja-maccha may here mean "a skate," cf. Sk. çanku, çankoci, Hindi saṅgus.

8. Kaphatasayake (v. l. kapataseyake), in M. Senart's analysis, represents Sk. kamatha ("a tortoise") and salyaka ("a porcupine"). The first is, of course, a possible correction, though ph for m occurs mostly in certain pronominals; but salyaka for sallaka or salyaka would be a very irregular prakritisisation. The word seems to be compounded of kapāta and salyaka (or seyyaka), which might mean "creatures living in shells" (cf. Sk. kuṣaṣaya, "lying in the water," "a lotus"; Pāli seyyaka, Mahāvagga p. 39), and include shell-fish, as well as turtles, tortoises, &c. Kaphata or kapata seems to answer in meaning to the Pāli kapalla or kapāla, Prakrit kavāla, "a shell," the shell of a tortoise, &c. (cf. Samyutta, i., p. 7). Here the cerebral t ought, strictly, to represent a cerebral l, for which there is no symbol in the Asoka inscriptions; but the Prakrit dialects often exhibit much confusion between the dental and cerebral liquid, the tendency being to cerebralize the dental. Hence kapata may represent kapalla or kapāla. Some confusion between kapāta (or karāda) and kavāla is seen in Haripāla's explanation of kamadhā-kavāla by kamathā-kapāta = kamathā-koṣa, "a tortoise shell" (Gāudavaho v. 390). Here kapāta = kavāla = kapāla. In Gāudavaho v. 623, the Sk. kapāta appears as kapphāda* (= guhā). There cannot be therefore much difficulty in identifying the Asoka kaphata with kapāla or kapalla.

9. Paṁnasasa. The latter part of this compound is clear enough, and means a hare or rabbit; the former is regarded by M. Senart as the equivalent of the Sk. parṇa, "a leaf," here used to mark a particular species. For paṁna we might read vaṁna = vaṇṇa = Sk. vanya; so that vaṁnasasa would mean a wild (or wood) rabbit. Cf. Sāsakā arañṇarāna-gocarā (Pet. ii. 6. 5; Jāt. iv., p. 85).

10. Simala. With regard to this term, M. Senart says: "Pour simala, je ne puis découvrir aucun équivalent Sanscrit dont la correspondance soit phonétiquement régulière ou au moins justifiable."

As l stands for an original r in these inscriptions, simala = simara, which is the regular equivalent of Sk. śrīmara, "a small deer frequenting damp places." The context would seem to require some such word after sasa, hare or rabbit; and, on turning to Amarakoṣa (ii. 5. 8), we find śimaras and other deer classed together with sasas. For the phonetic change, compare Sk. mṛiga and śṛiṅga with Pāli miga and siṅga.

11. Okapiṁda. This word M. Senart rightly compares with the Pāli ukkapiṇḍaka, which he thinks is one of the names for "a fox," referring the first element oka or ukka to Sk. ulka. This ingenious explanation does not sufficiently take into account the usual meaning of -piṇḍa (food). If we look at the previous word, saṁḍaka, "a bull allowed to roam at large," it would seem probable that the okapiṁdas or ukkapiṇḍakas refer to certain creatures found in or near houses, and that ate the food they found about dwelling-places. According to Buddhaghosa, the ukkapiṇḍakas comprise the cat (biḷāla), rat (mūsikā), lizard (godha), and mongoose (muṅgusa). The first part of the compound, oka or ukka, seems to stand for an original **aukya*, from oka, "a house," so that the epithet would mean "living on house-food"; and this sense would suit the general meaning of the context.† The city bull, cat, rat, lizard, mongoose, although apt at times to be very troublesome about a house, were, nevertheless, not to be killed.

* Prakrit kapphāda represents strictly Sk. kapāta, Pāli kavāta.

† The Com. to Gāudavaho (v. 682) explains ghara-ghulaka = gharagolaya by mūsakādi, rat, &c., as if it meant "house-frequenters."

II.

Dr. Grierson's derivation of caghati (see ACADEMY, No. 964, October 25, 1890, p. 369) from a root cagh, "to rise, ascend," found in the Chattisgarhi dialect, is open to many grave objections. The Sanskrit cargh, "to go," with which he connects it, is an "unquotable form," not more real than vargh, "to go," also quoted in Wilson's Dictionary.

The root cagh in the Chattisgarhi dialect is probably a provincial variety of the root cad, "to mount, ascend," found in Hindi carhānā, Marathi cadanem, Bengali cadite. This root is not found in classical Sanskrit; but Hemacandra (iv. 206) gives cada as one of the substitutes for āruḥ, "to ascend." This cad seems to have no secondary meanings in the dialects referred to that can connect it with the sense of striving or endeavouring. The Asoka cagh cannot, therefore, be referred to the √cagh, "to rise," or √cargh, "to go." M. Senart's proposal to connect cagh with Pāli jaggati (Sk. jāgrati), in the sense of patijaggati, "to take care of," does not take into account the strict syntactical use of the verb. There is a Bengali cāg, "to arouse," "to begin to exert oneself"; and a causative cāgā, "to excite," "stimulate" (from jāgrī?). But Hindi cāh or chāh (proposed by Kern as the source of cagh, but objected to by Senart) is by no means a recent coinage in the sense of "to desire," for it goes back to the Sanskrit denomi. verb, utsāhyati, Prakrit ucchāhi (cf. Pāli ussolhi, "effort"), from the root sah (cf. Pāli ussahati, Digha-Nikāya D. v. 11). The Asoka cagh, if from this source, would represent a derivative of the Vedic sagh for sah (see Westergaard's Radices, p. 94).

Hemacandra (iv. 86) gives a form caya, as a substitute for cak, which Dr. Pischel refers to Sk. tyaj; but the meaning of cayati is not that of the Sk. tyajati or Pāli cayati. This cayati is for cakati or cayati in the sense of "to be able" (compare ca-ati in Setubandha x. 40), and may be a later form of the Asoka cagh.

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the anniversary meeting of the Royal Society on December 1, Sir William Thomson will be proposed as president, in succession to Sir George Stokes.

MR. WILLIAM LEADBETTER CALDERWOOD, who was for four years naturalist to the Fishery Board for Scotland, and who afterwards occupied a table in Dohrn's zoological station at Naples, has been appointed director of the marine biological laboratory at Plymouth, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Bourne. Mr. Calderwood is a son of the professor of moral philosophy at Edinburgh.

By far the largest part of the current number of the Mineralogical Magazine is devoted to a paper on Mexican Meteorites, by Mr. L. Fletcher, of the British Museum. In this elaborate communication the author enters into a critical examination of the voluminous literature of the subject, with special reference to the reputed occurrence of wide-spread showers of meteorites. He concludes that there has undoubtedly been a large shower of limited dispersion in the Valley of Toluca, but that elsewhere in Mexico the meteoric masses probably represent independent falls. At any rate, there is no proof of the wide dispersion which many authorities have suggested. Mr. Fletcher's valuable paper forms a companion to his memoir on the Meteorites of the Desert of Atacama, published a short time ago in the same magazine.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE Clarendon Press will issue immediately a folio volume containing thirty-six engravings of texts and alphabets from the Herculean Fragments, taken from the original copper-plates, executed under the direction of the Rev. John Hayter, and now in the Bodleian Library, with an introductory note by Bodley's Librarian; and also the long-expected second volume of the Rev. E. C. Wickham's edition of Horace, containing the Satires, the Epistles, and the Ars Poetica.

WHAT every reader will turn to first in the November number of the Classical Review is the paper on "The Birth-place of Propertius," in which the lamented Prof. Sellar gives some of the results of his last visit to Italy. In opposition to a recent Italian author, he is disposed to favour the generally-accepted view in favour of Assisi. The obituary notice of Sellar is written by his life-long friend, Prof. Lewis Campbell; and we must also mention the notice of the late Prof. Allen, of Wisconsin. It happens, too, that the reviews in this number are specially interesting, although—or, perhaps, because—they mostly deal with foreign works. Prof. Nettleship, Prof. Sanday, Mr. Robinson Ellis, Mr. W. G. Rutherford, and Mr. Mackail each notice books upon subjects in which they are themselves recognised authorities. The two or three English books noticed receive rather severe treatment. Comparative philology in general, and etymological questions in particular, continue to be almost ignored. But otherwise, the Classical Review is making itself more and more indispensable to the classical scholar.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Nov. 5.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Miss Elizabeth Lee read a paper on "The English Novel in the time of Shakspeare." In the course of her remarks, Miss Lee observed that the comfortable conviction that Samuel Richardson's Pamela is the first English novel can no longer exist. A French critic, M. Jusserand, proves that, in the time of Elizabeth, mere tales were written containing all the elements of the modern novel. These stories were immensely popular; they deal with analysis of passion, and are full of close observation of real life. They were composed chiefly for the delight of women; and such authors as Lyly, Rich, Warner, and Greene, dedicated their stories to women, and made woman the chief subject of their books. Lyly, like his modern followers—in England, at least—made the novel not only moral, but a moralising agent. Thomas Nash wrote excellent realistic tales, and his Life of Jack Wilton is the best specimen of the realistic novel before Defoe. Full as it is of wit, humour, and gaiety, it deserves to be more widely known. The opinions of Thomas Nash on men and things are extremely interesting and valuable. The seventeenth century produced chiefly heroic romances, imitated from the works of French writers. Tentative and crude as these tales frequently are, they are worth reading for their own sake, for they possess at times a pathos and freshness that is peculiarly their own. Moreover, we must not forget Shakspeare's debt to these writers of his own time.—The discussion which followed was opened by the chairman, and continued by Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. J. A. Jenkinson, Mr. H. Hooton, Mr. W. Rickhards, Mr. R. J. Parker, and Mr. James Ernest Baker.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Monday, Nov. 7.)

HENRY BRADLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—The following resolutions on the death of the late Dr. A. J. Ellis were passed unanimously, after sympathetic speeches by the president, Dr. Furnivall, Prof. Skeat, and Mr. W. R. Martineau: "This meeting of the Philological Society records its deep sorrow at the death of its learned, judicious, and courteous vice-president, Alexander

J. Ellis, Litt.D., F.R.S., &c., before the completion of his great work on "Early English Pronunciation": "It laments the loss that the science of phonetics and philology, and specially the work of this Society, have suffered by Dr. Ellis's death"; "It offers its respectful sympathy to the family of its late vice-president, and declares its belief that his work will be valued, and his memory honoured, by all future students of the history of the English tongue."—A paper was then read by Mr. Martin Rouse upon "The Musical Nature of Speech in a Threefold Aspect." The vowel sounds in existence he held to exactly number sixteen—eight long, or full, heard respectively in the English and French words: "boom," "mote," "dawn," "path," "burn," "age," "su," "keen"; and eight short, or checked, heard in: "bush," "mo(rass)," "don," "patte," "bun," "edge," "sut," "kin." The full vowels could each be protracted as long as an outbreathing lasted; while the checked had each a short and definite period of utterance, impossible to lengthen. When the first set of words was read aloud by some of the audience a scale was heard, which Mr. Rouse claimed to be chromatic, starting in the average male voice from about f below the bass staff, and in the average female voice from the bass c, and running upwards for eight semitones. And when the same words or their vowels were whispered there was heard an entirely different but equally symmetrical scale, rising from the keynote of the first scale to the fourth, fifth, and sixth degree above it, and then from the octave to the fourth, fifth, and sixth above that. Every one of the checked vowels, again, whether spoken or whispered, Mr. Rouse found to be a third above its full form; so that together they made two scales like the first couple, but starting a little higher. The vowels or sample words, however, had to be read clearly, rapidly, and with as little expression as a list, only that the voice must not even be dropped at the last word as is done in reading a list (to avoid which it was well to add a ninth word, such as "loop," at which one might drop the voice instead). If the expressive pitch were altered, the scale would be thrown into a fresh key. These simple vowels might combine with one another either as a full before a checked vowel, two checked vowels together, or a checked before a full vowel, the last form of diphthong being always found at the end of a word or before a flat mute or sibilant, the other two forms before a sharp mute or sibilant, a nasal or a vowel. Thus, in the French neuf, the u of "burn" was combined with the u of "sut," and in the Swedish hund the u of "bun" with that of "sut"; and whereas in "rye," "ride," and "rise," the u of "bun" was followed by the e of "keen," in "rite," "rice," "rime," or "riot," it was followed by the i of "kin." The diphthongs were the chords of language; while the semi-vowels might be compared to grace-notes, since their own sound, though vocalic in origin, was held back till the following vowel or diphthong was ready to issue from the mouth. To the w in "wield" and y in "yield," Mr. Rouse added the u in the French huile, and the y in the German ja when uttered in a pondering way, deriving these from the u in "sut" and the e in "edge" respectively. There was a considerable likeness between the classification of consonants and of musical instruments. As the former were either mute or spirant, so the latter were beaten or blown; as mute consonants were labial, dental, or guttural, so beaten instruments were wooden, metal, or stringed; as spirant consonants were liquid and sibilant only, so blown instruments were wooden and metal only; while nasal consonants corresponded to reed instruments, and the likeness seemed to travel further. Were not consonants, then, the musical instruments that imparted their several qualities to vowels? But, lastly, our everyday speech was most certainly rhythmical, since between every two breathing pauses the strongly-accented syllables were uttered at equal spaces of time apart, however many unaccented or feebly accented words they introduced. This might be seen in the following sentence, as to each of its two portions divided by the breath-mark (|), by beating time to the accents marked therein, the varying number of syllables following each accent and marked by an arabic figure will be found to be uttered in exactly the same time ("at the" and "a dis—" are introductory notes before their bars or measures): "At the mee'ting of the (4) Lon'don (2) School' Board (2) yes'terday | a dis-cu'ssion a-rose' about pi-(4)a'nos."

SHELLEY SOCIETY (Wednesday, Nov. 12.)

H. S. SALT, Esq., in the chair. Mr. W. E. A. Axon read a paper on "Shelley's Vegetarianism." The word "vegetarianism," the lecturer remarked, was not invented till a quarter of a century after Shelley's death; and in all the earlier literature of the subject we read of "natural diet" (as in the title of Shelley's pamphlet), "Pythagorean system," and other such phrases. Shelley's tendency to a vegetable diet was not due, as has been suggested by Mr. Jeaffreson, to the influence of Byron, but to his own instinctive simplicity, which manifested itself as early as his college days, though it was not till 1812 that he actually adopted vegetarianism. During his life in London, Bracknell, and Marlow, the poet continued to be in the main an abstainer from flesh-meat, though some amusing instances of occasional relapses are recorded by Hogg and Peacock. The fullest expression of Shelley's views on the humanities and hygienics of diet may be found in the famous note to "Queen Mab," afterwards republished as a pamphlet, and again, in a more poetical form, in the triumph-song of the Nations, in "Laon and Cythna." Shelley's vegetarianism was not a mere dietetic whim, but an endeavour after a higher and better life for mankind, an attempt to bring the universe into sympathetic harmony, and to provide a bounteous feast from which none should be excluded.—A debate followed, in which Dr. Japp, Mrs. Simpson, Dr. Furnivall, Mr. James Burns, Mrs. McDonel, and others took part.

FINE ART.

Monumental Brasses. By the Rev. H. W. Macklin. (Sonnenschein.)

A CHEAP and portable handbook dealing with monumental brasses has long been a desideratum, existing books on the subject being for the most part costly and necessarily large in size.

Mr. Macklin's little volume is specially intended for collectors and makers of brass rubbings, and appears to be the outcome, in part, of the activity of the Cambridge University Association of Brass Collectors, a young society of whose existence we hear with pleasure. A captious critic might easily take exception to some of the author's statements; but, broadly speaking, his book will be of great use to the people for whom it is intended. It is strange that he does not note among the reasons for making collections of brasses the fact that they are works of art and valuable for their beauty. He dwells (as collectors are so wont to do) almost wholly upon points of antiquarian detail. Neither does he refer to the great importance of monumental brasses considered as one of the first links in the history of engraving. In this omission, however, he errs in company with most historians of mediæval and renaissance art. The chapters dealing with vestments, armour, dress, and heraldry are, of course, very sketchy; but they will be useful to beginners. Among "Methods of Copying" it should be stated that the finest rubbings are to be made by employing blacklead mixed with linseed oil, and applying it on highly glazed tissue paper by means of a washleather rubber. This is the only process that anyone should use who intends to have his rubbings photographically reduced for engraving. The sketch of the literature of the subject, and the brief list of existing brasses with which the book concludes, will be found practically useful.

In fact, the book is to be commended for the purposes for which it is written, and within the limits which the author intended. It is good news to be told that the Cambridge Brass Collectors are busy preparing a revised edition of Haines' list, and that it will be finished in two or three years' time. This is an excellent piece of work, and one that should be warmly encouraged. Lists of all things mediæval—brasses, bells, mural paintings, stained glass windows, sculpture, and works of art of every other category—are needed; and so few have yet been made or made complete.

W. M. CONWAY.

THE RECENT FIRE AT SALONICA.

WE quote from the Times the following report, received from the architectural students of the British School at Athens:—

"Salonica: Oct. 28, 1890.

"Of the many churches of Byzantine times still remaining in Salonica, that of Saint Sophia is the only one that has been at all affected by the recent fire. The report that it had been destroyed is entirely unfounded; and, although a good deal of irreparable damage has been done, the building is still structurally sound and capable of being repaired.

"None of the original work of the church has been injured, except the marble pillars and the fine carved capitals of the arcades dividing the central area from the aisles and galleries; of these only three of the lower arcade on the north side have escaped injury, the others are more or less irretrievably damaged. And this is partly due to the large accumulation of public records, which had been stored in the south-east corner of the building, having been all consumed in the fire. The lead covering of the main dome has been somewhat injured, and all the roofing, which was of wood covered with lead, has been destroyed.

"This, however, was not of Byzantine times, the external appearance of the church having been much altered by the Turks, who raised the aisle walls to a uniform level all round, and covered in the whole building with a new roof, sloping up to the sides of the central dome and entirely hiding many of the main structural lines. The open colonnade along the west front, which was also added by the Turks, has been in part destroyed, and the conical roof of the minaret has been burnt off and some damage done to the staircase in its interior. The north-west turret, usually assumed to be of Frankish times, is practically intact, only a few tiles having fallen from its roof; but the wooden porch and staircase built by the Turks against the south door of the narthex have been entirely destroyed. The heat of the fire has loosened the plaster from the walls in many places, exposing interesting points of detail which were before invisible.

"In particular, one important point which we now see clearly is the evidence of the existence of at least five large openings in the west wall, and in two of these openings remains of frescoes covering the soffits of the arches through the whole thickness of the wall, thus showing that the openings had not been filled in with doorways, and that an exonarthex must have existed, which may have been removed by the Turks when they built the present colonnade. It is now possible also to identify most of the original Byzantine round-arched windows which the Turks had built up or filled in with square stone frames.

"The mosaics seem practically uninjured. They are at present very indistinctly seen through a thick coating with which the smoke of the fire has covered them. In the mosaics of the dome, the subject of which is the Ascension of Christ, we can now see that the faces have all been picked out by the Turks; but otherwise they are in their original condition, although there are some traces of later restoration on the band of flowers and fruit which runs round the lower part of the subject.

"The restoration of the church can be effected in either of the two following ways:—The first method is simply to replace the roofs as before, thoroughly clean the mosaics, put in new windows and doors, and generally repair the damage done and make the building watertight, the injured colouring and capitals being left in situ as historical evidence of the fire. The second course is to re-roof the building so as to show the old structural lines, re-open out the Byzantine windows, and make the external appearance of the building more like what it formerly was. The external plaster should also be peeled off, so as to expose the surface of the walls and show their construction.

"The first plan, which would be the less costly, would probably be that adopted by the Turks in ordinary course; but perhaps it may be possible to induce them to spend a little more money, and so add to the external appearance of the building and to its archaeological interest.

"We found the drawings of this church, which were published by Texier and Pullan in their Byzantine Architecture, to be very inaccurate and misleading; and we therefore considered it desirable to take advantage of the present circumstances to make a new and complete survey of the whole structure and carefully record all the new evidences which the effects of the fire have revealed.

"The round church of Saint George, now known as the Orta Sultan Osman Mosque, has lately undergone a complete restoration and renovation. The fine mosaics of its cupola, which were in a very dilapidated condition, have been repaired and completed in paint by an Italian, who has supplied the parts which were wanting, largely from his own imagination, and consequently their historical and artistic value has greatly suffered. Many structural details formerly visible have also been filled up or covered with whitewash.

"Of the other Byzantine churches in Salonica, it is only necessary here to say a few words. They remain at present undisturbed, and, unless they too come under the destructive influence of a great fire, are likely to last through many future generations. Here, again, the Texier and Pullan drawings are very incomplete; and it would be a matter for extreme regret, in the event of anything happening to these churches, that full and complete records had not been made.

"ROBT. WEIR SCHULTZ.
"SIDNEY H. BARNSELY."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

READERS of the ACADEMY will be glad to hear that Miss Amelia B. Edwards has so entirely recovered from her tedious illness that she is now able to undertake a regular lecturing tour in the North. She is announced to lecture upon "The Literature and Religion of the Ancient Egyptians," at Oldham, on Wednesday next, November 26, and again upon the same subject at Walsall and Tyneside on December 3 and 14; at Nottingham, on November 28, and at Greenock, December 19, upon "The Origin of Portrait Sculpture and the History of the Ka"; at Cheadle, Hulme, on December 1, upon "Portrait-Painting in Ancient Egypt"; at Sheffield, on December 5, upon "Queen Hatasu and the Social Position of Woman in Ancient Egypt"; at Busby, near Glasgow, on December 17, on "Egypt the Birthplace of Greek Decorative Art"; at Kirkcaldy, on December 18, upon "The Explorer in Egypt"; and at the Philosophical Institute, Edinburgh, on December 16, upon "The Art of the Novelist."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish early in December, under the title of Relics of the Royal House of Stuart, a handsome folio volume, consisting of forty finely-executed plates, drawn from the objects by Mr. William Gibb, of Edinburgh. Besides many of the most interesting relics included in the Stuart Exhibition two years ago, Mr. Gibb has made careful drawings of the Regalia of Scotland. Mr. John Skelton contributes an introduction upon the House of Stuart and its Adherents, and Mr. St. John Hope, Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries, descriptions of the plates. The book, which is one of the most important art publications of recent years, is dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE Fine Art Society will open next week, at their gallery in New Bond-street, an exhibition of drawings by the greatest of Japanese artists, Hokusai.

WE are glad to hear that the Corporation of Brighton has just become possessed of by far the largest and most valuable portion of the practically unique collection of Brighton prints, &c., formed by the late Mr. Crauford J. Pocock, which, besides his Cruikshank collection, is all of his artistic or antiquarian possessions that his family have parted with. The interest of what was known as Mr. Crauford Pocock's "Brighton Collection" will appeal not only to the local person, but to the general student of English life and manners at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century. It is doubtful whether any place in England—London alone excepted—has afforded more material than Brighton has done, both to artist and topographer; and this in spite of the fact that its "antiquities," properly speaking, are of the fewest. Bath—whose special vogue was a generation earlier than that of Brighton—is perhaps the place which is next richest in illustrative record.

ITALY, Spain, and the unexhausted, but surely not inexhaustible East, contribute the great majority of the specimens to the sixth annual exhibition of antique embroideries, which was opened last Monday in the Galleries of Messrs. Howell and James, Regent-street. Not a few of the examples belong to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and are distinguished by beauty of design and colour and by cunning and curious workmanship. The white darned nets of Italy, and the white silk embroideries of Persia, constitute two of the most important series in the collection. It is unlikely that amateurs of old needlework will often again have opportunities of enjoying such a noble display of choice things.

THE curious collections of the late Mr. Charles Howell were sold at Christie's on the three concluding days of last week. Mr. Howell's "Old Masters" were apparently of very dubious character. Mr. Howell was much mixed up, during a part of his career, with certain of the then leaders of an influential sect in English art; and of their works he possessed a few. But his Empire and Old English furniture, and a mass of what have been accepted as "Stuart relics," formed in reality the most remunerative portion of such stores as he had succeeded in amassing.

THE STAGE.

THE AVENUE COMEDY.

TEN years hence, who will be able to remember "Sunshine and Shadow" by its title—a title weakly vague, suggesting only the trite and the familiar, or suggesting at best some blameless legend, some colourless romance, put forth under the auspices of the Religious Tract Society or the S.P.C.K.? Mr. Carton's comedy was worthy of a name that should have—what the writing of the piece itself has in abundance—the literary touch; as it is, its title is quite the feeblest thing about it. The piece is more than meritorious; it is interesting, thoroughly entertaining, and, within reasonable limits, affecting into the bargain. Faults it has also; and I will venture to say briefly what they are, before I pass to the much more congenial task of trying to inform the playgoer why, and with what justice, he is pleased with it.

A certain want of distinction belongs to the conception of the comedy, in so far as its author has been contented to use what one may call old, if not worn out, machinery for the presentation of character and incident, and in so far too as the characters themselves are not the offspring of fresh observation or vivid imagination, but are a very dexterous revival of familiar types. Two illustrations as to the aged nature of the machinery will serve my purpose. First, when it is desired that the revengeful woman of the comedy shall commit herself hopelessly in the house which she has no right to enter, she is permitted to overhear such a conversation between the sisters as would certainly, in reality, never have taken place in her presence. The talk about the money and the key of the bureau, though supposed to be conducted in an undertone, is, under the circumstances, unnatural. It is but a cheap method of enabling the woman to become an enterprising but unsuccessful thief. Again, the fashion in which she—whom one of the heroes of the comedy unhappily long ago married—is finally disposed of is, as a piece of mechanism, just as cheap and unwarrantable. Death conveniently overtakes her, to get the dramatist out of his difficulty, and to set free the middle-aged hero. Her demise is unexpected. No one who has seen her strength of purpose and the activity and firmness of her step, when, clothed in the shawl of melodrama—the famous sombre shawl which will be lifted to screen her face when she dissembles—no one who has seen her, thoroughly robust and "fit," but will feel her death as an outrage—a permitted, time-honoured, too accustomed outrage—to the probabilities. But these faults are, after all, very forgivable; they are forgivable even when there has to be added to the list of them that want of originality in the conception of character which has already been indicated.

What is called the "tone" of the piece is singularly welcome. The dramatist has no fads. He is not at the mercy of a latter-day revelation. He retains those ideals of consideration and self-sacrifice, of goodness and abiding charm, from which the well-developed "Ibsenite"—as he likes to consider himself—has, in his wisdom, shaken himself free. Upon the action and the impulse of each character—except the melodramatic wife—healthily constituted people can look with sympathy. The dialogue is very vigorous; it is simple while it is forcible; it has true touches of pathos. Still more to the point, when we are concerned with a piece that aims at brightness, it is written with unflagging spirit, with a sense of humour that is rarely absent from any one of its scenes. Ingeniously put together, written with grace of fancy as well as with simplicity and force, and based upon a view of life that is sensible and worthy—that may be accepted by the average plain man—Mr. Carton's comedy would be curiously unlucky if it failed to please.

And it is admirably supported by most of its stage interpreters. Three people distinguish themselves to a degree that is quite unusual. Never has Mr. Alexander been more quietly convincing; never has he displayed a more delicate appreciation of a part in which refinement was essential, and in which it was not possible to be refined too much. To say that the subtlety and charm of his presentation of the deformed choir-master was unexpected—was almost unwarranted—would indeed be to fail to do justice to Mr. Alexander's achievements of the last half-dozen years. Still, this performance must notably advance his position: at the least it gives clear proof of a capacity a part of which had hitherto been but surmised.

Miss Marion Terry in the second place. There have been occasions when her "gift of tears" has been a little abused; occasions on which, though she has never wanted intelligence, she has seemed to want brightness; occasions, too—her performance of Mrs. Errol in "The Little Lord Fauntleroy" was one of them—in which she has forced her dramatic note, so to say—in which she has lacked the reserve that would have made of the whole a more harmonious picture. Her performance in Mr. Carton's comedy is of quite another quality. The part suits her in every opportunity that it offers for her womanliness and her sensibility. The performance is a page torn from life. Watching it closely, I could detect no gesture that was either wrong or exaggerated; no sentence of the intonation and significance of which it would be fair to say that it should have been different from what it was. Miss Marion Terry's performance, like Mr. Alexander's, is a finished and excellent work of art. And Miss Maud Millett? Of the ingénue of the highest class, of the freshest young character, with the greatest ease and charm and spontaneity, with the very best breeding, Miss Maud Millett is now, I should suppose, recognised as the unequalled representative on our stage of to-day. A performance, which betrayed in it no sign whatever of labour, was alike dainty and refreshing.

The remaining actors, though not one of them was actually inefficient, we must place in the second line. Mr. Nutcombe Gould's Dr. Latimer was dignified and genial. Mr. B. Webster, as the lover of the lighter of the two girls, successfully suggested that the character he represented was largely furnished with manliness and good feeling, if insufficiently stocked with brains. Mr. Yorke Stephens, as the elder lover, the mature though not ancient lover, of the more serious young woman, gains upon us as the performance proceeds. His entry, and the earlier moments of his presence on the stage, seemed, however, to suggest a being less worthy than is the character he is invited to personate. At first, indeed, the playgoer may have been on the look-out for some revelation which should show Mark Denzil to be a somewhat gloomily cynical of melodramatic propensity; but, as Mr. Yorke Stephens proceeded with his performance, confidence, so to say, was restored. Miss Ada Neilson and Mr. Holles are the remaining actors engaged in the piece, which the playgoer who wishes to be entertained and to be moved will certainly make it is business to see.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

"TANNHÄUSER," which has not been given in London for several years, was revived by Signor Lago at Covent Garden on Tuesday evening. It is strange that this opera should not be announced oftener; the music is so fresh and original, and there is plenty of tune and form for those who cannot perceive either in the master's later works. The crowded house on Wednesday does not prove that it has now entered upon a prosperous career; for if some were attracted by the opera, no doubt some were drawn by the cast, and others by curiosity. Mme. Albani sang well, and her impersonation of Elisabeth was extremely fine; her acting in the second and third acts was powerful, and its great strength lay in its naturalness. Mlle. Sofia Ravogli looked and acted well as Venus, but her voice was not in good order. Signor Perotti gave an earnest rendering of his part as Tannhäuser—we refer specially to the second and third acts; in the scene with Venus he hurried the music. M. Maurel, as Wolfram, deserves high praise, though his voice showed signs of his late indisposition. The chorus was bad, the male voices especially being hard and frequently out of tune. Even worse things could be said about them. The stage management left, certainly, much to desire. Signor Bevnigani conducted with care, but the orchestral playing was often rough or uncertain. It does seem a pity that, with such fine artists for the leading parts, the opera should not in other respects have been presented in a more worthy manner.

Sir Charles Hallé commenced a series of orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall last Friday week. There was a strong programme, but not a large audience. This is surprising just now, when orchestral concerts are rare. The "Leonora" Overture was played with extraordinary energy, but in some places more tenderness and refinement would have been acceptable. Schubert's great Symphony in C also suffered somewhat in the matter of light and shade. The work did not produce its usual effect. Lady Hallé gave a finished performance of Viotti's violin Concerto in A minor. The programme included two of Dvorák's characteristic Légendes.

M. Hollman, the well-known cellist, played a Concerto of his own at the Crystal Palace last Saturday. It opens with a vigorous movement in A minor, followed by an exceedingly graceful and effective Andante. The Finale contains much showy writing for the solo instrument. The work was splendidly played by the composer. The programme included, also, Spohr's Symphony, "The Consecration of Sound," of which Mr. Manns and his band gave a fine rendering. Miss Macintyre was successful in "Elsa's Dream," and in a Bolero by Dessauer; and by way of encore she gave Lassen's "Es war ein Traum."

Mme. Adelina Patti's final concert, previous to her departure for Russia, took place at the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening. She was in excellent voice, and was received with the usual enthusiasm. Mr. Sims Reeves was to have sung a song by Mr. Hamish McCunn, but he substituted for it Blumenthal's "Message." Miss Gomez and Miss A. Hill, and Messrs. Bach, and Novara, also took part in the programme.

With upwards of 100 Pictures.

CHRISTMAS DOUBLE NUMBER.

The English Illustrated Magazine

For DECEMBER, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 3d.

Among the Contributors are—

D. Christie Murray,
Henry Herman
J. Fitzgerald Molloy,
Philip Norman,
J. Cuthbert Hadden.
Sister Aloysia,
William Clarke,
Herbert Railton,
R. T. Blomfield,

The Bishop of Bedford,
Ven. Archdeacon Farrar,
The Rev. Dr. H. Kynaston,
F. Marion Crawford,
Mrs. W. K. Clifford,
Hon. John Collier,
Charles Dumaresq,
Louis Wain,
W. J. Hennessy.

The Number contains:—

1. GEORGE WASHINGTON. Engraved by O. LACOUR from the head in the picture by GILBERT STUART in the possession of the Earl of Rosebery. Frontispiece.
2. THE ANCESTRAL HOME OF THE WASHINGTONS. WILLIAM CLARKE. With Illustrations.
3. THE WISDOM TOOTH. D. CHRISTIE MURRAY AND HENRY HERMAN.
4. A PAINTER OF PLAYERS. J. FITZGERALD MOLLOY. With Illustrations.
5. WORKING MEN'S CLUBS. THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF BEDFORD.
6. INNS AND TAVERNS OF OLD LONDON. PHILIP NORMAN. With Illustrations.
7. THE FROGMOUTH. The Rev. Dr. H. KYNASTON. With Illustrations by Louis Wain.
8. THE WITCH OF PRAGUE. Chaps. V. and VI. F. MARION CRAWFORD. Illustrated by W. J. Hennessy.
9. NOWELL. (A Carol.) P. SHAW JEFFERY.
10. NOOKS AND CORNERS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY. The Ven. Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D. Illustrated by Hubert Railton and R. T. BLUMFIELD.
11. PATRIOTIC AIRS. J. CUTHBERT HADDEN.
12. WOODEN TONY: An Anyhow Story. Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD. Illustrated by the Hon. John Collier.
13. JARL SIGURD and the HULDER. W. DUFFA-CROTCH.
14. ENGLISH CONVENT LIFE. SISTER ALOYSIA.
15. AN ADVENTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO. CHARLES DUMARESQ.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.
 Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
 AND
 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

GEORGE PHILIP &amp; SON'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "WORLD'S GREAT EXPLORERS."

By F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.A., M.D. Cantab.,

Author of "The Cruise of the Marchesa."

THE LIFE OF FERDINAND MAGELLAN,

FIRST CIRCUMNAVIGATOR OF THE GLOBE, 1480-1521.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with 20 Illustrations and 11 Coloured Maps, price 4s. 6d. [This day.]

The following Volumes are already published, and may now be obtained in three different bindings:—

	Price per vol.
1. Plain neat cloth cover ... ..	4s. 6d.
2. Cloth gilt cover, specially designed by Lewis F. Day, gilt edges ... ..	5s. 0d.
3. Half-bound polished morocco, marbled edges ... ..	7s. 6d.

1. JOHN DAVIES, Arctic Explorer and Early India Navigator.

By CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, C.B. Crown 8vo. With 24 Illustrations, and 4 Coloured Maps.

"If the succeeding volumes attain the high standard of excellence of this life of John Davies, the Series will, when complete, form a biographical history of geographical discovery of the utmost value and interest."

Academy.

2. PALESTINE. By Major C. R. Conder, R.E., Leader of the Palestine Exploring Expeditions. Crown 8vo. With 26 Illustrations, and 7 Coloured Maps.

"It is charmingly written, contains much information in a convenient form, and is well illustrated by woodcuts and maps."—Athenaeum.

3. MUNGO PARK and the NIGER. By Joseph Thomson, Author of "Through Masai Land." Crown 8vo. With 24 Illustrations, and 7 Coloured Maps.

"Mr. Thomson's book is to be strongly recommended to all who wish to understand the position in Africa to-day, as an intelligent Englishman should do."—Saturday Review.

NEW AND CHEAP EDITION, WITH PORTRAIT AND OBITUARY NOTICE.

THE UNKNOWN HORN OF AFRICA.

AN EXPLORATION FROM BERBERA TO THE LEOPARD RIVER.

By the late F. L. JAMES, M.A.

With 29 Illustrations and Map.

SECOND EDITION, containing the Narrative Portion and Notes only.

Crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d. [This day.]

The Times says:—"Mr. James's expedition was one of unusual hazard, but it was completely successful."
 The Whitchall Review says:—"A book to please everyone—good to handle, entertaining to peruse, and delightful to look at."

HOME LIFE ON AN OSTRICH FARM.

A BRIGHTLY WRITTEN ACCOUNT OF LIFE IN THE INTERIOR OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By ANNIE MARTIN.

Crown 8vo, antique cover, with 11 Illustrations, price 7s. 6d. [This day.]

The Manchester Examiner says:—"Nothing has been published for a long time in the way of light literature which can give more unmitigated satisfaction than this book."

THE DEVELOPMENT of AFRICA. An important work dealing comprehensively with all the various aspects—geographical, historical, and political—of the African question; its main object, however, being to deduce from these data the probable lines of development of that continent as a field for European enterprise. By A. SILVA WHITE, Secretary of the Scottish Geographical Society. Illustrated with a Set of 14 Maps, specially designed by E. G. Ravenstein, F.R.G.S. Demy 8vo, price 14s. [November 24.]

ACROSS EAST AFRICAN GLACIERS: being an Account of the First Ascent of Mount Kilima Njaro by Dr. HANS MEYER. 1 vol., super-royal 8vo, containing upwards of 40 Illustrations, consisting of Photographs, Heliogravures, and Coloured Frontispiece in aquatint, accompanied by 2 Coloured Maps. Also a limited Large-Paper Edition (not exceeding 50 copies), sur japon, signed by the Author. [Ready in December.]

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

APPLIED GEOGRAPHY. A Preliminary Sketch by J. Scott

KELTIE, Librarian of the Royal Geographical Society. With numerous Coloured Maps and Diagrams. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [November 24.]

Two New Volumes by J. YEATS, LL.D., F.S.S., F.G.S.

Just published.

1. THE GOLDEN GATES of TRADE, with our Home Industries, introductory to "A Study of Mercantile Economy, and of the Science of Commerce." Crown 8vo, with Map, price 4s. 6d.

2. MAP STUDIES of the MERCANTILE WORLD. Auxiliary to our Foreign and Colonial Trade, and illustrative of part of the Science of Commerce. Crown 8vo, price 4s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"Both books are written on the same plan in simple language, fortified by an extensive apparatus of practical questions on the text. They will be welcome as useful text-books for commercial classes in schools."

GEORGE PHILIP &amp; SON. London: 32, Fleet Street. Liverpool: 45-51, South Castle Street.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

The Australasian Dictionary of BIOGRAPHY (including NEW ZEALAND and FIJI), comprising Notices of Eminent Colonists from the Inauguration of Responsible Government down to the Present Time (1855-1891). By PHILIP MENNELL, F.R.G.S., assisted by Eminent Colonials. In crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net. [In the press.]

BY CLEMENT SCOTT.

The Life of E. L. Blanchard, and REMINISCENCES. With Notes from the Diary of W. L. BLANCHARD. By CLEMENT SCOTT. With Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 32s. [In the press.]

The Poets and the Poetry of the CENTURY. Edited by ALFRED H. MILES. In 10 vols. of about 600 pages each, fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. Limited Edition, in handsome cloth case, £3 3s. The Volumes sold separately at 6s. per vol. Popular Edition, in cloth case, £2 2s.; or in separate volumes, 4s. per vol. [Shortly.]

The plan of this work is to give a representative selection from the poetry of the poets of the century, prefaced by biographical and critical articles by some of the best living critics.

This day, a FOURTH EDITION of

By Order of the Czar: the Tragic Story of Anna Kiosstock, Queen of the Ghetto. By JOSEPH HATTON. In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY J. ASHBY STERRY.

Nutshell Novels. By J. ASHBY STERRY, Author of "The Lazy Minstrel," "Cucumber Chronicles," "Tiny Travels," &c. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

"Pleasantly comical and yet cynical, they are just the kind of stories for a reader tired of elaborate plots."—Athenaeum.

BY J. MAITLAND STUART.

How "No. 1" Became "1" in Norway. By J. MAITLAND STUART. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. [Ready.]

"It is one of the merriest books printed; the book is enjoyable first and useful afterwards. Let everyone read it who has been in Norway or means to be there some day." [Shortly.]

Scotsman.

BY W. GERRARE.

Rufin's Legacy: a Theosophical Romance By W. GERRARE. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [Ready.]

"The story is extremely well told, and is easy and pleasant to follow. The character of Mr. Caradoc Morgan is very original and is delineated with considerable power." [Manchester Examiner.]

BY MRS. LINNÆUS BANKS.

Miss Pringle's Pearls. With Illustrations by Frank Dadd. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

BY SARAH DOUDNEY.

The Love Dream of Gatty Fenning With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

NEW VOLUMES of HUTCHINSON'S POPULAR LIBRARY

Mount Eden: a Romance. By FLORENCE MARRYAT. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, and gilt top, 2s. 6d.; or in paper boards, 2s. [Ready.]

Love and Mirage; or, the Waiting on an Island: an Out-of-Door Romance. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, 2s. 6d.; or in paper boards, 2s. [Ready.]

* A List of 70 Volumes post free.

SECOND EDITION.

Blossom Land and Fallen Leaves: Holiday Rambles. By CLEMENT SCOTT. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with Portrait of the Author, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

BY DR. MACAULAY.

From Middy to Admiral of the FLEET. The Story of Commodore Anson retold to Boys by Dr. MACAULAY, Author of "True Tales of Travel and Adventure," &c. With Full-Page Plate Paper Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, in handsome cloth binding, gilt extra, 5s. [Ready.]

With 27 Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Uncle Tom's Cabin. With Portrait and 27 Illustrations by George Cruikshank. The Letter-press printed from new type, and the Illustrations from the Original Wood Blocks. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, and gilt top, 5s. [Ready.]

With Original Illustrations by WM. MAGRATH.

The Low-Backed Car. By SAMUEL LOVER. With 12 Full-Page Photographures and 12 Wood Engravings by Wm. Magrath. Folio, fancy cloth, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

LONDON: HUTCHINSON &amp; CO., 25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

New and Revised Edition, with 130 Illustrations, 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

A HISTORY OF GREEK SCULPTURE FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES.

By A. S. MURRAY, Keeper of the Antiquities, British Museum.

"In grasp and mastery of the subject, and clearness and attractiveness of style, the book seems to us an excellent example of what such a book should be. We beg once more to thank Mr. Murray for his interesting book—with the gratitude which consists partly in an expectation of future favours."—Guardian.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF SIR HENRY MAINE'S WORKS.

Now ready, Thirteenth and Cheaper Edition, 8vo, 9s.

I.—ANCIENT LAW: its Connection with the Early History of Society, and its RELATION to MODERN IDEAS. By the late Sir HENRY S. MAINE, F.R.S.

By the same, uniform with the above, 9s. each.

II.—VILLAGE COMMUNITIES in the EAST and WEST.

III.—THE EARLY HISTORY of INSTITUTIONS.

IV.—EARLY LAW and CUSTOM.

Also, 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

V.—POPULAR GOVERNMENT. II. Nature of Democracy. III. Age of Progress.

IV. CONSTITUTION of the UNITED STATES.

VI.—INTERNATIONAL LAW.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

COMMUNICATIONS ON A REMEDY FOR TUBERCULOSIS. By Professor ROBERT KOCH, Berlin. Authorised Translation. 8vo, wrapper, 1s.; or limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

A NEW QUARTERLY MAGAZINE OF PHILOSOPHY, SCIENCE, RELIGION, AND SOCIOLOGY.

THE MONIST.

Published by "The Open Court" Publishing Company, Chicago.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST NUMBER (NOW READY).

1. Mr. A. R. Wallace on Physiological Selection... By Prof. GEO. J. ROMANES, LL.D., F.R.S.
2. The Immortality of Infusoria..... By ALFRED BINET.
3. On the Material Relations of Sex in Human Society..... By Prof. E. D. COPE.
4. The Analysis of the Sensations..... By Prof. ERNST MACH.
5. The Origin of Mind..... By Dr. PAUL CARUS.
6. The Psychology of Harald Höffding..... By Wm. M. SALTER.
7. The Magic Mirror..... By MAX DESSOIR.

This Magazine, the first number of which appeared on October 1st, 1890, is devoted to the establishment and illustration of the principles of Monism in Philosophy, Exact Science, Religion, and Sociology. So far as the fulfilment of its aim will allow, it will bear a popular character.

Each number will contain Letters or Reviews from eminent Foreign Thinkers concerning the present state of Philosophy and Science in their respective countries, and Criticisms of Recent Publications in the special departments with which The Monist is concerned.

Contributions and Articles will appear in subsequent numbers from the pens of Prof. Joseph Le Conte, Prof. W. James, Prof. Ernst Haeckel, Charles S. Peirce, Prof. Max Müller, Dr. C. Lombroso, Prof. F. Jodl, Lucien'Arréat, Prof. Harald Höffding, and many others.

SINGLE NUMBERS, 50 CENTS.

Terms of Subscription: $2.00 a year, post paid, to any part of the United States, Canada, and Mexico; to Foreign Countries in the Postal Union, $2.25. Post paid to New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, New Zealand, and Tasmania, $2.50 a year. For $1.00 a year extra, the Publishers offer to send the separate copies of the Magazine tastefully bound in cloth with gold lettering.

LONDON: Messrs. WATTS & CO., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street.

READY THIS AFTERNOON, 8vo, 1s. 6d.

HIS GRACE The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY'S JUDGMENT in the CASE of READ and OTHERS v. The LORD BISHOP of LINCOLN, delivered November 21st, 1890.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

Now ready, price 6s.

GLEANINGS AFTER HARVEST: STUDIES AND SKETCHES.

By the Rev. JOHN R. VERNON, M.A., Author of "The Harvest of a Quiet Eye," &c.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate Hill, London.

Just Published. 1 vol., 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: a Poem.

By WILLIAM MORRIS.

Complete, clearly printed, and bound in gilt cloth, from a special design by the Author.

List of other Works, by same Author, on application.

London: REEVES & TURNER, 196, Strand, W.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, pp. 179, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

OCCAM'S RAZOR:

The Application of a Principle; to Political Economy; to the Conditions of Progress; to Socialism;
to Politics.

By F. W. BAIN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

"The razor of this new Occam appears to us to be edged with keen wit, and to be finished and mounted with consummate literary workmanship.... Mr. Bain challenges comparison with Mr. Burke, whose Letter to a Noble Lord his essay may recall by points of resemblance less superficial than the title.... Mr. Bain has effected an elevation of our ideals by this brilliant essay."—Academy.

"Mr. Bain's logical method carries him unerringly to the root of things in both of these admirable essays. Nothing we have read approaches the 'Refutation of Socialism' in neatness and completeness. It attacks the central positions of Marx and Lassalle, and demolishes them by a very pretty and thorough sapping of the foundations."—Spectator.

"Seldom has so much earnest thinking upon modern topics of speculation been compressed into so little space."—Scotsman.

"These admirable essays."—Saturday Review.

"Ein kleines meisterstück."—Abendblatt des Pester Lloyd.

PARKER & Co., Oxford; and 6, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

208 pp. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

VULGAR VERSES

IN DIALECT, AND OUT OF IT.

By JONES BROWN.

London: REEVES & TURNER, 196, Strand, W.C.

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A PROTEST AGAINST AGNOSTICISM.

By P. F. FITZGERALD, Author of "The Philosophy of Self-Consciousness," and "A Treatise on the Principle of Sufficient Reason."

"As ably reasoned as it is profound in thought."—Literary World.

"Beneath the profusion of philosophical and poetical quotations, there is a distinct vein of thought."—Mind.

"Successful as a protest against the excessive study of physicists."—Saturday Review.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & Co., Ltd.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By
A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book.
Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & Co.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 294 pp., hand-made paper, price 10s. 6d.

SACRED and SHAKESPEARIAN

AFFINITIES: being analogies between the writings of the Psalmists and of Shakespeare. By CHARLES ALFRED SWINHURNE.

BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, London, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULA & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

DOUGLAS & FOULIS' NEW CATA- LOGUE OF SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS,

Offered at Greatly Reduced Prices.

includes many important Works on Travel, History, Biography, Poetry, Theology, Ruskin's Publications, Angling, Sport, and Natural History. Magazines and over 1,200 Cheap Novels (52 pages, 8vo). Also a SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature. Gratis and post free to any address.—DOUGLAS & FOULIS, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threepence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church & trices. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT & FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.
And all Booksellers.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

WITH STANLEY'S REAR-COLUMN.

By J. ROSE TROUP.

With Portraits and Illustrations, demy 8vo, 16s.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

Price 1s., post free.

INDIGESTION: its Causes and Cure.
By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.—London: James Erss & Co., 170, Piccadilly; and 48, Threadneedle Street.

Fourth Edition, in 8vo, 21s., cloth, now ready.

ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY from the TEUTONIC CONQUEST to the PRESENT TIME. Designed as a Text-Book for Students and others. By T. P. TASWELL-LANGMEAD, B.C.L., formerly Vinerian Scholar, Oxford, and late Professor of Constitutional Law and History, University College, London. Fourth Edition, Revised, with Notes and Appendices by C. H. CARMICHAEL, M.A. Oxon.

London: STEVENS &amp; HAYNES, 13, Bell Yard, Temple Bar.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES
NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,
And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed. Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopædia Brit., says "PROF. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus, containing opinions of pupils who have PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic, Clerical, etc., professions, post free from Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

OLD SHIRTS Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, 2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape, 2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry. Warm, durable, and comfortable. Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., and 7s. 9d. WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use from the cheapest to the best qualities made.
B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT
LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS HAYES, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS HAYES, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

MADE SIMPLY WITH

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS

Financial year ends 20th November.
All persons now insuring will receive an additional share of profit at the next Division in 1892.

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.
INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. &amp; S. GATTI.

Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.

Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &amp;c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.

Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by R. C. Carton, entitled

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 9. A farcical comedy in three acts, by Sydney Grundy, entitled

MAY AND DECEMBER.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.

Every Evening, at 8.

THE CABINET MINISTER.

Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, F. Farren, Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Eliassen, Harrington, Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.

Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act Farce, entitled

THE JUDGE.

Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H. Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E. Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.

Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

Every Evening, at 8, CAPTAIN THERESE.

Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, Henry Ashley, Harry Parker, T. A. Shale, A. T. Hendon, George Marler, and Harry Monkhouse; Miss Violet Cameron, Madame Amadi, and Miss Phyllis Broughton.

Preceded, at 7.30, by THE GYPSIES.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled

THE GONDOLIER; or, The King of Barataria.

Messrs. Rutland Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, W. Brownlow, Metcalf, Barrett, De Pledge, Burbank, Lewes, and Courtice Pounds; Mesdames Palliser, R. Brandram, Decima Moore, Lawrence, Saumarez, Bernard, Cole, and Jessie Bond.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled

OUR FLAT.

Preceded, at 8, by a Farce.

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

New and Important Series of Popular Books.

EVENTS of OUR TIMES. A Series of Volumes

on the most important Events of the Last Half-Century. Each Volume will contain from 300 to 400 pages, and will be illustrated with Portraits on Copper, Maps, Plans, or other Engravings, and will be published at 5s., in cloth.

Just published.

THE WAR in the CRIMEA. By General Sir

EDWARD HAMLEY, K.C.B. With Portraits of the Emperor Nicholas, Lord Raglan, General Todleben, and General Pelissier, and 6 Maps and Plans, price 5s. Large-Paper Copies (250 only), 10s. 6d.

"Sir Edward Hamley has exceptional qualifications for the task he has undertaken. His 'War in the Crimea' is a well-knitted, historical narrative, written by a competent critic and well-informed observer."—Times.

"In a popular book of 300 pages he manages to give his readers a firm grasp of the whole affair from the diplomatic misunderstanding with which it began to the sanguinary carnage with which it ended."—Leeds Mercury.

Shortly.

THE INDIAN MUTINY of 1857. By Colonel Mal-

LESON, C.S.I. With Portraits of Lord Clyde, Sir Henry Lawrence, Sir H. Havelock, and Sir J. Outram, and 4 Maps and Plans, price 5s. Large-Paper (250 copies), price 10s. 6d.

In Preparation.

ACHIEVEMENTS in ENGINEERING. By Professor VERNON HARCOURT. With many Illustrations.

In preparation.

THE LIBERATION of ITALY. By Edward Dicey.

With Portraits.

Among the Volumes to follow may be named:—

THE REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE.

THE CIVIL WAR in AMERICA.

THE EXPLORATION of AFRICA.

THE OPENING of JAPAN.

Just published.

A YOUNG MACEDONIAN in the ARMY of

ALEXANDER the GREAT. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With 16 Illustrations from the Antique, price 5s., cloth.

"A charming book, charmingly illustrated."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

ROMAN LIFE in the DAYS of CICERO. 5s.

STORIES from HOMER. 5s.

STORIES from the GREEK TRAGEDIANS. 5s.

STORIES from VIRGIL. 5s.

STORIES of the EAST, from HERODOTUS. 5s.

THE STORY of the PERSIAN WAR. 5s.

WITH the KING at OXFORD. 5s.

STORIES of the MAGICIANS. 5s.

THE HAMMER. 5s.

STORIES from LIVY. 5s.

THE STORY of the LAST DAYS of JERUSALEM. 3s. 6d.

A TRAVELLER'S TRUE TALE from LUCIAN. 3s. 6d.

HEROES and KINGS. 1s. 6d.

THE CHANTRY PRIEST of BARNET: a Tale of the Two Roses. 5s.

THE COUNT of the SAXON SHORE. 5s.

THREE GREEK CHILDREN. 3s. 6d.

TO the LIONS. 3s. 6d.

In a few days.

WINCHESTER MEADS in the DAYS of

BISHOP KEN. A Story. By Mrs. MARSHALL. With 8 Illustrations, price 6s., cloth.

Previous Volumes of the same Series:—

UNDER SALISBURY SPIRE in the DAYS of GEORGE HERBERT. 5s.

ON the BANKS of the OUSE: a Tale of the Times of Newton and Cowper. 5s.

UNDER the MENDIPS: a Tale of the Times of Hannah More. 5s.

IN the EAST COUNTRY, with Sir THOMAS BROWNE. 5s.

IN COLSTON'S DAYS: a Bristol Story. 5s.

Thousand.

UP and DOWN the PANTILES. A Story of Tunbridge Wells. By Mrs. MARSHALL. 1s.

Just published.

FRESH from the FENS; or, Three Lincolnshire

Lasses. A Story. By E. WARD. With 8 Illustrations, price 5s., cloth.

Just published.

LADY GREY of SILVERDEN. By E. S. Elliott,

Author of "Copsey Annals," &c. Price 1s., cloth.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

COPSEY ANNALS, preserved in Proverbs. Thousand, 5s.

I MUST KEEP the CHIMES GOING. Thousand, 1s. 6d.

MRS. BLACKETT'S STORY. Thousand, 1s.

REGISTERED SUNSHINE. 2s. 6d.

Illustrated Books.

In December.

THE LAUREATE'S COUNTRY: Scenes connecting with the Life of Alfred Lord Tennyson. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With 14 Copperplates, and many other Engravings of Places connected with the Poet and his Work from Drawings by EDWARD HULL. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (150 only), price Three Guineas.

Next week.

FROM CHARING CROSS to ST. PAUL'S. By

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. With 12 Plates, and many other Engravings of Street Scenes in London from Drawings by JOSEPH PENNELL. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (100 only), price £2 12s. 6d.

Shortly.

THE LIFE of HENRY DAWSON, Landscape

Painter. With 14 Copperplates engraved by his son, some from the most characteristic Works of the Painters. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (100 only), price £2 12s. 6d.

In December.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUME for 1890, being the First Volume of the New Series. With 26 Copperplates, and a large number of other Illustrations. Price 36s. cloth, or 42s. half-morocco.

The New Series has been in many ways improved, and the 12 numbers form a very handsome volume, which, being quite complete in itself, makes a beautiful present for any one with artistic tastes.

Some volumes of the Old Series are still to be had, but many have become scarce.

Just published.

THE RUINED ABBEYS of YORKSHIRE. By

W. C. LEFROY. With many Illustrations after A. Brunet Debaines and H. Toussaint. New Edition, price 6s., cloth.

Previous Volumes of the same Series:—

OXFORD. By ANDREW LANG. 6s.

CAMBRIDGE. By J. W. CLARK. 6s.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON. By SIDNEY LEE. 6s.

WINDSOR. By W. J. LOFTIE. 6s.

EDINBURGH. By R. L. STEVENSON. 3s. 6d.

** The Guinea Editions of the four first named of these books containing the original etching are still to be had.

In December.

MRS. THRALE (afterwards Mrs. Piozzi). By

L. B. SEELEY, M.A. With 9 Copperplates after Hogarth, Reynolds, Zoffany, &c. Price 7s. 6d., cloth.

Large Paper Copies (150 only), price 21s.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

HORACE WALPOLE and HIS WORLD. Second Edition, 7s. 6d.

FANNY BURNEY and HER FRIENDS. 7s. 6d.

A SECOND EDITION of

EXMOOR and the HIGHLANDS of WEST

SOMERSET. By J. LL. W. PAGE, Author of "An Exploration of Dartmoor." With Etchings and other Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

"A book full of pleasing reading."—Graphic.

A SECOND EDITION of

AN EXPLORATION of DARTMOOR. By J. LL.

W. PAGE. With Etchings and other Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"A very thorough and practical book."—Academy.

THE CHEMISTRY of PAINTS and PAINTING.

By A. H. CHURCH, M.A., Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Academy. Price 5s., cloth.

Thousand.

ONLY a DOG. By a Humble Friend. With

Illustrations, New Edition, cloth, 1s. 6d.; sewed, 1s.

LONDON: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, Essex Street, Strand.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 969.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

ALEXANDER BROWN.

THE GENESIS of the UNITED STATES: a Narrative of the Movement in England, 1605-1616, which resulted in the Plantation of North America by Englishmen, disclosing the Contest between England and Spain for the Possession of the Soil now occupied by the United States of America. set forth through a series of Historical Manuscripts now first printed, together with a re-issue of Rare Contemporaneous Tracts, accompanied by Bibliographical Memoranda, Notes and Brief Biographies. Collected, Arranged, and Edited by ALEXANDER BROWN, Member of the Virginia Historical Society, and of the American Historical Association; Fellow of the Royal Historical Society. With 100 Portraits, Maps, and Plans. In 2 vols., 8vo, £3 13s. 6d.

MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.

THE SALON of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF. Letters and Journals, with Drawings and Studies.

DE QUINCEY LETTERS.

MEMORIALS of the DE QUINCEY FAMILY. In Letters and other Records here first published; with Communications from COLERIDGE, the WORDSWORTHS, HANNAH MORE, CHRISTOPHER NORTH, and others of note. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Narrative, by A. H. JAPP, LL.D., F.R.S.E. In 2 vols.

THOMAS DE QUINCEY.

POSTHUMOUS WORKS of THOMAS DE QUINCEY. Edited by A. H. Japp, LL.D., F.R.S.E. Vol. I. Additional SUSPIRIA DE PROFUNDIS, and other Essays. Vol. II. CONVERSATION and COLERIDGE, and other Essays.

HEINE'S WORKS.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of HEINRICH HEINE. Translated by Charles G. Leland, M.A., F.R.L.S. I. Pictures OF TRAVEL.

HEINE'S LIFE.

A LIFE of HEINRICH HEINE. By Dr. Richard Garnett of the British Museum. (Uniform with the above.)

IBSEN'S LIFE.

THE LIFE of HENRIK IBSEN. By Henrik Jæger. Translated by Clara Bell; the Verse done into English from the Norwegian original by EDMUND GOSSE. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Deserves a cordial and emphatic welcome."

IBSEN'S NEW DRAMA.

A NEW PLAY. By Henrik Ibsen. Translated from the Norwegian.

TOLSTOI'S NEW PLAY.

THE FRUITS of ENLIGHTENMENT. A Comedy in Four Acts. By Count Tolstoi. Translated from the Russian MS. by E. J. DILLON, Ph.D.

PROFESSOR KOCH'S GREAT DISCOVERY.

COMMUNICATIONS on a REMEDY for TUBERCULOSIS. By Professor Robert Koch, Berlin. Authorised Translation. Demy 8vo, wrapper, 1s.; or limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

A NEW DANISH HISTORY.

DENMARK. Its History, Topography, Language, Literature, Fine Arts, Social Life, and Finance. Edited by H. WEITEMEYER. With a Coloured Map. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

MR. WHISTLER'S BOOK.

THE GENTLE ART of MAKING ENEMIES. As pleasingly exemplified in many instances wherein the serious ones of this earth, carefully exasperated, have been prettily spurred on to indiscretion and unseemliness while overcome by an undue sense of right. By J. McNEILL WHISTLER. Fifth Thousand. 4to, 10s. 6d. Large Paper Edition, Numbered and Signed, Two Guineas.
SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Quite the most original book of the season. We claim for him the praise of being more than merely amusing, though that is much. We claim for him the pure temperament and profound conviction of the artist."

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

IN THE VALLEY. By Harold Frederic, Author of "Seth's Brother's Wife" and "The Lawton Girl." In 3 vols.
MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Into his historical narrative Mr. Frederic has woven a simple and tender love story so skilfully that it seems a natural part of the fabric."

THE MARKED MAN. By Ada Cambridge. In 3 vols.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—"The moral tone of this story, rightly considered, is pure and noble, though it deals with the problem of an unhappy marriage."
DAILY MAIL GAZETTE.—"Contains one of the best written stories of misalliance that is to be found in modern fiction."

THE MOMENT AFTER. A Tale of the Unseen. By Robert BUCHANAN. In 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"The story itself is certainly an impressive one, more especially the story of the crime."
SPEAKER.—"Few living authors could have imagined and written the narrative of Maurizio Modena."

THE BONDMAN: A New Saga. By Hall Caine. Popular Edition. Twelfth Thousand. In 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

Mr. Gladstone says:—"The Bondman" is a work which I recognise the freshness, vigour, and sustained interest no less than its integrity of aim."

COME FORTH! By E. S. Phelps and H. D. Ward. In 1 vol. Imperial 16mo, 7s. 6d.

THE MASTER of the MAGICIANS. By E. S. Phelps and H. D. Ward. In 1 vol., imperial 16mo, 7s. 6d.
ATHENÆUM.—"A success in Biblical fiction."

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

Each Vol.: Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Paper, 2s. 6d.

IN GOD'S WAY. By Bjornstjerne Bjornson.

PIERRE AND JEAN. By Guy de Maupassant.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE. By Karl Emil Franzos, Author of "For the Right," &c.

WORK WHILE YE HAVE THE LIGHT. By Count Lyof Tolstoi.

FANTASY. By Matilde Serao.

HEINEMANN'S SCIENTIFIC HANDBOOKS.

MANUAL of ASSAYING GOLD, SILVER, COPPER, AND LEAD ORES. By WALTER LEE BROWN, Revised; with a Chapter on THE ASSAYING OF FUEL, &c. By A. B. GRIFFITHS. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, illustrated, 7s. 6d.

THE PHYSICAL PROPERTIES of GASES. By Arthur L. KIMBALL. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, illustrated, 5s.

HEAT AS A FORM of ENERGY. By R. H. Thurston. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, illustrated, 5s.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MAHAFFY'S GREEK WORLD UNDER ROMAN SWAY, by F. T. RICHARDS	495
THE SHORTER FORMS OF ROBERT BRIDGER, by W. WATSON	496
MACKENZIE'S INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY, by A. W. BENN	497
COLONEL SPALDING'S SUVOVROFF, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	498
COLONEL CORBETT'S AN OLD COACHMAN'S CHATTER, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	499
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	500
SOME FOREIGN BOOKS	501
NOTES AND NEWS	502
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	503
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	503
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Winter," by G. E. T.	503
OBITUARY: John Robert Tudor, by R. J. M.	503
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	504
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	504
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Cathedral," by E. A. Freeman; The Order of Letters in the Runic "Futhork," by Canon Isaac Taylor; The Treasury of King Rhampsinthus , by W. A. Clouston; The Source of a Chaucer Simile , by Prof. A. S. Cook; Norfolk Manor Court Rolls , by Walter Rye and Paget Toynbee	504
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	507
THE NEW OXFORD TEXT OF THE ETHICS, by F. T. R.	508
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A New Babylonian Version of the Creation Story, by Theo. G. Pinches	508
SCIENCE NOTES	509
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	509
MASPERO'S SKETCHES OF ANCIENT EGYPT AND ASSYRIA, by Miss Amelia B. Edwards	510
COL. JACOB'S PORTFOLIOS OF INDIAN ARCHITECTURE, by J. B.	511
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	512
STAGE NOTES	512
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	512

MISS BETTINA WALKER is now in Town, and will receive a FEW PUPILS.—33, Upper Gloucester Place, Dorset Square.

ADVERTISER, aged 29, with several years' experience and thorough knowledge of all branches of the work, desires appointment as PRINCIPAL or ASSISTANT in a LIBRARY. Good references.—Address Box 240, Willing's Advertising Offices, 125, Strand, W.C.

AN Experienced Linguist and Translator is desirous of obtaining a little HOME WORK in FRENCH or GERMAN TRANSLATION. Has already published works.—Miss KAY, 21, York Place, Edinburgh.

INCOME with OCCUPATION.—A man having a small capital, who can work hard, can find a very profitable outlet for his time and money by co-operating with a late Government Official.—Letter to G. H. B. M., 285, Regent Street, W.

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

TO ARTISTS.—Excellent STUDIO, with good top and side lights, in W.C. district, rent moderate; also larger studio with North light, electric light.—Apply to Mr. Thomas CHAMBER, 63, Chancery-lane, W.C.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Clues found; Pedigrees traced; Registers searched; Papers and Wills collated, condensed, copied, or translated in any language from manuscript or type in British Museum, Record Office, Local Registries, &c.—FRACOCK & FRACOCK, 1, Doughty Street, W.C.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 15 stamps.—B. BEASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

LITERARY AID.—The Rev. Professor DORSEY, B.D., Chancellor's English Medalist, ASSISTS AUTHORS in the Composition and Correction of Prose and Verse, and Translates from the French, Italian, Portuguese, &c.—Coatham, Redcar.

PRINCE'S HALL, PICCADILLY.—Under Distinguished Patronage.—A POPULAR LECTURE on "THE TALMUD" will be delivered by the Rev. ISIDORE MYERS, B.A. (the Australian Lecturer), on THURSDAY EVENING, 4TH DECEMBER, 1890, commencing at 8 o'clock. Sir PHILIP MAGNUS will preside. Tickets 10s. 6d., 5s., 3s., 2s., and 1s.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

THE NEW REVIEW.

No. 19, DECEMBER.—Price Sixpence.

STUDIES IN CHARACTER.—No. 6. DR. KOCH.
"IN DARKEST ENGLAND." By the Ven. Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.
TWO NEWLY DISCOVERED PAPERS by DE QUINCEY.

ARE OUR WARSHIPS SEAWORTHY?
I. By the Right Hon. Lord BRASSEY.
II. By Rear-Admiral P. H. COLOMB.
RETROSPECT OF THE RACING SEASON.
By Sir GEORGE CHETWYND, Bart.

ETHER DRINKING. By NORMAN KEIR, M.D.
POLIOS AND FOOTLIGHTS. By L. F. AUSTIN.
THE WORLD'S DESIRE. Book III. Chaps. VI., VII., VIII. By H. RIDER HAGGARD and ANDREW LANG.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

COMPLETION OF BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA.

On Monday next will be published the Eighth and concluding Volume of BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA, Edited by Charles Annandale, M.A., LL.D., and illustrated with Wood Engravings and Maps, price 6s. in cloth, or 8s. 6d. in half-morocco.

The Complete Work in 8 vols., cloth, 48s., or half-morocco, 68s., will be ready at the same time.

LONDON: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, "C" BAILEY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
AND
2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &amp;c.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF NORTH WALES.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIPS IN ENGLISH & MATHEMATICS.

The Senate is prepared to APPOINT an ASSISTANT LECTURER in the Department of ENGLISH, and another in that of MATHEMATICS. Salary £120. Appointment to date from the beginning of next term (January 7). Applications, with copies of testimonials, should be sent to the REGISTRAR not later than DECEMBER 20TH. A detailed statement of the position and duties of such Lecturers will be furnished on application to W. CADWALAD DAVIES, Secretary and Registrar.

University College, Bangor, Nov. 24, 1890.

LONDON AND DUBLIN.
I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS.
II. INDIAN C.S., &c. III. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT, 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W., under T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D., Bar-at-Law.
DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CREWTHORPE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.
Est. 1852.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York Street, W.C.; and the Author, 33, Chancery Lane, W.C.

TO COMPILERS of GUIDE BOOKS, LITERARY MEN, ENGINEERS, and ROAD SURVEYORS.

THE CYCLISTS' TOURING CLUB ROAD BOOK.
WANTED, an ASSISTANT to act under the Editor in the preparation of the Northern portions of the C.T.C. Road Book. Preference will be given to a practical cyclist having a knowledge of both the North of England and Scottish roads, or to one who has previously been engaged upon the compilation of Route and Guide Books. Applicant must be prepared to devote his whole time to the work. State age, salary required, and qualifications possessed to the SECRETARY, C.T.C., 140, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ROYAL NAVAL EXHIBITION, 1891.

Patron, HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President, H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.,
Honorary Admiral of the Fleet

Firms intending to exhibit objects connected with the Royal Navy or Maritime interests in general are reminded that all applications must be received by 30th NOVEMBER.

Owners of Paintings, Drawings, Naval Relics, Models, &c., are invited to apply for Loan Forms and Regulations.

For particulars address Captain ALFRED JEFFERSON, R.N., Hon. Secretary, 6, Craig's Court, London, S.W.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE (No. 35) of Cheap SECOND-HAND, ANCIENT, and MODERN BOOKS, including recently bought Private Libraries and Purchases from Country Libraries (1,500 items). Also a Catalogue of Books on Astrology, Freemasonry, Occult Sciences, Phrenology, Spiritualism, Somnambulism, Witchcraft, &c. (2nd series). Free for penny stamp.—H. W. BALL, Barton-on-Humber, (7 miles from Hull).

NEW CATALOGUES OF THE SECOND-HAND STOCK

DAVID NUTT, 270 & 271, Strand, W.C.

XX. Classics and Works on Classical Antiquity. 854 lots.
XXI. Folklore (including Proverbs and Folk-songs), Philology and Literature of the English, German, Celtic, and Scandinavian languages. 428 lots.
XXII. Library of the late G. Masson, Esq., of Harrow (French Philology, Literature, and History 532 lots.
To be had free on application.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threepence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.
GILBERT & FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

THE LEISURE HOUR

FOR DECEMBER CONTAINS—

The Story of Francis Cludde. Chaps. III.-IV. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf," &c. Illustrated by F. Dadd.

Erckmann-Chatrian and their Tales for the People. By RICHARD HEATH.

Everyday Life on the Railroad. II.—In the Booking Office. By W. J. GORDON.

Crossing the Marnisson. By MICHAEL A. MORRISON. Illustrated.

The Lost Bird. By JOHNSON BARKER.

The Incomplete Adventurer. Chaps. IV.-VI. By TIGHE HOPKINS, Author of "The Nugents of Carriouana," &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne.

Natural History Notes and Anecdotes. The Urchin Fish: Diodon Histrix—Flying Fish. By WILLIAM WYATT GILL, B.A.

Stories in Character: Napoleon I. By ADAM RANKINE.

Science of Old Age. Present Length of Life—Vegetable and Animal Longevity—Climate and Habits—Care of Old Age—Common Errors, &c. By A. SCHOFIELD, M.D.

Under Discussion. Some Aspects of Emigration. By Mrs. MAYO, Author of "Voices from the Highways."

"Yankee Dodges." Streets and Houses—Hotels and Restaurants—Ventilation and Warming. By W. E. BUCK. With Illustrations.

Passages in the Life of a Marabout Stork.

Science Notes. The Meteoritic Bombardment of the Moon—Professor Ewing's Model of Magnetised Molecules—Earthworms and Agriculture in Africa—Photography of Lightning: the Dark Flash.

Varieties. Japanese Courtship—Meissonier's Picture of "1814"—Frozen Meat from the River Plate, &c.

Household Queries.

Frontispiece—"1814." After the Picture by MEISSONIER.

Sirpence Monthly of all Newsagents.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

GREEK PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A., D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, Author of "Social Life in Greece," "Greek Life and Thought," "Rambles and Studies in Greece," &c. With 2 Maps and many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges; or in Morocco, elegant, 28s.

"Unquestionably the best book of the kind which has yet appeared. Dr. Mahaffy knows Greece as few Englishmen know her."—St. James's Gazette.

"We linger over the pages of text and illustration, and no doubt many will be similarly fascinated if they adopt our advice to read and mark every portion of this, one of the most delightful books of the 'Pen and Pencil Series.'"—Queen.

EVOLUTION, MODERN IDEAS of, as RELATED to REVELATION and SCIENCE. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., Author of "Acadian Geology," "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," "Egypt and Syria: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History," &c. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

"It embodies the thoughts of an eminent geologist on some of the chief flaws and discrepancies in what he justly styles the 'hypothesis' of evolution. If there is anything calculated to arrest the cocksure young scientist, who is always the young man in a hurry, this book will do it. Perhaps nothing but a counterblast—and Sir Wm. Dawson's book is too well reasoned to deserve the term—can be expected to shake the unflinching confidence of the middlemen of science, who purvey Darwinism, or what they consider to be Darwinism, to the intelligent multitude."—Saturday Review.

ANCIENT EPHEBUS, MODERN DISCOVERIES on the SITE of. By the late J. T. WOOD, F.S.A., Author of "Discoveries at Ephesus, including the Site and Remains of the Great Temple of Diana." By-paths of Bible Knowledge, No. 14. With 13 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

EARLY BIBLE SONGS. By A. W. Drysdale, M.A. By-paths of Bible Knowledge, No. 15. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

THE RITES and WORSHIP of the JEWS. New and Revised Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

BIBLICAL ATLAS and SCRIPTURE GAZETTEER. New and Revised Edition. Maps by HENRY COURTIER, F.R.G.S. Royal 4to, 5s. cloth boards.

HEALTH at HOME. By Dr. Alfred T. Schofield. 1s 6d, cloth. A Useful Book in every House.

Containing one of each of the following, which may be had separately at One Penny each:—

- |  |                                       |
|--|---------------------------------------|
| No. 1. How to Avoid Dying before our Time. | No. 7. On the Care of the Skin.       |
| No. 2. On Breathing and Ventilation.       | No. 8. On Clothes.                    |
| No. 3. On Blood Poisons.                   | No. 9. On Cooking and Eating.         |
| No. 4. The Care of Children.               | No. 10. On Babies.                    |
| No. 5. How to Nurse a Sick Person.         | No. 11. Common Ailments.              |
| No. 6. What to do in Accidents.            | No. 12. How to be Healthy in One Room |

WHAT to READ at WINTER ENTERTAINMENTS.

Part I.—Verse. Part II.—Prose. Part III.—Stories, Pictures, and Parables in Verse for Sunday Reading. Part IV.—Sunday Readings in Prose. Edited and Arranged by the Rev. FREDERICK LANGBRIDGE, M.A., Author of "Sent Back by the Angels," "Poor Folk's Lives," &c. Each vol. 1s. 6d., cloth boards.

"We are sure these readings will be welcomed wherever the audience has not been demoralised by overmuch of the comic."—Guardian.

THE ENGLISH REFORMATION of the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. With Chapters on Monastic England and the Wycliffite Reformation. Illustrated by Maps and Portraits. By the Rev. W. H. BECKETT. Church History Series, No. 7. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

PIONEERS of ELECTRICITY; or, Short Lives of the Great Electricians. By J. MUNRO, Author of "Electricity and its Uses." With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth boards.

HOW LONDON LIVES: the Feeding, Cleansing, Lighting, and Police of London. With Chapters on Post Office and other Institutions. By W. J. GORDON. The Leisure Hour Library, New Series, No. 1. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

FOUNDRY, FORGE, and FACTORY. By W. J. Gordon. The Leisure Hour Library, New Series, No. 2. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. cloth boards.

LONDON: 56, PATERNOSTER ROW; AND OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

DR. PFLEIDERER'S VERY IMPORTANT WORK.

Development of Theology in GERMANY and GREAT BRITAIN since 1825. Thick large 8vo. 10s. 6d.

After devoting 300 pp. to German Theology, the work enters upon a survey of the progress of Theology in Great Britain since 1825, treating of the Schools of Philosophy in their relation to Theology (Coleridge, Carlyle, F. W. Newman, Jas. Mill, Sir W. Hamilton, Mansel, F. D. Maurice, Mat. Arnold, Seeley, Herb. Spencer, F. Caird, T. H. Green, Seth, Flint, Martineau) and Politics and Movements in Theology (J. H. Newman, Froude, Keble, Pusey, Whately, Arnold, Hampden, Milman, Thirlwall, Hare, F. D. Maurice, Erskine, J. M. Campbell, Kingsley, Jowett, Stanley, R. W. Mackay, Seeley, Ebersheim, Davidson, Westcott, Robertson Smith, Hatch).

* * The above work forms the Fourth Volume of SONNENSCHN'S LIBRARY of PHILOSOPHY, Edited by J. H. MUIRHEAD, M.A.

SCHOPENHAUER SERIES.

Each 2s. 6d.

Edited by T. BAILEY SAUNDERS, M.A., Oxon.

THE NEW VOLUME I.—

STUDIES IN PESSIMISM.

1. The Wisdom of Life. [Second Edition.]
2. Counsels and Maxims. [Second Edition.]
3. Religion: a Dialogue, &c. [Second Edition.]
4. The Art of Literature. [In preparation.]

"Mr. Saunders has done English readers a genuine service."—Athenaeum.

"Let your view of Schopenhauer be what it may, you cannot help enjoying and admiring the wealth of observation, reflection, and wisdom."—Truth.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

LUCAS MALET'S NEW NOVEL.

The Wages of Sin. By the Author of "Colonel Enderby's Wife," &c. 3 vols.

NEW POEM BY MR. BARLOW.

From Dawn to Sunset.

Book I. The SONG of YOUTH. Book II. The SONG of MANHOOD. Book III. The SONG of RIVER MANHOOD. By GEORGE BARLOW. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ALSO, A SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION OF MR. BARLOW'S

The Pageant of Life. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Just published, price 1s. boards.

Speeches on the Irish Question

1887-90. By the Right Hon. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, M.P. Issued under the auspices of the National Liberal Union.

SECOND ANNUAL ISSUE.

Public Schools' Year-Book:

A Complete Record of all Matters of Interest for Parents, Schoolmasters, and Boys. Limp cloth, 2s. 6d. Part II. (ATHLETICS), separately, 1s.

MRS. SPENDER'S NEW NOVEL.

Lady Hazleton's Confession

By the Author of "Her Brother's Keeper," &c. 3 vols.

Civilisation of the Renaissance in ITALY. By J. BURCKHARDT. Translated by S. G. C. MIDDLEMORE. New Edition. Thick 8vo 15s.

"It already has a European reputation. The translation is admirable, and has, moreover, Dr. Geiger's additions to both text and notes."—Bookeller.

Monumental Brasses. By the Rev. H. W. MACKLIN. With 13 Full-page Plates (18 full-length figures) and 18 other Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

"The manual is the best that has appeared—or is likely for long to appear—on the subject."—Scotman.

Household Dictionary of MEDICINE. By F. R. WALTERS, M.D. Large 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Well deserving of success."—Naturalist Review. "Is as nearly perfect as possible."—Glasgow Herald.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES. Scarlet cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

The NEW VOLUME is by Mr. LAURENCE GRONLUND, entitled:

OUR DESTINY: the Influence of Socialism on Morals and Religion; an Essay in Ethics.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. Work and Wages. THOROLD ROGERS.                 | 11. Bismarck and Stat: Socialism. W. H. DAWSON.   |
| 2. Civilisation: Cause and Cure. E. CARPENTER.     | 12. Godwin's Political Justice. Edit. H. S. SALT. |
| 3. Quintessence of Socialism. Dr. SCHAFLE.         | 13. The French Revolution. E. BELFORT BAX.        |
| 4. Darwinism & Politics. D. G. RITCHIE, M.A. Oxon. | 14. Co-operative Commonwealth. L. GOSWOLD.        |
| 5. Religion and Socialism. E. BELFORT BAX.         | 15. Essays and Addresses. R. BOSWORTH, M.A. Oxon. |
| 6. Ethics of Socialism. E. BELFORT BAX.            | 16. Charity Organisation. C. S. LEE, II.          |
| 7. Drink Question. Dr. KATE MITCHELL.              | 17. Thoreau's Reform Papers. Edit. H. S. SALT.    |
| 8. Promotion of Happiness. Prof. MACMILLAN.        | 18. Self-Help 100 Years Ago. G. J. HOLYOAKE.      |
| 9. England's Ideal, &c. E. CARPENTER.              | 19. State Reformatory of Elmira. A. WINTER.       |
| 10. Socialism in England. SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.       | 20. Common Sense about Women. T. W. HIGGINS.      |

Messrs. SWAN SONNENSCHN'S NEW ANNUAL CATALOGUE (Nov., 1890), comprising over 600 WORKS, will be sent post free on application.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS'S NEW BOOKS.

Just ready, post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d., with an Illustration of the Novelist's Chit, and a Portrait.

GEORGE MEREDITH: Some Characteristics.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

With a Bibliography by JOHN LANE, &c.

Just ready, medium 16mo, fancy wrapper, 6d. and 1s. net.

POOR PEOPLE'S CHRISTMAS: a Poem.

By the Hon. RODEN NOEL.

Just ready, imperial 16mo, boards, price 5s. net.

A SICILIAN IDYLL: a Pastoral Play.

By JOHN TODHUNTER.

With a Frontispiece by WALTER CHANE.

Printed on hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, in an Edition of 250 copies, at 5s. net, and 50 Copies Large Paper, numbered and signed, at 10s. 6d. net.

* * The L. P. Copies are nearly all sold.

SECOND EDITION, just ready, post 8vo, buckram, price 7s. 6d.

ROBERT BROWNING: Essays and Thoughts.

By JOHN T. NETTLESHIP.

Just ready, 8vo, wrapper, price 3s. 6d.

ALMA MURRAY, PORTRAIT AS BEATRICE CENCI.

With Critical Notice containing Four Letters from ROBERT BROWNING.

LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, VIGO STREET, W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holli, R.A.; Ouseley, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

Just Published. 1 vol., 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: a Poem.

By WILLIAM MORRIS.

Complete, clearly printed, and bound in gilt cloth, from a special design by the Author.

List of other Works, by same Author, on application.

London: REEVES & TURNER, 196, Strand, W.C.

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A PROTEST AGAINST AGNOSTICISM.

By P. F. FITZGERALD, Author of "The Philosophy of Self-Consciousness," and "A Treatise on the Principle of Sufficient Reason."

"As ably reasoned as it is profound in thought."—Literary World.

"Beneath the profusion of philosophical and poetical quotations, there is a distinct vein of thought."—Mind.

"Successful as a protest against the excessive study of physicists."—Saturday Review.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Ltd.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS.

By A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book. Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 294 pp., hand-made paper, price 10s. 6d.

SACRED and SHAKESPEARIAN AFFINITIES:

being analogies between the writings of the Psalmists and of Shakespeare. By CHARLES ALFRED SWINBURNE.

DICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, London, W.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons

on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,

with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN. And all Booksellers.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

EDITED BY

EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A.,

Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; roxburgh, 6s.

The above will be a collection of biographical studies of the lives and work of a number of representative historical characters about whom have gathered the great traditions of the Nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted, in many instances, as types of the several National ideals. With the life of each typical character will be presented a picture of the National conditions surrounding him during his career.

Each Volume will be handsomely printed in large crown 8vo, and will contain numerous Full-page Illustrations and Maps.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS and the STRUGGLE of PROTESTANTISM for EXISTENCE.

By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A., late Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford.

"It is a lively and well-written version of one of the most remarkable stories to be found in authentic history."—Sunday Times.

"The style of the book is crisp, blunt, almost sturdy, but eminently readable."—Manchester Examiner.

NELSON, and the NAVAL SUPREMACY of ENGLAND.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

HOLLAND and its PEOPLE.

By Edmondo de Amicis. Translated from the Italian by CAROLINE TILTON. New Revised Edition, printed from new plates. With 77 Illustrations. Pp. 460, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—Holland—Zealand—Rotterdam—Delft—The Hague—Leyden—Haarlem—Amsterdam—Utrecht—Broek—Zaandam—Alkmaar—Helder—The Zuyder Zee—Friesland—Groningen—From Groningen to Arnhem.

LIBERTY and a LIVING.

How to get Bread and Butter, Sunshine and Health, Leisure and Books, without Slaving Away One's Life. By P. G. HUBERT, Jun. 16mo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It is an extremely pleasant and readable little volume."—Sunday Times.

"All will read his well-written little book with keen interest, and no little enjoyment."—Scotsman.

DUST and its DANGERS.

By T. M. Prudden, M.D., Author of

"The Story of the Bacteria," &c. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

This little book has been written with the purpose of informing people, in simple language, what the real danger is of acquiring serious disease, especially consumption, by means of dust-laden air, and how this danger may be avoided.

HISTORY of NORWAY.

By Hjalmar H. Boyesen, Professor of German Language and Literature at Columbia College. With 79 Illustrations and Maps. Crown 8vo, 560 pp., cloth, extra, 6s.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOW READY.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE TEMPLE LIBRARY.

"May fairly rank as an edition de luxe....The publishers well deserve the gratitude of all book collectors."—Athenaeum.

The POETICAL WORKS of THOMAS

LOVELL BEDDOES. 2 vols. post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE, and with Two Etchings by Herbert Railton.

The text includes the exceedingly rare "Improvisatore," and several Poems now for the first time printed from the MS. in the possession of the late Mr. Robert Browning.

The edition is limited to 500 copies. There is also a Large-Paper Edition of 125 copies, but it is already completely out of print at the Publishers.

The following is a List of Works already issued in this Library:—

LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA. Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. (Only fifteen copies remain unsold.)

POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLD-SMITH. Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON.

SELECT ESSAYS of Dr. JOHNSON. Edited by BIRKBECK HILL.

LANDOR'S PERICLES and ASPASIA. Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

Each having Six Etchings by Herbert Railton. All the Large-Paper Copies of the above are completely out of print; and very short numbers of the Small-Paper remain.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

ANNOTATED AND ACCENTUATED.

With Illustrations of English Life in Chaucer's Time.

By JOHN SAUNDERS.

"No better edition of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales' has been produced for many a day....The illustrations from the Ellesmere MS. are capital guides to the student, as giving an authoritative glimpse into the life of Chaucer's time. A special word of recognition must be awarded to the scholarly essay under the title 'Concluding Remarks,' in which the author briefly but powerfully surveys what Chaucer did for his own time, for ours, and for remotest posterity. The volume forms a thoroughly trustworthy text-book."—Daily Telegraph.

LORD TENNYSON'S POETICAL WORKS.

J. M. DENT & CO. are now supplying LORD TENNYSON'S WORKS (Macmillan's 7s. 6d. Edition), with 12 Etchings by Herbert Railton and John Jellicoe, price, in cloth extra, gilt top, 12s. 6d.; and in various extra leather bindings, of which they will be pleased to forward lists to the Trade.

These Etchings can also be supplied bound up with the Eight-Vol. Edition in leather bindings.

CHARLES LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. With an Etching by Herbert Railton. New and Cheap Edition. Cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

"This edition of the Gentle Elia is one of the most dainty that has been issued for a long while. The style is decidedly artistic, the paper of the best, and the editing most judicious."—Bookseller.

WITH the POETS. A Selection of English Poetry.

By ARCHDEACON FARRAR. New and Cheap Edition. With 10 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Has long taken its place in the first rank of selections of English poetry."—Bookseller.

SONGS from TENNYSON.

16mo, cloth, gilt edges, 1s. 6d., with six photos, 2s. 6d.

REVERIES of a BACHELOR; or, a Book of the heart. By IK MARVEL, with an Etching by Percy Moran. A volume of delicate Essays, elegantly printed. Cloth extra, with special design on back and side. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

DREAM LIFE: a Fable of the Seasons.

By the Author of "Reveries of a Bachelor," with an Etching by Percy Moran. Cloth extra to match above volume. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

J. M. DENT & CO., ALDINE HOUSE 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET, E.C.

DEAN &amp; SON'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Now ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, large post 8vo.
price 10s. 6d.

SCENES THROUGH the BATTLE SMOKE; being Reminiscences in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. By the Rev. ARTHUR MALE, Army Chaplain at Lucknow, and in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. With Portrait of the Author, and 8 large Illustrations by Sidney Paget, War Artist to the Illustrated London News in these Campaigns.

Lord Cranbrook writes:—"Mr. Male's personal knowledge of the events makes his interesting book more valuable."

Large post 8vo, handsomely bound, price 7s. 6d.

FRENCH SOLDIERS in GERMAN PRISONS; being Reminiscences during and after the Franco-German War. By Canon E. GUERS, Army Chaplain to the French Forces.

The work is illustrated with Portraits of the leading actors in these terrible scenes. The thrilling narrative helps one to realise the self-denial and heroism of those who gave up much of the comfort of this life to tend the sufferings of the sick, wounded, and helpless soldiers suddenly interred in fortress and hospital.

Handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 6s.

SOUVENIRS of the SECOND EMPIRE; or, the Last Days of the Court of Napoleon. By the COMTE de MAUGNY, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

This interesting volume of the reminiscences of a Cabinet Minister is full of anecdotes relating to all that passed amongst the Court and Society, the Clubs and the Theatres, in the reign of Napoleon III.; also numerous portraits and particulars as to the lives of all the celebrities of the period.

Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 5s.

THE DOYLE FAIRY BOOK. Consisting of Twenty-nine Fairy Tales. Translated from various Languages by ANTHONY R. MONTALBA. With 24 Illustrations by RICHARD DOYLE, a Memoir of Doyle, and an Introduction by a Member of the Folk-lore Society.

Fcap. 4to, handsomely bound, cloth, price 5s.

BERGE'S COMPLETE NATURAL HISTORY of the ANIMAL, MINERAL, and VEGETABLE KINGDOMS. Edited by R. F. CRAWFORD, F.R.S. With 16 large exquisitely Coloured Plates, containing over 250 Animals and over 100 smaller Illustrations.

This is the most complete book of any yet issued on this subject, inasmuch as it deals fully with Birds, Beasts, Reptiles, Insects, Trees, Plants, Minerals, Fossils, &c., each part of the subject being profusely illustrated, thus showing at a glance the appearance of the object described.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, large post 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME: his Life and Character. By a FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great ex-Chancellor, from his childhood upwards.

Cloth, handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

BY MADAME CARETTE,

Private Reader to the Empress Eugénie.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS of the COURT of the TUILERIES; or, the Eve of an Empire's Fall.

THIRD EDITION. Price 6s. Large post 8vo.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MY MISTRESS the EMPRESS EUGENIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries.

Handsomely bound in cloth boards, 4to, price 2s. 6d.

UNCLE DUMPIE'S MORRIS MONTHS.

By ROBERT ST. JOHN CORBET.

A most amusing Story, told in lively Verse, showing the Adventures of Uncle Dumpsie and his Nephews and Nieces in the Channel Tunnel. With 12 humorous Full-Page Illustrations, and numerous smaller ones by J. H. Roberts.

Crown 4to, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, red edges, price 7s.

The LITTLE ONE'S OWN COLOURED

PICTURE ANNUAL for 1891. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gold and colour, with over 500 Stories in Prose and Verse, and 208 Full-Page fresh novel Pictures in Chromo Colours, besides Kindergarten Lessons, Riddles, Puzzles, &c.

Just ready, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, emblematic cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED BOOK of WONDERS, EVENTS, and DISCOVERIES. By JOHN TIMBS, Author of "Things not Generally Known," &c. New and Revised Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet Street, E.C.,
Office of "Debrett's Peerage."

J. S. VIRTUE &amp; CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

The Art Annual for 1890, being the CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the "ART JOURNAL," consisting of the Life and Work of

BIRKET FOSTER.By MARCUS B. HUISE, LL.B., Editor of the Art Journal.

With an Original Etching by the Artist, Two Full-page Steel Engravings, and nearly 40 Illustrations in the Text.

Uniform with the above in price and binding, the Life and Work of Sir F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Bart., R.A., L. ALMA TADEMA, R.A., J. L. E. MEISSONIER, J. C. HOOK, R.A., and ROSA BONHEUR.

The Seven ART ANNUALS may be had handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, £1 1s.

Now ready, price 21s.

The Art Journal Volume for 1890.

Containing nearly 500 Illustrations and 12 Full-page Etchings and Engravings, after the following eminent Artists:—FRANK BRAMLEY, E. A. WATERLOW, A.R.A., E. BLAIR LEIGHTON, DUDLEY HARDY, KEELEY HALLWELL, GEORGE CLAUSSON, &c.

Handsomely bound, super-royal 4to, £1 1s.

Sketches of England. By a

FOREIGN ARTIST (Mons. MYRBACH, Illustrator of "Tartarin sur les Alpes"), and a FOREIGN AUTHOR (Mons. P. VILLARS, of the "Journal des Débats"). With Eight Full-page Coloured Plates and over 60 Illustrations in the Text. The following places, among others, are described:—Dover, Canterbury, Ramsgate, Margate, Chatham, Rochester, London, Oxford, York, Leeds, Liverpool, Chester, Llandudno, Carnarvon, &c.

Large folio, handsomely bound in half-morocco, gilt top, £3 3s.
Edition limited to 500 Numbered Copies.

Turner's Richmondshire. A Series of 20 Line Engravings after J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., printed on India paper from the original plates. With Descriptions by Mrs. ALFRED HUNT, and an Introduction by M. B. HUISE, LL.B.

Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Adeline's Art Dictionary, containing a Complete Illustrated Index of all Terms used in Art, Architecture, Heraldry, and Archaeology. Translated from the French and Enlarged, with nearly 2,000 Illustrations.

Post 8vo, 5s.

French Cookery for Ladies. By a "CORDON BLEU" (Madame LEBOUR-FAWSETT), Author of "Economical French Cookery for Ladies."

Demy 4to, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

Clubland: London and Provincial.

By JOSEPH HATTON. With about 50 Illustrations of the Principal Clubs in London and the United Kingdom, including 16 Full-page Plates.

"A desirable book which will doubtless be in much request as a gift."—Scotsman.

Royal 4to, £2 2s.

The Seine and the Loire. Illustrated by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. With 61 Line Engravings. Introduction and Descriptive Letterpress by M. B. HUISE, LL.B.

"The plates are all interesting and of exceptional beauty and finish."—Morning Post.

Small imperial 4to, cloth gilt, gilt edges, £1 1s.

Jerusalem, the Holy City. By

Colonel Sir CHARLES WILSON. With about 80 Engravings on Steel and Wood.

"No work we know gives so good an idea of the Holy City, with its sacred surroundings and its historical remains."—Times.

Post 8vo, 6s.

A Manual of Decorative Com- position. For Designers, Decorators, Architects, and Industrial Artists. By HENRI MAYEUX. Translated by J. GONINO, and illustrated by nearly 300 Engravings.

"Mr. Mayeux's method is admirable, and it is really wonderful how much information, how many practical hints, how much valuable criticism he packs into his three hundred odd pages."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: J. S. VIRTUE & CO., LIMITED,
26, IVY LANE, E.C.

MESSRS. ISBISTERS' LIST.

Mr. Gladstone's New Book.

THE IMPREGNABLE ROCK OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.

A Series of Old Testament Studies.

Revised and Enlarged from Good Words.

By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Now ready.

New Work by the Dean of Gloucester.

DREAMLAND IN HISTORY.

The Story of the Norman Dukes.

By H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester.

With over 60 Illustrations by Herbert Raiton.

Imperial 8vo, 21s.

On December 1.

Dean Plumptre's Life of Ken.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF THOMAS KEN.

By E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D., Dean of Wells.

With Portrait and numerous Illustrations by Whymper.

Popular Edition. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 12s.

Now ready.

TWO SPLENDID GIFT-BOOKS.

Each handsomely bound, 7s. 6l.

GOOD WORDS

VOLUME FOR 1890.

With over 200 Illustrations by the best Artists, and containing New Stories

By B. L. FARJEON,
J. M. BARRIE,

AND

HELEN SHIPTON.

Along with Important Contributions by

Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
Prof. Flint, D.D., LL.D.
Sir R. S. Ball, F.R.S.
R. H. Hutton.
Edward Whymper.
Prof. Rücker, F.R.S.

Bishop of Peterborough.
Bishop of Ripon.
Dean of Gloucester.
Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.
Prof. Marcus Dods, D.D.
Rev. Harry Jones.

&amp;c.

&amp;c.

Now ready.

THE

SUNDAY MAGAZINE

VOLUME FOR 1890.

With over 200 Illustrations by the best Artists, and containing New Stories

By ANNIE S. SWAN,
SILAS K. HOCKING,
And Others

Along with Important Contributions by

Arch. of Canterbury.
Bishop of Rochester.
Bishop of Ripon.
Bishop of Sodor and Man.
Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.
H. Montagu Butler, D.D.

R. M. Ballantyne.
L. T. Meade.
Agnes Giberne.
Darley Dale.
Mrs. Fawcett.
Prof. W. G. Blaikie.

&amp;c.

&amp;c.

Now ready.

TWO NEW CHRISTMAS STORIES.

IN THE SHADE OF SCHIEHALLION.

THE "GOOD WORDS" CHRISTMAS STORY.

By C. BLATHERWICK, Author of "Peter Stannor," &amp;c.

With numerous Illustrations.

Price Sixpence.

Now ready.

THE FLIGHT OF THE SHADOW.

THE "SUNDAY MAGAZINE" CHRISTMAS STORY.

By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D.,

Author of "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," &amp;c.

Illustrated by Gordon Browne.

Price Sixpence.

Now ready.

15 and 16, TAVISTOCK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS

Now ready. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.
THE LIGHT of OTHER DAYS.
Musical Reminiscences of Half a Century. By WILLERT BEALE, Author of "The Enterprising Impresario," &c.
"Mr. Willert Beale has, in his Reminiscences, given us a greater romance of real life than will be found in twenty volumes of novels by the most eminent authors. Yet all so naturally and so simply told."—The Baron de Bookworms in French.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.
"A book which will attract and interest many as the unpretending record of a long life and a varied experience. Mr. Cooper has lived through an unparalleled series of social changes; he has seen and known many famous men, and his own life has not been without its romantic story of a rise from obscurity to renown."—Times.

THIRD EDITION.
THE LETTERS and DIARIES of MAJOR BARTELOT, Commander of the Bear Column of Mr. Stanley's Expedition. With Portrait and Maps.
In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

BY MAJOR FISHER.
THROUGH STABLE and SADDLE-
ROOM: A Practical Guide for all concerned in the Ownership or Management of Horses. By ARTHUR T.
FISHER, late Major 21st Hussars. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

"We warmly recommend this thoroughly practical and comprehensive treatise. The information covers all the ground in a very complete fashion; it descends to the most minute details, and is not above the 'next best thing' in cases where the best is too costly."—St. James's Gazette.

BY MR. BARKER.
WAYFARING in FRANCE; or, Highways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

"Often and well as the picturesque features of France have been described, there are few books now before the public that, taken altogether, give a pleasanter and more comprehensive view of what is to be seen, done, and suffered there, than does this volume."—Manchester Examiner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ACTE."
THE DELIVERANCE of ROBERT
CARTER. By HUGH WESTBURY, Author of
"Frederick Hazledene," &c. 2 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."
A DAUGHTER of the PYRAMIDS.
By LEITH DERWENT, Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c. 3 vols.

"There is something very 'creepy' about this strange story of hypnotism, dissection, clairvoyance, and other provinces of occult or transcendental science. The choice of material, and method of construction are alike admirable in producing a book with decided merits of its own. It plunges at the outset in medias res; it never forsakes the almost lurid path it designs to follow; it culminates with an appropriately wild suggestion."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA."
WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.
By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Arday," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.
"A story of absinthe and absinthiers—a grim, realistic drama."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."
ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. 3 vols.

"Miss Broughton is as vivacious and readable as usual in her last novel."—Daily Telegraph.
"In this novel, the author strikes, perhaps, a deeper and truer note of human sympathy than has been audible in any other of her fictions. The interest is not only well maintained, but wholesome and edifying."—Globe.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "EAST LYNNE."
THE HOUSE of HALLIWELL. By Mrs. HENRY WOOD, Author of "The Channings," &c.
3 vols.

TWO NEW ADDITIONS TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

MISS SHAFTO. By W. E. Norris,
Author of "Thirby Hall," &c.

HERIOT'S CHOICE. By Rosa N. Carey,
Author of "Wee Wife," &c. Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Dedicated to the Queen by Her Majesty's Special Permission.

Nelson: the Public and Private
Life of Horatio, Viscount Nelson. By G. LATHOM
BROWNE, Barrister-at-Law, Author of "Wellington,"
"Narratives of State Trials," &c. With Heliogravure
Frontispiece and 13 Full-page Illustrations and 4 Maps.
Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 18s. [Ready.]

"RIP VAN WINKLE'S" LIFE.
The Autobiography of Joseph
Jefferson. With many Full-page Portraits and other Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 16s. [Ready.]

JOURNEYS IN THE HOLY LAND.
With the Beduins: a Narrative of
Journeys to the East of the Jordan and Dead Sea, Palmyra, &c. By GRAY HILL. Sixty-eight Illustrations and Map. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 15s. [Ready.]

By the Author of "ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE."
The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare. By J. J. JUSSERAND. With 6
Heliogravures, and many other Illustrations in the text.
Demy 8vo, handsome cloth, gilt tops, 21s. [Dec. 4.]
"M. Jusserand's fascinating volume."—Quarterly Review.

The Vikings in Western Christendom, A.D. 789-888. By C. F. KEARY, Author of "Outlines of Primitive Belief." With Map and Tables.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. [Ready.]

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION.
The Life and Times of Savonarola.
By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Translated by LINDA VILLARI. Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, 21s. [Ready.]

"Not only a masterly portrait of Savonarola, but a graphic and picturesque delineation of a very remarkable period of Italian History."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Gottfried Keller: a Selection of his Tales. Translated, with a Memoir, by KATE FREILIGRATH KROEGER, Translator of "Brentano's Fairy Tales." With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Just ready, Volume VI. of "THE CAMEO SERIES."
Lyrics. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON
(Madame Jas. Darmesteter).
Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, half bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.
[Ready.]

Volume XXVII. of "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."
Mexico. By SUSAN HALE. Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Crown 8vo, fancy cloth, gold lettered, 5s. [Dec. 4.]

Volume V. of "THE ADVENTURE SERIES."
The Buccaneers and Marooners of America: Being an account of the Famous Adventures and Daring Deeds of certain Notorious Freebooters of the Spanish Main. Edited by HOWARD PYLE.
Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Dec. 4.]

NEW TWO-VOLUME NOVEL. Just ready.
Philosopher Dick: Adventures and Contemplations of a New Zealand Shepherd. 2 vols.,
crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
"A well-written and vivid picture of life in the New Zealand Bush."—Scottish Leader.

NEW BIBLICAL ROMANCE.
Hadasseh; or, from Captivity to the Persian Throne. By E. LEUTY COLLINS (Emilie Lancaster), Author of "Tween Heaven and Earth,"
&c. Illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Dec. 4.]

Chess for Beginners, and the Beginnings of Chess. By R. B. SWINTON. Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, red edges, 4s. 6d.
[Ready.]

LONDON:
T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

WILD LIFE on a TIDAL WATER:
the History of a House Boat and Crew. By Dr. P. H.
EMERSON, Author of "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c., &c. Illustrated with thirty Copper-plates by P. H. Emerson and T. F. Goodall.

EDITION DE LUXE, printed on toned Dutch paper, the plates on India, and bound in vellum with black and gold decorations and green morocco back. Limited to 100 numbered copies. Price £3 3s. nett.

THE ORDINARY EDITION, printed on best white paper, plates on antique, Dutch and plate, bound in peacock-blue cloth with leather back and design. 25s. nett.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of
Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections.
By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "Our Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
[Next week.]

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by HENRY JAMES. Numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Myr-Rossi and Montegut.
Square 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CARE of the SICK, at Home and in the Hospital. A Handbook for Families and for Nurses. By Dr. TH. BILLROTH, Professor of Surgery in Vienna, &c., &c. Translated, by special authority of the Author, by J. BENTALL ENDEAN. Crown 8vo, with 49 Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of all the POSTAGE STAMPS of the UNITED KINGDOM of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND ISSUED DURING FIFTY YEARS. Illustrated by 148 Woodcuts. By WILLIAM A. S. WESTOBY, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LETTERS to LIVING AUTHORS. By J. A. STEUART. Illustrated with Portraits of the different Authors. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A limited EDITION DE LUXE, printed on hand-made paper and tastefully bound, 10s. 6d.
"They strike us as being better than this sort of work generally is. Done with ability and discretion."—World.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY JULES VERNE.

THE PURCHASE of the NORTH
POLE: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon."
Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE FAMILY WITHOUT a NAME.
Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE.
CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Complete in itself and full of beautiful Illustrations.
CONTENTS.

AS YOU LIKE IT. By ANDREW LANG. With 10 Illustrations. Drawn by E. A. ARBRY.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT: a Story. By PAUL
HEYSE. Illustrations. Drawn by C. S. REINHART.

THE WINTER of OUR CONTENT. (Illustrated.)
By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

FLUTE and VIOLIN: a Story. By JAMES LANE
ALLEN. With 21 Illustrations. Drawn by HOWARD PYLE.

A PRE-RAPHAELITE MANSION. By THEO-
DORÉ CHILDS. With 10 Illustrations, from Paintings by G. F. WATTS, DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, BURNES-JONES, and Drawings by H. D. NICHOLS.

JACK'S LITTLE WOMAN: a Story. By SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

P'LASKI'S TUNAMENT. (Illustrated.) By THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

WOMEN and HOME LIFE in JAPAN. By PIERRE LOTI. With 8 Illustrations. From Paintings
by H. HUMPHREY MOORE.

GIBBLE COLT'S DUCKS: a Story. (Illustrated.)
By RICHARD MALCOLM JOHNSTON.

A SPEAKING GHOST: a Story. By ANNIE TRUMBULL SLOSSON.
&c. &c. &c.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
and RIVINGTON, Limited,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1890.

No. 969, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Greek World Under Roman Sicay: From Polybius to Plutarch. By J. P. Mahaffy. (Macmillan.)

"THIS volume completes another stage in the social life and the civilisation of the Greeks, and pursues my subject from the subjugation of Hellenic lands by Rome down to the accession of Hadrian." So writes Prof. Mahaffy. We are glad to think that it is only one more stage with which he has now dealt, and that we may look forward to yet another of his penetrating surveys of the inner life and condition of the Greeks. There is no falling off in the interest of the present instalment, no less vivacity, no less sureness of touch, than when the professor treated of the Greeks between Homer and Menander, or traced again their thought and their fortunes down to the age of Polybius.

Prof. Mahaffy claims to have collected the evidence which bears upon his present subject more fully than any writer before him has done, and, to the best of our judgment, his claim is a sound one. It is no political history which he is writing, but a "social history," a survey of a scattered yet united world; and the evidence has to be gathered from many sources—from architecture and from coins, from Egyptian mummy cases and Indian plays, from Acts of Apostles and logs of merchant-skippers. Great literary skill and great sense of proportion have gone to the making of so distinct and harmonious a picture as is now set before us; and we can judge it while we gaze, for Prof. Mahaffy gives many more references to authorities than he did in earlier books.

It is a very difficult task to estimate the position of the Hellenes under Roman government. There are so many qualifications to be admitted, so many deductions to be made. We should not take the undoubted wretchedness of the years of conquest and settlement into account so much as Prof. Mahaffy does: these are but preliminaries to what we are really to judge. Nor need we dwell upon the condition of the outposts of Greek civilisation—Seleucia among the Parthians, Massalia among the Gauls, Panticapaeum in the North. But we have to distinguish between Hellas and Asia Minor, and again between real Greeks and those natives of other countries who were Grecized by accident, or who Grecized themselves with expense and effort.

A moderate and qualified happiness seems to have been the lot of the Greek-speaking countries when once the conquest and the civil wars were over. Hellas proper rested in peace and in something like contentment. The sage advice of Plutarch was taken. The impossible was recognised for impossible. Learned men looked for, and sometimes found, professors' chairs or domestic chaplaincies. Adventurous spirits sought adventures in lands where there was wealth to be seized by cunning and boldness. The folk who stayed behind were chiefly quiet country-people, who were not afraid of stagnation. They saw the population thinning and land going out of cultivation, but where could they live their own lives better and with more true refinement than at home? A few spots in Greece were yet full of bustle. New-fashioned oracles drew their crowds. Faith-healing gathered its votaries together. Athens lived upon her glory, upon the favour of a cultivated emperor, upon her lectures, or upon the tourists who came to see her monuments. The Grecised parts of Asia Minor positively thrived. They had had no great history in the past, and were having no great day in the present. Their race of philosophers was but a memory, and the land could produce little more than clever writers and miracle-workers. But Asia respected and honoured trade. The Roman government checked the Alsatias of the temples. Trade organised itself, and commerce was extended. Laodicea, ruined by earthquakes under Nero, needed no imperial help, but rebuilt itself at its own cost. Bithynia appears concerned about little but public buildings. Few cities in the Greek world gave up their old character, or were compelled, like Paestum, to weep for their lost Greek life.

Yet there were troubles too. Peculation among lower officials and extortion among higher officials were but imperfectly checked. In peace and in war alike the provincials might see their best statues, dear to them almost as their lives, carried off to Italy by some "Vulture of the Provinces." Sulla had some excuse for looting, Nero had none for stealing; and, though we know from Pausanias what crowds of statues remained in their places, we know also that very many found their way to Rome or Campania. Originality of all sorts was dead, and the general level of intelligence was falling. Degrading superstitions come once more to the front. With no future to look forward to, with no ends except personal advancement, the race was failing to keep the ground it had won in earlier days. As Polybius says of the Boetians after a defeat, a great part of the Greek race now οὕτως ἀνέπεσον ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὥστε ἀπλῶς οὐδένος ἐπὶ τῶν καλῶν ἀμφισβητεῖν ἐτόλμησαν. They turned πρὸς εὐωχίαν καὶ μέθας. The time came at last when even life and property ceased to be safe against foreign invaders, and when Dexippus flung the last ray of glory upon Athens by his gallant, if unavailing, skirmish with Goths upon Attic soil.

The letters of Pliny show also how the municipal freedom of the townships was being curtailed by an emperor who was a good man of business and a great centraliser. It is true that, as Prof. Freeman says, "the Greek commonwealths under Rome do everything for themselves by votes of their own assemblies, only those votes needed a license beforehand and a confirmation after." Such was long the practice, but by degrees the action of the commonwealths was, de facto, more and more hampered. They perhaps were no longer obliged to borrow money on such terms as those which the agent of M. Brutus imposed upon Salamis. They owned property, and they could receive bequests. But government-auditors were coming to inquire how the property was used. Such intervention was perhaps necessary, certainly ominous.

After the time of Mithradates, the Greek-speaking populations show no abhorrence of their masters. Good humoured ridicule of the Romans seems to have been common, though the Greek on foreign soil found it expedient to disguise his feelings in servility. Where safety was to be found in multitudes, as in the theatre at Antioch, not even an emperor was safe from gibes. The cleverness of the genuine Greek, the different cleverness of the Oriental who had learned to talk Greek, found a butt as well as a victim in the thicker-headed Roman. The Greeks remained perfectly satisfied with themselves and with a position of affairs which, if it did not give them liberty, gave them a world-wide opening for their wits. They might ostentatiously practice emperor-worship—various good things were to be got by so doing—but they were too shrewd, as well as too proud, to care much for the Roman franchise. Slight is their mention (and slighter, we may be sure, was their admiration) of Roman authors. As Tacitus said, Sua tantum mirantur.*

But, after all, Quota portio facies Achæi? Even in parts of old Hellas the inhabitants were of very mixed extraction. At Athens herself an enemy with a bitter tongue could declare that he found only a colluvies nationum, and Cicero had remarked (as Prof. Mahaffy reminds us) the absence of beauty among the people of that city. The people, perhaps, lactum antiquitatis, were living on the memory of a past which did not belong to them. Out of Hellas Greeks were not Greeks except in name. Asia and Alexandria had long been the melting-pots in which Mediterranean races were fused and glazed with a Greek glaze. Lucian has all the pride, the prejudices, and the ability of a genuine Greek, but he has neither purity of blood nor purity of language. It was easy for a Syrian to ridicule the gods of Olympus.

Still, conquered or free, Greeks or Greek-lings, the people affected Rome herself in innumerable ways; and in the population of imperial Rome, weak, excitable, and cruel, we can see the outcome of Hellenic and Oriental blood. From that city, on the other hand, Greeks learned but little. Bad example taught them to hold gladiatorial shows, no doubt. But we fancy that Prof. Mahaffy is over-enthusiastic in saying that there arose a new phase, Roman Hellenism, "which, like the Corinthian order so universally adopted by Roman builders, produced some splendid results." Is he thinking of Corinth and Patrae, Nicopolis and Pompeii? There was Hellenism protected, not Hellenism much modified, by Rome.

* Pausanias appears to affirm the exact opposite, ix. 36-4; but the two passages are not incapable of reconciliation.

Distinctions of blood go far toward explaining the marked differences of attitude of the Romans toward people called "Greeks." At one time we find the latter petted by the Romans. They were the object of much sentimental tenderness. Their language was always recognised in administrative or judicial business, and the emperors were presently assisted by Greek as well as by Latin secretaries. But the tenderness was not for everybody. Not every Greek was a Polybius, not every city an Athens. The hungry Greekling of unknown antecedents might push his way at Rome, but the people knew what to think of him, even without the satirists to tell them. The verb pergræcari was not invented for nothing. Juries were ready to disbelieve Greek witnesses, and the government knew better than to employ Greeks in administrative posts. The freedmen of Claudius, a Pallas or a Narcissus, offered no encouraging promise of uprightness in high places, and the Romanised freedmen of later inscriptions are the only Greeks who seem to have fairly taken their place in anything like a civil service. If the Greeks felt, as we said, a good-natured contempt for their masters, their masters repaid it with a contempt which was anything but good-natured; and no candid friend—not even Prof. Mahaffy himself—ever exposed the weak points of a nation with which he was constrained to be in sympathy more frankly than Cicero did. It was a nation fallen indeed below the proud boast which Aeschines had made, οὐ γὰρ βίον γε ἡμεῖς ἀνθρώπινον βεβιώκαμεν, ἀλλ' εἰς παραδοξολογίαν τοῖς ἑσόμενοις μεθ' ἡμᾶς ἔφυμεν. Morally and physically Greece was but a shadow; ἐκπεπὶνηται καὶ ἀπηγόρευκε (Strabo) might have been said of the whole of it. Nor does the process of degeneration end with the period which Prof. Mahaffy's book covers (though he claims that Greece "recovered her ascendancy" in the time of Hadrian). It went on till the passage of centuries brought to "Greeks" new cares and interests, with new frontiers and a new religion to defend. But these were only Greeks by adoption.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

The Shorter Poems of Robert Bridges. (Bell.)

In these days of flashy literary workmanship, when so many of us go after what is "striking" and "telling," and the love of "points" threatens to do away with the appreciation of any quiet and evenly-ordered excellence, it is a pure delight to read the poetry of Mr. Robert Bridges—poetry that is free from all taint of the literary vices of our time, and is only saved from an almost too great faultlessness by one or two peccadilloes savouring of the pleasant foibles of the past. In an age of spiritual vagrancy and unrest, it is verse like this which "brings us home," if not exactly "to the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome," at least to a tranquil haven of unalloyed beauty where it is our happiness awhile to forget some of the many things that are always well worth forgetting. But let no one whose palate has been depraved by the abuse of condiments imagine that there is anything in this delicate repast for him. Here is nothing highly spiced or over-flavoured; here everything is as unspoiled and virgin as fruit on the branches or honey in the comb—and as delicious.

Those who have read, without being so fortunate as to possess, the thin quarto volume which Mr. Bridges printed in Oxford in 1884, with its delightful old-world look, its antique paper, its archaic type, its s's like f's, and its U's like V's, will rejoice to find that its contents are transferred to the new and more accessible volume, in which many other pieces now see the light for the first time. Here are lyrics strong and passionate, like "I will not let thee go," and others, like "Thou didst delight my eyes," even more strangely haunting. Here are tenderly fanciful nature-pieces in which we seem to see "the white water-lily spoked with gold" unfolding "her broad shields" on quiet waters, or in dim woodlands to tread the fallen leaves

"That lie upon the dank earth brown and rotten,
Miry and matted in the soaking wet,
Forgotten with the spring, that is forgotten
By them that can forget."

Here, too, is the wonderful "Elegy on a Lady whom grief for the death of her betrothed killed." Romantic and even fantastic in its sentiment and imagery, but classic in its lovely chastity of style, this latter is a faultless piece of art—art, of course, of the self-conscious kind—and might be said to challenge comparison with any dirges that have yet sounded upon human ears, were it not that its beauties are of a sort too shy and secluded to deal in challenges at all. This exquisite threnody, in some respects the crown and summit of its author's lyrical achievement, is not brief enough for reproduction here, and to quote were inevitably to mutilate. Its least beauties are of the very body and life of the whole, and one does not care to pluck them warm and bleeding. Nor does the poetry of Mr. Bridges often lend itself to the indolent process of representation by extract. He does not coruscate in fine passages. He has, indeed, incidental felicities in plenty, but it is the total impression which counts.

Perhaps his dislike of over-emphasis—his disdain of anything so vulgar as mere "pointedness"—sometimes carries Mr. Bridges too far in an opposite direction. Take, for example, the following two stanzas, understood to make a complete lyric:—

"The upper skies are palest blue
Mottled with pearl and fretted snow:
With tattered fleece of inky hue
Close overhead the stormclouds go.

"Their shadows fly along the hill
And o'er the crest mount one by one:
The whitened planking of the mill
Is now in shade and now in sun."

This seems to cease rather than to be ended, and so fails to satisfy one's sense of form. In music we may tire of the conventional finale—the crash on the keynote—but still our ear demands that a strain of music shall close upon some note that is moderately salient, the dominant or the sub-dominant at the least. In the same way a poem need not shut-to with a snap, but we like to feel that it is finished, not merely arrested.

And we do feel this in such a lyric as the following:—

"The idle life I lead
Is like a pleasant sleep
Wherein I rest and heed
The dreams that by me sweep.
"And still of all my dreams
In turn so swiftly past
Each in its fancy seems
A nobler than the last.
"And every eve I say,
Noting my step in bliss,
That I have known no day
In all my life like this."

In its unobtrusive simplicity, this is perfect. And here again, is a snatch of song in which the airy note of Shelley and the fine fantasy of our Carolean or Jacobean lyrists seem mingled by some happy wizardry of genius:—

"I have loved flowers that fade,
Within whose magic tents
Rich hues have marriage made
With sweet unmemorial scents:
A honeymoon delight,—
A joy of love at sight,
That ages in an hour:—
My song be like a flower!"

"I have loved airs, that die
Before their charm is writ
Along a liquid sky
Trembling to welcome it.
Notes that with pulse of fire
Proclaim the spirit's desire,
Then die, and are nowhere:
My song be like an air!"

"Die, song, die like a breath,
And wither as a bloom:
Fear not a flowery death,
Dread not an empty tomb:
Fly with delight, fly hence!
'Twas thine love's tender sense
To feast, now on thy bier
Beauty shall shed a tear."

Our poets are sometimes counselled by sensible and well-meaning people to address themselves not to the esoteric few, but to the wide public, "the general heart." They who tender the advice, however, forget that the judgment of this same wide public is the most incalculable thing in the world; nobody can ever tell what candidate will be returned by that constituency; whereas the verdict of a court of connoisseurs—once let them really see the work they are to adjudicate upon—can be anticipated with some approach to invariableness. For no other verdict has Mr. Bridges cared; he has not even evinced any eagerness for that. He seems to have written primarily for himself, and quite incidentally for a small audience of experts; for the great unpredictable public not at all. He is one of the few poets who know that it is from the most fastidious and exacting critics that their work has least to fear. For a certain number of years his poems and plays have enjoyed the kind of occult fame of which publicity can hardly be said to have been an element—a fame almost as occult as that of "Comus" or "Christabel" circulating in MS. He has done well in consenting at last to have a wider audience; but still he writes, and must always write, emphatically for the few. Perhaps, in his mind, few and fit are terms having no merely casual association; and certainly in the pains he has hitherto taken to guard against the profanation of being read—hedging himself about with limited editions, and lurking in the shade of privately printed pamphlets—there has not been wanting a certain touch of perversity. He has relented, however; and in our gratitude for present favours it is but meet to spare him any reproaches for past coyness. He has now given us a volume which no lover of poetry can afford to neglect. The pieces composing it have, indeed, nothing pretentious or overtly ambitious about them, nothing insistent, nothing that seems to lay any stress upon itself; and, perhaps, they may not be great poetry—may not, to quote their author's own memorable line, be but they win us by a beauty that is without a suspicion of spuriousness, and they import a separate and unique fragrance into English verse.

"The glorious songs that combat earth's annoy";

Their most obvious feature is, no doubt, their peculiar choiceness of diction; but when we look more closely we see that this choiceness is not a mere trait of style alone: it is the note of a special fineness of nature, an openness to rare influences, a responsiveness to the more delicate touches of things. A coarse energy and rude robustness are alien from such a temperament. The clamour of the cataract is not heard in this poet's pages: it is rather his much-loved sylvan Thames, strong and gentle, that flows through them like an undertone.

WILLIAM WATSON.

An Introduction to Social Philosophy. By John S. Mackenzie. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

By social philosophy Mr. Mackenzie means something different from what is commonly understood by social science or sociology. The latter has for its object to explain the constitution and movement of human societies considered as natural phenomena, the laws which such bodies obey irrespective of any individual volition. Social philosophy, on the other hand, is practical. It sets up an ideal, and considers how that ideal may best be realised. For this purpose it calls in the assistance of various special studies which may be supposed to throw light each on some particular side of the general problem. From ethics we learn what is the end of human life; and having ascertained, under the guidance of such teachers as Aristotle and T. H. Green, that it consists in self-realisation, or the development of our more distinctively human faculties; or again, to use language savouring rather of the Hegelian philosophy, in the attainment of an ever more absolute unity, the unity of our own personality reflected and realised in the society of our equals and in the whole of nature, so that the well-being of mankind appears to involve "the subjugation of nature, the perfection of social machinery, and personal development" (p. 297)—having ascertained all this, social philosophy will further consult the special sciences of political economy, politics, and education, as to how the various offices assigned to them may be best fulfilled, and, by so bringing them into close and fruitful relation, will at once stimulate them to new efforts and prevent the characteristic tendencies of each from being pushed to mischievous excess.

Mr. Mackenzie believes that such exclusive attention to a single element of social well-being is responsible for what is narrow and one-sided in the leading social doctrines that divide, and have long divided, speculation. The conquest of nature, whether effected by scientific discoveries or by the industrial arts, is essentially an individual enterprise, and so suggests an individualistic ideal—the liberty of each bounded only by the equal liberty of all. Those who take the perfection of social machinery as their aim will be led to some kind of socialistic ideal, involving the absolute subordination of the part to the whole, of the man to the state. The ideal of personal development leads its partisans to favour an aristocratic constitution, where the wisest, that is, the ablest and best-educated, shall rule. Each of these ideal systems, while especially conducive to that element of social well-being in view of which it was constructed, is particularly disadvantageous to another element. The régime of unrestricted competition favours industrial production, but fails in many instances to develop the individual nature. Socialism, or, as the author sometimes calls it, equality, guarantees order, but, by weakening the incentives to labour, threatens dangerously to decrease the production of wealth. An aristocracy stimulates personal culture to the neglect of social security. Now, it must be observed that all this schematising seems rather artificial, rather fanciful, rather flimsy. Historically, it does not appear that the three ideals of social constitution originated in the manner here suggested. All three may be traced back to different schools of Greek philosophy, none of which cared about the subjugation of nature, much as they all were concerned about individual culture. In modern times the speculative reconstructors or reformers of society often start with the same ideal, which, it may be, is no more than that every member of the community should have enough to eat, and that the community, as a whole, should be strong enough to defend itself against foreign enemies; while in choice of means they may differ as widely as Mr. Spencer does from Mr. Froude, or either of them from Auguste Comte. Mr. Mackenzie criticises socialism from the economic point of view in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired; but he does it far too much honour in admitting that it is "particularly strong with respect to social machinery, and not incompatible with the culture of the individual nature" (p. 291). Its machinery would be thrown out of gear in a month; and, if it lasted, would be the destruction of culture far more than of material prosperity. An aristocracy of talent has never been tried; but there seems no reason for assuming that it would be a worse guarantee for order than the aristocracies of birth, which, in Rome, Venice, and England, maintained themselves so long and with such success. Of individualism we may also say that it has never been really tried; but from the advances so far made in that direction it seems certain that such a régime would exhibit the industrial efficiency with which it is credited by Mr. Mackenzie. Whether it would continue to justify, or even now justifies, his adverse criticisms is another question. Liberty does not exclude voluntary efforts on the part of individuals or of associations on the largest scale and carried on with the utmost zeal to ameliorate the condition of all classes, as indeed is abundantly proved by the experience of our age. With regard to the right sphere of government, Mr. Mackenzie does not seem to appreciate the position taken up by the chief systematic advocate of its restriction. He repeats the taunt of "administrative nihilism" (p. 345), in ignorance or disregard of the fact that it has been repudiated twice over and with the utmost emphasis by Mr. Herbert Spencer, whose contention is that government could do far better work than at present in the way of enforcing rights if it did less in the way of imposing gratuitous obligations.

When the author comes to sketch a plan of social reorganisation on his own account, the result is a little disappointing. His elaborate and cumbersome apparatus of philosophical principles serves neither for discovery nor for proof. It does not even supply a complete enumeration of the topics that should be reviewed. The future organisation, direction, and application of scientific research is a problem passed over in silence, although it might profitably have been discussed under the subjugation of nature. As little can be found about another very pressing question—What are the aesthetic duties of the State? What, if anything, should be done to foster the fine arts as a means for elevating public taste? Is it absolutely necessary that life should be made continually more hideous by the spread of industrial enterprise? Mr. Mackenzie is deeply read in the literature of his subject; he has been trained to seize with sureness and rapidity on the characteristic points of his author; what suggestions he has to offer are generally sound; but they are not numerous, and he would be the first to acknowledge that they are not new. There are great hopes from co-operation and profit-sharing; a good technical education is needed for English working men; the poor should be helped to help themselves. We seem to have heard all that several hundred times already. His clear, bright, epigrammatic style sometimes recalls what Carlyle said about John Sterling—beautifullest sheet lightning playing about the barriers, not concentrated into the bolts that rend them. To use a more homely similitude, one might liken this author to someone who should provide himself with a very heavy basket divided into numerous compartments to bring home a few purchases that might easily have been stowed away in his pockets—and, after all, there are some holes in the bottom of the basket.

If Mr. Mackenzie is, as I suppose him to be, a young man, his opinions are important as an element of prophecy. His general attitude may be described as that of an advanced Liberal, who stops short of Socialism in the State and Secularism in the Church, while he altogether shirks the question of marriage and divorce. He looks on democracy as the government of the future, being the only form suited to industrial societies, and, contrary to Maine's opinion, eminently favourable to legislation. The State will not be debarred from interfering with the processes of industry by any principles of laissez-faire. In default of a good system of labour-insurance, it may be found necessary "to check to a considerable extent the rapidity with which new inventions are introduced" (p. 310). How the protected artisans are to be maintained when thrown out of work by the competition of goods manufactured in other countries by this new machinery is not specified. Nationalisation of the land, and a restriction on the amount of property allowed to be held by private persons, are suggested as not improbable eventualities (p. 349), without a hint that the latter measure, at least, would ruin any country adopting it by causing a wholesale migration of capital to foreign parts. On international relations—la grande politique—Mr. Mackenzie is decidedly weak. "A universal empire," he tells us, "seems impossible; and a continually impending war makes order impossible" (p. 350). The latter rather paradoxical assertion is supported by quoting Talleyrand's bon mot, that "one can do anything with bayonets except sit on them." Of course, what the witty statesman meant was that a ruler could not be maintained by armed force against the will of the people. To the unsophisticated mind a powerful army like that of Germany, kept up with the full consent of the people for their protection against foreign enemies, seems rather an additional guarantee for domestic tranquillity. Auguste Comte regarded the standing armies of his time as chiefly justified in their existence by performing the function of a vast gendarmérie; and it may be doubted whether the scenes of anarchic oppression sometimes witnessed in England would be possible if our country possessed an armed force of continental magnitude and mobility.

Religion our philosopher declares to be "the great moral motor or inspiring force" (p. 324). But to deserve the name it must in his opinion be metaphysical. Positivism is "an attempt to secure the benefits of religion without religion itself" (p. 81). It must, however, emerge from "the dark prison-house of the creeds" (p. 121). "Scientific conceptions have destroyed the pedantries of dogma and the fairy-tales of tradition" (p. 123). "If the world could not exist without God, neither could God exist without the world" (p. 134). We may look forward to an eventual reunion of the churches on the basis of those fundamental convictions in which all agree, a consummation by which their social utility will be greatly enhanced. Whether the very attenuated residuum of belief which Mr. Mackenzie regards as alone fundamental will act as a great moral motor may well be doubted; still more doubtful is it that a single comprehensive church would exhibit that zeal which has hitherto been only evolved under the stress of rivalry and competition. As regards the present attitude of religious instructors, they must, it seems, make up their minds to teach for a time what they do not believe (p. 326). Let it be mentioned to the author's credit that he has to gulp down some scruples in the course of enunciating what he admits to be a "rather dangerous" doctrine.

Mr. Mackenzie has a genius for epigrams. There are almost enough in his volume to furnish out a birthday-book. Let me conclude with a few of the best:

"We are learning to understand how large a part of the ills that we suffer are such as human contrivances can 'cause or cure'" (p. 123).

"In the battle of life more execution is often done with the elbows than with the fists" (p. 248).

"The cushion goes to the idle as naturally as the battle to the strong" (p. 257).

"If we are not to quarrel with others we must first quarrel with ourselves" (p. 295).

"Fiat justitia ruat cælum is a foolish maxim: we may bring down the skies, but we shall never get abstract justice, because there is no such thing" (p. 312).

"Reverence is simply the prophetic projection of sympathetic insight" (p. 362).

ALFRED W. BENN.

Suvóroff. By Lieut. Col. Spalding. (Chapman & Hall.)

COL. SPALDING is a learned explorer of an important tract in the history of war, little known to ordinary students of the art. He is thoroughly versed in the military affairs of Russia; and, not to speak of many other pieces, his sketch of the campaign in Hungary in 1849, when the power of Russia seems to have reached its acme, before the catastrophe of 1854-5, is a very useful and able narrative. The volume before us is a short biography of perhaps the greatest of Russian commanders—a warrior chiefly known to the western world through vague traditions of little value, which have exaggerated certain parts of his character; but a real chief, spite of strange defects and eccentricities which have injured his fame. The work is one of no common merit; it is well expressed and full of critical thought; and though we do not altogether agree with the author's estimate of Suvóroff—we think he rates him much too highly as a director of large operations of war—it is the best account we have ever read of the life and exploits of that renowned general.

Alexander Suvóroff was born in 1729, a scion of a noble Swedish family, established in Russia, which had long known misfortune. The boy showed, in his teens, a turn for war; enlisted as a private in the Russian Guards; and soon attracted attention for his odd ways and habits, but also for his love of a stern profession. Having risen rather slowly, he was at the head of a regiment in the Seven Years' War, and he distinguished himself in the bloody day of Künersdorf, when the skill of Frederick and the valour of Seidlitz failed before the stubborn Muscovite footmen. During the years that followed, he made his mark as an indefatigable and brilliant partisan leader; and, on these occasions, he first gave proof of the extraordinary activity and vigour in the field, and also of the mastery over the hearts of men, which were distinctive gifts of the future commander. He had attained the rank of general in the war which led to the first partition of Poland in 1772, and in the war with the Turks in 1773-4; and though he was but a subordinate only, he displayed qualities of a very high order. In these, as in his subsequent campaigns, Suvóroff showed astonishing skill in detecting on the ground the weak points of the enemy, and in pressing bold and rapid attacks home; his marches, too, were for those days wonderful; and though he never, we think, was a true strategist, Col. Spalding has very clearly proved that he was an admirable and a consummate soldier. He conducted operations in the field with an energy and a brilliancy which disconcerted his foes; he won battle after battle by his fine tactics, bold, yet well devised, and always successful; and at Koludji he decided the contest which extorted from the Porte the peace of Kainardji, one of the chief landmarks of Muscovite conquest. These great achievements, however, were somewhat marred by the insubordination and the scorn of colleagues, which were defects in his strong nature. Suvóroff, though always prized by Catherine, and already the idol of a devoted soldiery, had many enemies in the court and the camp, and had begun to be talked of in high places as an arrogant and ill-conditioned savage.

Owing to these shortcomings, and especially, perhaps, to the jealousy of the notorious Potemkin, Suvóroff did not obtain an independent command until he had approached his sixtieth year. His capacity in the field then became apparent; and strange and flawed as his character was, he has not been equalled, perhaps, by other Russian generals. In his case, as in that of William III. and Luxemburg, a great spirit was enclosed in a weakly frame; and a quaint presence, uncouth gestures, a sarcastic and somewhat boastful temper, and vanity exhibited in many ways, did not lessen the powers of a true warrior. In the fierce contest of 1787-91, remarkable as the first occasion of the modern development of the Eastern Question, and in that of the second Polish partition, Suvóroff's career was a succession of triumphs; Fokshani and Rhymnik were most striking events; and whether he was opposed to Turks or to Poles, he was uniformly victorious, with great results. Such exploits, Colonel Spalding justly remarks, prove that he was a chief of no ordinary parts; and the secret of his success may clearly be traced to his possession of what he has called the true soldier's gifts—coup d'œil, rapidity, and daring in action. As a tactician in the field he displayed the highest qualities; he encountered the shock of the Osmanli horse with formations admirable for defence and attack; but what was most remarkable in him was the correct eye with which he scanned the ground and seized the occasion, and the astonishing celerity and vigour of his blows. Intrepidity and boldness of the rarest kind were shown by him, too, in the great siege of Ismail, one of the most wonderful sieges of history; and it should here be observed that nine-tenths of the charges of cruelty and barbarism urged against him are proved by Col. Spalding to be wholly baseless. In the second Polish war he transformed the situation by a series of rapid and brilliant marches, and his attack on Praga exhibits real skill; but his enemies were mere irregular levies, and this easy success, though fairly earned, does not entitle him to rank among true strategists. It is singular that, in the Turkish war, we find him a fast friend of the Prince of Coburg—a dull soldier of the merest routine—but it is evident that the commonplace chief was completely mastered by the strange man of genius.

In 1799, when in his seventieth year, Suvoroff conducted war for the first time in the West. He overran Italy in a few months; but we cannot agree with Col. Spalding, that he exhibited real strategic genius; and it is profanation to compare his movements with those of the chief of Arcola and Rivoli. The campaign of 1796, on the French side, was a masterpiece of military art; that of 1799 was a series of blunders; and all that can fairly be said is that Suvoroff partly turned to account the mistakes of his foes, but not with skill of the highest order. When he assumed the command of the allied armies, Scherer, after a succession of miserable defeats, due to his singular want of a general's gifts, had been driven far behind the Mincio; and Macdonald was far away in the Neapolitan Provinces. Suvoroff took no advantage of this dislocation of force, often seen to have been fatal in Italy; and he wasted a large part of his troops in useless sieges, instead of striking his enemy to the heart, neglecting primary for quite secondary ends. Again, his advance on Turin was an error; and he lost a grand opportunity to crush Moreau, when that general fell back towards the Genoese seaboard in the hope of joining hands with his approaching colleague. To compare false and feeble operations like these with the lightning strokes that brought Würmsers to his fate, or that broke Austria down upon the Adige, seems to us entirely out of place; as a strategist Suvoroff must rank low by reason of this very campaign. Nevertheless, his peculiar gifts were admirably displayed; he routed the French with great power at Cassano; and his march to the Trebbia shows his sterling qualities, celerity, daring, and heroic courage. Yet here again he comparatively failed; after the defeat of Macdonald he should have done much more; the French army might have been destroyed; but he seems not to have once thought of the movement. War on a grand scale—the science of war in which Turenne and Napoleon excelled—appears to have been an unknown art to this most able soldier. Suvoroff was not himself at Novi; he ought to have overwhelmed his enemy; and Napoleon has said that, but for the death of Joubert, the French might perhaps have won the battle.

The operations of the last part of 1799 strikingly illustrate the defects and the merits of the veteran commander of the Russian army. The project of an advance through Switzerland was, in all respects, a strategic mistake; and Suvoroff set off on his fatal march without knowledge of the theatre, and with hostile allies. He was all but caught in a trap and destroyed amid the glaciers and torrents of the Alps; and, in fact, he never had a good chance of success, considering Masséna's position at Zürich. But his genius and daring shone out splendidly in his extraordinary retreat through a mass of obstacles such as have seldom risen before an imperilled army; the feat was equal to that of Napoleon, when he escaped from his foes on the Beresina, and stamps Suvoroff as a real chief.

It is unnecessary to notice the last few months of his life; he had quarrelled with most of the Austrian generals, who could not endure his rudeness and uncouth habits; and he was disgraced by the half-mad Czar, Paul, who ought to have lavished honours on him. The old man died, perhaps of a broken heart; but he was long mourned by the Russian army which he had repeatedly led to victory, and which loved him with devoted affection—one of the true signs of a great leader; and his deeds remain one of its proudest memories.

The place of Suvoroff among great soldiers is not doubtful, and is easily ascertained. He was the incarnation of the "homme de guerre," prized by Napoleon as an ideal lieutenant; that is, not capable of the grand moves of strategy, but in all other respects a consummate warrior. He has been compared to Nelson for his perfect coup d'œil, his tactical skill, and his wonderful daring; and he had some of the faults and failings of Nelson; but he was inferior, we think, to that matchless seaman. Napoleon, a harsh but a just critic in the case of generals not opposed to him, has admirably described Suvoroff's qualities: "Il avait l'âme d'un grand général, mais il n'en avait pas la tête. Il était doué d'une forte volonté, d'une grande activité, et d'une intrépidité à toute épreuve; mais il n'avait ni le génie ni les connaissances de l'art de la guerre."

This book ought to reach a second edition. We have noticed several errors of the press, which Col. Spalding will no doubt then correct.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

An Old Coachman's Chatter. By Col. E. Corbett. (Bentley.)

THE coaching system in England may be roughly stated to have lasted for half a century. The first mail-coach was put on the road in 1784, and the first railway opened in the autumn of 1825. When the success of steam was once assured, the coaches were driven one after another, like the ancient Britons before the Romans, into the West—to Wales and Cornwall. Many were taken off the road altogether, others were slowly but surely ruined, owing to the preference which travellers gave to the more speedy and comfortable railway carriages. Perhaps the fame of the coaching era rose to its zenith in 1834. The men who can remember those days are rapidly passing away, and a halo of sentiment now surrounds that half-century in the eyes of all who love horses and driving. Few modes of travelling are more exhilarating than to be swept through a fine country, on a sunny day, upon a four-horse coach, when its good steeds are now and then taken along at a hand gallop; and this amusement may yet be experienced in out of the way districts of Scotland and on Exmoor. Perhaps the miseries of the old coaching days are forgotten in the amateur coaches which run during the season from Hatchett's out of London, but they were very real to those who were compelled to travel day and night in all weathers. Floods and snow, fogs and rain, darkness and frost—these were terrible foes to our fathers when journeying over the bleak Wiltshire downs or the hills of the Borders. Not many of those ripe travellers, who on a cold night at present doze in the corner of a first-class carriage in the express, sigh for the top of the old "Hirondelle" or "Quicksilver." Still it is pleasant to read reminiscences of the long-buried coaching days, if only on the suave mari magno principle; and several books in the last year or two have attempted to satisfy this craving. Col. Corbett possesses many qualifications for the task of adding another to their numbers. In the old days he drove a coach ninety-three miles a day during one summer, and "worked another about fifteen thousand miles a-year for three years, besides others for myself or for other coachmen." The book is dedicated to his former passengers, "thanking them for their former support, and hoping for their kind patronage."

Much that is extremely interesting to admirers of the old four-in-hand coaches will be found in these pages. The royal mails—their management and privileges—the roads and their dangers, the horses and the best modes of driving them, the inns, the coachmen, and the guards are all well described. After these subjects the rest is somewhat of a medley. Tandem driving, the convict ship, and Australian scenes find a place; while multitudes of anecdotes, more or less new, are scattered through the book. Independently of the text, many will like to possess the eight excellent engravings by Sturges of scenes in the coaching time. These are full of spirit, and vividly recall the old system. The engraving of the "Independent Tally Ho!" galloping a five-mile stage in eighteen minutes is admirable. It is well to remember, though, that the journey from London to Exeter used to take twenty-five hours, if anyone is inclined to regret the chance of obtaining such a gallop.

Two of the chief points of interest in connexion with days which have fled for ever are the horses used and the length of the stages travelled. One horse proprietor, the celebrated Chaplin, possessed nearly thirteen hundred animals for the use of the coaches. Many of these were queer characters, often confirmed kickers or jibbers which had kicked to pieces some parson or squire's carriage, and been afterwards sold for a mere song. No experienced coachman ever made the least difficulty about driving such animals. With a jibber it was only necessary not to keep him waiting a moment when harnessed, and the start of the other three generally compelled him to trot off also. A kicker was mercilessly punished with the twisted thong, and allowed to kick if it could when taken along at full speed. If incorrigible under this discipline, it was forced to run two stages instead of being relieved like the others. This generally brought it to its senses. It is indeed one of the advantages of driving four horses that three good ones, or even two, will carry off the imperfections or bad behaviour of the rest, so that many a horse that no one would think of driving in single harness can be turned into a safe and useful animal in a coach. Col. Corbett supplies many anecdotes of such horses. As for feats of driving, he tells us of a friend who drove the "Nimrod" about a hundred and seventy miles without a rest. This is marvellous, when the weight of the reins and the exertion necessary to rule them is taken into account.

"Mr. Kenyon," he adds, "has been known to drive the 'Wonder' the whole journey from London to Shrewsbury, which is nearly equal; but I fancy it has seldom, if ever, been exceeded, except by the memorable drive of Captain Barclay, who undertook for a bet to drive two hundred, and won it."

What would the amateur coachmen of the present day think of such feats?

Much of Col. Corbett's book is so interesting that occasional defects of style, long involved sentences, slips of grammar, and the like, may be passed by. It was never customary to look into a horse's mouth with the old coaches if it would do its work and gallop well. The Appendix, containing the routes of "His Majesty's Mails," is interesting, and two or three other lists of coaches are carefully drawn up. When the author concludes, "I fear that in some places the road may have been heavy and the pace slow," we hasten to reassure him; but when he adds, "perhaps it may be thought that the style is incoherent, to which I can only say that such is usually the character of chatter," it is impossible to contradict.

M. G. WATKINS.

NEW NOVELS.

The World's Desire. By H. Rider-Haggard and Andrew Lang. (Longmans.)

Wormwood. By Marie Corelli. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Lady Hazleton's Confession. By Mrs. J. K. Spender. In 3 vols. (Sonnenschein.)

The Secret of the River. By Dora Russell. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Ruffino, &c. By Ouida. (Chatto & Windus.)

Zeno. By a Lady. (Oxford: Parker.)

Idolaters. By R. Haigh. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Decline and Fall of the British Empire. (Trischler.)

IN The World's Desire we have a novel which is sure to attract attention, if only on account of the curious partnership to which it owes its existence. Mr. Lang's reputation as a writer is founded upon qualities so different in kind from those possessed by Mr. Haggard that, although his approval—might we not go so far as to call it patronage?—of the latter's writings is fairly well known, few were prepared to suspect him of imperilling his literary fame by collaboration with an author whose faults of style are as glaring as the sale of his books is large. However, Mr. Lang perhaps knows his own business best, and in the book under notice it is not very difficult to divine where his hand—as a repressive and corrective even more than as a creative agent—appears. As for the desperate predicaments and escapes, the harrowing scenes of cruelty, the gory combats—gorier, perhaps, in this book than ever—the sublime absurdities inseparable from the introduction of magic and necromancy as a serious element in fiction, and all that sort of thing, no one doubts for a moment who is responsible for them. For some very charming lyrics, for correctness on points of Homeric allusion and detail, and for a general absence of rant and strained attempts at burlesque humour, we probably have to thank the other author. But which of the two is primarily to blame for the monstrous conception of the story as a whole? Which of the two was so lost to sense of artistic propriety, so grossly careless of outraging pious feeling, as first to conceive the idea of seizing upon Ulysses—the man with character most immutably defined and stereotyped of all the world's heroes of romance, the embodiment for all time of shrewd wisdom, high-minded patriotism, and marital constancy, sometimes the victim, unwillingly, of feminine arts, but never of sensual yearnings—and of turning the poor old man in the last years of his declining age into a votary of Aphrodite? Yet this is what has been done in The World's Desire; and after this desecration it will scarcely shock the reader to find that Helen of Troy, the divine among women, the immortal type of fair but frail humanity, is in these pages converted into a myth, an impalpable presentation of the ideal beauty which is the object of every individual man's desire. The main details of the story are these:—Ulysses, returning to Ithaca from his second wandering, finds wife and citizens destroyed by a pestilence, and his home desolated. Entering the temple of Aphrodite, he is claimed by the goddess and devoted to a mission in quest of the real and true sensation of love, the genuine article, to which he has hitherto been a stranger, and of which mere conjugal affection is but the shadow. Having drunk of a rejuvenating potion, and fallen asleep, he is carried away captive by the crew of a Sidonian ship, all of whom he slays in the course of the voyage, and subsequently arrives in Egypt, where he is favourably received by Pharaoh. This is the Pharaoh "whose heart was hardened, so that he would not let the children of Israel go," and much of the tale has reference to the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, Moses and Aaron themselves being more than once introduced upon the scene. Here was an opportunity for describing exhibitions of magic art which could not but be accepted as true, or at least possible. But the authors have not taken advantage of it; they have preferred to introduce, as their chief miraculous element, the Goddess Hathor, to whose shrine all men madly flock and are slain by the deity's invisible defenders. Hathor is the World's Desire; to Ulysses she is the Helen whose love he had secretly won many a year before at the ford of Eurotas, ere yet she was the bride of Menelaus, and to her he is now prepared to plight his eternal troth. But the evil arts of Meriamun, wife of Pharaoh, who has conceived an evil passion for the hero, defeat his plans and dash the cup of happiness from his lips. His death, with which the narrative concludes, follows upon a glorious victory at the head of the Egyptian hosts over a Greek invader. One cannot praise the book as a whole. The gross impropriety of the leading conception more than outweighs its vividness of description and the delightful sweetness of its lyric odes. As to the general style, there may be two opinions. Its studied simplicity of diction, imitative of primeval epic narrative, becomes monotonous after a time; and the verbatim reproductions of Homeric phrase illustrative of an ignoble subject are apt to remind one uncomfortably of Porson's remark to a schoolmaster who had exhibited the Latin verses of a pupil supposed to be peculiarly proficient in imitation of the Augustan poets. "I see here," said the great professor, "a great deal of Virgil and Horace, but nothing either Horatian or Virgilian." We are invited in the prefatory verses to "Come read the things whereof ye know

They were not and could not be so!"

and truly, if Faith really be—as artlessly defined by a Hindu convert—"believing in that which one knows cannot possibly be true," it may be invoked in behalf of the literary and artistic elegance of Messrs. Haggard and Lang's production, but not otherwise. And one cannot refrain from imploring Mr. Lang not to enter again into a partnership where the tail so decidedly wags the dog as it does in the present instance.

Miss Marie Corelli's latest work is not so much a novel as a psychological study, and might have been entitled "Confessions of an Absintheur." However, Wormwood will do well enough; and Gaston Beauvais, the victim of absinthe, who relates with a fiendish sort of pride the stages of ever-increasing brutalisation that mark his downward career, ought to be sufficiently terrible a warning to banish all inclination for indulgence in the vice. Of course the author is by no means the first who has dealt with the subject in a work of fiction; but no one has treated it in more powerful style and with greater wealth of burning language. Like many others, Miss Corelli attributes much that is flippant, heartless, and immoral in French character to "the reckless absinthe-mania which pervades all classes"; and, like many others, she makes the mistake of attributing to the whole French nation the vices that are mainly characteristic of Paris. But, so far as she is condemning this particular vice of the Parisians, her language is worthy of all encouragement; and especially is she to be congratulated upon having refrained from meddling with the secrets of the unseen world, and upon having taken grave realities for her subject. As she most truly observes, "There is no necessity to invent fables nowadays; the fictionist need never torture his brain for stories of adventure or spectral horror." Life, as it is lived, presents plenty to write about; and, so long as Miss Corelli wields her trenchant pen and employs her undoubtedly great talents upon matter of this kind, she has our heartiest wishes for her success.

Although very few of the characters in Lady Hazleton's Confession are likely to arouse enthusiastic admiration, while some, for the purposes of the story, are made supremely disagreeable, there can be no doubt about the brilliancy of the execution displayed in the work. Lord Hazleton and his heir, Robert Everingham, are an unpleasant pair. Avarice, callousness of feeling, and a tyrannically domineering spirit, are their chief characteristics; and when the latter marries a penniless society beauty and adventuress, whose affections are engaged elsewhere, and who is a complete match for her husband in most of the unlovable traits of his disposition, the way is paved for some smart conjugal scenes. These end in a separation; and the wife takes revenge upon her husband, now Lord Hazleton, for suspicions he has entertained of her infidelity by concealing from him the birth of the heir he had so greatly desired. The dialogues in the book are always entertaining, and to the point. Mrs. Spender is already the author of several works, and writes like a practised hand. She is careful to exclude all irrelevant matter, and her novel is consequently above the average.

Little ingenuity is needed to divine at an early period the mystery of The Secret of the River, but this circumstance does not diminish the attractiveness of the novel. It is one of those straightforward, easy flowing narratives which deal with the story alone and fulfil an important function of light literature in furnishing entertainment without calling for much exercise of thought. Captain Hugh Dundas, the handsome, shallow-natured, impulsive man of the world, who has run away with his friend's wife, and, while still living with her, besieges and wins the heart of the heiress, Kathleen Wynford, by force of his sympathetic temperament and artistic skill as a painter—the "wrong man" in novels of this sort nearly always is a painter—is a character drawn with considerable skill; while Kathleen, who resigns her whole fortune on discovering that her father had come by his money dishonourably, and Ralph Temple, who has not the courage to propose to her until she has reduced herself to poverty, are capital as heroine and hero.

There is no doubt about the popularity of Ouida's novels; and it must be admitted that her earlier works exhibited an amount of originality approaching genius which, if it could not excuse, partially compensated for a good deal of grotesque extravagance in description. In her later writings the originality is not so conspicuous, and in Ruffino is entirely absent, while the exuberant fancy which used to be displayed in her portraiture of human heroes is now expended upon idealising a Pomeranian dog. And even this is not quite new. We have met with it before in Ouida's books, just as we have met with the dog's master, the Duke of Castiglione, scores of times. There are three or four other short stories at the end; they are pretty, but that is all that can be said of them.

Made externally attractive by its vellum and blue cloth binding, Zeno contains within a popular outline of the Eleatic philosophy, sandwiched between the progressive incidents of a romance. Plentiful details of Greek domestic life abound, and one is tempted at first to look upon the work as a sort of popular handbook like Bekker's Charicles, and afterwards as a philosophical romance in imitation of Hypatia. However, it is a work sui generis; the domestic details are merely accessory, and the philosophy, though professedly emanating from the mouths of Parmenides and Zeno, is of an eclectic character, and is largely indebted to Plato, Aristotle, and the older Greek poets. In fact, the author has wisely not scrupled to borrow from every available source, including even university prize essays, such matter as might assist her in conveying a very charming picture of Greek life, thought, and manners. Of course, with Zeno for a centre piece, we are naturally treated to our old friends, Achilles and the Tortoise, the flying arrow, and other familiar paradoxes. The book, if no real guide for the student, will serve the purpose of whetting the appetite of those who desire an acquaintance with philosophical speculations. There is an ample appendix of explanatory notes, and the author gives evidence by her work of a wide and appreciative study of Hellenic literature.

Idolaters is a failure. Mr. Haigh is undoubtedly a clever man; but he lacks the sympathetic touch with his own characters which, when deftly conveyed in words, brings the reader into sympathetic touch with them also. The whole collection of characters and incidents is little more than a series of pegs on which the writer may hang his caustic or cynical or humorous or sentimental observations, of which he has a plentiful store always on hand. In themselves, the reflections are often of a most acute and subtle kind; but they frequently require one or two intermediate links of thought to be supplied before they can be intelligibly connected with the incidents they are intended to illustrate, and this is more than can reasonably be required of novel-readers.

In the year 2900 A.D., which the author of The Decline and Fall of the British Empire places in "the thirtieth century" (see p. 90), England will have been reduced to something like its condition in the year 900 A.D., through the influence of two causes—viz., (1) political errors, commencing with Home Rule and Disestablishment; (2) the diversion of the Gulf Stream through the Panama Canal, causing an average depression of 15 degrees in our temperature! This is the view embodied in the work above mentioned, in which an Australian citizen of the year 2900 visits the Old Country, and falling under magic influence is carried back 1000 years and lives through a life among present-day surroundings.

The book is made the vehicle for a good deal of discussion on social and economical subjects, which is not particularly lively.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

SOME FOREIGN BOOKS.

Le Roman au Dix-septième Siècle. Par André le Breton. (Paris: Hachette.) Under this title M. André le Breton has collected together essays on a considerable number of books, none of them exactly forgotten, but some of them much more talked of than read. They are Astrée, the Histoire de Francion, the Berger Extravagant, the Roman Bourgeois and the Roman Comique, the Grand Cyrus and Clélie, the Mémoires de Grammont (which we hardly expect to find in this gallery), Télémaque, Zayde and the Princesse de Clèves. His account of these books and of their authors may be praised without reserve; his criticism perhaps with a little. For instance, he is (as indeed most Frenchmen have been) entirely mystified by Hamilton's dry humour, and confounds the ironic consistency of the man with a natural want of nobility of feeling and fineness of sentiment. We certainly should never have thought that anyone would have accused poor Anthony of impropriety for his portrait of his sister; and nobody but a Frenchman, with those wonderful ideas of candeur which go with some other wonderful ideas of a different kind, could have done so. The estimate of Sorel appears to us altogether too high; nor are we quite certain of the reality of the bond of union which M. le Breton discovers in his preface as existing between his different subjects. But he is really strong at running analysis of the books—a task humble in appearance, but by no means easy to perform; and valuable, or rather indispensable, in the case of work so little of which is likely to be really known at first hand to the reader.

Le Mouvement Littéraire au Dix-Neuvième Siècle. Par Georges Pellissier. (Paris: Hachette.) M. Pellissier describes the course which French literature has taken during the present century, and sketches the leading talents in each branch. These sketches are full of life and interest. To an English student the most valuable chapter in the book is perhaps the one entitled "Rénovation de la Langue et de la Métrique," in which is shown in detail how the French language and the metre of French poetry were renewed by the writers of the romantic period. The author distinguishes two epochs—the romantic and the realistic—in the French literature of the nineteenth century, and he traces them back to the influence of two literary progenitors in the eighteenth century. Rousseau inspired Chateaubriand, Madame de Staël, Lamartine, and the other romantic spirits. Diderot was the precursor of Stendhal, Balzac, and those who taught contemporary literature to "observe exactly and to note with sincerity" the realities of everyday life. M. Pellissier gives his decision in favour of realism.

"Un viril et loyal effort vers le vrai, voilà ce qu'est en somme le réalisme. . . . Nous trouvons en lui une conception de l'art saine, vaillante, directe, la seule en accord avec l'esprit de critique et de science qui est celui de notre temps, et dont il semble que rien ne puisse interrompre la tâche."

This is an interesting question too hastily decided by M. Pellissier and other French critics of the day. Is truth or beauty the object of literature? It seems difficult to read the chapter on the De Goncourts and to resist the conclusion that literature must ultimately end in mere analysis, if it will turn away from beauty and strain itself to produce a caricature of scientific truth.

G. A. Bürger et les Origines Anglaises de la Ballade Littéraire en Allemagne. Par G. B. Maury. (Paris: Hachette.) We do not know whether Dr. Maury's book on Bürger and his English origins is a "doctoral thesis" or not; but it has all the air of one and is an interesting specimen of the kind. The earlier part is not the best; the sketch of early "ballads" in general, and the English ballad in particular, being based, we think, on second if not on third hand information, while the following section on early German Lieder does not strike us as much better. But from the time when Dr. Maury comes into his proper subject—the influence of Percy's Reliques on Germans, and more especially on Bürger—he is much better. There is no doubt that the poet of "Lenore" paid for the immense vogue which one or two of his pieces had for a time with unjust neglect. Dr. Maury has championed him vigorously enough, but he has not escaped the danger of comparative criticism. Not to be able to praise Bürger without undervaluing the "Braut von Corinth" is as grave a critical error as to undervalue Bürger because he never wrote anything that can match the "König in Thule" or "Freudvoll und leidvoll." But things of this kind are almost unavoidable, and Bürger did really need championing.

"Bibliotheca Normannica." No. V. La Clef d'Amors. Par A. Doutrepont. (Halle: Niemeyer; London: Nutt.) The adaptation of Ovid's Art of Love, which dates from somewhere about 1300, and may have been written by some Norman not long before Dante was writing a very different matter, is an interesting book. It was edited some years ago by M. Edwin Tross, in a manner which has made severe Old-French scholars complain of want of satisfaction to those who "like to understand as they read." There is a wisdom which passeth understanding as well as a foolishness which comes short of it; and some smatterers have no difficulty in reading very currently texts of which the rigorous scholar can make neither head nor tail. However, the book doubtless deserved re-editing, and M. Doutrepont, under the general editorship of Herr Suchier, has done it excellently. It is, as we have said, really interesting. The spirit of Ovid was almost as alien from that of the middle ages as the reverence of the middle ages for him and his likes was great; and it is very curious to see the expansions and the curtailments, the glosses and the amplifications, by which the two are brought or dragged into something like harmony. There is certainly now no difficulty in reading it, for anyone who can read Old-French; and there should be a good deal of pleasure. We at least have found it so.

THE new series of "Lateinische Litteraturdenkmäler des XV. und XVI. Jahrhunderts" (Berlin: Speyer and Peters) begins promisingly with the Acolastus of "Gulielmus Gnapheus" (Willem de Volder, of the Hague), edited by Dr. Johannes Bolte. The piece, which was first published in 1529, is an imitation of the Terentian drama, dealing with the story of the Prodigal Son. The elder brother does not appear; but in other respects the outline of the parable is closely followed. The author adheres, as well as his knowledge enabled him to do, to his classical model in metre and construction, except that the hero sings a sapphic ode. The work went through many editions in the sixteenth century, and is interesting as being the earliest of the long succession of academic plays on biblical and moral subjects, which contributed in no small degree to the development of the modern drama. It is also not without literary value of its own. We do not quite see why in this reprint the orthography has been corrected in accordance with the rules recognised by modern scholarship; but it seems that this procedure has been prescribed by the general editors of the series. Apart from this debatable point, we have really no fault to find with the edition. The volume is handsomely and correctly printed; and Dr. Bolte has prefixed a short account of the author's life, and of the literary history of his work, together with references to the classical passages imitated or alluded to.

DR. ROSSI-CASÉ has published an exhaustive monograph on Maestro Benvenuto da Imola (Pergola), the most important, though the last to be edited, of the early commentators on Dante. He has diligently gathered together all that can be found out from documentary evidence as to his family, education, and general history, and also as to his other and less-known literary works. The traces of his familiarity and intercourse with Boccaccio are very interesting; and it is shown how the conversations and opinions of the latter, which are embedded in the commentary of Benvenuto, may often be taken as evidence of the views that probably would have been maintained by Boccaccio, had he lived to complete his own commentary. The character of Benvenuto is traced by copious references to sentiments expressed in various parts of his commentary, and there is a full account of the MSS. of this, as well as of the other works of the author. Finally, the commentary itself is discussed in its relation to the earlier works of the same kind, and more particularly to those of Jacopo della Lana and Boccaccio. The whole forms a very careful and valuable study of an author too long and undeservedly neglected.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE hear that an instalment of Sir Robert Peel's Political Correspondence, covering the period between 1820 and 1830, may be expected some time early in next year.

WE understand that Prof. F. Y. Edgeworth has been appointed editor of the Journal of the newly founded Economic Association. Prof. Edgeworth, who succeeded Thorold Rogers as Tooke professor of political economy at King's College, London, is also a candidate for his vacant chair at Oxford.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will be the publishers of Sir Edwin Arnold's new poem "The Light of the World; or, The Great Consummation."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have nearly ready for publication a one-volume edition of Shelley's Poetical Works, edited with a preface by Prof. Edward Dowden, and uniform with the similar editions of Tennyson, Wordsworth, and Matthew Arnold; a pocket edition, bound in morocco, of Lord Tennyson's Poetical Works, without the dramas; and a large-type edition of Mr. Palgrave's Golden Treasury of English Songs and Lyrics. Of the last-named book a limited edition will be published on hand-made paper, each copy being numbered and signed by the editor.

THE same publishers announce for early issue a volume of Essays, chiefly on literary subjects, by the present Bishop of Durham, and a volume of Sermons by the Bishop of Meath.

THE next volume in the series of "Rulers of India" will be The Earl of Mayo, written by Sir William W. Hunter, the editor of the series. It will be by no means a mere summary of the formal biography by the same author, published in two volumes in 1875; but it will represent the career of Lord Mayo as the consolidator of the Queen's rule in India, in the light of official documents.

MR. A. H. CHURCH's book of Bible Stories, retold in much the same style as his well-known Stories from Homer, will be issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. early in December.

The illustrations are reproduced from the well-known "Bible Pictures" of Julius Schnorr.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD will publish in a few days the fourth and last volume of Father Hunter-Blairs's translation of the History of the Catholic Church of Scotland by Dr. Bellesheim. The Appendix contains a series of reports sent to the Propaganda by the Scottish Vicars-Apostolic, translated into English from the Latin and Italian originals, which throw much light on the religious history of Scotland during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

A NEW biblical romance, dealing with the story of Esther, will be published next week by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The book will be called Hadasseh, after the Hebrew name of the heroine. The author, E. Leuty Collins, claims to have not departed from tradition in the telling of her story.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS is publishing a new poem by the Hon. Roden Noel, entitled Poor People's Christmas, in a pretty form and at a low price.

A VOLUME of Poems, Ballads, and Bucolics, by the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley, Vicar of Crosthwaite, will be published immediately by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

THE next volume to appear in the series of "English Men of Action" will be Mr. Julian Corbett's Drake. This will be followed by Mr. C. W. C. Oman's Warwick the King Maker.

THE next volume of the Camelot series will consist of Alfred de Musset's Comedies, translated by S. L. Gwynn, who has also written an introductory notice.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN is about to publish Chess for Beginners, and the Beginnings of Chess, by Mr. R. B. Swinton. The book treats of its subject both technically and historically, and will have many curious illustrations.

Moses and the Prophets, and the Higher Criticism is the title of a work by Mr. Gavin Carlyle, announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH FARRAN & Co. have in the press for early publication The Shield of Faith, intended to present in a concise form the answers to modern doubts and difficulties about Christianity in general and the Church of England in particular.

MESSRS. DAVID BRYCE & SON, of Glasgow, will publish shortly a volume of papers by Mr. William C. Gannett, entitled Blessed be Drudgery, to which the Countess of Aberdeen contributes a preface.

THE volume, entitled George Meredith: Some Characteristics, which was published by Mr. Elkin Mathews last week, is already out of print, but a second edition is in the press.

THE Fratelli Treves, of Milan, have just issued a second edition of Patriotti Italiani, translated by the Countess Evelyn Martinengo Cesaresco from her own English book, Italian Characters in the Epoch of Unification, which was published a few months ago by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

THE first meeting of the Victoria Institute will be held at 8, Adelphi-terrace, on Monday, December 1, at 8 p.m., when Prof. Hull will read a paper on "The Geological History of Egypt."

MR. LESLIE STEPHEN will deliver an address to the Ethical Society at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, at 7.30 p.m., upon "Moral Aspects of Socialism."

MESSRS. SOTHEY will sell during next week three collections of books, each of which is remarkable for choiceness rather than for number. On Monday, "a portion of the library of a French gentleman deceased," consisting mainly of the illustrated works of the last century, in fine bindings. We may specially mention what is called the "fermiers-généraux" edition of La Fontaine, with the suppressed plates; and the original French of Beckford's Vathek. On Tuesday and Wednesday, "the choicer portion" of the library of Mr. Walter King, of Paisley, whose specialty seems to have been large-paper copies of modern books. He also collected first editions of poets, having had twenty of Byron all bound in morocco to match. Here, too, may be found many of Dickens's serial novels, with the parts not bound but "cased"; and other rare volumes "unopened." On Thursday, an anonymous collection of still greater rarities, including a dozen first editions of Molière, the tallest copy known of Milton's Poems (1645), several rare Shaksperiana, the suppressed edition of Shelley's Queen Mab (1813), and Rossetti's Sir Hugh the Heron, which was printed by Polidori at his private press in 1843.

SHAKSPERE students may be glad to have their attention called to a scholarly edition of Macbeth, which has been published by Max Niemeyer, of Halle (London: David Nutt), at the price of only one mark twenty pfennigs. It consists of the text of the first folio, with all the variants of the three later folios, down to the minutest differences of spelling, appended in foot notes. The editor is Albrecht Wagner, of Halle, who assures us that the whole has been carefully collated with the originals in the British Museum. In one respect only has he departed from his authorities, and that is by incorporating in his text some of the generally admitted emendations of the early editors, such as the "Tarquin's ravishing strides" of Pope and the "scotched the snake" of Theobald. It may fairly be a matter of opinion whether these corrections, however plausible, had not better have been relegated to the margin. But apart from this minor matter, we have nothing but praise to give both to the design and to the execution of the work.

HERR JULIUS SCHWAKE, of Weimar, has written an interesting book entitled, Harmlose Geschichten (Frankfurt: Diesterweg), which contains a great deal of gossip about Schiller and Goethe, whom the author's father knew personally.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE new series of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain the first of a series of articles by Mr. Robert Sewell, of the Madras Civil Service, taken from the miscellaneous note-books of the late Sir Walter Elliot, of Wolfelee. Mr. Sewell has also written a short life of Sir Walter, to precede the publication of the notes and extracts, which will deal with a large number of subjects connected with Indian life, ancient and modern, and ought to be of singular interest.

THE new volume of the Newbery House Magazine, beginning with the January number, will contain several new features. Mr. Sayce will give a popular account of the light thrown by the Tel-el-Amarna tablets upon the condition of Palestine in the days of Abraham; Mr. W. J. Hardy will describe the Reformation as it appeared to an ambassador from Mantua at the court of Elizabeth; Canon Benham will write upon the Wesley Centenary; the Bishop of Derry upon the Irish Church; Mr. Charles Welsh will conclude his bibliographical articles upon children's books, stopping at the end of the first half of the present century; while fiction will be contributed by Mr. G. Manville Fenn, Mr. G. A. Henty, &c.

Two new magazines are announced to appear early in December, both at the popular price of sixpence. Of one of these, it will be enough to quote the title—the Religious Review of Reviews; of the other, to be called Groombridge's Magazine, it will be enough to mention the editor—Mr. Edmund Smedley Yates.

INSTEAD of the usual Almanac so-called, the proprietors of Punch will issue this year a Christmas number, entitled "Mr. Punch among the Planets," with numerous illustrations by Tenniel, Harry Furniss, Du Maurier, Sambourne, and Reed. The name of Charles Keene is unfortunately absent.

THE serial tale for the Ladies' Treasury next year is written by the author of "Behind the Kafes," and is entitled "A Mystification."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

ON Tuesday next, December 2, Convocation at Oxford will proceed to the election of a professor of poetry. We understand that there is no opposition to the re-appointment of Mr. F. T. Palgrave for a second term of five years.

MR. H. S. JONES, of Trinity, has been elected to the Craven fellowship at Oxford, which, under the new scheme, is equivalent to a travelling studentship in classics; and Mr. J. G. Milne, of Corpus, has been appointed to the studentship at the British School at Athens, founded in honour of Sir Charles Newton.

THE Rev. T. G. Browne, Disney professor of archaeology at Cambridge, announces for next term a course of six lectures on "The Sculptured Stones of Mann, Wales, and Cornwall," including those bearing Runic, Ogam, and Latin inscriptions. As on previous occasions, a syllabus will be issued, containing sheets of illustrations; and casts, squeezes, and rubbings will be shown.

THE general board of studies at Cambridge has issued a report recommending, on the proposal of Prof. Thomson, that an additional demonstrator be appointed in experimental physics, whose salary shall be paid out of fees received at the Cavendish Laboratory.

THE delegates for non-collegiate students at Oxford are desirous to have it known that they will admit, without examination, students in any special branch of study who do not desire to pass through the Arts course and can show evidence of fitness for their special subject. During the past year fourteen such students have been admitted.

ACCORDING to a correspondent of the Oxford Magazine, the total number of undergraduates not exceeding four years in standing is 2676. The leading colleges are thus represented:—Christ Church, 235; New, 212; Keble, 173; Balliol, 168; Trinity, 157; Magdalen, 148; Exeter, 134; Merton, 113; Brasenose, 112; Queen's, 104. Non-collegiate students number 219.

THE address delivered by Principal Ward at the opening of Owens College, Manchester, will be published in the forthcoming number of Macmillan's Magazine. The subject is "The Universities and the Counter Reformation."

CANDIDATES for the degree of M.A. at Durham, who have not previously taken honours, are required to submit a thesis on a specified subject. For the current term the selected subject is "Socialism."

UNDER this heading, we may give a welcome to the first number of the Australasian Critic: a monthly review of literature, science, and art. It is published by Messrs. Melville, Mullen, & Slade, booksellers to the University of Melbourne; its two editors are Prof. T. G. Tucker, editor of the Supplies, and Prof. W. Baldwin Spencer, not less known in this country for his researches in comparative anatomy; among the editors of departments we notice the name of Prof. E. E. Morris, for literature; and even the manager and assistant manager are graduates.

WE learn from the Australasian Critic that Mr. Marshall Hall has been appointed to the Ormond chair of music in Melbourne University, at a salary of £1000 per annum; and that this is intended to be the first step towards the establishment of a regular school of music, or conservatoire, in connexion with the university.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WINTER.

A KINDLY host is Winter hoar,
With icy fingers, warm of heart!
Who numbs us, till at every pore
We tingle with a grateful smart!
And welcome are the winter nights,
With cat beside the hearth close curled!
And all the fireside's dear delights,
Oblivious of the outer world,
Where snow upon the meadow lies,
And leafless branches shiver bare,
And stars oft blink their aching eyes,
That look so long through frozen air!
Then, haply, while the shrill winds wail,
If lonesome on Life's ills we brood,
We seek some spirit-kindling tale
To rouse us from this heavy mood;
Or from the chest belike we take
Some faded letters, long unread;
And once more for the cherished sake
Of eager-winged hours fled,
We read them, seeming now to hear
Mute voices ring in happy chime—
Like leaves of Autumn stained and sear
They fill our hearts with summer-time!
And if our eyes will fondly blur,
We pile of logs a merry pyre,
And list the cat's contented purr,
And homely gossip of the fire.
And still a pleasure without end
It is, upon a winter's night,
To sit in converse with a friend,
Cheered by the flickering firelight.
Then welcome is the harsh discord
Of hailstones on the window-pane,
That sweeter music doth afford
Than scented drops of summer rain!

G. E. T.

OBITUARY.

JOHN ROBERT TUDOR.

JOHN ROBERT TUDOR, author of The Orkneys and Shetland, died at St. Leonards-on-Sea on November 11. He was the fourth son of the late Captain John Tudor, R.N., and was born at Birkenhead on October 13, 1839. He was educated first at Greenock, and afterwards at Shrewsbury under the late Dr. Kennedy. The boy's later holidays were spent at Wick, where he imbibed a great interest in all things nautical and particularly in Scandinavian shores. The navy, one instinctively felt, would have suited him better than law, his actual profession.

In 1875 Tudor visited Shetland for his health, and paid it sundry visits during the six following years. His letters to the Field on Shetland sport, under the signature of "Old Wick," were the first-fruits of these visits. Gradually, it would seem, the idea of some more solid work on Shetland grew in his mind. He devoted himself to amassing information about the Northern Archipelago, getting hold of all possible books on the subject and strictly catechising the natives. The writer went round Foula with him in July, 1880, in a little row-boat, and well remembers the eager and systematic way in which, on that evening, he picked up and noted facts. Inspired by the keen northern air, he was often reckless in conversation, and he seemed to feel an almost morbid delight in "chaff." But when he took pen in hand, he was quite a different man, and no one could be more conscientious than he in collecting, confirming, collating accounts. It is true that in his book the Berserk nature of the man would break out occasionally in phraseology that can hardly be called pure English undefiled. But these lapses—or rather, I should say, deliberately mischievous out-breakings—affect but a small part of The Orklands and Shetland, and do not at all affect its accuracy. The book was on too large a scale for remunerative popularity; and he had some idea of issuing a smaller volume, to be bought by the many visitors whom Shetland receives every summer.

But by this time (1882) Tudor was grievously shattered in health. A damp bed (as he maintained) had seriously affected his health at a critical time. Locomotor-ataxy declared itself; and, in spite of medical treatment and loving care, year after year only found him more powerless. Severe pains racked his body, accompanied by great nervous irritability. But his brain kept clear to the last. His conversation was intelligent, interesting, lucid, though of course his friends had to be careful not to allow him to talk too long. When pain did not actually rack him—ay, and sometimes when it did—he was distinguished by a stately old-world courtesy of demeanour, varied by quaint outbursts of playfulness. Before the peace of death a little peace in life was accorded him; the irritability departed. The gratitude, gentleness, essential goodness of the man impressed all. Early in the morning he passed away, in the presence of his sister who had given him faithful attention for years, and of his personal attendant who had had to carry him like a child.

Tudor was a true-born Englishman—attached without bigotry to England's Church, without obscurantism to England's constitution, without priggishness to England's language.

R. J. M.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Livre Moderne for November, M. Gausseron deals good-naturedly, but, perhaps, a little too seriously, with some half-jocular remarks of ours on some remarks of his in reference to Mr. Gladstone's library. Although we cannot undertake to speak for the bad men in question, we think they would indulge Mr. Gladstone with bags of gunpowder, and we are nearly sure that they would consent to exchange the books for authentic billets of wood. This, we trust, is handsome. As for the Livre Moderne itself, it follows up very interestingly a former article on Alfred Delvau, that not unkindly Bohemian who was meant for better places than Bohemia. M. Asse follows with a noteworthy summary, à propos of the much-talked-of memoirs of Talleyrand, of some other memoirs which may or might be published. There is a notice of M. Henri Havard's Dictionnaire de l'Ameublement and other matter. The illustration of the number, engraved from an unique and unpublished photograph of Delvau, is very well worth having. There is perhaps a very little pose in it, but not more than in the well-known contemporary portraits of Baudelaire, or in that famous one of himself with the cigarette that Gavarni did; and the melancholy of the eyes is evidently not affected and is characteristic enough of a certain literary type.

THE November Theologisch Tijdschrift contains the conclusion of Dr. van Bell's review of Paulsen's important System der Ethik. Dr. Matthes discusses the account (1 Kings xii. 26-33) of the religious forms established by Jeroboam I., and takes the opportunity of paying a deserved compliment to Klostermann for his recent work on Samuel and Kings, which the critics have hardly yet had time, as it seems, to digest. Dr. Loman writes at length on Alfred Resch's latest edition of the Agrapha (or, as the author paraphrases the term, extracanonical Gospel - fragments). Among the frank and yet courteous notices of books, always a special feature of this journal, we notice Dr. Bruining's of Max Müller's Natural Religion, and Dr. Kuenen's of Margoliouth's Lecture on the Place of Ecclesiasticus. The latter concludes with the wish that the learned author's Hebrew edition of Sirach may prove the fear of a strong theological bias to be unfounded.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- HALATSCHKA, R. Versuch e. sprachlichen Commentares zu Goethes Iphigenie auf historischer Grundlage. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 80 Pf.
HEINEMANN, O. V. Die Handschriften der herzogl. Bibliothek zu Wolfenbüttel. 2. Abth. Die Augusteischen Handschriften. I. Wolfenbüttel: Zwiassier. 15 M.
KLEIN, F. Le Cardinal Lavignerie et ses œuvres d'Afrique. Paris: Fousstielgue. 3 fr. 50 c.
MARMIER, X. Prose et vers, 1836-1886. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 5 fr.
MÉNARD, L. Le livre d'or de Millet. Paris: Ferroud. 35 fr.
MONSELET, C. Curiosités littéraires et bibliographiques. Paris: Lib. des Bibliophiles. 6 fr.
PRESSENSÉ, E. de. Alexandre Vinet, d'après sa correspondance avec H. Lutteroth. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
REICHENAU, E. Erinnerungen aus dem Leben e. Westpreussen. Gotha: Perthes. 5 M.
RIEGL, A. Altorientalische Teppiche. Leipzig: Weigel. 6 M.
ROCHTESSEN. Mémoire sur le bimétallisme international et le moyen juste de l'établir. The Hague: Belinfante. 4 fr.
VOLKSSCHAFTLICHE, deutsche. In Steiermark gesammelt. Hrg. v. A. Schlosser. Halle: Niemeyer. 10 M.
WAGNER, B. Shakespeares Einfluss auf Goethe in Leben u. Dichtung. 1. Th. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M.
WOLFF, Ph. Die Entstehung u. erste Entwicklung des deutschen evangelischen Kirchenliedes. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 5 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- TEXTE u. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der ältesten christlichen Literatur. 6. Bd. 4. Hft. Die ältesten Quellen d. oriental. Kirchenrechts. 1. Buch. Die Canones Hippolyti v. H. Achelis. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 9 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BERNAYS, J. Petrus Martyr Anglerius u. sein Opus epistolarum. Strassburg: Trübner. 6 M.
BERNIE, Eug. Quelques pages de l'histoire des Huguenots. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
DELABORDE, le Comte Jules. Louise de Coligny, Princesse d'Orange. Paris: Fischbacher. 30 fr.
DU MOULIN-ECKART, Graf. Leudegar, Bischof v. Autun. Ein Beitrag zur fränk. Geschichte d. 7. Jahrh. Breslau: Koebner. 2 M. 80 Pf.
KINDT, B. Die Katastrophe Ludovico Moros in Novara im April 1600. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 44. Bd. Urkundenbuch zur Reformationsgeschichte d. Herzogth. Preussen. Hrg. v. P. Tschackert. 2. Bd. 1. Thl., 1529-1541. Leipzig: Hirzel. 10 M.
URKUNDEN, lombardische, d. XI. Jahrh. aus der Sammlung Moglia auf der k. Universitätsbibliothek zu Halle, hrg. v. A. Hortschansky u. M. Perlbaeh. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M. 80 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BLEIBTREU, K. Zur Psychologie der Zukunft. Leipzig: Friedrich. 4 M.
BUDDE, E. Allgemeine Mechanik der Punkte u. starren Systeme. 1. Bd. Berlin: Reimer. 10 M.
LANGENBECK, R. Die Theorien üb. die Entstehung der Koralleninseln u. Korallenriffe u. ihre Bedeutung f. geophysische Fragen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 5 M.
NUSSBAUM, M. Anatomische Studien an californischen Cirripeden. Bonn: Cohen. 23 M.
PUTZSCH, C. Das Totalreflectometer u. das Refractometer f. Chemiker. Leipzig: Engelmann. 5 M.
SCHAUFFUS, L. W. Preussens Bernstein-Käfer. Psylliden. Berlin: Friedländer. 7 M.
SCHNEIDER, J. Die Spectralanalyse der Gestirne. Leipzig: Engelmann. 16 M.
SOUCON, A. Traité d'astronomie théorique. Paris: Carré. 16 fr.
STEIN, L. Leibniz u. Spinoza. Mit 19 Ineditis aus dem Nachlass v. Leibniz. Berlin: Reimer. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BEITRÄGE, Münchener, zur romanischen u. englischen Philologie. Hrg. v. H. Breyman. 1. u. 2. Hft. Leipzig: Deichert. 6 M.
BRÄUNE, W. Abriss der althochdeutschen Grammatik. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
COHN, G. Die Suffixwandlungen im Vulgärlatein. u. im vorlitterar. Französisch nach ihren Spuren im Neufrauzösischen. Halle: Niemeyer. 8 M.
DE HARLEZ, C. I-Li. Cérémonial de la Chine antique, traduit pour la première fois. Paris: Maisonneuve. 15 fr.

- HÄSCH, G. A. The Monsee Fragments. Strassburg: Trübner. 5 M.
JOACHIM, H. Papyrus Ebers. Das älteste Buch üb. Heilkunde. Aus dem Aegypt. zum erstenmal vollständig übers. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M.
LUCAS, A. De S. Gelenii codice Liviano Spirensi commentatio. Erlangen: Blasing. 80 Pf.
WIRDMANN, O. Das litauische Präteritum. Strassburg: Trübner. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"CATHEDRAL."

Oxford: Nov. 25, 1890.

My friend Mr. Earle, in his new book on English Prose, has once or twice discussed my manner of writing—I know my place better than to suppose that I have a "style"—sometimes for approval, sometimes for friendly rebuke. On one passage I wish to say a word or two, because it touches on a matter which is somewhat more than a manner of writing.

In page 52 Mr. Earle is speaking of a tendency to use adjectives as substantives. He then adds:

"Mr. Freeman has shown a disposition to resist this tendency; he does not like 'cardinal' or 'cathedral' as substantives; he prefers to write 'cardinal priest' and 'cathedral church.' But this resistance of his takes practical effect only upon a very small proportion of the instances, just those which happen to press closest upon his observation in his special studies. A great number of substantives of the same class pass under his pen unchallenged."

May I venture to say that I never had any purpose to resist any such tendency, because I had never thought of any such tendency at all? Yes; perhaps I have, in a few slang phrases. Here in Oxford it does seem to me odd to hear the building which I have been always used to call "the Theatre" spoken of as "the Sheldonian." Perhaps the change has come because, if one now spoke of "the Theatre," one might be thought to be speaking of the new play-house. But the "great number of substantives" which Mr. Earle says "passed under my pen unchallenged" so passed, I do not doubt, because I never thought about them at all.

I do not quite understand what Mr. Earle means about "cardinal." I am wholly unconscious of any theory as to the way of speaking of Eminences. I am certainly not in the habit of saying "cardinal priest" as equivalent to "cardinal" in general, for so to speak would be inaccurate in the case of a cardinal bishop or a cardinal deacon. I may very likely have spoken of some one as a "cardinal priest," if I wished to point out that he belonged to that rank in the cardinalate and not to either of the others.

It is about "cathedral" that I wish to say a word or two. It is certainly true that I have a great dislike to some common ways of using that word as a substantive. But it is not because of any theory about substantives and adjectives, but because I find that the popular use of the word leads to many confusions and inaccuracies. "Cathedral" is strictly an adjective, describing a particular class of church, namely, that which has a cathedra or "bishopstool" placed in it. The adjective may well become a substantive, if only the substantive is used accurately. In French one says, "la cathédrale"; but one also says, "la collégiale" and "l'abbatiale"—"église" being of course understood in all three cases. I have no doubt that careless French writers, just like careless English writers, often use the word "cathédrale" wrongly. They are specially fond of applying it to the "collégiale" at Bern and its fellows at Zürich and Luzern. But this is mere carelessness and blundering. The received form of the language is perfectly accurate, and it suggests no temptation to blunder. If I were writing French I should, in this case, feel no call to resist any tendency to use an adjective as a substantive.

It is otherwise in English. If we are talking of the two great churches of London, we often say "Saint Paul's cathedral." We never say "Saint Peter's collegiate." It is not likely that we should, when the history of the church so naturally suggests the use of the word "abbey." But I do not believe that anybody at any time at Manchester or Ripon or Southwell ever spoke of "the collegiate." Now that those churches have become cathedral, they are constantly spoken of as "the cathedral." But there seems no reason to insist now on the cathedral rank of Southwell minster every time the church is mentioned, any more than there was formerly to insist on its collegiate rank every time it was mentioned. "Collegiate church," "cathedral church," is the proper formal style, to be used when a formal description is needed; at other times the traditional "minster" is the best name. Mr. Earle cannot mean that I always say "cathedral church," whereas a popular writer would say "cathedral" only. I should most likely formally introduce the building as the "cathedral church," and then go on to speak of "the minster," "the abbey," or whatever was the genuine local way of speaking. That, I strongly suspect, would never be found to be "the cathedral." I lately saw a curious instance in the Quarterly Review. A local Norwich writer of the sixteenth or seventeenth century was quoted as mentioning something that was done in "the great church" of that city. The Quarterly reviewer thought it needful to explain: "Great church (Anglice cathedral)." How clever he must have thought himself when he wrote that "Anglice" in scorn of such a good piece of East-Anglian!

As the substantive "cathedral" is now used, it leads to countless mistakes. It is thought to mean, not necessarily a "cathedral church," but perhaps a big church, perhaps a cross church, perhaps a church with many clergy attached to it, perhaps a church where the service is chanted. Sometimes it means a church where the nave stands empty. I was once proudly told at Grosmont in Monmouthshire, where the church is or was in that unlucky state: "our church is like a cathedral." The point of likeness was the emptiness of the nave. Sometimes, it would seem, a "cathedral" is something which is not a church at all. I was once told: "a cathedral is not a church; it has a church inside it." The climax is to be found in the Public Worship Act, the framers of which seem to have thought that "cathedral" and "church" were words which meant two distinct things, each of which shut out the other. "In a cathedral" something is to be done; "in a church" something else. I ask Mr. Earle whether "English Prose" can fall lower than this.

These things being so, it is not wonderful if, whenever one chances to use the old legal form "cathedral and collegiate churches," the printer always improves by sticking in an s at the end of the word "cathedral."

Then one often hears of "cathedral architecture," as if there were some special kind of building fitted for a bishop's church, different from that of an abbot or provost. Then there used to be "cathedral service," though that has ceased of late years to be at all distinctively "cathedral." I once read of Westminster Abbey that, "at the Reformation it was made into a cathedral, where divine service is performed every Sunday." This, I take it, did not refer to the one episcopate of Thomas Thirlby; it meant only that St. Peter's was a large church, and that "cathedral service" was said in it, though the frequency of its saying was a little underrated. But when Shakspeare said: "In the cathedral church of Westminster," he doubtless did refer to its momentary rank. The "collégiale" of Westminster has the same right to be called "cathédrale" as it has to be called "abbatiale." It has been both in past times.

Surely the remedy for all this confusion is, wherever one can help it—one cannot always help it—to avoid talking of a "cathedral," "the cathedral," &c. I should introduce "the cathedral church of Lincoln," and then go on talking, as everybody did till the other day, of "Lincoln minster." There seems no reason to insist on the cathedral rank of a building every time one speaks of it. If "the cathedral" can be shown to be the true, natural, unlearned way of speaking in any particular place, that would be a good reason for using it in that place. But I doubt there being such a case.

EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

[At Winchester the college boys at least always spoke of "the cathedral," or rather—according to their custom of omitting the definite article—of "cathedral" simply. The word "minster" was certainly never heard; "abbey" would have suggested Hyde Abbey.—ED. ACADEMY.]

THE ORDER OF THE LETTERS IN THE RUNIC FUTHORK.

Settrington Rectory, York: Nov. 22, 1890.

Prof. Skeat is fully justified in claiming entire novelty for his ingenious attempt to explain the order of the runes in the Futhork. But as he expressly invites free criticism, he will, I am sure, allow me to state certain objections to his scheme which he has not noticed, and which will have to be met before his theory can be accepted.

The chronological conditions of the problem have first to be considered. It is an essential element in his theory that the order of the Futhork was invented by an Englishman and a Christian, who was also acquainted with the Latin Paternoster. Hence we obtain a limit for the possible date. Augustine landed in 597, and Paulinus in 625; but neither of these monks succeeded in converting the English, a work which was not actually commenced before the arrival of St. Aidan in 635. Hence, on Prof. Skeat's theory, the arrangement of the runes in the Futhork cannot have taken place earlier than the middle of the seventh century. But this Futhork, according to the theory, was not the actual Futhork as we know it, but a hypothetical Futhork from which the actual arrangement was evolved by a lengthened process. Prof. Skeat finds it necessary to suppose that the arrangement invented by his early English Christian had been partly forgotten, and that then certain traditional dislocations must have been effected. Without this hypothesis his explanation fails, as he himself admits. Hence, apart from any conjectures as to the original arrangement by the early Christian, the date of the only arrangements of which we have documentary cognisance must be considerably later, and must be brought down to the eighth or even to the ninth century.

But it hardly admits of dispute that the very arrangement of the runes, which on Prof. Skeat's theory cannot be older than the eighth century, was in existence as early as the middle of the fifth century, and in all probability was older than the middle of the fourth. The reasons for this conclusion may be briefly stated. In 1857 a silver-gilt brooch was found on the site of the battle-field of Charnay, near the confluence of the Saône and the Doubs, where, in the year 500, the Burgundians, under Gundobald, were defeated by the Franks under Clovis. On this brooch we have the first 19 runes of the Futhork in their usual order. This brooch must have belonged to one of the Burgundian chieftains, as we have no reason for believing that the Franks were acquainted with the runic writing. Though the Burgundians were then Christians, England had not been converted, a fact fatal to the theory that the arrangement was the work of a Christian Englishman.

But even then there is another difficulty. On a golden bracteate, found in 1774 at Vadstena in Sweden, we have a Futhork, containing all but one of the twenty-four primitive runes, which are arranged in the three heathen families—Frea's family, Hagal's family, and Syr's family. This, however, is not absolutely conclusive, as the names of the three families may have been invented at a later period. The important fact is, that on this bracteate both the Futhork and the inscription are written in the older retrograde direction, from right to left, as in the very earliest inscriptions, while some of the runes have more archaic forms than those on the Charnay brooch, resembling those on the Buzco torque, which dates from the third century, when the Goths first broke into Moesia. The date of the Vadstena bracteate, with this authentic early Futhork, can therefore be hardly later than 350 A.D., a date too early to permit of the supposition of any Christian influences, much less of an English origin, or any acquaintance with the Latin Paternoster. Any influence would be Byzantine, not Roman. We have also a Futhork, ascribed to the sixth or seventh century, engraved on a sword found in the Thames. The forms of the runes on this sword are considerably later than the Charnay or the Vadstena runes, showing a long development, probably of several centuries. If, then, the order of the Futhork was invented by one of the earliest of the Burgundian converts (which is the supposition most favourable to Prof. Skeat's theory), he will have to explain how this Burgundian inventor managed to transmit his discovery to the still heathen North, and to get it adopted by the owners of the Thames sword and of the Vadstena bracteate. The difficulty is increased by the fact that the Burgundians, on their conversion, abandoned the runes and adopted the Roman alphabet, while the converted Goths adopted the Graeco-Runic alphabet of Ulfilas. Hence, in all probability, the Burgundian brooch was an heirloom from the heathen period.

In face of these chronological difficulties, it seems more easy and natural to suppose that the order of the runes was brought about by the same processes of natural evolution, dislocation, and re-arrangement which can be shown to have operated in producing the arrangement of the Arabic, Persian, Ethiopic, Greek, and Latin alphabets. These were all ultimately derived from the primitive Semitic order; but, as new letters were evolved and others were discarded, the new letters either took the places of those rejected or were put in juxtaposition with other letters, similar either in form or value. On this principle there is no insuperable difficulty in explaining the order of the Futhork. As I have shown in my book on the runes, more than half of them retain the places which correspond to those which their prototypes occupied in the primitive Greek alphabet from which they were obtained. More especially convincing is the fact that the last rune, othil, corresponds in form and value to omega, the last letter of the Greek alphabet. Again, the first four runes follow the order of the Greek letters from which they were evolved, and in the middle of the Futhork there is another similar sequence.

There can be hardly any doubt that when the nations on the Baltic first obtained the Greek letters they must have arranged them in some fixed order. The difficulty is to explain how, after the final separation of the Gothic and Scandinavian tribes had taken place, a new artificial arrangement should have been made in some Christian land and then transmitted to the still heathen North, and how the ingenious inventor should have been able to persuade all his distant congeners to adopt the new discovery, whose advantages were based on the magical virtues of the Paternoster. Since the order of the Futhork may be traced wherever the runes penetrated—in Burgundy, as well as in England and in Sweden—it seems easier to suppose that the arrangement was substantially in existence before the Northern nations broke up from their old homes, and that it was based on the arrangement of the alphabet from which the runes were themselves evolved.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

THE TREASURY OF KING RHAPSINITUS.

Glasgow: Nov. 22, 1890.

I observe, in the ACADEMY of November 15 (p. 449), that Mr. Levi H. Elwell, of Amherst College, Mass., U.S., has had printed for private circulation his paper on the legend of Rhampsinitus, as told by Herodotus, which he read at the last meeting of the American Philological Association; and that he cites "three variants from the most distant quarters." These are: (1) a Tibetan version from Ralston's translation of Schiefner's German collection; (2) the tale of the Shifty Lad, from Campbell's West Highland Tales; and (3) a story from Col. Jones's Negro Myths.

Give me leave to say that this widespread tale was pretty well "thrashed out" by me nearly four years ago in the second volume of my Popular Tales and Fictions: Their Migrations and Transformations (Blackwood, 1887); and that, with the exception of the analogue in Col. Jones's Negro Myths, which had not then been published, nothing new has been discovered in the shape of versions that might throw some light on the question of the origin and diffusion of this legend. Indeed, the negro analogue need not be excepted, as it leaves the question very much as it was before.

In the work above mentioned (vol. ii., pp. 115-165), after giving the substance of the legend of the treasury of Rhampsinitus, King of Egypt, as narrated by Herodotus (Euterpe, 121), I proceed to cite the oldest-known European form, which is found in the Latin Dolopathos of the twelfth century, and variations of the same, as related in the later Latin and old English versions of the Seven Wise Masters; then follow Italian, old Sicilian, modern Greek, Albanian, French (from the old romance of the Chevalier Berinus), Breton, Gaelic, Dutch, Tyrolean, Danish, Russian, Tunisian, Kabal, Mongolian, Tibetan, Bengali, Indo-Persian, Sanskrit, and Singhalese versions and variants; while in the Appendix is given a modern Egyptian analogue, in which, however, it is not the king's treasury that is broken into, but a camel-train loaded with revenue from the provinces, in the time of the Khalif Biamrillah. It is true that the legend has not yet been found in Pali, but the fact that it is known to the Singhalese (not to speak of the Tibetans) would seem to indicate that it was derived from a Buddhist source. Very possibly, if not very probably, the story is of genuine Egyptian origin, and travelled to the Far East at an early period; but it has not hitherto been discovered in any of the ancient Egyptian papyri that have been examined. In former times thieving seems to have been one of the "fine arts," and Egypt still produces the most expert thieves and sharpers in the world, as may be seen from the Notes to Lane's Arabian Nights. In some Indian story-books we find enumerated among the accomplishments of even young princes that they were "expert jugglers and thieves."

The share which those ubiquitous and interesting people, the Gipsies, have had in the diffusion of Asiatic stories throughout Europe has been entirely overlooked by students of popular fictions in this country, with the solitary exception of my friend Mr. F. Hindes Groome, who may be considered as one of the foremost of English gipsylogues, and whose able article on "Gypsies" enriches the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia. In Germany and elsewhere, however, the subject has for many years past received the serious attention of several eminent scholars; and it will probably interest some readers of the ACADEMY to see a Gipsy version of the Robbery of the King's Treasury, which I extract from a manuscript collection by Mr. Groome, on which I hope some day to collaborate, with a view to its publication. It is No. VI. of Dr. Barbu Constantinescu's Probe de Limba si Literatura Tiganilor din Romania (Bucharest, 1878), and has not hitherto appeared in English:

The Two Thieves.

There were two thieves. One was a country (thief) and one a town (thief). So the time came that the two met, and they asked one another whence they were and what they were. Then the country (thief) said to him of the town: "Well, if you are such a clever thief as to be able to steal the eggs from under a crow, then I shall know that you are a thief." He said: "See me now, how I shall steal them." And he climbed lightly up the tree, and put his hand under the crow and stole the eggs from her, and the crow never felt (it). Whilst he was stealing the crow's eggs the country thief stole his breeches, and the town thief never felt him. And when he came down and saw that he was naked, he said: "Brother, I never felt you stealing my breeches. Let us become brothers." So they became brothers.

Then what are they to do? They went into the city and took one wife [between them]. And the town thief said, "Brother, it is a sin for two brothers to have one wife. It were better for her to be yours." He said, "Mine be she. But come now—where shall I take you, that we may get money?" "Come on, brother, since you know." So they took and departed. Then they came to the emperor's, and considered how to get into his palace. And what did they devise? Said the town thief, "Come, brother, and let us break into the palace and let ourselves down, one after the other." "Come on." So they got on the palace, and broke through the roof; and the country thief lowered himself and took 200 purses of money and came out. And they went home.

The king arose in the morning and looked at his money, [and saw] that 200 purses of money were missing. Straightway he went to the prison where was an old thief. And when he came to him he said, "Old thief, I know not who has come into my palace and stolen from me 200 purses of money; and I know not where they went out by, for there is no hole anywhere in the palace." The old thief said, "There must be one, O king, only you don't see it. But go and make a fire in the palace, and come out and watch the palace, and where you see smoke issuing, that was where the thieves entered. And do you put a cask of molasses just there, at that hole, for the thief who took the money will come again." Then the king went and made a fire, and saw the hole whence the smoke issued, in the roof of the palace. And he went and got a cask of molasses and put it there at the hole. The thieves came again to that hole at night. And the thief from the country let himself down again, and as he did so he fell into the cask of molasses. And he said to his brother, "Brother, it is all over with me, but do not do the king's pleasure. Come and cut off my head, for I am as good as dead." So his comrade lowered himself down and cut off his head, and went and buried it in a wood.

When the king went where the thief had fallen, and saw the thief in the molasses without a head, he went to the old thief and told him, "Look you, old thief, I caught the thief, and he has no head." Then the old thief said, "O king, this is a cunning thief. But what are we to do? Why, take the corpse and hang it up outside the city gate, and he who stole his head will come to steal him too. And do you set soldiers to watch him." So the king went and took the corpse and hung it up, and set soldiers to watch it. Then the thief took and bought a white mare and a cart, and took a jar of 20 eimers of wine, and he put it in the cart, and drove straight to the place where his comrade was hanging. He made himself old, and pretended the cart had broken down, and the jar had fallen out. And he began to weep and tear his hair, and he made himself to cry aloud, that he was a poor man, and his master would kill him. The soldiers guarding the corpse said one to another, "Let us help and put this old fellow's jar in the cart, mates, for it is a pity to hear him." So they went to help him, and said to him, "Hallo! old chap, we'll put your jar in the cart; will you give us a drop to drink?" "That I will, deary." So they went and put the jar in the cart, and the old fellow took and said to them, "Take a drink, deary, for I have nothing else to give you." Then the soldiers took and drank till they could drink no more. And the old fellow made himself to ask, "And what is this?" The soldiers said, "That is a thief." Then the old man said, "Hallo! deary, I shan't spend the night here, else that thief will steal my mare." The soldiers said, "What a silly you are, old fellow! How will he come and steal your mare?" "He will though, deary. Isn't he a thief?" "Shut up, old fellow! He won't steal your mare, and if he does we'll pay you for her." "He will steal her, deary, for he's a thief." "Why, old boy, he's dead. We'll give you our written word that if he steals your mare we will give you 300 groschen for her." Then the old man said, "All right, deary, if that is the case." So he stayed there, and placed himself near the fire, and a drowsy fit took him and he pretended to sleep. The soldiers kept going to the jar of wine, and drank every drop of the wine and got drunk. And where they fell there they slept and took no thought. Then the old fellow, the thief, who pretended to sleep, arose and took the corpse from the gallows and put it on his mare, and carried it into the forest and buried it. And he left his mare there, and went back to the fire and pretended to sleep. So when the soldiers awoke and saw that neither the corpse was there nor the old man's mare, they marvelled and said, "There, comrades! the old man said rightly, that the thief would steal his mare. Let us make it up to him." So by the time the old man arose they gave him 300 groschen and told him to say no more about it.

When the king saw that there was no thief on the gallows he went to the old thief in the prison and said to him, "There! they have stolen the thief from the gallows, old thief. What am I to do?" "Did I not tell you, O king, that this is a cunning thief? But do you buy up all the joints of meat in the city and charge a ducat the pound, so that no one will care to buy any unless he has come into a lot of money. But that thief won't be able to hold out three days." Then the king went and bought up all the joints and left one joint, and that one he priced at a ducat the pound. So nobody came to buy that day. Next day the thief would stay no longer. He took a cart and put a horse in it, and drove to the butcher's. And he pretended he had damaged his cart, and lamented he had not an axe to repair it with. Then the butcher said, "Here, take my axe and mend your cart." The axe was close to the meat. As he passed to take the axe he picked up the joint of meat and stuck it under his coat. And he handed the axe back to the butcher and departed home.

The same day comes the emperor, and he asks the butcher, "Have you sold any meat to-day to anyone?" He said, "I have not sold to any one." Then the emperor weighed the meat and found it 40 lbs. short. And he went to the old thief in prison and said to him, "He has stolen 40 lbs. of meat, and no one saw him." "Didn't I tell you, O king, that this is a cunning thief?" "Well, what am I to do, old thief?" "What are you to do? Why, make a proclamation, and offer on it all you possess, and say, he shall become king in your stead, merely to say who he is." Then the king went and wrote the proclamation, just as the old thief had told him. And he posted it outside by the gate. So the thief comes and reads it, and thought how he should act. And he took his heart in his teeth, and went to the king and said, "O king, I am the thief." "You are?" "I am." Then the king said, "If you it be, that I may believe you are really the man, do you see this peasant coming? Well, you must steal one of the oxen from under the yoke, without his seeing you." The thief said, "I will steal it, O king—watch me."

And he went before the peasant and began to cry aloud, "Comedy of comedies!" Then the peasant said, "See there, now! I have been in the city many a time, and have often heard 'Comedy of comedies,' and have never gone to see what it's like." And he left his cart and went off to the other end of the city, and the thief kept on crying till he had got the peasant some distance from the oxen. Then the thief returns, and takes one of the oxen and cuts off its tail, and sticks it in the mouth of the other ox, and comes away with the first ox to the king. And the king laughed fit to kill himself. When the peasant came back he began to weep. And the king called him and asked, "What are you crying for, my man?" "Why, O king, while I was away to see the play one of the oxen has gone and eaten up the other." When the king heard that he laughed fit to kill himself, and he told his servants to give him two good oxen, and he gave him also his own ox, and asked him, "Do you recognise your ox, my man?" "I do." "Well, away you go home."

Then he said to the thief, "Well, my fine fellow, I will give you my daughter, and you shall become king in my stead, if you will steal the priest for me out of the church." The thief went into the town, and got three hundred crabs and three hundred candles, and went to the church, and stood upon the pavement. And as the priest chanted the thief let out the crabs one by one, each with a candle fastened to its claw; he let it out. And the priest said, "So righteous am I in the sight of God that he sends his saints for me." The thief let out all the crabs, each with a candle fastened to its claw, and he said, "Come, O priest, for God calls thee by his messengers to himself, for thou art righteous." The priest said, "And how am I to go?" "Get into this sack." And he took him on his back and carried him to the king, and tumbled him down. And the king burst out laughing, and straightway he gave his daughter to the thief, and made him king in his stead.

The opening incident in this tale finds a parallel in the Kaba'il version, in which two sons of an expert thief lately deceased go to their father's old comrade in thieving, who, though he had retired from business, consents to accompany them in their adventures. They come upon a hawk's nest, and the old man shows his dexterity in taking away the sleeping bird without waking it and puts it into his sack. The elder youth contrives to steal the still sleeping bird from the old man without his knowledge, and the younger in his turn performs the same exploit with his brother.* Another parallel occurs in Grimm's tale of the Four Clever Brothers. The incident of the two thieves in the Gipsy tale, at first taking one wife in common, and then one of them surrendering her to the other, is evidently imperfectly told; and had Dr. Constantinescu questioned his story-teller he would probably have recalled to his memory a more consistent version, such as is found in one of the tales of the Turkish story-book, the History of the Forty Veirs (Mr. Gibb's translation, p. 257 ff.), where two thieves are, unknown to each other, married to the same woman, and when at length they happen to meet at her house, it is agreed that he who shall perform the most expert thieving trick shall be her true husband. As in the Gipsy tale, an old thief in prison, or a wise old man, is consulted by the king in Dolopathos, the modern Greek, the Gaelic, Dutch, Tyrolese, and Kaba'il versions. The stealing of the peasant's ox, leaving its tail in the mouth of the other, is peculiar to the Gipsy version, though it has parallels in several other stories of thievery, where the rascal cuts off the oxen's tails and "plants" them in the earth, before he decamps with his booty, and the owner on his return concludes that the earth has swallowed them.* But for an analysis of the several versions, I beg leave to refer readers to my Popular Tales and Fictions, vol. ii., p. 158 ff. The last exploit, of getting the priest to enter a sack in order to be taken bodily to heaven, is also peculiar to the Gipsy version; but Mr. Groome appends to it in his MS. a similar tale from Dr. Rudolf von Sowa's Die Mundart der Slavischen Zigeuner (Gottingen, 1887), and it strongly resembles an incident in the Irish tale of Little Fairly and its very numerous European and Asiatic versions, which form a special chapter of my book, vol. ii., pp. 229-288, and pp. 489-491.

W. A. CLOUSTON.

THE SOURCE OF A CHAUCER SIMILE.

Yale University: Oct. 31, 1890.

Morris and Skeat, in their edition of Chaucer's Prologue, quote from Gratian in illustration of vv. 179-81:

"Ne that a monk, when he is cloisterlees,
Is likned til a fish that is waterlees;
This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloistre."

This comparison is, however, some eight hundred years older than Gratian. It will be found in Sozomen's Ecclesiastical History, bk. i., ch. xiii. (Migne, Patrologia Graeca, 67. 898-9):

Τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ἰχθύας ἔλεγε τὴν ὑγρὰν οὐσίαν τρέφειν· μοναχοὺς δὲ κόσμον φέρειν τὴν ἔρημον· ἐπίσης τε τοὺς μὲν ἑρπῆς ἀποτομῆς οὐδὲ σὺν ἀπολιμνάνειν, τοὺς δὲ τὴν μοναστικὴν σιμνότητα ἀπολλύειν τοῖς ἁσέσι προσιώντας.

The saying, as here given, is attributed by Sozomen to Antony, the father of anchoritism.

ALBERT S. COOK.

NORFOLK MANOR COURT ROLLS.

Putney: Nov. 22, 1890.

The entries in the Stanhoe rolls printed by Mr. Toynbee do not seem to be of any special interest. There are thousands of rolls of this date containing similar entries; and they are chiefly valuable to the genealogist, and then only when printed in extenso. Earlier rolls, like those of Cressingham, recently printed for private circulation, are much more interesting.

The only point of note is the reading "mercia" for "fine." If it is really so spelt at length on the roll, and is not the reader's extension of the usual three letter "mia," the form is very unusual, though it occurs in Ducange. The contraction in question is, of course, usually read "misericordia."

* Mr. Groome refers to De Gubernatis's Zoological Mythology (2 vols., London, 1872) i. p. 186; also to Afanisieff's Russian collection, v. 6, where the thief Ivan is required to steal from his master a black ox tied to a plough; if he succeed he is to have a hundred roubles for his reward, but if he fail, he is to receive instead a hundred bastinadoes. In order to steal it, Ivan adopts the following device: he takes a cock and puts it alive under a clod of earth. The ploughmen come with the oxen; while they are ploughing the cock starts up; they leave the plough to run after it, upon which Ivan, who was hidden behind a bush, comes out. He cuts off one ox's tail and puts it in another one's mouth, and then leads away the black ox. The ploughmen, not having been able to overtake the cock, come back, and when they see only two animals instead of three, conclude that one ox has eaten the black ox and is now eating the tail of the variegated ox.—See also the exploits of the Master Thief in Dasent's Norse Tales.

The extracts are said to be given "in the original Latin with the contractions expanded"; but surely "infra hoc dominio" and "infra solo et terra" are somewhat strange. The Latin certainly is original.

"Juclum" and "Jucli" are clearly misreadings for inclusum and inclusi, "tenuta" for tenta, and "ancis" for aucis, while "preest" was intended by the scribe to mean "preceptum est."

"Unusque" is probably a misreading, and may be cujusque or cujuscunque, as unusque would make the sentence nonsense.

WALTER RYE.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Nov. 26, 1890.

I am much obliged to Mr. Walter Rye for his observations. It was naturally not with the expectation of interesting specialists like himself that the above extracts were made. There are many people, especially since the publication of Dr. Jessop's books, who are curious to know more about the old manor court rolls; and as these are practically inaccessible, save to the very few, it seemed worth while to print some specimen extracts. It is a poor consolation to those who are not specialists to be told that thousands of similar rolls exist, or even that certain of these have been printed for "private circulation."

With regard to Mr. Rye's other remarks, I may observe that I have expanded mia or m into mercia, because I came across this word so written in full in one of the entries. I am fully aware that the term misericordia is also employed. So with preest, which occurs several times written as one word, without any mark of contraction.

Unusque and ancis are obvious misprints for utrinusque and aucis, and, I suppose, were overlooked by me in reading the proof.

Infra in these rolls is used indifferently with abl. or acc. (with full termination in both cases), so that I must, with due modesty, disclaim the "originality" imputed to me by Mr. Rye. If the Latin is "original" in the sense implied by my critic, it is the scribe who must have the credit, not I.

With regard to the words juclum and tenuta, I must plead guilty to carelessness. In the former case I overlooked the bar across the l in MS., thus reading juclum. This word I thought I found in Ducange, with the meaning of a "measure of land." On looking again, I see the word in Ducange is not Juclus, but Juctus, modus agri. Mea culpa! Of this correction I have gratefully availed myself.

As concerns tenuta, I was misled presumably by the familiar Italian form. Besides, is it wholly inadmissible here? Tenutus is certainly a possible form in Low Latin, witness Italian tenuto and French tenu derived from it.

I have no doubt my inexperience has led me into further errors in other extracts which I have sent to the editor of the ACADEMY. I shall be grateful if Mr. Walter Rye thinks it worth while to set me right.

PAGET TOYNEBEE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 30, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Costumes," by Mr. H. Blackburn.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Moral Aspects of Socialism," by Mr. Leslie Stephen.

MONDAY, DEC. 1, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

5 p.m. London Institution: "The House we live in," by Prof. W. H. Corfield.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Gaseous Illuminants," II., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.

8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Geological History of Egypt," by Prof. Hull.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Main Outlines of Hellenic Theory concerning the Beautiful," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.

8 p.m. Microscopical: Conversazione.

* Recueil de Contes populaires de la Kabylie du Djurdjura, recueillis et traduits par J. Rivière. Paris, 1882. Part I. No. III. The Kaba'il are the wandering tribes of Algeria, as distinguished from the native town-dwellers.

TUESDAY, Dec. 2, 3 p.m. British Museum: "History of the Literature of Babylonia, I., Semitic Period," by Mr. G. Bertin.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Akkadian and Chinese Characters," by the Rev. C. J. Ball; "Prayers of the Falasha Jews in Abyssinia," by the Rev. Dr. A. Löwy.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Vibratory Movements of Locomotives," by Prof. John Milne and Mr. John McDonald.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Antelopes of Nyassa-Land," by Mr. Richard Crawshaw; "The Suspension of the Viscera in the Batoid Hypnos subnigrum," and "The Pectoral Fin-skeleton of the Batoidea and of the Extinct Genus Chlamydoselache," by Prof. G. B. Howes; "The Presence of the Pterygoid Teeth in a Tailless Batrachian (Telobates cultripes), with Remarks on the Localization of Teeth on the Palate in Batrachians and Reptiles," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 3, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Chicago Exhibition, 1893," by Mr. James Dredge.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "The Stage Arrangement of 'Romeo and Juliet,'" by Mr. William Poel.

THURSDAY, Dec. 4, 7 p.m. London Institution: "Hector Berlioz," with Musical Illustrations, by Mr. Carl Armbruster.

4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Parochial Accounts of St. Neot's, Cornwall, Seventeenth Century," by the late General Sir J. H. Lefroy; "Ancient Chair in Lincoln Minster," and "St. Catherine's, Lincoln," by Precentor Venables.

8 p.m. Linnean: "The Genus of Orchid Brown-hendia," by Mr. H. N. Ridley; "The Botany of Kandahar," by Mr. J. H. Iace; "A Botanical Visit to the Auckland Isles," by Mr. Thos. Kirk.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Volumetric Estimation of Tellurium," by Dr. Branner.

FRIDAY, Dec. 5, 8 p.m. Philological: "The Scansion of Heroic Verse," by Mr. G. L. Larkyns.

8 p.m. Geologists' Association: "The Microscopical Examination of some Samples of London Clay from the Excavations for the Widening of Cannon-street Railway Bridge, 1887," by Messrs. C. Davies Sherborn and H. W. Burrows; "A Visit to Ingleton and to Fley Brigg (showing how a Dangerous Reef was converted into a Perfect Breakwater by an Ancient Race)," by Mr. Edwin Litchfield.

SCIENCE.

THE NEW OXFORD TEXT OF THE ETHICS.

Aristotelis Ethica Nicomachea. Recognovit brevique adnotatione critica instruxit I. Bywater. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. BYWATER'S promised text of the Ethics is at last in the hands of the university. The editor has, we hope, prepared himself to suffer the fate with which Socrates is threatened in the Republic. Anyone who ventures to publish a new text of the Nicomachean Ethics must expect all men to throw off their gowns and rush furiously upon him. Yet, if critics will take our advice, they will after all put their gowns on again. They will find, when they come to close quarters, that Mr. Bywater's new edition is a very conservative one. "Lex hujus editionis erat ut liber ipse qualis fere jam antiquitus in codicibus extat vel exstitisse videtur, quoad fieri posset, integer intactusque servaretur."

The text contains changes, and good changes; but they are mostly small and they are not very numerous. (E.g., in ix. 2, 3, where Bekker read καὶ ὁσπερ δάειον, which does not go quite easily or smoothly, Mr. Bywater has ὁσπερ καὶ. This is better, but, as it does not rest on very cogent authority, might we not read καὶ γὰρ ὁσπερ δάειον?) Much is done by recognising those changes of δ for θ, or the converse, which scholars have long seen to be necessary. (See for instances iii. 10, 9, ix. 7, 9, x. 6, 5. There is, however, no change made in iii. ii., 5, nor in iv., 8, 9, where a change seems to be particularly wanted. The sentence here which begins with οὐ δὲ is really a promise, not a conclusion.) More still is done by adopting a reasonable punctuation (as at x. 7, 2), in presence of which many difficulties disappear of themselves. "Interpunctionem liberius immutavi, partim meo Marte partim auctore Susemihlio."

The text of the Ethics is really not in a state which requires heroic remedies, unless it be the remedy of transposition; and few of us like to contemplate the lengths to which we may have to go if we once begin transposing. No doubt we all advocate a few pet transpositions, on a small scale (iii. 5, 21-22 would be distinctly improved in coherence by reading §22 first and then §21. In vi. 5, 4, one cannot help wishing to see the suggestion of Muretus, followed by Rassow, adopted, and the two sentences changed about which begin respectively with Δεινὰ and τὴν μὲν γὰρ.) But Mr. Bywater wisely keeps clear of such things, both the small readjustments of a Muretus and the more Medea-like operations of Mr. Jackson.

The new text will no doubt be prescribed for Oxford examinations, and we should have liked to see in it even greater help given to the student than its improvements of reading afford. There are various ways, without altering the text, in which the eye and the mind might have been helped. We could have wished for more marks of parenthesis. To separate by such marks a digression, a side-remark, or anything in the nature of a note, makes it far easier to follow Aristotle's drift; and it is taking no liberty with the text. Mr. Bywater has restored sense from nonsense by an improved stopping of iii. 4, 4, but a parenthesis would make the meaning of the passage clearer still. So with iv. 8, 7, x., 8, 5, and many other places. We could wish, too, to see the great blocks of Greek broken up into more convenient paragraphs—paragraphs answering more nearly to divisions of subject; and there would be no harm in even starting each of a series of arguments upon a line of its own.

We must not, however, be ungrateful for what Mr. Bywater has actually done. He has not of course worked unaided. He returns special thanks for help to Prof. Cook Wilson ("virum dico si quis alius Ἀριστοτελικώτατον"). The result is a text in the use of which we feel perfectly safe, and which is in numberless points more intelligent and more intelligible than those which it will, we hope, soon supplant.

A word of praise is due to the Clarendon Press for the excellent get-up of the book.

F. T. R.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NEW BABYLONIAN VERSION OF THE CREATION STORY.

British Museum: Nov. 18, 1890.

When we consider the results of the excavations in the Tigris and Euphrates Valley, and at Tell-el-Amarna in Egypt, there are probably few who will not acknowledge that Assyriology is full of surprises; and the rapid advance of the science must naturally strike every student of the subject, be he thorough-going or only dilettante. During the last few years our ideas of Assyrian and Babylonian matters have been quite revolutionised by the documents discovered by Mr. Rassam, by M. de Sarzec, &c., and by the tablets found at Tell-el-Amarna. From the collections obtained for the British Museum by the first-named explorer at Kouyunjik, I now give a translation of a document which I have lately had an opportunity of copying, and which will undoubtedly prove to be of more than ordinary interest.

This inscription, which I name "the Akkadian version of the story of the Creation," is written on a not very large tablet of baked clay. The text is imperfect, the lower part of the tablet (looking on the obverse) being broken away, so that the beginning and the end are alone preserved. The portion that remains, however, is considerable. At a first glance, the text seems to be arranged in three rough columns; but such is not really the case, this appearance being caused merely by the dividing of the lines of the Akkadian version to place the Assyrian translation between. The middle column is therefore much broader than the first and third, notwithstanding that it is written much smaller, especially on the obverse. The reverse shows that the text is an ordinary incantation tablet, but that it is of the first importance the following translation (necessarily to a certain extent provisional) will clearly show:

TRANSLATION.

1. Incantation: The glorious house, the house of the gods, in a glorious place had not been made.
2. A plant had not been brought forth, a tree had not been created.
3. A brick had not been made, a beam had not been formed.
4. A house had not been built, a city had not been constructed.
5. A city had not been made, earthly things had not been made glorious.
6. Niffer had not been built, E-kura had not been constructed.
7. Erech had not been built, E-ana had not been constructed.
8. The abyss had not been made, Eridu had not been constructed.
9. (As for) the glorious house, the house of the gods, its seat had not been made.
10. The whole of the lands, the sea also.
11. When within the sea the current was,
12. In that day Eridu was made, E-sagila was constructed.
13. E-sagila which the god Lugal-du-azaga founded within the abyss.
14. Babylon was built, E-sagila was completed.
15. He made the gods (and) the Anunnaki altogether.
16. The glorious city, the seat of the joy of their hearts, supremely they proclaimed.
17. Merodach bound together amam before the water.
18. Dust he made, and he poured it out with the flood.
19. The gods were made to dwell in a seat of joy of heart.
20. He made mankind.
21. The god Aruru, the seed of mankind, they made with him.
22. He made the beasts of the field (and) the living creatures of the desert.
23. He made the Tigris and Euphrates and set (them) in (their) place.
24. Well proclaimed he their name.
25. The issu-plant, the dittu-plant of the marsh-land, the reed, and the forest he made.
26. He made the verdure of the plain.
27. The lands, the marshes, and the greensward also.
28. Oxen, the young of the horse, the stallion, the mare, the sheep, the locust.
29. Meadows and forests also.
30. The he-goat and the gazelle brought forth (?) to him.
31. Lord Merodach on the sea-shore filled in a mound.
32. . . . . at first he placed not.
33. . . . . he caused to be.
34. [He caused plants to be brought forth], he made trees<sup>1</sup>.
35. . . . . he made in (its) place.
36. [He formed the bricks], he made the beams<sup>2</sup>.
37. [He constructed the houses], he built the city<sup>3</sup>.
38. [He built the city], he made the edifices [glorious]<sup>4</sup>.
39. He built [the city Niffer] of E-kura<sup>5</sup>.
40. [He built the city Erech of E-ana]<sup>6</sup>.
41. . . . .

<sup>1</sup>Lit. "a tree," or "the tree." This line is restored by comparison with line 2. <sup>2</sup>Restored by comparison with line 3. <sup>3</sup>Restored by comparison with line 4. <sup>4</sup>Restored by comparison with line 5. <sup>5</sup>Restored by comparison with line 6. <sup>6</sup>Traces of characters only are to be seen in this line—the restoration is made by comparison with lines seven and thirty-nine.

Here the obverse breaks off. Of the reverse, which is mutilated, it is only needful to say that it ends like an ordinary incantation* for * Several incantations have similar descriptive introductions.

purification, and gives the first line of the next tablet as follows:—

"Incantation: The star . . . the long chariot of the heavens."

For the sake of comparison I reproduce here the opening lines of the account of the Creation, found and published by George Smith:—

"When on high the heavens proclaimed not,
Beneath the earth recorded not a name,
The primeval abyss brought them forth
Mummu Tiamat (the ocean) was she who begat
the whole of them;
Their waters at once burst forth, and Cloud was not compacted, the plain was unsought.
Then none of the gods shone forth,
A name was not recorded, a sign was not [made?];
The great gods were made,
Lahmu and Lahamu shone forth [alone?]
Until [the gods?] grew up. Ansar and Kisar were made.
The days grew long . . . . .
Anu, the father (?). . . . .
To Anu . . . . .
. . . Anu . . . . ."

Then, after a gap, follows the fight between the gods and Bisbis-tiamtu and Kingu, her husband (chaos and darkness), &c., &c.

The difference between these two accounts is so striking that it is quite clear that they are the productions of two different peoples, the mystery and incantation-loving Akkadians and the poetic legend-loving Semitic Babylonians. The account given by the former is a picture of peace—that of the latter a picture of war and strife. Both are exceedingly instructive, and both, when complete, will have great value in determining many questions concerning the people with whom they originated.

After describing the time when nothing was, even the most familiar things, the glorious cities so dear to the Babylonian heart, and when all the countries and the sea (naphar mātūtu tāntumma) existed not, the record states that when within the sea there was a stream (inu-sa kirib tāntim ratumma), then Eridu, "the good city," a type of paradise, and E-sagila, "the house of the high head," were built, and E-sagila within the abyss was founded. Then was built Babylon (here written Ka-dingira), the earthly counterpart of Eridu, with its own E-sagila, mentioned as having been, even then, completed (suklūt), and the gods and their dwelling-places were made, after which Mero-dach engages in various acts of creation, making the earth out of dust (ēpiri) and water (here ami or agi, apparently equivalent to the a of the Akkadian version). Then comes the creation of mankind, and Aruru, "the seed of mankind" (Aruru, zēr āmeluti), the animals, the formation of the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, the various kinds of lands, trees, and plants, and, lastly, the cities Niffer and Erech (Nip-puru and Uruk)—if my restoration be correct—and their respective temples, E-kura and E-ana ("the house of the earth" and "the house of heaven"). It is probable that, even if we possessed the remainder of the text, we should find it of but comparatively minor interest.

In the phrase nammassu la-sassu, "earthly things had not been made glorious," I have followed Dr. Zimmern* for the meaning of the word nam-massu. This word is also given as a synonym of durussu, "foundation,"† and ālu, "city," and the former may be the meaning here. Nam-massu, however, means not only "foundation" or "city," but also "animals" and "mankind"; and in this connexion it is noteworthy that one of its Akkadian equivalents (used also in the present text) is adam.‡ The word sassu, translating the Akkadian numunia, "had not been made glorious" (root ia), shows that sassu, in the inscriptions of Nebuchadnezzar, probably has nothing to do with the word samsu, "sun," with which it has been connected.

I hope to publish shortly the cuneiform text, with transcription, translation, and notes.

THEO. G. PINCHES.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE anniversary meeting of the Royal Society will this year be held on Monday, December 1, St. Andrew's Day falling on a Sunday. The medals are to be given as follows:—The Copley Medal to Prof. Simon Newcomb, for his contributions to gravitational astronomy; the Rumford Medal to Prof. Heinrich Hertz, for his work in electro-magnetic radiation; a Royal Medal to Prof. David Ferrier, for his researches on the localisation of cerebral functions; and a Royal Medal to Dr. John Hopkinson, for his researches in magnetism and electricity; the Davy Medal to Prof. Emil Fischer, for his discoveries in organic chemistry; and the first Darwin Medal to Mr. A. R. Wallace, for his independent origination of the theory of the origin of species by natural selection. The anniversary dinner will take place at the Hôtel Métropole.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have nearly ready for publication an important treatise on the Principles of Psychology by Prof. William James, of Harvard University, a brother of the novelist. The book occupies two large volumes, and is the result of long experience in teaching the subject. A few detached chapters have already been published in Mind.

IN an article on "The Aryan Question," in the last Nineteenth Century, Prof. Huxley urges, in support of Latham's Sarmatian hypothesis, the novel argument that when the Aryan race came into existence the Bosphorus had not been formed, Europe being sundered from Asia by what he calls the Pontic Mediterranean—a vast inland sea, including the Aral, the Caspian, the Euxine, together with the plains of the Danube and the Volga, and discharging itself into the Arctic Ocean by the valley of the Obi. Prof. Huxley considers that there are four European types, one of which must be that of the primitive Aryan, and the others Aryans only by speech. These, he thinks, are (1) the tall, blond, long-headed Scandinavian type; (2) The short, dark, broad-headed Auvergnat type; (3) the short, dark, broad-headed "Mongoloid" type; (4) the short, dark, long-headed Iberian or Silurian type. The objection to this classification is that his second and third types, both of them short, dark, and broad-headed, are not discriminated; while he takes no account of the tall, broad-headed type whose remains are found in the round barrows of Britain, and who, if we identify them, as is usually done, with the Britons of the Roman period, must have been blond or rufous. Nor is there any place in his scheme for the tall, fair, broadheads of Poland and Western Russia, who agree with the Kurds and the Galtchas in stature, complexion, and skull-shape. His scheme would be more consistent and complete if he had described his third class as the tall, rufous, broad-headed, Ugic type, the type to which Dr. Thurnam referred the round barrow Celts of Britain. The primitive Aryan race would, therefore, be either the Scandinavian or the Celto-Slavo-Lettic type; and it would be a question for philologists to determine whether both Celto-Latin and Celto-Slavic speech could more easily be derived from Teutonic, or, on the other hand, Teutonic from Celto-Latin or Slavo-Lettic.

WE have received from the Director of the United States Geological Survey four recent Bulletins (Nos. 54 to 57), representing work in the department of geological chemistry and physics rather than in that of pure geology. Dr. Barus deals in an exhaustive manner with the thermo-electric measurement of high temperatures—a subject which at first sight may seem to have but little connexion with geology. It should be remembered, however, that the accurate measurement of high temperatures is a matter of first importance in any experimental enquiry into the fusion of rocks, and it is probable that Dr. Barus's investigation of the subject will lead to the introduction of a new system of pyrometry. Prof. F. W. Clarke, the chemist to the Survey, publishes a record of chemical work in his laboratory, including a large number of mineral analyses by himself and his colleagues. Prof. Knowlton, of the department of palaeo-botany, contributes a valuable paper on the fossil wood and lignite of the Potomac formation—a group of rocks characteristically developed in Virginia, and regarded by some authors as Cretaceous and by others as Jurassic. The paper deals with the structural characters of the tissues, and is preceded by an historical review of the progress of this method of study. The last Bulletin gives the result of a geological reconnaissance in south-western Kansas, undertaken gratuitously by Mr. Robert Hay.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

(Monday, Nov. 10.)

PROF. DARWIN in the chair.—A paper was read by Dr. Arthur Gamgee on "The Principle upon which Fahrenheit constructed his Thermometrical Scale." The author commenced by drawing attention to the fact that, although the Fahrenheit thermometer has been so generally used in England, no accurate information was to be found in our text-books concerning the principles upon which its scale had originally been constructed. He referred, however, to a view advanced by Prof. P. G. Tait in his elementary treatise on Heat, according to which Fahrenheit divided his scale between 32° and 212° into 180 degrees, in imitation of the division of a semi-circle into 180 degrees of arc. This theory rested on the incorrect supposition that, before Fahrenheit's time, Newton had suggested, as a basis for a thermometric scale, the fixing of the freezing and boiling points of water, the space between these being divided into a number of equal degrees. The author pointed out that in his "Scale Graduum Caloris," Newton made no such suggestion as that attributed to him by Prof. Tait, and prior to him by Prof. Clerk Maxwell; and, indeed, that Fahrenheit had settled the basis of his scale, and had constructed a large number of thermometers which were used by scientific men throughout Europe, many years before the discovery by Amanton (which Fahrenheit confirmed and gave precision to) of the fact that under a constant pressure the boiling point of water is constant. The author stated that the thermometers which were first constructed by Fahrenheit were sealed alcoholic thermometers, provided with a scale in which two points had been fixed. The zero of the scale, representing the lowest attainable temperature, was found by plunging the bulb of the thermometer in a mixture of ice and salt, while the higher of the two points was fixed by placing the thermometers under the arm-pit or inside the mouth of a healthy man. The interval between these two points was, in the first instance, divided into 24 divisions, each of which corresponded to supposed well characterized differences in temperature, and each being subdivided into four. In his later alcoholic and mercurial thermometers, the 24 principal divisions were suppressed in favour of a scale in which 96 degrees intervened between zero and the temperature of man; in these later thermometers the 32nd degree was fixed by plunging the bulb of the thermometer in melting ice. The author then pointed out that Fahrenheit was led to construct mercurial thermometers in order to be able to ascertain the boiling point of water; with this object the scale constructed, as has been stated, was continued upwards, in some cases so as to include 600 degrees. It was as the result by experiment alone, that the number 212 was obtained as the temperature at which water boils, at the mean atmospheric pressure. The author, in conclusion, argued that Fahrenheit took as the basis of his thermometric scale the duodecimal scale which he was constantly in the habit of employing.

* Babylonische Busspsalmen (p. 103).

† Zimmern.

‡ Written with the characters id-dam.

NEW SHAKESPEARE.—(Friday, Nov. 14.)

DR. F. J. FURNIVALL in the chair.—Mr. P. Z. Round read a paper on "King John," in which he pointed out the difficulty which existed in reconciling the various parts of the play, owing to the uncertain manner in which incidents and characters are treated. Thus, Elinor's powerful influence over her son is barely hinted at; John's hatred of the clergy, like his doubts of the legality of his position, is brought before us only to be dropped again. Further, though John has disputed the French king's authority, yet he unaccountably gives up all the disputed territories in France; Hubert is told to kill Arthur, but presently has only to put out his eyes; while the purpose of the second coronation is unexplained. Salisbury's mission to fetch Constance is stultified by the arrival of the very persons who sent him. Much of the part of the Bastard Faulconbridge is useless to the plot; during half the play he is by turns jester, bombastic braggart, or bully, with a hatred for Lymoges which is hardly accounted for. His high-sounding language was perhaps meant as a burlesque of other writers; but until he rescues the queen, there is no indication of his actual bravery, though afterwards it is recognised by Salisbury and others. The cause of these discrepancies, Mr. Round thought, was to be found in the theory that Shakspeare had not fixed what the plot of his play was to be, but had worked up his scenes singly, in adapting the old plays. By their help many uncertainties were cleared up, and the by-play of the actors would make plain to the audience much which at first perplexes the reader.—The chairman, in the discussion which followed, pointed out that Shakspeare must have had here the double task of re-writing the old play and of writing his own part of it. It was natural that he should forget the old play at times, and in the process of re-writing he would have to harmonise. If the later scenes were better written than the earlier ones, they certainly did not act so well. As for the Bastard, with all his bombast exaggeration, he was undoubtedly the hero of the play, and was a type of the English character most likely to please an audience of the time. He defended the play as popular and patriotic.—Mr. W. Poel said that there was an undoubted difference between the last three acts of the play and the first two. The Bastard was essential to the comedy of the piece; but we found nothing in him to indicate that he was going to develop suddenly into a hero, as in the case of Henry V., where a similar development was always rendered probable from the first. Shakspeare was so evidently hampered in this play that it suggested the interesting point as to how much a dramatist was bound by his authorities.

RUSKIN SOCIETY.—(Friday, Nov. 14.)

J. ELLIOTT VINEY, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Sydney Robjohns read a paper on "Mr. Ruskin and the first two volumes of Modern Painters." He first defined Mr. Ruskin's place in the history of the century as a thinker, writer, and art critic; then sketched his early biography up to the issue of these two volumes, and indicated the influences which led to their being written; and finally outlined the contents of the two volumes, pointing to their teaching, and especially to their effect in raising the tone, not only of English art, but also of English thought and life generally. As a practical suggestion, Mr. Robjohns said that, rather than Buckingham Palace should stand almost useless, a wing of it might be appropriated for a Turner-Ruskin Gallery, in which the lovely water-colours by Turner, now hidden in the National Gallery basement, might be on show within convenient reach of all London.—The chairman having given a short address, a vote of thanks to the lecturer was proposed by Mr. Hewitt, and seconded by Mr. H. E. West.

EDINBURGH MATHEMATICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, Nov. 14.)

R. E. ALLARDICE, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Dr. J. S. Mackay communicated some new properties of the triangle, and Dr. William Peddie gave proofs of several optical theorems. The following were elected office-bearers for the session: President, Mr. R. E. Allardice; vice-president, Mr. T. B. Sprague; secretary, Mr. John Alison; treasurer, the Rev. John Wilson; committee, Prof. Steggall, Messrs. Butters, Clark, Morgan, Morrison, Wallace.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Nov. 17.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. R. B. Haldane read a paper on "The Categories of Scientific Method." The paper dealt with the necessity for a critical examination of the use of categories, or general conceptions, by men of science. It was pointed out that by many physiologists, for example, there was habitually made a metaphysical assumption that the ideas applicable in describing mechanical processes were properly applicable in observing and experimenting on organisms. The process of observation and experiment implied more than a merely receptive attitude. It consisted largely in the verifications of hypotheses, as Whewell and Jevons had pointed out; and it was consequently most important that a start should be made with the right and not the wrong kind of hypotheses. What was true of the physiologists was true in other departments. Much, for example, of the controversy about necessity and freewill was due to an uncritical assumption that the category of cause and effect was properly applicable in describing the relation of motive to volition. The reason of the general refusal to ascribe reality to such conceptions as that of a whole which determined its parts, an end which controlled the life of an organism, or that of beauty in a landscape, was partly the idea that to allow objective validity to such categories would be to question the universal truth of such laws as that of the conservation of energy, and partly the circumstance that Kant had ascribed to these categories only subjective validity. But Kant was better than the men of science in that he had accepted as a fact, subjective or objective, these phases of nature, and had not tried to explain them away. The time had come for a careful critical examination of the categories used in the various departments of knowledge.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, Nov. 20.)

PROF. RHYS DAVIDS in the chair.—Mr. J. S. Stuart Glennie read a paper on "Aryan Relations to Egyptians and Chaldeans," in which he pointed out, first, the various classes of evidence—ancient portraits and mummies, probably still more ancient traditions, and contemporary ethnographic observations—proving that the ruling classes of the Egyptians and Chaldeans were a white race belonging to the great stock of non-Semitic and non-Aryan white races now found distributed all over the world. From the recognition of this fact it would follow that the problem of the origin of the white species should be connected with Archaian rather than with either Semitic or Aryan origins, which should be treated simply as problems of the origin of Semitic and Aryan languages among certain white tribes. And it was then shown that the Egyptians and Chaldeans had each three traditions of racial origin, and that one of these, in each case, pointed to the north, and was, at the same time, perfectly in harmony with the two other traditions of later localities of origin. The question then arose whether there was any tradition through which we might make some approximation to the locality of the original centre of dispersion and to the date of the first emigration of white races from the north. And it was suggested that such an approximation might possibly be made through the Chaldean Deluge tradition, if compared with certain geological facts. These facts were, first, the former existence of a great Central Asian Mediterranean separating Asia from Europe; and, secondly, the geological facts rendering it probable that the Bosphorus and Dardanelles were primarily formed by volcanic convulsion, rather than by gradual erosion alone. If so, the sudden bursting through of the Central Asian Mediterranean would certainly have given rise to a deluge in the Aegean lands and adjacent countries. And if this was the deluge of which the Chaldeans had preserved a tradition, then they must have migrated from the north while the Central Asian Mediterranean still existed, and have come from Northern Asia, not from Northern Europe. Returning, then, to the problem of Aryan origins, and treating it as subsidiary to the problem of Archaian origins, and hence, as the problem of the origin of a language rather than of a race, it was pointed out that it was certainly a mere scientific procedure to start from where we have our first historical knowledge of Aryans, and trace them upward to their camp of origin, rather than, as is usually done, start from some purely hypothetical centre of origin, and trace them downward to where history first knows of them. Hence, as it is in Thrace about 1500 B.C. that we first certainly know of men with Aryan features and Aryan speech, it was shown that they would then have come in contact with a mainly Oriental or "Pelagic" civilisation; that, in the region northeastwards, between the Carpathians and the Dniester, conditions existed which would both have compelled and invited nomad shepherds to become partially agriculturists; and that, in the steppes beyond the Dniester eastwards, a favourable environment existed for the previous social condition indicated by comparative philology. And it was further pointed out that, in the region between the Carpathians and the Ural, such conditions probably existed, in the way of tribal intercourse and otherwise, as would naturally have given rise to a new linguistic development.—A discussion followed, in which J. Coate, S. H. Hodgson, G. Hurst, the Rev. G. W. Keesey, R. Lloyd, T. Pagliardini, and J. Forbes Robertson took part.

FINE ART.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES OF ANCIENT EGYPT AND ASSYRIA.

Lectures Historiques: Egypte, Assyrie. Par G. Maspero. (Paris: Hachette.)

It now and then happens that a book is written which not only fills a real gap in the edifice of popular literature, but which, by so filling it, makes us for the first time aware that such a gap had long existed. Now that M. Maspero has given us the picturesque series of historic sketches of ancient Egyptian and Assyrian life contained in the charming little volume just issued by Hachette, we suddenly recognise how much it was needed. One only marvels that it was not written long ago. Yet it is fortunate that this new way of treating the materials supplied by the papyri, the cuneiform tablets, and the monumental remains of Egypt and Assyria, was not earlier attempted by another hand; for who could have treated that material with the ease, the mastery, and the vivacity of M. Maspero? Only the magician himself can wield the magician's wand; and there is probably no other living writer who would have been so thoroughly at home in both these subjects, or have succeeded in casting them into a form so animated and so entertaining.

While disclaiming any attempt at consecutive history, M. Maspero says in his preface that he merely seeks to depict the daily life of the two most highly civilised nations of the ancient East. To this end he has strung his facts upon a thread of narrative, which adds the necessary elements of coherence and human interest without in any sense trespassing upon the domain of fiction. His scheme thus compels him to deal in each instance with but a single period; so he takes us to Egypt in the magnificent time of Rameses II., and to Assyria during the reign of the haughty and luxurious Assurbanipal. With him, we assist at the council of war held the night before the battle of Kadesh, and are present on the field when Pharaoh, with only his body-guard at his back, charges six times in succession through the serried ranks of the enemy's chariots. With him, also, we are shut up within the battlemented walls of Shapibel, and share the horrors of a siege conducted by the Assyrian general with the aid of battering rams, towers upon wheels, movable ramparts, and all such military devices as were then known to the fierce and cruel armies of Mesopotamia. We surprise Assurbanipal at his devotions in the temple of Ishtar, and witness the secret ceremonies performed by Rameses in the sanctuary of Amen at Karnak. The lives of kings, however, are recorded in documents of state, and chronicled on gypsum slabs and pylon walls, which all who run may read; but M. Maspero is no less familiar with the market-place and the home of the private citizen than he is with the camp and court of the monarch. He is as friendly with the officials, merchants, and country gentlemen of two or three thousand years ago as he was with the native Egyptians during the first half of the present decade.

"I have walked to and fro," he says, "in the streets of their cities. I have peeped through their half-opened doors; I have lingered idly about their shops; I have overheard the gossip of the people. If a body of half-starved masons went on strike, it was I who followed them to the palace of the Governor of Thebes, that I might know how the affair was settled. If a funeral went by to the sound of clamorous wailings, I accompanied the dead man to the door of his tomb, and learned what I could of the life which it was hoped he might lead in the world to come. A wedding takes place, and, thanks to that Eastern hospitality which opens all doors at any season for rejoicing, I assist in the background at the reading of the contract. When Pharaoh, or the King of Nineveh, goes by in state, I run with the crowd, following him to the temple, the palace, or the hunting field. Where custom or etiquette forbids my entrance, I find my way in imagination, through details gathered in conversation, or by means of written documents. A clay cylinder gives me the prayer offered up to Ishtar by Assurbanipal in time of peril; a talkative scribe has told me of the dangers and hardships encountered by an Egyptian officer in his journey through Syria; and in a score of bas-relief sculptures I have taken part, unscathed, in the wars of the ancient world; witnessed the conscription and levying of its armies, assisted at their drill, and shared the fatigues of their marches."

Only one who is perfectly familiar with the incidents of daily life as depicted in the painted tombs of ancient Egypt, and with what has come down to us of the literature of the Egyptians, can possibly appreciate the ingenuity with which M. Maspero has made use of the materials which his life and studies have placed at his command. Not only the leading incidents of his two narratives, but even the links by which he connects these incidents, the conversations which he puts in the mouths of his personages, and all the petty details of their dress, their manners, their amusements, and their customs, are derived from original sources. Psarou, Nomarch of Thebes, and Nakhtminou, hereditary Prince of the Panopolite Nome, may be imaginary personages; but the description of the palace of Nakhtminou is the description of the palace of Aï, as depicted on the walls of his tomb at Tell-el-Amarna. Psarou visits Nakhtminou on the military business of the State, war being imminent, and recruits being needed for the army. Nakhtminou raises the ban and the arrière-ban, and levies a conscription upon all the villages in his province. His young son, witnessing the distribution of arms, and seeing the new recruits marched off to the sound of drums and trumpets, neglects his studies, and dreams of nothing but fighting and adventure. Psarou, amused at the boy's enthusiasm, calls for his private secretary, and bids him tell the lad something of the disadvantages and privations of a soldier's life. The name of the private secretary is Ennana.

"He is a scribe of the Double White House, and he accompanies Psarou in all his journeys. He has not his equal as an accountant, and no one is so quick to discover an error of one sack of corn in twenty columns of figures. He is also a poet in his hours of ease, and he amuses his leisure moments by writing in verse or in prose on all kinds of subjects, sacred or profane" (p. 94).

When, therefore, he is called upon to dissuade the son of Nakhtminou from his warlike fancies, he replies in rhythmic and high-sounding phrases, borrowed evidently from some literary composition.

"What would you have? Do you suppose that the officer of infantry has a better chance in life than the scribe? Come, I will tell you what manner of life he leads, and the height and depth of his sufferings. He is dragged away while yet a child, wearing the side-lock—he is imprisoned in the barracks—he is beaten, and his back is scored with wounds—he is beaten, and his brow is cut open—he is beaten, and his head is broken—he is thrown flat on the ground, and battered like a sheet of papyrus" (p. 95).

Ennana then goes on to describe the hardships of the march, and all the privations which befall, not only the foot-soldier under arms, but the chariot-fighter, whose position in the Egyptian army ranked above that of the infantry.

Now, in this little incident, which reads so easily and so much like fiction, the general reader will never suspect that every detail is based upon the tableaux found in Theban tombs, and in the texts of ancient papyri. Ennana is an historical personage, and was a royal librarian under Rameses II., and author of the fourth Anastasi Papyrus. He reasons with the son of Nakhtminou in the language of a famous XIIth Dynasty Papyrus ("The Story of Saneha"); and even the description of his declamatory style tallies with that of Amenemap, a contemporary scribe of the Treasury, who begins a letter contained in one of the Anastasi Papyri by saying: "Behold, I bring thee this writing of cadenced words."

There is not a page in M. Maspero's

Egyptian narrative which will not bear this kind of sifting. If he describes a hunting-party, he takes us through valleys and ravines which he has himself explored, and which are unknown to the ordinary traveller; and, when he depicts Thebes as it was in the days of its splendour, he does so, not only from a patient study of all that is yet traceable of the ancient quarters of the town on both sides of the river, but from his accurate knowledge of that immense mass of legal papyri scattered through the museums of Europe, in which the streets, the blocks of houses, the roads and boundaries of the hundred-gated city are minutely laid down.

The Assyrian narrative is no less accurate and no less interesting; and, although the book professes to be written for sixth form scholars, it is undoubtedly destined to give pleasure and instruction to readers of all ages. Those who are familiar with the original texts will here meet with them in a new and picturesque light; while to those who know little, and care less, about Egyptology, the subject will be presented so attractively that, like the sick child in Tasso, they will taste only the honey while swallowing the medicine.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

COLONEL JACOB'S PORTFOLIOS OF INDIAN ARCHITECTURE.

We have already noticed two of the Sejppore Portfolios of Architectural Details prepared by Colonel S. S. Jacob. The work is now completed and issued in six divisions by W. Griggs and Sons, the well-known photo and chromolithographers.

As previously stated, each of the six parts or portfolios is devoted to one class of architectural details, collected from native buildings in Rajputana and about Delhi and Agra, and carefully drawn to scale for practical use, on plates measuring 22 inches by 15, arranged in strong serviceable cases. Part I. contains 52 plates, comprising 112 examples of Copings and 20 Plinths; Part II. has 79 plates, containing 117 drawings of Pillars and 31 of Bases; Part III. consists of 66 plates of Carved and Inlaid Doors, chiefly from Amber Palace, 11 of them, representing inlaid ivory work, being printed in colours—these latter two parts were previously noticed in the ACADEMY in some detail; Part IV. contains 69 plates comprising 76 examples of Brackets; Part V. is devoted to Arches, illustrating on 58 plates (of which ten are coloured) the rich patterns introduced into the spandrels; and Part VI. contains 50 plates of Balustrades, many of the panels in which are filled with tracery. Each part is accompanied by explanatory remarks, indicating the monuments from which the various details are taken, their age and character, &c.

In No. 32 of the Journal of Indian Art, just issued, a detailed account is given of the whole of this fine collection of drawings, illustrated by fourteen of the plates from the work itself, with suggestions as to the usefulness of these drawings in various technical arts, as well as in architecture, carpentry, metal-work, and the like. The work is, indeed, well deserving of attention on the part of all interested in decorative art and schools of technical design, as containing a rich store of the most varied, elaborate, and suggestive patterns.

The publication is, in a way, almost unique. It has not cost the British Government a farthing, but is produced under the patronage and almost entirely at the expense of a public-spirited Hindu prince—the present Maharaja Madhu Singh of Jaypur—and is probably the first instance of an oriental prince offering a work on architectural and artistic details to Europe. It has been carried out, too, with such laudable economy by Messrs. Griggs & Sons, under Colonel Jacob's direction, that the whole six parts, containing 374 large plates, is offered to subscribers for a sum which, allowing a trifle for the portfolios themselves, amounts only to fourpence per plate. It is not issued with a view to pecuniary profit, but with the aim of preserving many of the beautiful designs from being totally lost, and to encourage an interest in the details of Eastern architecture by placing them within reach of those who otherwise might be unable to see them. They have been collected by an engineer officer in addition to his ordinary duties, and doubtless under many interruptions and disadvantages, but who has manifestly been animated by a love for the work and an enthusiasm in its pursuit.

The complaint is often brought against Europeans of spoiling native Indian art. Here we have a good example, on the other side, of a European officer appreciating and carefully collecting, and that by means of native art-students, what is good in Indian architecture, that he may place it on record for the use of others. The excellence of the drawings themselves, too, is worthy of attention. They have all been done by young men, natives of the Jaypur state, who had received their first lessons in drawing in the Jaypur School of Art founded by the late Maharaja Sawai Ram Singh. Their work, reproduced by photography in the plates of this publication, is excellent; and the collection of these details, together with the preparation of the finished drawings of them is, in itself, an art training of a valuable kind.

One cannot but entertain the hope that the munificence of the Jaypur Maharaja in this case will not be overlooked, but may receive such hearty appreciation as to encourage both him and others in further attempts to utilise some portion of their wealth in works of a similar character.

J. B.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE twenty-sixth winter exhibition of sketches and studies by members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours will open on Monday in Pall Mall East. The private view is fixed for to-day.

THE other exhibitions to open next week are—a series of water-colour drawings, by Mr. W. W. May, entitled "Summer Scenes on the Coast of Norway," at Messrs. Buck and Reid's gallery in New Bond-street; and a collection of thirty-five paintings in oil of "Constable's Country," by Mr. Alfred Hartley, at Mr. Dunthorne's, in Vigo-street.

MR. FRANCIS E. JAMES will hold an exhibition of his water-colour drawings at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly—the exhibition being open to the public from Saturday, December 6.

MR. WALTER OSBORN, Mr. James Clark, and Mr. W. F. Calderon have been elected members of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours.

MESSRS. GILBERT & RIVINGTON are preparing for immediate publication an English translation of Mariette's Outlines of Ancient Egyptian History, edited by M. Brodrick.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS, in his lecture at the Arts and Crafts Exhibition on Monday next, will exhibit thirty-eight books printed in type before 1500. The series will be introduced by two subjects taken from block-books circa 1430. The great schools of Germany, Flanders, France, and Italy will be fully illustrated—the first with special reference to the towns of Ulm and Augsburg.

A CATALOGUE of the magnificent collection of old crown Derby china, numbering more than 350 pieces, which was recently presented by Mr. Felix Joseph to the Art Gallery at Derby, is being prepared by Mr. William Beumrose.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

HENRIK IBSEN's prose-drama "Rosmersholm" is shortly to be produced for the first time in England at a West-end theatre. The cast, which will include several well-known names, is now being arranged; and a young actress, whose performance in a poetic play last spring attracted much attention, will appear as the heroine.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE fifth season of the London Symphony Concerts commenced at St. James's Hall last Thursday week. A Symphony, or Overture in F, by C. Ph. E. Bach, proved of historic interest, inasmuch as a harpsichord part worked out from the composer's figured bass was played on an old instrument (made in 1771 by Burkat Shudi, Mr. Broadwood's partner) by Dr. C. H. H. Parry. Harpsichords, like pianos, do not improve with age, and the tone of this one was well-worn. Moreover, Mr. Henschel did not in any way reduce the strength of his orchestra, which, apart from the fact that it overpowered the keyed instrument, was far too large to represent the eighteenth-century orchestra to which Bach was accustomed. With revivals of this sort one should try to get as near to the original effect as possible. The programme included Mozart's "Prague" and Brahms's second Symphony, both of which were well given under Mr. Henschel's direction; also two movements from Beethoven's "Egmont" music, and the "Flying Dutchman" Overture. The hall was fairly filled, but Mr. Henschel's scheme deserves still better support.

Señor Albeniz gave his second orchestral concert at St. James's Hall on the following evening. The programme opened with a Dramatic Overture by Mr. Arthur Herve, given under the composer's direction. The work is intended to depict the struggle between love and adverse fate. There are some good thoughts in the music, and some of the writing is effective; but the general effect is patchy, and the influence of Wagner is far too strong. Señor Albeniz played the pianoforte part in a Concerto Fantastique of his own composition. The music is light and, at times, graceful, while the solo part is extremely showy. The pianist was also heard in some solos, which showed off to advantage his delicate touch and finished technique. The Weber-Tausig "Invitation" was another brilliant performance, but this desecration of Weber ought to be banished from the concert platform. If Weber's music by itself be considered too tame for the present day, then let it be left alone. The programme included a clever Prelude from the opera "Gli Amanti" by Breton, and also a spirited Scherzo of his for orchestra; they were exceedingly well performed under the composer's direction.

Miss Fanny Davies appeared at the Saturday Popular Concert, and played Schumann's Fantasia in C (Op. 17). We do not remember to have heard her before in this difficult work. There was scarcely enough power in her reading of the opening movement, and candour compels us to say that there were some slips in the March movement. But Miss Davies can easily console herself if she remembers that even the greatest players have not always conquered its difficulties. With the two exceptions named, Miss Davies's rendering of the work was admirable, and she thoroughly deserved the reception given to her. The programme included Mozart's Quartet in D for strings, and Brahms's pianoforte Quartet in G minor.

Last Monday evening M. Paderewski performed Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), the last, and in some respects the greatest, of the thirty-two. Having recently noticed a performance of this work by the same pianist, it will suffice to say that the first movement was given with more dignity, but he still failed to take the repeat. There was unusual applause; and the encore was Liszt's "Campanella" Etude—a painful contrast to the Sonata. It was, however, finely executed. Mr. Normau Salmond sang in place of Miss Liza Lehmann; his reading of Schubert's "Wanderer" was not altogether satisfactory.

Mr. and Mrs. Henschel gave the first of two vocal recitals at Prince's Hall on Monday afternoon. They were both in excellent voice, and were received with great cordiality. Mr. Henschel gave a dramatic rendering of the Aria "Tu di pietà" from Handel's "Siroe," and also sang successfully some Lieder by Brahms. Mrs. Henschel sang some delightful Irish and Scotch songs, with Beethoven's accompaniments for piano, violin (Miss E. Shinner), and cello (Miss F. Hemmings). She was also heard to great advantage in three of Schubert's finest Lieder. Mr. Henschel's delicate and expressive pianoforte accompaniments, of course, added greatly to the effect. His finest playing was, however, in Schumann's "Die Löwenbraut," which he sang with great feeling. The programme included two of his own pleasing duets and some excellent new songs.

Mr. Barnby gave Berlioz's "Faust" at the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening. The choruses were indeed admirably sung. A special feature of the choir is that they succeed equally well in passages which require strength as in those which call for delicacy. Mme. Albani sang the Margaret music with much charm and feeling, and Mr. Henschel gave an excellent, if not an ideal, rendering of the part of Mephistopheles. Mr. Ben Davies was a fair Faust, except that his voice is not sufficiently powerful for the Albert Hall. Mr. Ben Grove's rendering of Brander's song was tame. The orchestra played well, though the March was given in a somewhat perfunctory manner. There was a large attendance.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

HIS GRACE the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY'S
JUDGMENT IN THE CASE OF READ AND OTHERS v. THE LORD BISHOP OF LINCOLN. Delivered
November 21st, 1890.

LONDON LETTERS and SOME OTHERS. By George
W. SMALLEY. 2 vols. 8vo, 32s.

VOL. I.—PERSONALITIES—TWO MIDLOTHIAN CAMPAIGNS.
VOL. II.—NOTES ON SOCIAL LIFE—NOTES ON PARLIAMENT—PAGEANTS—MISCELLANIES.

The Times says: "For the most part he tells of English life and English public men; and what he has to tell is told in the best manner of what Matthew Arnold used to call the 'New Journalism.' . . . He has a keen eye for the salient points of character and individuality, a vivid way of presenting great scenes and memorable occasions, and a wide acquaintance with English social life, its ways and its personalities."

The Guardian says: "We can not only see the impression made by English life on the mind of a keenly observant foreigner dwelling among us, but we may read of many noteworthy facts that escape the notice of most of us."

The Glasgow Herald says: "The exigencies of space oblige us to take our leave of Mr. Smalley's letters. They require no recommendation. They will, so to speak, take care of themselves. Anyone into whose hands they may fall, if he but open them, is sure to become a reader. He will alight on some passage which compels the perusal of at least two or three pages. After that he is no longer a free agent."

NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

RELICS of the ROYAL HOUSE of STUART. Illustrated by a Series of Forty Plates in Colours drawn from Relics of the Stuarts by WILLIAM GIBB. With an Introduction by JOHN SKELTON, C.B., LL.D., and Descriptive Notes by W. ST. JOHN HOPE, Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries. Folio, half-pressed Levant morocco binding, gilt edges, £7 7s. net.

The idea of this volume originated at the time of the Stuart Exhibition in London. The book, a sumptuous folio, consists of forty beautiful drawings by Mr. WILLIAM GIBB, of Edinburgh, reproduced in colour in the finest style of lithographic art by Messrs. MACLAGAN & CUMMING, who reproduced Mr. Gibb's drawings of musical instruments in the handsome volume published some years ago by Messrs. A. H. Black. Mr. Gibb has made his drawings entirely from the objects themselves.

ROYAL EDINBURGH: her Saints, Kings, and Scholars. By MRS. OLIPHANT, Author of "The Makers of Florence," "The Makers of Venice," &c. With Illustrations by GEORGE REID, R.S.A. Medium 8vo, 21s.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, 50s. net. Ready December 2nd.

Contents:—PART I.—Margaret of Scotland—Queen and Saint. PART II. The Stewards of Scotland: James I., Poet and Legislator—James II.: With the Fiery Face—James III.: The Man of Peace—James IV.: The Knight-Errent—James V.:
The Last of the Heroic Age. PART III. The Time of the Prophets: Under the Queen Regent—Under Queen Mary—The Triumph and the End—The Scholars of the Reformation. PART IV. The Modern City: A Burgher Poet—The Guest of Edinburgh—The Shakespeare of Scotland.

WITH 182 ILLUSTRATIONS BY HUGH THOMSON.

THE VICAR of WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith.
A New Edition, with 182 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, and a Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON. Uniform with the Randolph Caldecott Edition of "Bracebridge Hall" and "Old Christmas." Crown 8vo, 6s.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, 80s. net. Ready December 2nd.

WITH FIFTY-ONE ILLUSTRATIONS.

GLIMPSES of OLD ENGLISH HOMES. By Elizabeth
BALCH. With 51 Illustrations. Globe 4to, 14s.

The Old English Homes described in this volume are: Penshurst—Arundel Castle—Hinchinbrooke—Eridge Castle—Chiswick House—Berkeley Castle—Highclere Castle—Osterley Park.

The St. James's Gazette says: "Miss Balch's volume is charming alike for presentation, for the drawing-room table, or for the library."

A NEW BOOK BY SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, BART.

OXFORD LECTURES and OTHER DISCOURSES. By SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law, M.A., LL.D. Edin., Corpus Christi Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford, hon. member of the Juridical Society of Berlin; Author of "Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics," "The Land Laws," "An Introduction to the History of the Science of Politics," &c. 8vo, 18s.

BY THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF LLANDAFF, D.D.

THE CHURCH of the FIRST DAYS. Comprising the Church of Jerusalem, the Church of the Gentiles, the Church of the World, being lectures on the Acts of the Apostles.
By C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D., Dean of Llandaff, Master of the Temple. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NOW PUBLISHING IN MONTHLY VOLUMES, 6s. each. Vol. I. Just Ready.

THE POETICAL WORKS of ALFRED AUSTIN. A
New Collected Edition in 5 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. each.

Vol. I.—THE TOWER OF BABEL.

POEMS, BALLADS, and BUCOLICS. By H. D.
RAUNSELEY, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

LECTURES on the GROWTH of CRIMINAL LAW in ANCIENT COMMUNITIES. By RICHARD R. CHERRY, Barrister-at-Law, Reid Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law in the University of Dublin. 8vo, 6s. net.

NEW EDITION, WITH APPENDIX.

THE POOR LAW. By T. W. FOWLE, M.A., Rector of Islip. New Edition, with an Appendix on "The Poor Law in 1890." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. (English Citizen Series.)

WORKS BY THE LATE C. B. RADCLIFFE, M.D.

BEHIND the TIDES. 8vo. 6s.

VITAL MOTION as a MODE of PHYSICAL MOTION.
Second Edition. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

PROTEUS or UNITY in NATURE. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

PRICE 1s. No. 374, FOR DECEMBER, contains:—

- 1.—HE FELL AMONG THIEVES. By D. CHRISTY MURRAY and HENRY HURMAN. Chapters VIII.—X.
- 2.—THE UNIVERSITIES and the COUNTER-REFORMATION. By DR. WARD.
- 3.—PURE WATER and PLENTY of IT. By W. M. TORRENS.
- 4.—CHAPTERS FROM SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS. III.—MY PROFESSOR OF HISTORY.
- 5.—HENRY VAUGHAN.
- 6.—ON THE FELS.
- 7.—LE COUP DE JARNAC. By H. C. MACDONALL.
- 8.—AT THE SIGN OF THE GOLDEN BIRD. By GRAHAM R. TOLSON.
- 9.—MR. LECKY'S LAST VOLUMES. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS.
- 10.—LEAVES FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier's LIST.

ANNIE S. SWAN'S NEW STORY.

Now ready, handsomely bound, 6s.

MAITLAND of LAURIESTON:
A FAMILY HISTORY.

By ANNIE S. SWAN, Author of "Sheila," "Carlowrie," "Aldersyde," &c.

"She has written with evident delight of scenes and people that she knows and loves. The country round Musselburgh and Leith, the ways of village people living just beyond the shadow of a capital, the life of students and professors in the "grey metropolis of the North," are painted for us in fresh and brilliant colours. . . . Her present story is certainly the best she has written."—British Weekly.

THE BOY'S BOOK of the SEASON.
THE STORY of STANLEY, the HERO of AFRICA. From his Boyhood to his Marriage in Westminster Abbey. By E. A. MACDONALD. With Portrait and Map. Cloth extra, 1s.

Uniform with "The Story of Stanley."

THE RED THREAD of HONOUR;
or, The Minister Schoolboys. By MARIANNE KIRLEW.

Nine Full-Page Illustrations. Cloth extra, 1s.
"Written in splendid style. Well illustrated."—Scotsman.

LIFE'S PHASES: An Attempt to Pre- sent and Deal with some of the Salient Experiences and Needs of a Human Being, from the Cradle to the Grave.
By Rev. JAMES STARK. Author of "Life's Stages,"
&c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

AN OLD CHRONICLE of LEIGHTON.

By SARAH SELINA HAMER, Author of "Barbara Leighbourne." In cloth extra, with Frontispiece, 3s. 6d.

"Fascinating as was her 'Barbara Leighbourne,' it is now surpassed by 'An Old Chronicle.'"—Methodist Recorder.

NORMAN REID, M.A. A Story. By JESSIE PATRICK FINDLAY, Author of "The Lost
Tide." Illustrated and handsomely bound. 3s. 6d.

"A most romantic tale of middle-class life in Scotland."—
Record.

THE STRONGER WILL By Evelyn
EVERETT GREEN, Author of "Dorothy's Vocation," &c. Cloth extra, with 7 Full-Page Illustrations, 2s. 6d.

"A charming story of English domestic life in the higher ranks of society."—Record.

WON BY LOVE. The Story of Irene
Kendal. In elegant cloth binding, illustrated, 2s.
"The story is cleverly written."—Aberdeen Free Press.

GERALDINE. A Tale of Real Life.
By NOBA BUTLER. With frontispiece, and handsomely bound, 2s.

OLIPHANT'S POPULAR 1s. SERIES.

Over 100,000 sold.

NEW VOLUMES.

BETWEEN the FERRIES. A Story of Highland Life. By MARGARET MOYES BLACK.
Paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

A VEXED INHERITANCE. By Annie
S. SWAN. Paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS.

Sheila. By ANNIE S. SWAN. 6s.

Marriage and Home Life. By Dr. TAL-MAGE. 2s. 6d.

By Still Waters. By EDWARD GARRETT.
1s. and 1s. 6d.

St. Veda's; or, the Pearl of Orr's Haven.
By ANNIE S. SWAN. 6s.

RECENT BOOKS.

Manliness. By HUGH STOWELL BROWN.
6s.

The Story of Daniel. By P. HAY
HUNTER. 5s.

The Gospel and Modern Substitutes.
By Rev. A. SCOTT MATHESON. 5s.

Calabar and its Mission. By HUGH GOLDIE. 3s.

Simon Peter: his Early Life and Times.
By CHARLES S. ROBINSON, D.D. 3s. 6d.

After the Exile. By P. HAY HUNTER.
Two vols. 5s. each.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 902.—DECEMBER, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—ABOUT THE LEPERS—ONCE MORE, by Lieut.-Colonel H. Knollys, R.A.—A RECENT CHAPTER IN TONGAN HISTORY, by Coutts Trotter.—THE DRUSES OF THE HOLY LAND, by Haskett Smith.—A SECRET MISSION, chaps. xxx.-xxxiii.—HINDU INFANT MARRIAGE, by H. H. Risley, B.C.S.—BORN ON HALLOW E'EN, by Moira O'Neill.—THE WÜRSHOFEN WATER-CURE AND PFARRER KNEIPP, by Madame A. de Ferro.—SOME RECENT AFRICAN BOOKS.—FRAUDS OF SPORT, by "Dooker."—GENERAL SIR EDWARD HAMLEY ON THE WAR IN THE CRIMEA.—AUTUMN POLITICS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S NEW SERIAL.

This Day.—Part XI.—Price One Shilling.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT.
From "BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE."

No. XI. CONTAINS:—SHIRAZ TO BUSHIRE, by Captain Claude Clerk, C.I.E.—LIFE IN AN ISLAND, by Mrs. Oliphant.—A RECENT RIDE TO HERAT.—IN SEARCH OF THE EIRA, by H. Swire, R.N.—ADVENTURES IN LOUISIANA.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

DECEMBER.

SHALL we AMERICANISE our INSTITUTIONS. By the Right Hon. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, M.P.
IRRESPONSIBLE WEALTH—

1. By His Eminence CARDINAL MANNING.
2. By the Rev. Dr. HERMANN ADLER (Chief Rabbi).
3. By the Rev. HUGH PRICH HUGHES.

THE TRADE LEAGUE against ENGLAND. By LOUIS J. JENNINGS, M.P.

BIRDS. By SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

CONSTANTINOPLE REVISITED. By the Right Hon. G. SHAW LEFEBRE, M.P.

IDEALISM and the MASSES. By R. B. CUNNINGHAM GRAHAM, M.P.

WOMEN as PUBLIC SERVANTS. By LOUISA TWINING.

LIFE in the HAREM. By ADALET.

THE KEEPERS of the HERD of SWINE. By PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

GIVE BACK the ELGIN MARBLES. By FREDERICK HARRISON.

NOTICEABLE BOOKS—

1. MR. FROUDE'S LORD BEACONSFIELD. By T. E. KEBBEL.
2. THE LIFE OF LORD HOUGHTON. By LORD ACTON.
3. MR. HARE'S FRANCE. By R. E. PROTHERO.
4. "ON RIGHT and WRONG." By R. H. HUTTON.
5. THE DICTIONARY of NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. By the Rev. Dr. JESSOFF.

IN PERIL from PARLIAMENT. By the Right Hon. EARL GREY.
London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUNNER, & Co., Limited.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER.

MR. STANLEY and the REAR COLUMN. WHAT SHOULD the VERDICT BE?

"IN DARKEST ENGLAND, and the WAY OUT." By FRANCIS PECK.

ALEXANDER VINET. By GABRIEL MONOD.

ON SOME ECONOMIC ASPECTS of WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE. By R. B. HALDANE, Q.C., M.P.

THE TWO RELIGIONS. By FRANCIS POWER COBBE.

THE ORIGINS of the COMMON LAW. By SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK.

A RUSSIAN SECRET STATE TRIAL. By ADOLPHE SMITH.

STATE SOCIALISM and POPULAR RIGHT. By JOHN RAE.

LAVOISIER. By PROFESSOR T. E. THORPE, F.R.S.

THE LATEST RESULTS of ORIENTAL ARCHAEOLOGY. By PROFESSOR SAYCE.

IMPERIAL and LOCAL TAXATION. By SIR THOMAS H. FARRER, Bart.

London: J. B. LISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

DECEMBER.—2s. 6d.

MR. GLADSTONE and the CHURCH of SCOTLAND.

THE TALENT of MOTHERHOOD. By ARABELLA KENEALY.

THE HISTORY of SOCIALISM.—II. By ALICE OLDHAM.

GAMBLING at MONTE CARLO. By NORWOOD YOUNG.

THE EIGHT-HOURS MOVEMENT. By FREDERICK PINCOFF.

"UMAR of NISHLAPUR." By C. J. PICKERING.

CHRISTIAN COLONIES and BROTHERHOODS. By Rev. HARRY JONES.

CHATEAU MALBROUK. By H. W. WOLFE.

TECHNICAL AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION. By P. HENRY BLW.

WHO SHALL INHERIT CONSTANTINOPLE? By QUIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., Limited, 13, Waterloo Place.

NOW READY.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED.

Price 1s.

SPECIALLY ENLARGED CHRISTMAS NUMBER,

160 PAGES,

WITH COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, LONDON.
And of all Booksellers.

A GUIDE TO SCHOOL PRIZES

(With over 30 Illustrations)

Is published in

EDUCATION,

For DECEMBER, together with
AN INTERVIEW with PROFESSOR MEIKLEJOHN (Full-page Portrait).

ARNOLD, and ARNOLDISM. By OSCAR BROWNING, M.A.
SCHOLARSHIP WORK: Girtton. By SARA BURSTALL, B.A., late Scholar of Girtton.

OUR FIELD CLASSES (with Maps, &c.) By W. TOPLEY, F.R.S., F.G.S.

&amp;c. &amp;c.

Price SIXPENCE.

London: SUTTON, DROWLEY, &amp; Co., 11, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER.

THE TRUTH ABOUT GREECE. By Prof. A. N. JANNARIS.

MARCIA. Chaps. 45-48. By W. E. NORRIS. (Concluded.)

THE STREETS of LONDON. By MORLEY ROBERTS.

THE CALPE HUNT.

A POLITICAL APOSTATE. By JAMES SULLY.

WHAT DO the COLONIES WANT?

A CURIOUS POISONING CASE. (Part II.) By FLEUR DE LIS.

(Concluded.)

THE FRENCH SCHOOLBOY. By Madame de BURY.

NOTES of the MONTH. OUR LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE THEOLOGICAL MONTHLY.

An Exponent of Current Christian Thought at Home and Abroad.

For DECEMBER. Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

I. THE RENDING OF THE VEIL. By PREBENDARY LEATHES, D.D.

II. JAMES CLERK MAXWELL. By T. T. WATERMAN

III. THE INFLUENCE of CALVIN ON the MUSIC of the REFORMED CHURCH. By J. C. HADDES.

IV. THE ETHICS of GAMBLING. By J. SHARPE.

V. THE DAYS of UNLEAVENED BREAD. By T. WHITELAW, D.D.

VI. THE BIBLE and SCIENCE. By J. McCANN, D.D.

VII. CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE HOMILETIC MAGAZINE.

For DECEMBER. Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

SERMONS—

The Halleluia of God. { By Rev. AUBREY L. MOORE,

God Manifested as Goodness. { M.A.

EXPOSITORY PAPERS—

The Miracles of our Lord. By Rev. W. J. DEANE, M.A.

Outlines on the First Eight Chapters of the Epistle to the Romans. By Rev. C. CLEMANCE, B.A., D.D.

THE CHURCH YEAR. By Rev. EDWIN DAVIES, D.D.—

The Second Sunday in Advent.

The Third Sunday in Advent.

The Fourth Sunday in Advent.

Christmas Day.

The Sunday after Christmas.

SERMONIC OUTLINES on SCRIPTURE CHARACTERS—

Joseph. By Rev. J. DICKERSON DAVIES.

Abraham. By Rev. CHARLES JERDAN, M.A.

PRACTICAL HOMILETICS—

Stephen's Death.

The Immensity of Mercy.

The Secret Side of Religion.

The True Confession.

Olive-Tree—Cultivation.

JAMES NISBET & Co., 21, Berners Street, W.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

DECEMBER.

MR. STANLEY'S REAR-GUARD. By J. ROSE TROUP.
CHILD-LIFE INSURANCE. By Captain PEMBROKE MARSHALL.
PROSPER MERIMEE. By WALTER PATER.
RURAL LIFE in the FOURTEENTH CENTURY. By Madame DANNESTETER.
BURTON as I KNEW HIM. By Commander LOVETT CAMERON, R.N.
THE OUTLOOK in FRANCE. By WILLIAM HENRY HURLBERT.
THE MASK of DESCARTES. By W. L. COURTNEY.
DR. KOCH'S CONSUMPTION-CURE. By EDWARD BERDOX, M.D.
MR. TREE'S MONDAY NIGHTS. By X.
AN AVERTED CRASH in the CITY. By W. R. LAWSON.
ENGLISH BANKERS and the BANK of ENGLAND RESERVE. By A. J. WILSON.
ONE of OUR CONQUERORS. Chaps. XI.—XIV. By GEORGE MEREDITH.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, Limited.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF
THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by R. C. Carton, entitled
SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.
Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9. A farcical comedy in three acts, by Sydney Grundy, entitled
MAY AND DECEMBER.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDEIGH.
Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, F. Farren, Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Elissen, Harrington, Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 8.30, LONDON ASSURANCE.
Messrs. Chas. Wyndham, W. Farren, Geo. Giddens, A. Bouchier, W. Blakeley, Cyril Maude, H. H. Vincent, F. Atherley, S. Hewson, F. Emery; Mesdames Mary Moore, E. Vining, and Mrs. Bernard-Beere.
Preceded, at 7.45, by W. Gordon's Comedietta, entitled
DEAREST MAMMA.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEEBROOK-TREE.
Every Evening, at 8.15 (Mondays excepted), Messrs. Hugh Conway and Comyns Carr's successful drama,
CALLED BACK.

Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Fred Terry, F. Kerr, Allan, C. Hudson, Webster Lawson, Robb Harwood, Tapping, &c.; Mesdames Blanche Horlock, E. H. Brooke, Aylward, and Julia Neilson.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act farce, entitled
THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H. Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E. Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.
Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 7.45,
ANTHONY AND CLEOPATRA.
Messrs. A. Stirling, Kemble Cooper, Everill, Loraine, Burleigh, Ade, Black, Hilton, Parkes, Gay, Beverley, Druce, Yerville, Fenwick, M'Vears, Pringle, Munro, and Carvill.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 8, CAPTAIN THERESE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, Henry Ashley, Harry Parker, T. A. Shale, A. T. Hendon, George Marler, and Harry Monkhouse; Miss Violet Cameron, Madame Amadi, and Miss Phyllis Broughton.
Preceded, at 7.30, by THE GYPSIES.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled
THE GONDOLIER; or, The King of Barataria.
Messrs. Rutland Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, W. Brownlow, Metcalf, Barrett, De Pledge, Burlbank, Lewes, and Courtice Pounds; Mesdames Palsler, R. Brandram, Decima Moore, Lawrence, Saumarez, Bernard, Cole, and Jessie Bond.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
This Evening, at 8.30, THE PHARISEE.
Messrs. Lewis Waller, Herbert Waring, J. Beauchamp, H. V. Esmond, Herbert-Basing, and M. Marius; Mesdames Lancaster-Wallis, Miss Wallis, Marion Lea, Florence West, Minnie Terry, Dennis, and Sophie Larkin.
Preceded, at 8, by MY LADY HELP.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.10, the funniest farcical Comedy ever written, entitled
OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by a Farce.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. EDWARD TERRY.
Every Evening, at 9.0, A. W. PINERO's three-act farce, entitled
IN CHANCERY.
Mr. Edward Terry and Company.
Preceded, at 8.15, by
MY FRIEND JARLET.

MATINEE, TUESDAY, DEC. 2. Production of a New Play,
THE PENALTY.
Written by Julian Cross.

Messrs. H. Dana, A. Wood, Henry Belford, Graham Wentworth, Robert Souter, Geo. Behmore, and Julian Cross; Mesdames Elinore Leyshon, Marie Linden, Kate Deaby, Rose Deary, and Ruth Rutland.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

INVESTED FUNDS,
£4,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTBD. 1835.

BIRKBECK BANK,

ESTABLISHED 1851.
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

THROAT
IRRITATION

AND

COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPE'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7½d.; tins, 1s. 1½d., labelled "JAMES EPPE & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, 2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape, 2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry. Warm, durable, and comfortable. Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., 6s. 9d., and 7s. 9d. WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST.

Demy 8vo, 16s.
THE LIFE of PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.
By his Son, EDMUND GOSSE. With Portrait.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
JOHN HENRY NEWMAN: the Founder of Modern Anglicanism and a Cardinal of the Roman Church. By WILFRID MEYNELL.
With Portrait.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
CONFUCIUS, the GREAT TEACHER: a Study.
By Major-General G. G. ALEXANDER, C.B.

Demy 8vo, 16s.
HISTORY of the REFORMATION in ENGLAND and on the CONTINENT. Lectures and Papers. By the late Rev. AUBREY LACKINGTON MOORE, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
ESSAYS, SCIENTIFIC and PHILOSOPHICAL.
By the late Rev. AUBREY LACKINGTON MOORE, M.A. With Memoirs of the Author.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
THE TRUE GROUND of RELIGIOUS FAITH:
An Essay on Dr. Martineau's recent book, "The Seat of Authority in Religion."
Immediately.

Demy 8vo, 14s.
PURITANISM in POWER: an Argument in Three Books. By CLEMENT WISE.
Book I. UNIVERSALISM, by a Calvinist. Book II. A NATIONAL CHURCH, by a Dissenter. Book III. COMMUNISM, by a Conservative.

Demy 8vo, 14s.
The RISE of CHRISTENDOM. By EDWIN JOHNSON, M.A.
"Abounds in excellent writing, and is marked by a high moral tone and purpose."
Manchester Guardian.

Vols. I., II., III., and IV., now ready, demy 8vo, each 16s.
THE BIBLE TRUE from the BEGINNING. A
Commentary on all those Portions of Scripture that are most Questioned and Assailed.
By EDWARD GOUGH, B.A. Lond.
"A learned book.....Put together with much industry and conscientiousness."—Spectator.
"His system of exposition is fresh, ingenious, fairly convincing in its principal points, and exhaustive.....The tone of the whole volume is impregnated with a deep evangelical spirit."
Scots Observer.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
THE IDEA of RE-BIRTH. By FRANCISCA ARUNDALE.
Including an Essay on Re-Incarnation by KARL HECKEL. With a Preface by A. P. SINNETT.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
BLACK is WHITE; or, Continuity Continued. By the PRIG.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.
A HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ANCIENT INDIA. Based on Sanscrit Literature. By ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT.
[Vol. III. now ready.]

Crown 8vo, 6s.
FORTY DAYS in the HOLY LAND: Before and After. By E. HARCOURT MITCHELL. With 6 Illustrations.
"Abounds in interesting incidents, and occasional humorous touches add to its attractiveness."
Manchester Guardian.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
WELLS WILLS, 1528-1536. Arranged in Parishes and Annotated. By FREDERIC WILLIAM WEAVER, M.A. With a List of the Saints and Services of North and West Somerset, as seen in the Devotions of the several Parishes, and 2 Indexes.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
MY FRIENDS at SANT' AMPELIO. By J. A. GOUGH. Part I. CHATS at SANT' AMPELIO. Part II. The SAGE of SANT' AMPELIO.
"A bright, suggestive, and unconventional book full of shrewd and vigorous thought ... The volume deserves to be read."—Speaker.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE EPIC OF HADES."
A VISION of SAINTS. By LEWIS MORRIS. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
SOCIALISM NEW and OLD. By Prof. WILLIAM GRAHAM.
[Immediately.]

Crown 8vo, 5s.
THEORY of PHYSICS. A Rectification of the Theories of Molar Mechanics, Heat, Chemistry, Sound, Light, and Electricity. By CAMILO CALLEJA, M.D.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
GENERAL PHYSIOLOGY: a Physiological Theory
of Cosmos. By CAMILO CALLEJA, M.D.

Crown 8vo, 5s.
ON the MODIFICATION of ORGANISMS. By DAVID SYME.

Demy 8vo, 9s.
LANGSTROTH on the HIVE and HONEY-BEE.
Revised, Enlarged, and Completed by CHARLES DADANT & SON. Illustrated.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
FROM LYRE to MUSE. A History of the Aboriginal Union of Music and Poetry. By J. DONOVAN, Author of "Music and Action."

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
ÆSCHYLUS: the Seven Plays in English Verse.
By Professor LEWIS CAMPBELL, LL.D.
"He is an excellent Greek, and he is also an excellent English scholar. The vocabulary is simple and sensible; the versification is good..... May be confidently recommended."
St. James's Gazette.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By A. GARLAND MEARS.

Elzevir 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, 6s.
THE LIGHT of ASIA. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E., C.S.I. With Portrait.

Elzevir 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, 5s.
LYRICS, and other Poems. By LADY LINDSAY.
"She possesses in a singular degree the power of bringing before her reader's eyes a poetic scene or incident."—Guardian.

Elzevir 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, 3s. 6d.
TINTINNABULA: New Poems. By CHARLES NEWTON-ROBINSON.
"Mr. Robinson's verse is good enough to win him a very high place among our minor poets."—Guardian.

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
COSMO VENUCCI, SINGER: and other Poems.
By MAY EARLE.

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
RAYMOND: a Story in Verse of London and Monte Carlo. By A. L. STEVENSON, B.A.

Small crown 8vo.
WHISPER! By FRANCES WYNNE.

Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
LAURENCE: Scenes in a Life. A New Poem. By CROASDAILE HARRIS.

Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
THE GOLDEN QUEST, and other Poems. By Mrs. MOSS COCKLE.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LTD.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 970.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY DR. BIRKBECK HILL, NOW READY.

FOOTSTEPS of DR. JOHNSON (Scotland). By George Birkbeck Hill,

D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. With about 150 Illustrations, including 18 Heliogravures, sketched on the spot by Tancelot Speed, and beautifully reproduced by Lemercier & Co., of Paris.

EDITION DE LUXE. Limited strictly to 150 copies—100 for the United Kingdom, and 50 for America. Bound in plain boards, uncut edges, 27 7s. net. This Edition is being rapidly subscribed for. ORDINARY EDITION. 1,000 copies, bound in half-morocco, gilt tops, uncut edges, £3 3s. net.

WILD LIFE on a TIDAL WATER; the History of a House-Boat and Crew. By Dr. P. H. Emerson, Author of "Pictures of East Anglian Life," "Life and Landscape on the Norfolk Broads," &c. Illustrated with 30 Copperplates by P. H. Emerson and T. F. Goodall.

EDITION DE LUXE, limited to 100 numbered Copies, £3 8s. net. The ORDINARY EDITION, bound in peacock-blue cloth, £1 5s. net.

FOURTH EDITION, NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

IN DARKEST AFRICA. By Henry M. Stanley, D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Being the Official Publication

recording the Quest, Rescue, and Retreat of Emin, Governor of Equatoria. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 160 Illustrations and 3 Maps, in handsome cloth binding, TWO GUINEAS.

"Mr. Stanley's narrative of his adventures, privations, sufferings, trials, dangers, and discoveries during his heroic quest and rescue of Emin Pasha is as moving and enthralling a tale as ever was told by man."—Times.

SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUME TO MR. STANLEY'S "IN DARKEST AFRICA."

EMIN PASHA and the REBELLION at the EQUATOR: a Story of Nine Months' Experience in the last of the Sudan Provinces. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Stanley's Officers. Written with the Revision and Co-operation of HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c. A Preface also by Mr. STANLEY. With Map and numerous Illustrations. SECOND EDITION. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, ONE GUINEA.

"Mr. Jephson's tale is well told and eminently interesting. It includes a full description of the latest rebellion against Emin's authority, and the results thereof. The book has an historical, a geographical, and an ethnographical value."—Globe.

VISCOUNT MELBOURNE. By Henry Dunckley, LL.D. ("Verax"). Being the Second Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G. By James Anthony Froude, D.C.L. Being the First

Volume of "THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS" SERIES. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait, FOURTH EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We believe that Mr. Froude's estimate of Lord Beaconsfield, on the whole, will be the one accepted by posterity."—Standard.

NEW WORK BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections. By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "One Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY ALPHONSE DAUDET AND HENRY JAMES.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin. By Alphonse Daudet.

Translated by HENRY JAMES. Numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Myrbach, Rossi, and Montégut. Square 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LETTERS to LIVING AUTHORS. By J. A. Steuart. Illustrated with Portraits of the different Authors. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. A Limited Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper, and tastefully bound, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Steuart's style is clever and interesting, and he steers his course between the opposite evils of paradox and platitude with a dexterity not often manifested on the perilous seas of criticism."—Glasgow Herald.

CHARLES GOUNOD: his Life and his Works. By Marie Anne Bovet. With Portrait and Facsimiles, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

NELSON'S WORDS and DEEDS: a Selection from his Despatches and Correspondence. Edited by W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" and numerous other Sea Stories. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

READY DECEMBER 12, AT ALL LIBRARIES.—WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL.

STAND FAST CRAIG ROYSTON! By William Black, Author of "A Daughter of Heth," "The Princess of Thule," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

THE SNAKE'S PASS. By Bram Stoker, M.A. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"This very readable novel is abundantly stored with amusing and instructive matter, and is, moreover, distinguished from many recently published works of fiction by its vigorous and vivacious originality."—Daily Telegraph.

KILGROOM: a Story of Ireland. By J. A. Steuart, Author of "Letters to Living Authors," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MR. GLADSTONE says of this book: "I find it truthful, national, and highly interesting. The praises deservedly given to Miss Lawless for her 'Harrish' are due to you, but in a higher degree for a fuller and better adjusted picture."

A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of ALL the POSTAGE STAMPS of the UNITED KINGDOM of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND ISSUED DURING FIFTY YEARS. Illustrated by 148 Woodcuts. By WILLIAM A. S. WESTOBY, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CARE of the SICK, at HOME and in the HOSPITAL. A Handbook for Families and for Nurses. By Dr. TH. BILLROTH, Professor of Surgery in Vienna, &c. Translated, by special authority of the Author, by J. BENTALL ENDEAN. Crown 8vo, with 49 Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY JULES VERNE.

THE PURCHASE of the NORTH POLE: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon." Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE FAMILY WITHOUT a NAME. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE: CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Complete in itself.—Full of Beautiful Illustrations.—Contents:

AS YOU LIKE IT. By ANDREW LANG. With 10 Illustrations. Drawn by

E. A. ABBEY.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT: a Story. By PAUL HEYSE. Illustrated.

THE WINTER of OUR CONTENT. (Illustrated.) By CHARLES DUDLEY

WARNER.

FLUTE and VIOLIN: a Story. By JAMES LANE ALLEN. With 21 Illustrations.

A PRE-RAPHAELITE MANSION. By THEODORE CHILD. 10 Illustrations, from Paintings by G. F. WATTS, DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, and BURNÉ JONES.

&c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE JOURNAL OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, by Prof. E. DOWDEN . . . . .	531
LATHAM'S PASTOR PASTORUM, by the Rev. RONALD BAYNE . . . . .	532
AUBREY DE VERRE'S POEMS, by G. COTTERELL . . . . .	533
LECKY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY, II., by R. DUNLOP . . . . .	534
NEW NOVELS . . . . .	535
GIFT BOOKS . . . . .	536
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	538
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	529
TRANSLATION: A Sonnet of Michael Angelo's, by Oliver Elton . . . . .	529
OBITUARY: William Bell Scott, by Cosmo Monkhouse; George Bell, by Dr. Furnivall . . . . .	529
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	530
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	530
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Order of Runes in the Futhork, by Prof. Skeat and Canon Isaac Taylor; English Prose, by Prof. Earle; The Monarchical Spirit in France, by P. G. Hamerton; The Source of a Chaucer Simile, by H. Ellershaw . . . . .	530
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	531
THE ELGOIES OF MAXIMIANUS, by ROBINSON ELLIS . . . . .	532
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Zodiacal Crab, by Robert Brown, Jun. . . . .	532
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .	533
TWO BOOKS ON ROMAN ARCHES . . . . .	534
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	534
THE REVIVAL OF "CALLED BACK," by F. WEDMORE . . . . .	535
THE "ION" AT CAMBRIDGE, by H. F. WILSON . . . . .	535
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . . .	536

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done. Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

ADVERTISER, aged 29, with several years' experience and thorough knowledge of all branches of the work, desires appointment as PRINCIPAL or ASSISTANT in a LIBRARY. Good references.—Address Box 240, Willing's Advertising Offices, 115, Strand, W.C.

TIME AND CAPITAL.—The Secretary of an eminent Indian Statesman has an exceptional INVESTMENT for two or three thousand pounds, which he is empowered to OFFER to a gentleman of education and energy.—Letter to H. B. M., 225, Regent Street, W.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Registers searched; Wills found; Pedigrees traced, in British Museum, Record Office, and Local Registries; Books and Papers copied and translated in any language from manuscript or type.—PEACOCK & PEACOCK, Antiquarian Genealogists, 1, Doughty Street, W. C.

THE Author of various large Works, extensively Reviewed, and of numerous published Magazine Articles, is open to WRITE WORKS, ESSAYS, or LECTURES on Historic, Philosophic, Theosophic, Recondite, and General Subjects, in a popular, incisive, or elevated style, or to undertake Translations (at sight) from French, German, Italian, or Swedish.—Address C.W.H., 67, South Lambeth-road, London, S.W.—Anonymous letters or post-cards will not be noticed.

TO ARTISTS.—Excellent STUDIO, with good top and side lights, in W.C. district, rent moderate; also larger Studio with North light, electric light.—Apply to Mr. THOMAS CLARKE, 63, Chancery-lane, W.C.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—B. BEASLEY, Brompton Park, near Huntingdon.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

DOUGLAS &amp; FOULIS' NEW CATA-

LOGUE OF SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS,
Offered at Greatly Reduced Prices,
Includes many important Works on Travel, History, Biography, Poetry, Theology, Ruskin's Publications, Angling, Sport, and Natural History, Magazines, and over 1,200 Cheap Novels (32 pages, 8vo). Also a SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature. Gratis and post free to any address.—DOUGLAS & FOULIS, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threepence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT & FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARMAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

TYPE WRITING.—1d. per folio (72 words), or 1s. per thousand. Duplicates 4d. per thousand. Neat, accurate, and prompt. Notes taken, rapid shorthand. Technical and Scientific reporting and type writing a specialty. References.—Mr. BLACKWELL, 7, Canal Street, Waltham, S.E.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &amp;c.

LONDON I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS.
II. INDIAN C.S., &c. III. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W. under T. MILLER MACQUEEN, LL.D., Bar-at-Law
DUBLIN DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CHETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.
Est. 1852.

SHAKESPEARE READING SOCIETY.

FOUNDED 1875.

PRESIDENT - Mr. HENRY IRVING.
The SESSION 1890-91 commenced in OCTOBER.
The ELOCUTION CLASSES are held every WEDNESDAY EVENING from 8 to 10. The play now being studied is HENRY V. For particulars of membership apply to the Hon. Sec., 13, Upper Berkeley Street, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is NOW OPEN, 3, PALL MALL EAST, from Ten till Five. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

JAMES I. and CHARLES I. New Historical Dramatic Poems. 166 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled. 3s. 6d., delivered.—ARTHUR E. TREVELLICK, Harwood House, Darlington, Author and Publisher.—For schools, reduced price, cloth boards.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 294 pp., hand-made paper, price 10s. 6d.
SACRED and SHAKESPEARIAN AFFINITIES; being analogies between the writings of the Psalmists and of Shakespeare. By CHARLES ALFRED SWINBURNE. BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, London, W.C.

This day is published, post 8vo, cloth, 5s
THE DARWINIAN THEORY of the ORIGIN of SPECIES.

By FRANCIS P. PASCOE, F.L.S., &c.
Ex-President of the Entomological Society.
"Nor do we know how ignorant we are."—DARWIN.
GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row (Successors to Mr. VAN VOORST).

DEAN &amp; SON'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Now ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, large post 8vo. price 10s. 6d.

SCENES THROUGH the BATTLE

SMOKE; being Reminiscences in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. By the Rev. ARTHUR MALE, Army Chaplain at Lucknow, and in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. With Portrait of the Author, and 8 large Illustrations by Sidney Paget, War Artist to the Illustrated London News in these Campaigns.

Lord Cranbrook writes:—"Mr. Male's personal knowledge of the events makes his interesting book more valuable."

Large post 8vo, handsomely bound, price 7s. 6d.

FRENCH SOLDIERS in GERMAN

PRISONS; being Reminiscences during and after the Franco-German War. By Canon E. GUERS, Army Chaplain to the French Forces.

The work is illustrated with Portraits of the leading actors in these terrible scenes. The thrilling narrative helps one to realise the self-denial and heroism of those who gave up much of the comfort of this life to tend the sufferings of the sick, wounded, and helpless soldiers suddenly interred in fortresses and hospitals.

Handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 6s.

SOUVENIRS of the SECOND

EMPIRE; or, the Last Days of the Court of Napoleon. By the COMTE de MAUGNY, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

This interesting volume of the reminiscences of a Cabinet Minister is full of anecdotes relating to all that passed amongst the Court and Society, the Clubs and the Theatres, in the reign of Napoleon III.; also numerous portraits and particulars as to the lives of all the celebrities of the period.

Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 5s.

THE DOYLE FAIRY BOOK. Con-

sisting of Twenty-nine Fairy Tales. Translated from various Languages by ANTHONY R. MONTALBA. With 24 Illustrations by RICHARD DOYLE, a Memoir of Doyle, and an Introduction by a Member of the Folk-lore Society.

Fcap. 4to, handsomely bound, cloth, price 5s.

BERGE'S COMPLETE NATURAL

HISTORY of the ANIMAL, MINERAL, and VEGETABLE KINGDOMS. Edited by R. F. CRAWFORD, F.R.S. With 16 large exquisitely Coloured Plates, containing over 250 Animals and over 100 smaller Illustrations.

This is the most complete book of any yet issued on this subject, inasmuch as it deals fully with Birds, Beasts, Reptiles, Insects, Trees, Plants, Minerals, Fossils, &c., each part of the subject being profusely illustrated, thus showing at a glance the appearance of the object described.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, large post 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME: his Life and Character. By a FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great ex-Chancellor, from his childhood upwards.

Cloth, handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

BY MADAME CARETTE,

Private Reader to the Empress Eugénie.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS of the COURT of the TUILERIES; or, the Eve of an Empire's Fall.

THIRD EDITION. Price 6s. Large post 8vo.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MY MISTRESS the EMPRESS EUGENIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries.

Handsomely bound in cloth boards, 4to, price 2s. 6d.

UNCLE DUMPIE'S MERRIE MONTHS.

By ROBERT ST. JOHN CORBET.

A most amusing Story, told in lively Verse, showing the Adventures of Uncle Dumpie and his Nephews and Nieces in the Channel Tunnel. With 12 humorous Full-Page Illustrations, and numerous smaller ones by J. H. Roberts.

Crown 4to, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, red edges, price 7s.

The LITTLE ONE'S OWN COLOURED

PICTURE ANNUAL for 1891. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gold and colour, with over 500 Stories in Prose and Verse, and 208 Full-Page fresh novel Pictures in Chromo Colours, besides Kindergarten Lessons, Riddles, Puzzles, &c.

Just ready, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, emblematic cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED BOOK of WONDERS, EVENTS, and DISCOVERIES. By JOHN TIMBS, Author of "Things not Generally Known," &c. New and Revised Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet Street, E.C., Office of "Debrett's Peerage."

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
AND
2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

ADVENTURES in the LIFE of COUNT ALBERT of ERBACH. A True Story. Translated from the German. By BEATRICE, PRINCESS HENRY of BATTENBERG. With Portraits and Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

IMPRESSIONS of a TENDERFOOT, during a Journey in search of Sport in the Far West. By Mrs. ALGERNON ST. MAUR. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 12s.

A PLEA for LIBERTY: An Argument against Socialism and Socialistic Legislation. Consisting of an Introduction by Mr. HERBERT SPENCER, and Essays by Various Writers. Edited by THOMAS MACKAY, Author of "The English Poor." 8vo. [In January.]

A DICTIONARY of GREEK and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES; including the Laws, Institutions, Domestic Usages, Painting, Sculpture, Music, the Drama, &c. Edited by WM. SMITH, LL.D., W. WAYTE, M.A., and G. E. MARINDIN, M.A. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Vol. I. (to be completed in 2 Vols.), Medium 8vo, 31s. 6d. each. [Just ready.]

This New Edition contains 800 pages more than the Old Edition. One-third of the articles have been entirely rewritten. The remaining two-thirds have been in all cases greatly altered; scarcely twenty have been reprinted as they originally stood. There are, besides, about two hundred articles which did not appear in the Old Edition, many of considerable length and importance, with 450 additional illustrations.

MARCIA; A New Novel. By W. E. NORRIS. 3 vols. Crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

A RIDE THROUGH the DISTURBED DISTRICTS of ASIA MINOR and ARMENIA. By H. C. BARKLEY, Author of "Between the Danube and the Black Sea," and "Bulgaria before the War." Crown 8vo. [In January.]

STUDIES in EUROPEAN HISTORY; Being Academical Addresses. By the late Dr. DOLLINGER, Professor in the University of Munich. Translated by MARGARET WARRE. With Portrait. 8vo, 14s.

ELECTRICITY; the Science of the 19th Century. A Sketch for General Readers. By E. M. CALLARD, Author of the "Invisible Powers of Nature." With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

MISS BLAKE of MONKSHALTON. A Novel. By ISABELLA O. FORD. Post 8vo, 5s.

FORTIFICATION; its Past Achievements, Recent Development, and Future Progress. By Major G. SYDENHAM CLARKE, C.M.G., Royal Engineers. With Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s.

LUX MUNDI; A Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation. By Various Writers. Edited by Rev. CHARLES GORE, M.A. Tenth Edition, Revised, with a New Preface and an Additional Essay. 8vo., 14s.

* The New Preface and Additions may be had separately. 8vo, 1s.

A MODERN APOSTLE; ALEXANDER N. SOMERVILLE, D.D. (1813-89), in Scotland, Ireland, India, America, Africa, Australasia, and the Chief Countries of Europe. By GEORGE SMITH, LL.D., Author of the "Life of William Carey," &c. Portrait and Map. Post 8vo, 9s.

OUR VICEREGAL LIFE in INDIA; During the Years 1884-1888. By the MARCHIONESS of DUFFERIN. Popular Edition. Map. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A HISTORY of GREEK SCULPTURE. By A. S. MURRAY, LL.D., F.S.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum. Second and Revised Edition. With 150 Illustrations. 2 vols. Medium 8vo, 36s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

GRIFFITH FARRAN & CO.'S NEW GIFT BOOKS.*COLOURED STORY BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

TOLD by the FIRESIDE. 16 Original Stories by 16 well-known authors. Illustrated by 16 coloured and 80 black and white Pictures by Mrs. Seymour Lucas. 4to, boards, price 5s. "The Pictures are delightful."—Spectator.

JOHN CHINAMAN at HOME. Description versified by Rowe Lingstone. Fully Illustrated by R. A. Jaumann. 28 pp., all in colour. 4to, boards, price 5s. Illustrated in black & white.

OVER the SEA. Stories of Two Worlds. Edited by A. Patchett MARTIN. Eight Original Stories told by eight well-known authors. With eight coloured Illustrations by H. J. Johnstone, T. J. Hughes, R. Carrick, R.I., and 40 black and white, 4to, boards, price 3s. 6d.

HEARTS and VOICES. Songs of the Better Land. With 8 Coloured Illustrations by Henry Ryland, and 30 black-and-white by Ellen Welby, Charlotte Spiers, May Bowley, and G. C. Haite. 4to, boards, price 2s. 6d.

STORIES for SOMEBODY. By Edith Carrington. Profusely Illustrated by Dorothy Tennant (Mrs. H. M. Stanley). Crown 4to, cloth, price 6s. "These are about as pretty and well told stories of their kind as we have ever seen. It is difficult to say which of the six we prefer."—Spectator.

WHEN WE WERE CHILDREN. By E. M. Green. 50 Illustrations by W. Burton. 4to, cloth, price 6s.

THE LITTLE LADIES. By Helen Milman. With 50 Illustrations by Emily J. Harding. Crown 4to, price 6s.

YOUNG PEOPLE and OLD PICTURES. By Theodore Child. With numerous Engravings in the best style from Pictures by the Old Masters dealing with child life. Crown 4to, price 10s. 6d.

NEW BOOKS FOR BOYS.

GEORGE MANVILLE FENN.
CUTLASS and CUDGEL. Illustrated by H. Schonberg. Large crown 8vo, price 5s.

"That is a good story, but 'Cutlass and Cudgel,' by the same author, is a still better one."—Times.

R. M. FREEMAN.
STEADY and STRONG. Illustrated by A. Foorde Hughes. A Tale of Schoolboy Life. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"An excellent book to place in the hands of a boy."—Spectator.

A. H. DRURY.
IN the ENEMY'S COUNTRY. Illustrated by H. Petherick. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

ARCHDEACON CHISWELL.
THE SLAVE PRINCE. Illustrated by A. W. Cooper. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

HENRY FRITH.
THE LOG of the BOMBASTES. Illustrated by Walter Wm. May, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

"Marvellous to the borders of incredibility. Nevertheless it reads well."—Times.

DAVID KERR.
THE RAJAH'S LEGACY. Illustrated by A. W. Cooper. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

"It is a well-told tale."—Times.

NEW BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

ANNE BEALE.
THE MILLER'S DAUGHTER. Illustrated by Marcella Walker. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

AUSTIN CLARE.
CROOKEDS. Illustrated by John Leighton. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

MRS. SEYMOUR.
POOR and PLAIN. Illustrated by A. Hitchcock. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

E. DAVENPORT.
THE GIRL'S OWN POETRY BOOK. Uniform with "The Boy's Own Poetry Book." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

MRS. HORNIBROOK AND J. L. HORNIBROOK.
THE QUEEN of the RANCHE. Illustrated by John Proctor. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

C. HOLROYD.
AT ALL COST. Illustrated by A. M. Fenn. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

Mrs. E. MALCOLM TURNER.
WINNING HER WAY. Illustrated by A. Hitchcock. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THEO. GIFT.
THE LITTLE COLONIST. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

MRS. HERBERT MARTIN.
CLAUDE and CLAUDIA. Illustrated by Caroline Paterson. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

KAY SPEN.
TRUE of HEART. A New Edition. Illustrated by A. H. Collins. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

ELIZA KERR.
ROLICA REED. Illustrated by Annie S. Fenn. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, LONDON AND SYDNEY.

STANDARD WORKS for the LIBRARY

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The Popular Edition, in 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Caesar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICKSON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

The HISTORY of ROMAN CLASSICAL LITERATURE. By R. W. BROWNE, M.A., Ph.D., late Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Professor of Classical Literature in King's College, London. A New Edition. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 8s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY. From the German of Professor MAX DÜNKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. In 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. A Popular Account of the Primary Principles and Formation and Development of the English Constitution, avoiding all Party Politics. Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters, Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The Popular Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Index and Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, 59s. Each separately (with the exception of III. reprinting, IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee GUILLÉMIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR. From the German of ANTON GINDELY, by Prof. TENBROOK. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 24s.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBERL. With 41 Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbach. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD. By Professor CREASY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, 6s.

MEMOIRS of NAPOLEON BONA-PARTE. By FAUVELET DE BOURRIENNE, Private Secretary to the Emperor. Edited by Col. PHIPPS. In 3 vols., demy 8vo, Map, and 38 Illustrations on Steel, 63s.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MR. WEMYSS REID'S LIFE OF LORD HOUGHTON.

Just published, in Two Volumes, price 32s.

The Life, Letters, and Friendships of Richard Monckton Milnes

First Lord Houghton.

By T. WEMYSS REID.

"No more agreeable volumes have appeared for many a day than the two which deal with 'The Life, Letters, and Friendships of Richard Monckton Milnes, First Lord Houghton.' The volumes which his biographer has compiled are a perfect storehouse of interesting things, grave and gay, political, philosophical, literary, social, witty. At every page we meet with distinguished men and women; with letters from and to, or conversations with, the men and women who have played leading parts in the vast and complex history of the past three-quarters of a century."

The Times.

"Mr. Wemyss Reid has been fortunate in his subject, and so successful in his treatment of it that this book stands a good chance of being regarded in literary and cultured society as the book of the season."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUME of the INTERNATIONAL SHAKESPEARE.

Ready in a few days, price £3 10s.

OTHELLO.

Illustrated with a series of exquisite Photogravures from Original Drawings by FRANK DICKSEE, A.R.A.

The Liverpool Mercury says:—"Messrs. Cassell's magnificent edition is worthy alike of the greatest dramatist the world has yet seen, of the literature of the country in which that dramatist was born, of the skill of the thirteen generations of English printers who have loyally followed in the footsteps of the illustrious Caxton, and of the internationalization of art which has attended the marvellous developments of nineteenth-century progress."

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner, & Co.'s LIST.

SECOND THOUSAND.

A VISION of SAINTS. By LEWIS MORRIS, Author of "The Epic of Hades." Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

SOCIALISM NEW and OLD.

By Prof. WILLIAM GRAHAM.

[International Scientific Series.]

Demy 8vo, 15s.

THE LIFE of PHILIP HENRY GOSSE. By his Son, EDMUND GOSSE. With Portrait.

"Mr. Edmund Gosse has discharged a pious duty with great skill and discretion."—Times.

Demy 8vo, 16s.

The REFORMATION in ENGLAND and on the CONTINENT. Lectures and Papers. By the late Rev. AUBREY LACKINGTON MOORE, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ESSAYS, SCIENTIFIC and PHILOSOPHICAL. By the late Rev. AUBREY LACKINGTON MOORE, M.A. With Memoirs of the Author.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE PRAYER of HUMANITY: Sermons on the Lord's Prayer. By H. N. GRIMLEY, M.A., Author of "Tramadol Sermons."

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN: the Founder of Modern Anglicanism and a Cardinal of the Roman Church. By WILFRID MEYNELL. With Portrait.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BLACK is WHITE; or, Continuity Continued. By THE PRIG.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE IDEA of RE-BIRTH. By FRANCISCA ARUNDALE. Including an Essay on Re-Incarnation by KARL HECKEL. With a Preface by A. P. SINNETT.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

A HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ANCIENT INDIA. Based on Sanscrit Literature. By ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT.

[Vol. III. now ready.]

Crown 8vo, 5s.

TRAVEL SKETCH. By Thomas SINCLAIR, Author of "Humanities," "Essays in Three Kinds," &c.

Demy 8vo, 9s.

LANGSTROTH on the HIVE and HONEY-BEE. Revised, Enlarged, and Completed, by CHARLES DADANT and SON. With Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FROM LYRE to MUSE. A History of the Aboriginal Union of Music and Poetry. By J. DONOVAN, Author of "Music and Action."

In Four Editions.

THE LIGHT of ASIA. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD.

Illustrated Edition, small 4to, 21s.

Library Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Elzevir Edition, printed on hand-made paper, cloth extra, 6s.

Lotos Series, pot 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, or half-parchment, uncut, 3s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

OAK and MAPLE. English and Canadian Verses. By Mrs. H. COGHILL.

Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE GOLDEN QUEST, and other Poems. By Mrs. MOSS COCKLE.

Crown 8vo.

THE SHADOW of the LAKE, and other Poems. By F. LEYTON. [Immediately.]

London:

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & Co., LTD.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1890.

No. 970, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Journal of Sir Walter Scott. From the Original Manuscript at Abbotsford. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

No one who has read Lockhart's admirable Memoirs of the Life of Scott can forget how the interest narrows and deepens itself from the day on which Scott heard tidings of the great financial disaster in which he was involved. The story, it will be remembered, from that point to the close is told partly in Scott's own words, and these are derived from the Journal begun on November 20, 1825, and carried on—though not without some breaks—until April, 1832. It is the heroic period of Scott's life, when all his strength was gathered up in the one stupendous effort to render full justice to his creditors and to regain freedom for his last days, or at least, if death should overtake him, to secure a defeat with honour. Lockhart's extracts from the Journal give about half of the whole; he made his selections with excellent judgment, and if he sometimes needlessly altered a word or a turn of expression, he exercised only an editorial freedom which was held legitimate at a time when mint and anise and cummin were esteemed less weighty matters of the law than mercy and faith. On the whole, Lockhart presents an admirably true portrait; it needs no varnishing; it admits of no retouching. But it is a portrait; and here in the Journal, printed in full from the MS., we are in presence of the original; we see Scott in his hours of strength and in his hours of weakness; we feel the touch of his hand; we become acquainted with the very beatings of his heart.

The confessions entrusted to a journal are not always made in simple good faith. It is quite possible to play a rôle before that least disinterested of spectators, one's self. The heart is deceitful above all things, and ingeniously histrionic. But Scott was always a man and not a mime; and in his last great wrestle with fate he was in deadly earnest, and he had not a moment, even if he were to desire it, to spend in attitudinising before a private mirror. How he received the blow we all remember. Pride, which was one of the deepest things in his nature, came to his aid—he would not sink into an object of pity. Stoicism, which underlay all his geniality of temper, gave him support. And his will put forth its vast resources to retrieve the disaster. From that day onwards he felt that there was a mortgage on his brains and on his life. With dizzy head and fluttering heart, with aching limbs, with a haunting fear that the battle was going against him, with a sense of waning power, with doubts as to the continuance of public favour, with apprehension of the failure of his own inventive genius, he still held his ground; he still maintained a face of cheer before his children and his friends; he still was the kind master and companion of his dependents; he still proudly fronted the world. If now and again a groan escaped him, and once or twice a sob, it was only in solitude; and the Journal proves how quickly he pulled himself together; how he felt that such a momentary lapse from the attitude of stoical self-mastery was a treason against his manlier nature. In reading the story again, and now with all the fulness of detail, our feeling is not one of pity for Scott; he would hardly rest quiet in his grave if he were pitied even now. We rather feel a pride in his loyalty to that stern mistress, whom he so often addresses in the pages of his diary, a task-mistress, and yet a consoler—Duty.

He had inherited from his freebooting Border ancestors a certain physical rudeness of nerve. He could enjoy a ploughman's or a cattle-lifter's meal; he had no ear for the subtler harmonies of music; it was hard to offend his nostrils. Yet entries in the Journal prove that Scott was more finely constituted than many of those who prove their delicacy of nerve by insensibility to pleasures which are merely natural, common, sane, and simple. With the burden which he had to bear steadily day after day he feared any softening of muscle and fibre, and rather resisted than indulged his own sensitiveness:

"My nerves have for these last two or three days (July 18, 1827) been susceptible of an acute excitement from the slightest causes; the beauty of the evening, the sighing of the summer breeze, brings the tears into my eyes not unpleasingly. But I must take exercise, and caseharden myself. There is no use in encouraging these moods of the mind. It is not the law we live on."

There are men who, if stricken by such a calamity as that which overtook Scott, would have sought refuge in some transcendental citadel, or some mystic palace of cloudland. No one ever was less touched by mystical feeling or transcendental ideas than Scott. With the early nineteenth-century love of the romantic, he united the eighteenth century attachment to reality. He was deeply moved by the mystery of old associations; but these were always connected with the past humanities of his own life or that of former generations. When his trouble came upon him he did not for a moment soar out of sight of it. He faced misfortune, and studied what it meant—a debt of £130,000 to be cleared off, economy, self-denial in small things, incessant labour, perhaps the loss of Abbotsford:

"Abbotsford has been my Delilah, and so I have often termed it; and now the recollection of the extensive woods I planted, and the walks I have formed, from which strangers must derive both the pleasure and profit, will excite feelings likely to sober my gayest moments."

He speaks of his life, though not without its fits of waking and strong exertion, as a sort of a dream, spent in

"Chewing the cud of sweet and bitter fancy."

"I have worn a wishing cap, the power of which has been to divert present griefs by a touch of the wand of imagination, and gild over the future prospect by future prospects more fair than can ever be realised. Sometimes 'tis said this castle-building—this wielding of the aerial trowel—is fatal to exertions in actual life. I cannot tell; I have not found it so."

He did not find it so, because the castles which he built were only prouder structures of the same kind as those which he actually based upon the earth. The dreams of his imagination were inspired by his energies and his ambition.

But in these closing years there were sadder dreams inspired by his consciousness of declining powers of body and of mind. The illness of the winter of 1826-27 did much to bring a premature sense of old age upon him; yet still he rejoices in the best thing left to him by an eventful year—"the courage to endure what Fortune sends without being a pipe for her fingers." On January 14, in a passage which Lockhart omitted, Scott sums up the gains and losses of this season of pain and depression:

"Well—my holidays are out—and I may count my gains and losses as honest Robinson Crusoe used to balance his accounts of good and evil.

"I have not been able during three weeks to stir above once or twice from the house; but then I have executed a great deal of work which would be otherwise unfinished.

"Again, I have sustained long and sleepless nights and much pain. True; but no one is the worse of the thoughts which arise in the watches of the night; and for pain, the complaint which brought on this rheumatism was not so painful, perhaps, but was infinitely more disagreeable and depressing.

"Something there has been of dulness in our little reunions of society which did not use to cloud them. But I have seen all my old and kind friends with my dear children (Charles alone excepted); and, if we did not rejoice with perfect joy, it was overshadowed from the same sense of regret [for Lady Scott's death].

"Again, this new disorder seems a presage of the advance of age with its infirmities; but age is but the cypress avenue which terminates in the tomb, where the weary are at rest."

Twelve months later, when 1827 came to a close, Scott's health seemed excellent, his circumstances were somewhat easier, the loss of his wife was less recent.

"Though I am still on troubled waters," he writes, "yet I am rowing with the tide; and less than the continuation of my exertions of 1827 may, with God's blessing, carry me successfully through 1828, when we may gain a more open sea, if not exactly a safe port."

In transforming himself into the most illustrious of booksellers' hacks, Scott suffered less than he would have done had he been possessed by a deeper feeling for what is styled the prophetic office of literature. Wordsworth desired before all else to be a teacher, an inspirer and quickener of the souls of men. Scott was not a prophet, and did not pose as such; he was a story-teller, and if those whom he contrived to entertain learnt at the same time to value manliness and common sense, he had taught them all that he cared to teach. Accordingly, though he was now and again impatient of the drudgery of writing for the booksellers, and longed for the joy of freedom, he did not feel acutely that he was making any sacrifice of his nobler self, or was leaving some high mission unfulfilled. Scott, at least in his elder years, did not greatly value literary fame, except as an evidence of power, and as a proof that he could surely win the heap of gold which was to pass to his creditors and restore him to liberty.

"Reconsidered the probable downfall of my literary reputation"—so he writes on December 12, 1827. "I am so constitutionally indifferent to the censure or praise of the world that, never having abandoned myself to the feelings of self-conceit, which my great success was calculated to inspire, I can look with the most unshaken firmness upon the event as far as my own feelings are concerned. If there be any great advantage in literary reputation, I have had it, and I certainly do not care for losing it. They cannot say but what I had the crown. It is unhappily inconvenient for my affairs to lay by my work just now, and that is the only reason why I do not give up literary labour."

James Ballantyne, whose opinion Scott regarded as a signpost to indicate the feeling of the public, was far from satisfied with the earlier chapters of The Fair Maid of Perth; and Scott, who had achieved such triumphs in chivalric romance in both verse and prose, criticises with remarkable disinterestedness the genre to which the work now occupying him belonged.

"Sooth to say, this species of romance of chivalry is an exhaustible subject. It affords materials for splendid description for once or twice; but they are too unnatural and formal to bear repetition. We must go on with our present work, however, valet quantum."

What is this but an admission that, as Carlyle put it in his criticism of the Waverley Novels, all manner of jerkins and costumes are transitory—"man alone is perennial?" We can hardly believe that Scott himself would have resented this part of Carlyle's criticism.

In Anne of Geierstein, written with a failing brain and hand, Scott felt that he was not giving of his best—or rather that his best now was not like what his best had been in earlier and brighter days. But perhaps it was good enough for the public:

"April 29, 1829.—This morning I finished and sent off three pages more, and still there is something to write; but I will take the broad axe to it, and have it ended before noon."

"This has proved impossible, and the task lasted me till nine, when it was finished, tant bien que mal. Now, will people say this expresses very little respect for the public? In fact I have very little respect for that dear publicum whom I am doomed to amuse, like Goody Trash in Bartholomew Fair, with rattles and gingerbread; and I should deal very uncandidly with those who may read my confessions were I to say I knew a public worth caring for or capable of distinguishing the nicer beauties of composition. They weigh good and evil qualities by the pound. Get a good name and you may write trash. Get a bad one, and you may write like Homer without pleasing a single reader. I am, perhaps, l'enfant gâté de succès, but I am brought to the stake, and must perforce stand the course."

Scott might have remembered that the public for a writer of genius is not the mere motley herd of to-day, but the élite of many generations. Unhappily, though he might have been content with posthumous praise, he could not, as Southey said of himself, be content with posthumous pudding. At this time no applause from the most accomplished lovers of literature could count for anything with Scott in comparison with the coins of the multitude which he gathered eagerly as the means of regaining an honourable independence.

There is a dramatic propriety in the fifth act of the tragedy of Scott's life. He was hard to kill. He had struck his roots deep in the soil and spread his branches wide. He was not to be uprooted without many repeated strokes of the axe. The sinister woodman paused in his task, and then set to work again. It was a long and difficult agony. What a contrast we find in the instant vanishing of Shelley, who never wholly belonged to the earth on which he moved. A whirl of sea-mist, a sudden wash of Italian waves, and all was over. But Scott was slowly and painfully uprooted from his basis, and came slowly and heavily to the ground. Then, for the one, there were quivering flames of the seaside pyre, rising to the blue southern sky; for the other, there was the resting-place of his forefathers amid the hoary ruins of Dryburgh Abbey. And to each life there was a fitting close.

Thanks are due to the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell-Scott for permitting the Journal to be printed. Mr. Douglas, the editor as well as publisher of these volumes, has done his work with judgment, skill, and loving care.

EDWARD DOWDEN.

Pastor Pastorum. By the Rev. Henry Latham. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.)

A REVIEWER of theological literature is so grateful for originality that he is tempted to praise any volume marked by this virtue in a strain which less persecuted readers cannot always appreciate. A fresh treatment, moreover, of the Life of Christ would seem by this time almost impossible, unless it be at the same time eccentric and irresponsible. We, nevertheless, must risk the pronouncement that Mr. Latham has produced a Life of Christ as original as anything that has appeared since Eccle Homo, and yet eminently sane and judicious. The statement of the Preface, that the book has been "growing into distinctness during the five and thirty years of my college work," explains much. It explains the admirable lucidity of the style; it explains its carefulness of statement and completeness of plan, and generally accounts for the impression produced upon the reader that the author has soaked himself in his subject, and can set down nothing unadvisedly or on the spur of the moment.

We have spoken of the treatise as a Life of Christ, but it is not a Life in the strict sense of the words. It is a survey of Christ's work from the special point of view stated in the second title of the book—"or the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord." This survey is so thorough, it deals so methodically and exhaustively with the records of the evangelists, and the point of view is found so important, that the result is scarcely less than a Life of Christ. The originality of Mr. Latham's inquiry consists in its detailed analysis of Christ's method of teaching the twelve, and its exposition chronologically of the course of that teaching. The idea that Jesus during the three years of His ministry gradually and deliberately selected twelve men, and carefully trained them to witness of Himself, has never received such elaborate presentation as Mr. Latham gives it.

But Mr. Latham's results are as original as his method. In his introductory chapter he sums up the conclusions of his inquiry, giving us a sort of key to what is to follow. Having to lecture on the Gospels, and being interested in education, he was naturally led to concentrate his attention on Christ's method of training, and by degrees to detect certain principles which govern it. Of these, the more important may be stated in his own words:

"Christ works on them [the disciples] no magical change. Our Lord never transforms men so as to obliterate their old nature and substitute a new one; . . . they would not be the same men, or preserve their individual responsibility if it were otherwise. . . . Christ's particular care to leave His disciples their proper independence is everywhere apparent. . . . He cherishes and respects personality. . . . Men, in His eyes, were not mere clay in the hands of the potter, matter to be moulded to shape. They were organic beings, each growing from within, with a life of his own—a personal life which was exceedingly precious in His and His Father's eyes. . . . With Christ, the part that the man had to do of himself went for infinitely more than what was done for him by another."

Special design and careful thought on Christ's part are detected in the sort of men He chose as apostles, and in the particular form of teaching He adopted:

"They were to preach a gospel to the poor—the movement was to spread upward from below. . . . The apostles, therefore, were chosen from a class which, though not the poorest, had sympathies with the poor. Again, the apostles were to be witnesses of the Resurrection to after times; it was important, therefore, that they should possess qualities which would make men trust them. . . . The apostles were singularly literal-minded men. . . . We see no exaggeration in them, no wild fervour, nothing that belongs to the religious fanatic. Our Lord never employs the force that such fanaticism affords."

As to Christ's teaching, it is noted that it contains no social system or ecclesiastical polity.

"He gave no system of philosophy, for such systems are only the ways of looking at some of the enigmas of life, which suit the cast of mind of the nation or the generation which shapes the system"; again, "Christ speaks to the fact of a future existence, but says nothing of the mode"; further, "Christ leaves no ritual."

Christ wrote nothing, because

"when matter has come down by oral tradition men can hardly worship the letter of it. . . . Men may, without irreverence, raise the question whether the narrator had rightly understood Christ's sayings, and properly connected them with the circumstances out of which they arose."

The chapter concludes with a careful statement of the principles regulating Christ's use of signs and miracles.

The short quotations we have given may serve to convey some hint of the scope and teaching of the volume. They will suggest—what is, in fact, the case—that the book resembles in many points Ecce Homo. Both treatises are remarkable as efforts to discover the mind of Christ, which fearlessly assume that He had a mind to discover. The orthodox theologian cannot bring himself to consider Christ's motives and aims, His hopes and fears, as he would those of a mere man; he shrinks from a rigorous Incarnation, and imagines Christ as constantly illuminated by a miraculous knowledge of the past, the present, and the future. Such a Christ escapes the hardest and most distinctive trials of humanity; an element of unreality pervades his whole life. Mr. Latham is as uncompromising in his assertion of the humanity of Christ as the author of Ecce Homo, but he differs entirely in his attitude towards the miracles. He holds that:

"Our Lord speaks of the power displayed in miracles as God's power working through Him. . . . Christ nowhere claims the power as His own. It rests in God's hands; but it is granted to His prayer because His will and God's are one. . . . The course of daily events depending on the will of others did not in general lie spread out to his view."

We find, therefore, that Mr. Latham treats of the miracles with special care and fulness, but from a comparatively novel point of view. He may also be said to fill up, for those who accept the miracles as historical, the gap they necessarily find in Ecce Homo.

Mr. Latham has appended to his treatise a short chronology of Christ's life, which in the main agrees with that of Dr. Edersheim, but has some important points of difference. Mr. Latham's chronology and history are strictly subordinated to his main purpose of expounding the mind of Christ; but the acuteness and patience he displays in sifting and arranging the records of the Evangelists will impress every reader of his book. His method and style in these particulars recall very pleasantly Prof. Sanday's Authorship of the Fourth Gospel.

We have no space adequately to criticise the two chapters entitled, "Human Freedom," and "Of Revelation"; with their characteristic opening words, "I cannot, of course, give my readers solutions of these questions; I can only tell them how I manage to do without a solution myself." They are full of felicities of phrase and thought, expressed with the author's accustomed lucidity and precision. It must be noted, indeed, that occasionally Mr. Latham is too obviously "interested in education"; he is over careful to be perfectly clear, and drives his nail home more than once. But the book abounds in good things. The use of metaphor is frequently happy: "when a man recoils from a view which unsettles him and turns him giddy, he clutches at his supports with iron grip"; "many forms of it [good] can no more exist without evil as an antagonist than a wheel can turn without the friction of the road"; "the Divine light is a lantern that throws its light only in the direction in which he who carries it has to go." We have jotted down several sheets of similar profound thoughts tersely expressed, but must leave readers to make their own selection.

In conclusion, we must note that of several matters—notably of the Temptation, the parable of the Unjust Steward, and the denial of Peter—Mr. Latham has given explanations very different from those found in most commentaries. Whether these will be generally approved may be doubtful, but they are so soberly and thoughtfully set forth that they cannot be disregarded. There is in fact nothing ill-considered or hasty in the volume; it is very obviously the fruit of many years of patient thought and study.

RONALD BAYNE.

Aubrey De Vere's Poems: a Selection. Edited by John Dennis. (Cassell.)

THERE is much to agree with, and something to dissent from, in Mr. Dennis's preface to this volume. He is quite right in laying down the general rule that "verse of a fine order is not necessarily popular." He might have gone further, indeed, and said that an early contemporary popularity, in the case of a poet, argues an inferior order of work rather than a fine one. A busy public has no time for things that give it trouble, and if a poet would be listened to by men of his own time he must sing what they can understand. Such a standard is not a high one; and though to reach it may ensure popularity, it does not imply greatness. The fit audience for the worthier singer is never entirely wanting, and sooner or later the judgment of these better judges is accepted by the populace. To the latter, however, while the little poets come in their season and disappear, the great poets are seldom more than an enduring name. Snatches of their song enter into the common speech, but few of those who repeat their words know whose words they are. Still, the test of popularity or non-popularity is only a partial one, and it no more follows that a man's work is good because it has not taken the town than that it is slight because it has.

It can neither be claimed for Mr. Aubrey De Vere, nor alleged against him, that he has caught the ear of the multitude. He is a modest, unobtrusive, cultivated singer, who has rather shunned than sought the beaten tracks of poesy. But it cannot be said for him, though Mr. Dennis almost suggests that it can, that his place is on those high mountain-paths of song where Milton and Wordsworth abide. It would be much nearer the truth to say that he has found some pleasant byways, shady and quiet and retired, where he is content to dwell.

Mr. De Vere's sonnets are undoubtedly his best work, and if a great reputation could be made by sonnets alone his fame might yet be considerable. Mr. Dennis says that "his sonnets may vie with the sweetest and subtlest of the century." This is bold praise; but if two or three of the best of Wordsworth's be excepted, it is perhaps not too bold. "The Sun God," which is included in this selection, is well-known as one of the most graphic and imaginative sonnets in the language, but it lacks the faultlessness of rhythm which is indispensable to the highest excellence. The following example, though intrinsically of much less value, is almost perfect in construction, while in method and manner it recalls some of the most charming of Shakespeare's:

"Flowers I would bring if flowers could make thee fairer,
And music if the Muse were dear to thee,
For loving these would make thee love the bearer;
But sweetest songs forget their melody,
And loveliest flowers would but conceal the wearer:
A rose I marked, and might have plucked, but she Blushed as she bent, imploring me to spare her,
Nor spoil her beauty by such rivalry.
Alas! and with what gifts shall I pursue thee,
What offerings bring, what treasures lay before thee;
When earth with all her floral train doth woo thee,
And all old poets and old songs adore thee,
And love to thee is naught; from passionate mood
Secured by joy's complacent plenitude."

In legendary verse Mr. De Vere has had much success, but he might have had more if his subjects had been less remote. They lack human interest. Mr. Dennis is sensible of this, for he remarks that "it is difficult to say whether Mr. De Vere has been always happy in the choice of subjects." Perhaps a legendary saint admits of less picturesque treatment than a mythic King Arthur. It must be admitted, too, that the element of monasticism—of Catholicism—mars this part of Mr. De Vere's work. His treatment of Greek subjects suffers from a similar cause. That he has an excellent classic taste the "Lines written under Delphi" clearly show, but the poem is ruined by a theological protest against idolatry. The poet becomes merged in the churchman, if not in the bigot, when he discovers that the objects of Greek worship were idols and nothing more. It is the bigot, certainly, who condescends to such poor stuff as this:

"Yes, these were idols, for man made them such!
By a corrupt heart all things are corrupted,
God's works alike or products of the mind:
The Soul, insurgent 'gainst its Maker, lacks
The strength its vassal powers to rule. The Will
To blind caprice grows subject; Reason, torn
From Faith, becomes the Understanding's slave;
And Passion's self in appetite is lost.
Then Idols dominate—despots by Self-will Set up, where Law and Faith alike are dead,
To awe the anarchy of godless souls."

After his sonnets, it is perhaps in some of his odes that Mr. De Vere is soon to great advantage. There is evident in them his clear lyrical gift, as well as that sympathetic appreciation of natural objects which entitles him to be sometimes named with Wordsworth. This last quality is strongly marked in the following passage from the "Ode to the Daffodil":

"Herald and harbinger! with thee
Begins the year's great jubilee!
Of her solemnities sublime
A sacristan whose gusty taper
Flashes through earliest morning vapour
Thou ring'st dark nocturns and dim prime.
Birds that have yet no heart for song
Gain strength with thee to twitter;
And, warm at last, where hollies throng
The mirrored sunbeams glitter.
With silk the osier plumes her tendrils thin:
Sweet blasts, though keen as sweet, the blue lake wrinkle:
And buds on leafless boughs begin
Against grey skies to twinkle."

Even here, it will be noticed, Mr. De Vere does not allow his fancy to escape from the associations of an ecclesiastical ritual. But while it is highly fantastic to compare a daffodil to a sacristan, the metaphor is made delightfully poetic by the suggestion of the "gusty taper." The intrusion of "nocturns" and "primes," again, is palliated and rendered even pleasant by the twilights of evening and morning which they recall.

The judgment which has been shown by Mr. Dennis in these selections is admirable. The reader who is not familiar with Mr. Aubrey de Vere's writings will here find well-chosen specimens of them, in all their varied forms, and he will regard the volume as one to be prized.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

History of England in the Eighteenth Century.

By W. E. H. Lecky. (Longmans.)

(Second Notices.)

It is usual to speak of the great Irish rebellion of the eighteenth century as the rebellion of '98; but, as Mr. Lecky points out, the letters from Ulster in the spring and summer of 1797 describe the state of things in that province as one of real though smothered rebellion. That the government, while suspending the Habeas Corpus Act and proclaiming a large portion of the country, should have taken no steps at this time to avert the impending catastrophe by arresting the leaders of the United Irish conspiracy has often been urged as corroborative of the view that it was their settled policy to force on a rebellion. And, though it must be confessed that the effect of their measures was undoubtedly in this direction, Mr. Lecky has adduced good reasons for believing that they were animated by other and very different motives. The truth, indeed, seems to be that their information regarding the conspiracy was much less full than has generally been supposed.

"Most of the schemes of the United Irishmen," says Mr. Lecky, "were communicated to them, and they had a general knowledge of the leading members of the conspiracy; but they appear to have known little about the Supreme Executive, and they were conscious that they could produce no evidence against the leaders which was the least likely to lead to a conviction."

Notwithstanding, however, the extreme danger of the situation at the beginning of 1798, the Duke of Portland positively forbade any precipitate action in the matter; and it was only in consequence of secret information, supplied by Thomas Reynolds, that the government felt strong enough on March 12 to arrest the leaders of the movement. The blow, it is true, did not prevent the rebellion. On the contrary, the proclamation of martial law and freequarters, by which it was almost immediately followed, was the principal cause of its outbreak; but it seriously crippled it, and did more than anything else to alter its whole character. The situation, Mr. Lecky thinks, was critical in the extreme, and called for measures which would inevitably transcend the limits of the ordinary law, but which would, at the same time, undoubtedly lead to horrible abuses.

It is not my intention to follow Mr. Lecky in his narrative of the terrible incidents that attended the course of the rebellion. It is a tragic and heartrending story, and the individual acts of charity and kindness which here and there illuminate its sad pages seem rather to intensify than to relieve the general gloom and horror. The most remarkable, and to the historical student the most instructive, feature of the rebellion was the comparative tranquillity of Ulster, and the indifference of the Presbyterians of the North to the success of a movement of which they had been the prime originators. It is a point of great interest, and Mr. Lecky has devoted much careful study to its elucidation. Much, he thinks, of the alteration in sentiment was due to the growth of the Orange movement, "which had planted a new and rival enthusiasm in the heart of the disaffected province, and immensely strengthened the forces opposed to the United Irishmen"; much also was due to the success of long-continued military government and the apparent hopelessness of a successful insurrection unassisted by foreign intervention, coupled with a perception, which the course of the rebellion in Wexford rendered all the keener, of the danger which might follow to themselves from throwing the balance of power into the hands of the Catholics; but most of all was it due to the arrogant and menacing attitude of the French government towards the free republics of Europe and especially towards the United States of America.

"A wonderful change," wrote Bishop Percy to his wife at the beginning of June, "has taken place among republicans in the North, especially in and near Belfast. They now abhor the French as much as they formerly were partial to them, and are grown quite loyal. It is owing to the scurvy treatment which the French have shown to the United States of America, so beloved and admired by our northern republicans."

The battle of Ballinahinch completed the discomfiture of those faithful few who, having put their hand to the plough, refused to turn back. The rebels showed great courage, and between four and five hundred fell on the field of battle. No quarter was given by the troops, and nine or ten fugitives who were captured after the fight were at once hanged. The town of Ballinahinch was burnt to the ground, and its smoke, to use the expressive language of an eyewitness, rose to heaven like that of Sodom and Gomorrah.

But it was in and around Wexford that the most shocking scenes of the rebellion took place. Mr. Lecky endeavours to mete out justice with equal hand to both sides. He is full of sympathy for the wretched peasantry, half-maddened by tortures of the most horrible kind; but he is not blind to their crimes and the diabolical outrages they inflicted on unoffending persons. The conduct of the troops was execrable; but the fact that it was not universally so proves that it was not inevitable; and Mr. Lecky lays the blame in the right quarter when he attributes it to a shameful neglect of duty on the part of the commanding officers. But I think he allows his feelings to distort his judgment when he ascribes to the leaders of the United Irish movement a degree of guilt immeasurably greater than that which attaches to the perpetrators of the massacres of Scullabogue and Wexford Bridge. Thomas Emmet, Wolfe Tone, Arthur O'Connor, MacNevin, and the Sheares's may have been fanatics, and in my opinion they certainly mistook the character and sentiments of their countrymen; but they were not liars and murderers. No doubt they were anxious and laboured hard to induce the Roman Catholic peasantry to throw in their lot with them, and make common cause against their oppressor; and in order to effect their object they may have countenanced the rumour (though Mr. Lecky is not sufficiently convincing on this point) that the Orangemen had sworn to exterminate the Catholics. Mr. Lecky is persuaded that the rumour was a calumny; but men who had witnessed the Armagh persecutions, who had seen unoffending Catholics driven from house and home "to hell or Connaught" by men who were avowedly Orangemen, who had beheld the government conniving at their outrages and resisting every effort made to inquire into their conduct, may well have imagined that there was more truth in the rumour than there now appears to have been. Rebellion is doubtless a very serious matter, and grave responsibility attaches to those who wilfully involve their country in all its horrors; but malignant diseases demand violent remedies, and the cause of civil freedom owes too much to successful rebellion to allow us to raise our hands in pious horror at the wickedness of those who raise the standard of revolt against authority. When Mr. Lecky can convince us that the cause of civil liberty lay on the side of the government of Lord Clare, it will be time enough to stigmatize the United Irishmen as villains as well as madmen.

But apart from this it may, I think, very reasonably be questioned whether the rebellion was indeed, as Mr. Lecky would have us believe, the cause of throwing back the civilisation of Ireland for generations, or whether, on the contrary, it was not merely a symptom, and that perhaps not the worst, of the inevitable effect of long years of misgovernment, of neglected opportunities, and of social and religious tyranny. Moreover, I would ask in what way did the rebellion throw back the civilisation of Ireland for centuries? Was it the cause, or not merely the opportunity, of the Act of Union? Was it the reason why Catholic emancipation was delayed till it became a crying grievance and the fruitful mother of fresh grievances? Was it the cause of tithe agitation, of agrarian outrage, of setting class against class and creed against creed? If civilisation means the art of living together peacefully in communities and of developing one's own resources, in what way was it hindered and thrown back by a rebellion restricted in area to less than a quarter of the whole island? Does not the prosperity of Ulster, of Belfast—the very home and hot-bed of the movement, where the rebellion was suppressed with a severity scarcely surpassed even in Wexford—does not the crime and poverty prevalent elsewhere in districts untouched by the rebellion, point to other and more potent causes than the private animosities and feuds to which the rebellion gave birth?

But to pass on to the closing episode of the century, and to what is probably to most readers the most interesting portion of Mr. Lecky's narrative—the Act of Union. It is a subject on which public opinion has always been much divided, and round which the battle of party politics still rages fiercely. The causes which led to it, and the methods by which it was carried, have been severely criticised; the motives of those who advocated it and were chiefly responsible for it have been seriously impugned, and the character of the whole transaction has been held up to public execration. Mr. Lecky's clear and impartial statement of the case is calculated to remove many of the false and exaggerated impressions that are current on the subject, and in what I have to say I shall limit myself to a brief review of what appear to me to be the salient points in his narrative. Passing over, therefore, all matter of a preliminary and purely academic character, and coming at once to the causes of the Union, Mr. Lecky attributes the growth of the idea of a legislative union to a feeling of uncertainty and apprehension on the part of English statesmen as to the efficiency of the constitution of 1782, and to a desire on their part to strengthen the bonds that united the two countries, so that differences of opinion such as had arisen on the Commercial Propositions and the Regency Question, and which might possibly involve the safety of England, might be avoided in the future. But the opposition to such a scheme in Ireland, when the subject was distantly hinted at, was so great that he thinks it would have been impossible to have carried it had it not been for the rebellion. Public opinion on this point was so conclusive as to afford some ground for the charge that the English government had from the first deliberately promoted the rebellion for the purpose of carrying the Union. Mr. Lecky dismisses the accusation as too wildly extravagant to require lengthened refutation, but at the same time he gives prominence to the following remarkable paragraph from Newnham's State of Ireland:

"To affirm," writes Newnham, "that the government of Ireland facilitated the growth of the rebellion for the purpose of effecting the Union would be to hold language not perhaps sufficiently warranted by facts. But to affirm that the rebellion was kept alive for that purpose seems perfectly warrantable."

Perhaps the only considerable body of men who regarded the Union with feelings other than those of hostility or indifference were the United Irishmen. "In that measure," wrote Hamilton Rowan, "I see the downfall of one of the most corrupt assemblies I believe ever existed." In the Irish House of Commons, where the influence of the government had hitherto been practically paramount, the measure was defeated, notwithstanding the extreme pressure that was brought to bear on individual members. But though it was in consequence withdrawn for a season, the government never lost sight of it, and during the recess they strained every effort to convert their minority into a majority.

Of the means employed, Mr. Lecky speaks in no compromising terms.

"It is, I believe," he says, "scarcely an exaggeration to say that everything in the gift of the Crown in Ireland, in the Church, the army, the law, the revenue, was at this period uniformly and steadily devoted to the single object of carrying the Union. From the great noblemen who were bargaining for their marquisates and their ribbonds; from the Archbishop of Cashel, who agreed to support the Union on being promised the reversion of the see of Dublin, and a permanent seat in the Imperial House of Lords; the veins of corruption extended and descended through every fibre and artery of the political system, including crowds of obscure men who had it in their power to assist or obstruct addresses on the question."

Even direct money bribes formed part of the general scheme of corruption, though hardly, in Mr. Lecky's opinion, to the extent that has been alleged; and "it is probable," he adds, "that the greater part of the expenditure went in buying seats from members who were willing to vacate them, and in that case the transaction did not differ sensibly from the purchase of boroughs by the administration, which up to a still later period was undoubtedly practised in England."

Whether the end justified the means is a point on which Mr. Lecky's opinion seems to have undergone some modification, and on which I am compelled to dissent from him. Only on one ground, viz., that the Irish legislature was tainted with disloyalty, does he think that the policy of Pitt can be justified. That this was not the case is undoubtedly true; and from the time when Arthur O'Connor and Lord Edward Fitzgerald passed beyond its walls, the Irish Parliament probably did not contain a man who was really disaffected to the connexion. But I would venture to suggest that the loyalty of the Irish Parliament was neither so remarkable nor so important as its complete demoralisation and callous indifference to anything which did not directly concern its own privileges or those of the class from which it was chiefly drawn. Had it possessed more men of independent spirit, or had it listened to those it had, it might not, it is true, have followed so servilely the dictates of the English ministry; but there would have arisen no question of its abolition. But having surrendered its independence, and having ceased to represent the country, its existence was very properly terminated. To have restored things to their status quo would have been to hand Ireland over to the mercy of an arrogant and intolerant oligarchy; and it is an instructive fact that the only determined opposition to the measure should have come from the side of those who were already in the possession of power. The United Irishmen hailed it with satisfaction, the Catholics acquiesced in it, and the peasantry were perfectly indifferent to it. It was unfortunate that the Union was carried at a time when England also was passing through a similar crisis; but bad as has been the government of Ireland since the Union, it has seldom equalled in ferocity and incapacity that of Lord Clare, Speaker Foster, and Archbishop Agar.

The history of Ireland since the Union furnishes a curious commentary on the vanity of human wishes and the short-sightedness of human wisdom. In regard to Catholic Emancipation, Mr. Lecky is of opinion that Pitt could have carried his policy had he only, as he ought to have done, persevered at all hazards. "It is impossible," he says, "by any legitimate argument to justify his conduct, and it leaves a deep stain upon his character both as a statesman and a man." The judgment is a severe one, but I think it is justified by what we know of Pitt's character and the motives that animated him.

In conclusion, I would merely add that I have regarded Mr. Lecky's work as properly terminating at page 537. Of the last fifteen pages I desire to say nothing. The opinions expressed in them may, or they may not, be capable of justification; but I cannot help thinking that Mr. Lecky would have been better advised had he omitted them entirely.

R. DUNLOP.

NEW NOVELS.

A Daughter of the Pyramids. By Leith Derwent. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

In the Valley. By Harold Frederic. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Kestell of Greystone. By Esmé Stuart. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Maitland of Laurieston. By Annie S. Swan. (Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson & Co.)

Just a Love Story. By L. T. Meade. (Spencer Blackett.)

Jenny, A Village Idyl. By M. A. Curtois. (Eden Remington & Co.)

Sisters of Phaeton. By Florence C. Armstrong. (Ward & Downey.)

Rufin's Legacy. By W. Gerrare. (Hutchinson.)

MR. RIDER HAGGARD must look to his laurels. Here is Mr. Leith Derwent, in A Daughter of the Pyramids, not only appropriating his Egyptian thunder, but introducing us to people in the nineteenth century who began their lives thousands of years ago, in the days of Thothmes and Ramses. Mr. Raymond Guest is a young Englishman, apparently still in his first youth, but in reality five thousand years old; and we must say that he bears his age very well indeed. He began his life as a certain Maimun who dared to woo the beautiful Nitocris, the beloved of one of the Pharaohs. Terrible trouble ensued, all of which Mr. Guest is able to reproduce at will in the vaults of the Pyramids, to the bewilderment of an English doctor, a baronet, and a young lady, Miss Rose Vivian, who is really Nitocris in a later form. Guest is a magician who could give any number of points to Count Cagliostro. He can hypnotise whomsoever he chooses, and when his will is thwarted he can stretch his enemies on the ground by discharging the deadly electric fluid upon them. He seems, in fact, to be a walking battery of electricity. Some persons regard him as in league with the devil; and even Dr. Sancillon—the greatest vivisector of the age, and the most fearless of experimentalists—does not know what to make of him, and at length gives him up as a bad lot—a charlatan, an irredeemable villain, &c., &c. Guest professes to have discovered that dream of philosophers the elixir vitae, and several people become firm believers in his discovery. He shows to his disciples the Pharaohs of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Dynasties—including Seti and Ramses the Great, Kneph and Phthah, the Presiding Spirit and the Forming Intellect of Deity, and other marvels. In fact, we renew our acquaintance with all those wonderful literary properties which we were under the impression were the sole copyright of the author of She. Of course there are differences, because Mr. Leith Derwent has skilfully bridged over a great number of centuries, and used the old Egyptian idea of the transmigration of souls in a very striking manner. At the close of the narrative, the English baronet, who has been a pupil of Guest's, makes an end of the wicked magician in a terrible and decisive fashion. Mr. Leith Derwent has written a story evincing no small skill in the use of the imaginative faculty. His characters really seem to live before us, and that is no light tribute to pay to a novelist. What he intends to teach by his narrative is not quite so clear. Is it possible that he means to burlesque the whole school of writers who have recently endeavoured to revive the occult mysteries of the Egyptians?

Love and war form the staple elements of In the Valley. The time is just before and just after the American War of Independence, and the scene is laid in the Mohawk Valley. Mr. Frederic is to a considerable extent justified in his condemnation of the callousness and fatuity of British statesmen at that critical period; but he has scarcely the same reason for making the settlers patterns of all the virtues and British officers worthless scoundrels. However, we must remember that novelists have their license; and, making allowance for this, the story is admirably told, and the characters are extremely well drawn. Daisy Stewart is a delightful heroine, who was deserving of a better fate than being tied to such a reprobate as Philip Cross. It is a positive relief when he gets swept tragically off the human stage, and Douw Mauverensen, who has loved Daisy from childhood, and is in every way worthy of her, is at length able to make her his wife. It seems incredible that hate and jealousy should be carried to such lengths in the human breast as they were in the case of Philip Cross. Under the influence of these passions he is guilty of the grossest and most diabolical treachery. In some of the personages of this novel the blood of the Stuart Pretender, the Duke of Albany, flows; and the stream, which was muddy enough at first, does not become any clearer as it proceeds. Mr. Frederic graphically describes the scalping expeditions of the Indians in the Mohawk Valley, and his relation is one of thrilling interest. The historical part of the novel is generally accurate, and the story is one that must be pursued to the end when it is once begun.

The first volume of Kestell of Greystone consists of 340 closely printed pages; the second of 326; and the third of 325. What has the critic done to make his lot so hard? If it were not for its inordinate length, however, there would be nothing to complain of with regard to this story. It is much above the average, and, indeed, in some parts is powerfully written. The leading character, Kestell, stands out in bold relief. The picture of the old family solicitor who has come into great wealth through valuable discoveries made on his lands, but who at the same time lives with the sword of Damocles suspended over his head, is very effective, while his end is really touching. Kestell has taken the inheritance which rightly belonged to two orphans, and has brought them up as dependents upon his charity. This he has done mainly for the sake of his wife and his own children, whom he passionately loves. But every day and every year only adds to the sum of his agony, and he knows that the inevitable exposure must come sooner or later. It is at length discovered that Jesse Vicary, whom Kestell is supposed to have rescued from the workhouse, is the actual owner of the valuable property which Kestell has for so long enjoyed. Kestell's daughters, Elva and Amice, are noble girls, with far higher aspirations than the world at large gives them credit for. The former, after many vicissitudes, is married to Hoel Fenner, the literary critic, who proves to be better than he seems. In early days he has reviewed an immature novel of his wife's, and told the author that no one is entitled to write who has not learnt by suffering. She resents the bitter lesson at first, but lives to learn its truth. We will condone the length of this story on the ground of its distinct ability, praying the writer to study concentration in her next novel.

Maitland of Laurieston is—well, we do not know that we can say anything else than that it is like Annie Swan's other books. It is readable enough, but shows no particular talent or originality. In fact, it is the kind of work that a writer might go on repeating for ever when once he or she had got into the particular groove. We would not be unjust, nevertheless; and we frankly admit that some of the characters in this family history of the Lauriestons are drawn with a keen appreciation of certain Scotch characteristics. But an author does not convey the impression that she only writes because she must when she forgets the physical or other peculiarities of her own creations. Here is a description of the chief character, Margaret Maitland, on the very first page of the work: "There was an air of ladyhood about her, though she wore a white cooking-apron, and though her well-shaped hands were neither white nor fine." Alas, for our authoress, it is only on p. 37 that this same Margaret raises her "white, soft hand," and smooths back the hair from her son's forehead. This may seem a trivial mistake, but from the critic's point of view it is not. John Maitland and Agnes Laurie are fine characters, and so is Margaret herself, and they invest the book with a distinct personal charm.

Miss Meade has never written a prettier sketch than Just a Love Story. This author occupies quite a niche by herself, and if it be not high or great, it is at least a true and natural one. Her latest little heroine, Patty Beaufort, wins our sympathies from the outset. The way she watches over and idolises her father, believing his efforts in verse to rank with the sublimest creations of Shakspeare and Milton, is very pathetic; and all the time she is consumed with anxiety as to how the next quarter's rent and the gas and water bills are to be met. These sublunary matters were altogether beneath the notice of the great Mr. Beaufort himself. His relations with the publishers would be amusing but for their more serious aspect. The poet is always on the eve of producing "something vigorous, unique, magnificent." Passing by his roseate dreams, it is quite a pleasure when an ideal knight comes forward to woo and win Patty for his own. The Cinderella of the Beaufort household gains the love and the position which she deserves, and everybody is made happy.

Jenny is a kind of story whose production we should deprecate were it not for the pathos surrounding the life of the principal character. It is Jenny Salter and her troubles, with her patient heroism and affection, which redeem the narrative, and lift it out of the commonplace. Otherwise, from the literary point of view, there is little to be said for this transcript of Lincolnshire life.

An extraordinary book is the Sisters of Phaeton. Two girls, the adopted daughters of a country squire, are left at his death with no resources save his bequest to them of his stable and horses. The latter are very fine and numerous; and after much cogitation the young ladies resolve to start two private omnibuses to ply through clubland in London, the principal street in their route being Pall Mall. The young ladies drive their own teams, being protected by faithful male servants. Of course they make a prodigious sensation and a great deal of money, but they never lose their charming womanliness through it all. How the romance ends the reader must discover for himself.

Rufin's Legacy is a theosophical romance, over which the reader may sup full of horrors. The narrative of the girl Xenia is very singular; but as the leading incidents of it form the principal feature of the book, it would be unfair to reveal them. There is some amount of power in the story; but we have a suspicion that this kind of thing, with all the apparatus of Russian secret societies, is being overdone.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

GIFT BOOKS.

A Southern Cross Fairy Tale. By Kate McCosh Clark. Illustrated by R. Atkinson and the Author. (Sampson Low.) To "parents and guardians," and all other intending donors of Christmas books to little folk, we commend this handsome volume. Under the thin guise of a journey through fairy-land, the accomplished author gives a vivid and winsome picture of Christmas at the Antipodes, where Jack Frost is deposed, and where the children deck the table with scarlet passion-flowers and white rosebuds instead of with red-berried holly. Mrs. Clark wields both pen and pencil skilfully, telling her story in unaffected, charming English, and brightening the text with delicately reproduced drawings of bird and flowers and general features of New Zealand landscape. We must not omit reference to a graceful poem called "The Children's Hour" with which the book is prefaced.

The Doyle Fairy-Book. (Dean.) Few Christmas books will be more heartily welcomed than this collection of fairy-tales, drawn from various sources, and illustrated by Doyle's charming sketches. The stories are not the mere casual, spontaneous inventions of writers of children's stories. They possess a semi-scientific significance, as forming part of the folklore of different foreign nations and races; and this aspect of them is drawn out in an interesting preface by a member of the Folklore Society, who points out their affinities and variants. To add to the value of the book, as well as to the appropriateness of its title, we have a brief but interesting memoir of "Dick" Doyle himself, illustrated by a life-like portrait. The book does credit to its publishers, and will be eagerly read by at least three different classes of persons: (1) children fond of fairy-tales for themselves; (2) folklorists engaged in collecting and classifying such stories; (3) admirers of Doyle's graceful and fantastic pencil. Formal commendation of a book possessing such high and varied credentials seems superfluous.

Maori and Settler. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie.) Mr. Henty tries a fresh field in this admirable book for boys, which is a story of the New Zealand War; and, as usual, with perfect success. He begins in a somewhat commonplace fashion by compelling the Renshaws, through financial ruin, to emigrate to New Zealand about the time that the difficulties with the Maoris began. But when once they actually reach the Antipodes, Mr. Henty warms to his work. Wilfrid Renshaw, the son of the family, is all that is frank and plucky; while his sister Marion is, to say the least, quite worthy of him. They would have fared rather badly, however, if they had not had at their back the gigantic strength of Mr. Atherton—an energetic, prosperous, but rather too stout, settler, who, of course, marries Marion in the long run. Mr. Henty, although he supplies his readers with an abundance of hair-breadth escapes, is always very careful in matters of historical detail. The Hau-Hau troubles, in particular, are admirably depicted.

In the Enemy's Country. By Anna H. Drury. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This is a story of 1813. The time is well chosen. The nations were then beginning to shake off their faith that Napoleon was invincible. Miss Drury deals with the popular rising in Steinbrück, and describes how it owed its success to a little English boy, known as the Raven of Steinbrück. The author tells her story with remarkable skill, and nothing can be more exciting than the manner in which the Raven wiles away the French General's time, while the English and the Prussians are marching on the town. The general threatens Arthur (the Raven) with a flogging:

"Very well," said Arthur, "I'll try and brave it. I say," with a sudden flush on his thin cheek, "Ask him how long they'll be about it, will you?" The question seemed to amuse the general mightily. That so small a morsel of humanity should stand there asking questions was irresistibly droll. "Well, we wouldn't hurry you," he said, "three-quarters of an hour might do the business." "Three-quarters of an hour—that will do! Please begin." And in perfect good faith he began to pull off his jacket. In the act of so doing, his attention was suddenly arrested, and he stood as if turned into stone.

The sight that Arthur sees are two brave Germans and the English doctor led out to be shot by the French. The reader's interest in this capital story shall not, however, be marred by any premature disclosures. The young Russian, Epinay, at the opening of the book a mere selfish dandy, who becomes at the close something very like a hero, is a figure drawn to the life. This book can be highly recommended to readers of all ages who can appreciate an historical tale well told. The woodcuts are excellent, and add a charm to a delightful story.

Coral and Cocoa-Nut. By F. F. Moore. (S.P.C.K.) The cruise of a yacht to Samoa enables Mr. Moore to delight boys with his sketches of sea-life and a hurricane off Apia Harbour, which recalls the escape of H.M.S. Calliope in the same waters. The book is none the worse for the scene with the interpreter before the King of Samoa, recalling a well-known passage in Eothen; but it is perhaps perilous for a story-teller to introduce a fight with a gigantic octopus after Victor Hugo's masterpiece. These adventurous pages are well-illustrated by Mr. Overend.

Up North in a Whaler. by E. A. Rand (Hutchinson), is another capital book for boys, with a moral tone highly to be commended. Snows, icebergs, and whales form a fitting background for episodes on the history of Greenland, Franklin's tragic voyage, and the escape of the crew of the Polaris. Boys had better not read it, however, before a competitive examination, as "harbor," "color," and "endeavored" will not pass muster in England.

From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet. by Dr. Macaulay (Hutchinson), is a carefully-written life of that typical sailor Commodore Anson. It has been written before by Sir J. Barrow, while Anson's voyage round the world is likewise well-known from the narrative of his chaplain Walters. Still, Anson's example, his perseverance, fertility of resources, and devotion to duty, render his life peculiarly useful to boys, especially those who are adopting a seafaring occupation. Dr. Macaulay has performed his task creditably. He is neither dull nor diffuse. All boys may be advised to know something of the voyage of the Centurion.

Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep. By Gordon Stables. (S.P.C.K.) Life in the merchant service is here painted. There are storms, sharks, another octopus, and a mutiny. The hero's adventures are thrilling, and the teaching of the book unexceptionable. Few will agree, however, with the author that there is no beauty or romance in London or on the Thames. J. W. M. Turner, to name only one painter, found plenty of both; and has Mr. Stables never read Wordsworth's Sonnet written on Westminster Bridge?

Charlie to the Rescue. By R. M. Ballantyne. (Nisbet.) To judge from the title-page of this book, Mr. Ballantyne is a prolific author of "Gift books," but estimating his accomplishments by this particular production, we have no hesitation in saying that he has the art of story-telling still to learn. The book is a strange and disjointed narrative of a series of adventures, partly at sea, partly in the Rocky Mountains and the Wild West. That the book has a good moral, or that it is designed to subserve the cause of temperance, is no excuse for bad literary form.

Rix Raynor, Artist. By J. K. Hocking. (Frederick Warne.) This is a very creditable and pathetic story by an old hand at such productions. The characters, though mostly commonplace, are natural and well-drawn. The main interest of the book appears to us to centre not in Rix Raynor, the hero, but in his real mother, Jane Raynor, whose irresistible temptation with its consequences is well told. The tone of the book is manly and genuinely Christian. We have no hesitation in warmly commending it.

Rollica Reed. By Eliza Kerr. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This curiously named but very charming heroine is a kind of Cinderella in the house of Mr. Hamilton, where she is despised and trampled on in the usual orthodox manner by Mrs. Hamilton and her selfish daughters. How, after many trials and lapses in forbearance, for which her circumstances afford unusual scope, she finally emerges into good fortune and happiness, and marries the prince of the story, we must leave our young readers to discover. It might be cynical to express a fear that in actual life all the meek and quiet spirits like Rollica Reed do not invariably achieve wealth and happiness, at least in the usually accepted sense of these words.

The Stronger Will. By E. E. Green. (Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson & Co.) This is a charming and touching story. "The Stronger Will" is that of Florence Tenant, a most captivating heroine, which, after much quiet persistence and tenacity of purpose, ultimately overcomes the strong will of her guardian, Mr. Cadwallader, and compels him to accept and adopt the rightful heir to his property. The combination of tact and indomitable resolution by which the more masterful as well as better will accomplishes its purpose is well told. We can heartily recommend the book.

True of Heart. By Kay Spen. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The plot of this story is a trifle complicated, and more personages are brought on the stage than is needful for its elucidation; but the book is undeniably interesting, and without being morbid is genuinely pathetic. The narrative of the gradual transformation of Marion Harcourt from a selfish, wayward child to a good, self-denying woman is well told. The author manifests a considerable insight into the humours and inconsistencies of human nature, and the incidents and perplexities in which he delights are the simple and natural ones which amused Jane Austen. Indeed, the book has reminded us more than once of that gifted author.

Sunbeams on my Path. By Ebba J. D. Wright. (Nisbet.) The authoress, a native of Stockholm, and daughter of Dr. Almqvist, director of the Swedish Royal Mint, has found her life brightened by shedding brightness on the lives of others. She served as a nurse at Scutari in the Crimean War, and, having married an English continental chaplain, saw something of the wars of 1866 and 1870-1. Perhaps the most interesting chapters in her little book are those relating to religious life in Stockholm.

In Scorn of Consequence. By Theodora Corrie. (S.P.C.K.) This is an interesting and, on the whole, well-told story; but it is needlessly marred by an unhappy denouement. Giles Hetherington, who is a rare and noble character, had certainly endured quite enough to satisfy the claims of the book's motto, qui patitur vincit, without having a promising and useful existence prematurely cut short. The author seems a pessimist, whom we should strongly recommend to leave her pen and extra black ink untouched until she can relieve her sombre pages with a little more sunshine. It may be right to have our feelings occasionally harrowed, for the reason by which Aristotle justifies and commends tragedy, viz., the purification of our feelings by the combined action of pity and terror; but writers should remember that there is danger in a too frequent recourse to drastic doses of this remedy. Feelings too often lacerated become callous. Whether the increasing number of these moody stories may be taken as symptomatic of a growth in pessimism we would not undertake to say; but that the increase is a fact we fully believe,

Life of Joseph Sturge. By Alexandrina Peckover. (Sonnenschein.) The example of a noble life cannot be too often held up to admiration. Mr. Richard's biography of Sturge having long been out of print, this shorter account of the Quaker philanthropist will be gratefully received by many who knew him and by the generation which has grown up since Sturge's death. What he was in his lifetime can be gathered from a remark made in Birmingham when he died, in 1859: "Birmingham has lost its best friend."

Igdrasil: Journal of the Ruskin Reading Club. Vol. I. January to September, 1890. (George Allen.) Although there is some mention of Igdrasil in the pages of both Carlyle and Ruskin, not "every schoolboy knows" that it is the ash tree of existence, at whose foot, in the kingdom of death, sit three Nornas, and whose boughs are Histories of Nations. Why the editors of this Journal should have gone back to Norse mythology to find a suitable title for their book is explained in its first pages. It expresses their idea of "the indissoluble copartnership of all generations and all individuals in the human race." The Journal is made up of lectures, essays, reviews, and notes—in which, of course, Ruskiniana predominate. It is the record of the efforts made by a circle of earnest, educated men to think out the problems which this age has to solve. The language employed seems to us to differ sometimes from the common speech of men, and there is an esoteric tone about the whole book which may irritate outsiders. When we are told that a "true definition of wealth is the possession of the valuable by the valiant," we cannot help fearing that the phrase was influenced by the alliteration employed, and our conception is not assisted thereby. The editors, perhaps, are ignorant that there are still not a few who, though they respect and admire Mr. Ruskin, do not regard him as infallible, and, while they admit his services to art and literature, protest against some of his phraseology. As an instance, take "walls of the cleanablest." Our language is not enriched by such an expression; and its employment almost justifies the perpetrator of that successful hoax—the "Chesterfield letter"—which these pages have rescued from the oblivion into which it had deservedly fallen.

How London Lives. By W. J. Gordon. (Religious Tract Society.) Few Londoners know anything of the multitudinous social and industrial wheels which must day by day revolve with the utmost regularity in order that the great city may be fed, cleansed, and lighted aright. Mr. Gordon here gives an admirable account of all this, together with chapters on the London police, the General Post Office, and other institutions. It will be read with avidity by all who are fond of looking into the mysteries of civilisation. The statistics are abundant and striking; but no one can tell whether they are not ten or twenty years old, for there is no date on the book's title-page or preface. This is the more deplorable as the book is both well written and well illustrated.

The Triumphs of Modern Engineering. By H. Frith. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Another interesting book, which is also maimed by the omission of any date on its title-page. It must, however, be brought fairly up to date, for it gives account of the Forth and Tay Bridges, the Manchester Ship Canal, and the progress made in cutting the isthmus of Panama. No better present could be found for a parochial reading-room or an intelligent lad.

Seven Idols. By F. E. Reade. (S.P.C.K.) These idols consist of seven sins against the First Commandment. They are exemplified in a school-girl story, which all girls may read with advantage.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that the new edition of Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, which has been for so many years in preparation, is now practically finished; and that the first of the two volumes of which it will now consist may be expected before Christmas. It will bear on its title-pages the names of three editors—Dr. William Smith, the Rev. W. Wayte (some time professor of Greek at University College, London), and Mr. G. E. Marindin. It will contain about 800 pages more than the last edition (1848). One-third of the old articles have been re-written entirely; and about two hundred articles have been added, together with 450 new illustrations. The publisher, of course, is Mr. John Murray.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press The Poets and Poetry of the Century, in ten volumes, under the editorship of Mr. Alfred H. Miles. It will consist of selections from the British poets of the century, together with signed critical articles on them. Volumes I., II., and IV. will appear at once. They will contain articles on Byron by Mr. Roden Noel; on Mr. Swinburne, by Mr. Arthur Symonds; on Mr. William Morris, by Mr. Buxton Forman; and on Sir Aubrey De Vere and Mr. Theodore Watts, by Mr. Mackenzie Bell. Among future contributors, we may mention the names of Mr. J. A. Symonds, Mr. Austin Dobson, Mr. Joseph Knight, Mr. W. E. Henley, Mr. J. A. Noble, and Mr. R. Le Gallienne.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN will issue shortly Mr. Hall Caine's much-discussed play "Mahomet." The public will therefore have an opportunity of judging the propriety of a work upon this subject being presented on the stage.

MR. GEORGE SAINTSBURY has collected into a volume, to be published shortly by Messrs. Percival & Co., the critical articles on various English authors, from Crabbe to Borrow, which he contributed during the past four years to Macmillan's Magazine. The volume will be entitled Essays in English Literature, 1780-1860. It will have an introductory paper on "The Kinds of Criticism"; and an appendix, discussing some questions concerning De Quincey and Lockhart which have presented themselves since the original publication.

THE next volume in the series of "Great Writers" will be a Life of Thackeray, to be published in January. This biography was begun by Mr. Herman Merivale, who, however, found himself unable to finish it before leaving England; and it has been completed by Mr. Frank T. Marzials. It will contain information, especially with regard to Thackeray's early life, not hitherto published.

WE understand that Lucas Malet's new novel, The Waves of Sin, which has been announced for some time, will be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. next Monday.

Othello, the new volume of Messrs. Cassell's "International Shakspeare," will be issued in a few days. It will be illustrated with twelve photogravures after original drawings by Mr. Frank Dicksee, and with head and tail pieces from designs by Mr. Lewis F. Day. Prof. Dowden furnishes an introduction.

THE publication of "The Letters of S.G.O. to the 'Times'" has been postponed until the middle of January.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week the following new books: Our Fields and Cities, by Mr. Scrivener C. Scrivener, consisting of urban and agricultural studies, with two plans; a volume of essays on Emigration and Immigration, by Prof. Smith; in the "Adventure" series—The Buccaneers and Marooners of America, edited and illustrated by Mr. Howard Pyle; and in the "Pseudonym Library"—The Story of Eleanor Lambert, by Magdalen Brooke.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. have in the press a work entitled The Sacrifice of Praise: a Manual for Communicants. It contains the Litany, Holy Communion, Proper Collects, Epistles and Gospels, Eucharistic Psalms and Hymns, &c., with simple notes on the ritual, and other matters connected with the services. It will be published uniformly with The Churchman's Altar Manual.

The second annual issue of the Public Schools Year Book, to be published immediately by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. will contain a considerable amount of additional matter, including chapters on Woolwich, Sandhurst, Cooper's Hill, and H.M.S. Britannia.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. will publish in a few days Old-Time Punishments, by Mr. William Andrews. One of the chapters is entitled "Punishing Authors and Burning Books."

MR. H. K. LEWIS will publish immediately a translation of Book I. of the Annals of Tacitus, by Mr. Edward S. Weymouth.

LADY VIOLET GREVILLE and Mr. W. Davenport Adams have been appointed acting editor of Life. Mr. W. Davenport Adams will, in addition, be responsible for the management of the paper.

SEVERAL of Thackeray's MSS. and sketches belonging to his school days were purchased at Sotheby's sale last week for Charterhouse. The Holiday Ode—a copy of Latin verses, an album of school sketches, and one or two caricatures of his schoolfellows, together with his Greek Lexicon (illustrated!) will find their resting-place in his old school, side by side with the MS. of The Newcomes, which was generously presented to Charterhouse twenty years ago by his daughter. The newly-acquired sketches will doubtless be reproduced from time to time in The Greyfriar, the school illustrated magazine, which has already issued the "adsum" page of The Newcomes, and some unpublished sketches.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. have purchased the greater part of the oriental library of the late Sir Henry Yule, and will issue a catalogue of it at an early date.

On Monday and Tuesday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of those modern books which are at present most sought after by the English bibliophile, described as "removed from Bayswater." Here are to be found first editions of Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Harrison Ainsworth, nearly one hundred books illustrated by Cruikshank, Mr. George Meredith's novels complete in thirty-one volumes, and his rare early volume of poems Modern Love (1862). On Wednesday and Thursday they will also sell a large and interesting collection of MSS. and autographs, among which we may specially mention a Jeames paper by Thackeray and an early poem of Mr. Swinburne's, both unpublished.

THE next meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held in the Battersea Public Library, Lavender Hill, S.W., on Monday, December 8, at 8 p.m., when Mr. Inkster, the librarian, will read a paper on "The Battersea Public Libraries."

THE second series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday next, December 7, at 4 p.m., at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, when Sir James Crichton Browne will lecture on "Brain Stress." Lectures will subsequently be given by Mr. Whitworth Wallis, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. Eric S. Bruce, Dr. Henry Hoole, Sir R. S. Ball, and Prof. G. S. Boulger.

WE congratulate the Rev. E. D. Price, the editor of Hazell's Annual (Hodder & Stoughton), on having brought out his "cyclopaedic record of men and topics of the day" by the first week in December, though it contains occurrences up to November 27. It is not only an invaluable book of reference for current events—precisely those which are often the most difficult to ascertain; but it is also an interesting record of public opinion, as showing what subjects this intelligent editor thinks that his readers want to know about. For examples, among the features of the new volume are—an addition of some two hundred new biographies; special attention to colonial matters; and (as the ACADEMY is more particularly bound to note) long and instructive articles upon such subjects as "Biblical Archaeology" and "Hittites."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. F. T. PALGRAVE has been re-elected to the chair of poetry at Oxford, for a second term of five years, in accordance with custom.

THE sermon preached in the chapel of Queen's College, Oxford, on November 2, by Dr. Thorold, bishop-designate of Winchester—an honorary fellow of the college, and now its visitor—has been printed for private circulation. The occasion was the celebration of the five-hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the college; and the provost, Dr. Magrath, has appropriately added some historical notes, showing the evidence for the residence in the college of both Wyclif and Henry V., and also giving dates and brief facts about some of its other distinguished alumni—Bishops Barlow, Gibson, Van Mildert, and Thomas; Addison, Tickell, Collins, and Bentham; Halley, the astronomer; and Richard Cecil, the evangelical divine.

AN interesting sign of combination among the colleges at Oxford is the publication of a Classified List of Periodicals and Serial Works taken in by the College Libraries. It does not apparently include either the Bodleian or the Taylorian Institution.

AT the meeting of the Cambridge Philological Society, held on Thursday, December 4, Mr. Conway was to read a paper on, "The Origin of the Latin Passive, illustrated by a recently-discovered Inscription."

MR. F. R. BENSON's company has been giving a series of performances this week at Oxford of Shaksperian plays.

THE council of the University College of North Wales has just purchased for the college library the well-known collection of books belonging to Mr. E. Watkin, of Manchester (formerly of Pwllheli). It consists of upwards of 10,000 volumes, many of which are works relating to botany, chemistry, geology, and other departments of science.

TRANSLATION.

MICHEL ANGELO'S SONNET, "SE UN CASTO AMOR."

If one pure love, one common joy, one pain,
One heavenly pity, and one destiny
Shared by two lovers in equality,
One spirit for two hearts' sole sovereign;
One soul immortal made in bodies twain,
In equal flight each winging to the sky;
And if one fire, one shaft that straight will fly
Home to two hearts, and there will quick remain;
If self-love's death (each loving other solely,
Love being the one desired wage of Love,
And each forestalling the least wish soever,
By each in mutual sway enthralled wholly)
If these of quenchless faith the tokens prove;—
Say, when shall Scorn so fast a knot dis sever?

OLIVER ELTON.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM BELL SCOTT, LL.D., H.R.S.A.

THE death, on November 22, of William Bell Scott, at the age of seventy-nine, breaks one of the few last links between two generations of poets and painters.

His published poems range over half a century—from the rhapsody "To the Memory of P. B. Shelley," written in 1831 and published two years later in Tait's Magazine, to the volume called A Poet's Harvest Home, now but eight years old. Except for the last few years, when his failing health prevented much exertion, he has been singing and painting amongst through all this time, not seeking to attract notice to himself or his work, but nevertheless doing it with all his might, and exercising no little influence over others. Till the very last his interest in the twin arts of design and portrait never ceased, nor yet his affection for his many true friends. A later "Harvest Home," an "aftermath" of verses, was among his latest projects; and as long as he could hold a pen he would use it to write charming letters to his friends, letters which to the last retained their fresh feeling and intellectual vigour.

William Bell Scott was born at St. Leonards, Edinburgh, on September 12, 1811. He was the son of Robert Scott, the best Scottish engraver of his day, and the master of John Burnet and other celebrated pupils. Those who have read William Scott's loving memoir of his elder brother David will know that his father was also a stern Calvinist, and that their home was one where "merriment was but another name for folly." William possessed probably a more serene temperament than David, whose strong but incomplete genius produced the fine designs to Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner"; and he at all events lived long enough for his clear intellect to dissipate the spiritual gloom of his childhood. But if he attained the equal mind it was not without strife; and his cheerfulness, constant and penetrating as it was, had always a tinge of gravity, if not of sadness. Though he discarded the depressing tenets of his father's faith, he could not escape from the strong sense of the supernatural that was probably born and bred in him; and however freshly and brightly he learnt to look upon men and things, he always saw them against a background of mystery. This tendency was not, perhaps, a little increased by the book which, in their father's library, took the greatest hold of the imagination of David and himself—the "Grave" of Blair, or, rather, the designs of Blake with which the volume was illustrated. No better proof can be found of the strength of these early tendencies than his poem of "Anthony," old enough to have been read by Christopher North, nor of their permanence than its re-publication in the Poems of 1875, with the weird etching of "Pax Vobiscum," after a design by his brother David.

Scott was educated at the High School in Edinburgh, and received his first lessons in art from his father. He afterwards attended classes at the Trustees' Academy at Edinburgh, and in 1832 continued his studies by drawing from the antique sculpture in the British Museum. He returned to Edinburgh, and published some of his earliest poems in Tait's Magazine and a little brochure called The Edinburgh University Souvenir (1834). He settled in London in 1836, and in 1840 began to send pictures to London exhibitions. His first appearance was in Suffolk-street, his subject being "The Jester." In the next year he sent to the British Institution "Bellringers and Cavaliers celebrating the Entrance of Charles II. into London," and in 1842 began his few contributions to the Royal Academy with a picture of "Chaucer with John of Gaunt and the Two Sisters, their Wives." Twenty in all was the modest total of the pictures which he exhibited in London, the last being at the Royal Academy in 1869. The subjects of all were historical or poetical, including "King Arthur carried to the Land of Enchantment," "The Trial of Sir William Wallace," "Una and the Lion," and "The Border Widow." Scott was one of the artists who sent a cartoon to the competition in Westminster Hall in 1843 for the decoration of the Houses of Parliament; and though he was unsuccessful, he appears to have about this time attracted some attention, as he shortly afterwards was requested by the Board of Trade to undertake the establishment of the Government School of Art at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he remained for about twenty years. He then returned to London, living for a while at Notting Hill, and afterwards in his well-known house in Cheyne-walk, Chelsea. It was in the north that he executed his most important work as a painter, which employed him for five years. This was a series of eight large pictures at Wallington Hall, the seat of Sir Walter Trevelyan, illustrating the history of the English Border. The decoration of the Hall was afterwards completed by eighteen oil pictures in the spandrels, which vigorously illustrated the ballad of "Chevy Chase." A later series of mural decorations, illustrating James I. of Scotland's poem of "The King's Quair," was executed at Penkill Castle, Ayrshire (the seat of his friend, Miss Boyd, where he died). A volume containing reproductions of the designs for these pictures was one of the artist's last gifts to his friends. To the public these important works of his at Wallington and Penkill are little known. It is of the designs for Wallington that the late M. Ernest Chesneau wrote in his well-known work on painting in England:

"Il y a là de beaux motifs et bien composés pour entrer dans les lignes de l'architecture. Mr. William Scott, trop peu connu même en Angleterre, est assurément l'un des rares artistes anglais qui ont l'intelligence la plus haute de la dignité de l'histoire."

William Bell Scott's literary works were many and various, but they began and ended with poverty. His first volume of verse was Hades, an Ode (1838), followed by The Year of the World (1846), and the important Poems of a Painter (1854). It is, however, by his later volumes that he wished to be judged as a poet—the carefully selected and revised Poems of 1875, with etchings by Mr. Alma-Tadema and himself; and the Harvest Home (1882), perhaps the freshest and blitheest volume of verses ever written by so old a man. But his other writings were numerous. He was one of the contributors to the Germ, and for some years one of the most valued of the staff of the ACADEMY, and published many volumes of art criticism and biography. Among these the most important were his Memoir of David Scott (1850), Half-hour Lectures on Art (1861), Albert Dürer, his Life and Works (1869), and The Little Masters, in the "Great Artists" Series (1879).

Scott's retirement from the school at Newcastle did not sever his connexion with South Kensington. Till 1865 he remained one of their examiners. Nor did he altogether abandon painting, his last easel picture of importance being "The Norns watering Yggdrasil," the subject of one of his finest ballads, and of an etching which has been published in (we think) English Etchings.

It has been well remarked that if Scott has "left any Recollections behind him, the work would form a most interesting addition to nineteenth-century literature." He not only knew nearly everybody, young or old, of any importance in literature and art, but he had been a moving spirit among them, especially among those connected with the pre-Raphaelite movement. He was an intimate friend of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and they had a mutual and strong influence on each other's work. It is not here that we can estimate Scott's position either as a painter or a poet; but this at least may be said, that amidst the strong currents of artistic thought and feeling with which he was so long surrounded, he retained his individuality unimpaired. His poems, especially perhaps, were the pure expression of himself, essentially unlike those of another man. Their sincerity and simplicity will probably make them outlast the work of many men whose reputation exceeded his in his lifetime, and will, at all events, ever endear his name to those who feel within them the beat of the strong and tender heart which now beats no more.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

GEORGE BELL.

ON Thursday, November 27, at the age of seventy-six, one of the truest gentlemen and kindest-hearted men I have ever known left this world in the person of the retired publisher, George Bell.

Daniel Macmillan first told me of him at Cambridge in the year 1843, saying that he trusted Bell's judgment as a bookseller and his uprightness as a man more than those of any one in the trade; and Bell valued for Macmillan in his purchase of Newby's and Stevenson's businesses. Later, in London, I made George Bell's acquaintance at his pretty country-house—as it might then be fairly called—at the top of Primrose Hill Road, and we soon became friends. His knowledge, his kindness and gentleness, his desire to help all workers for good, made everyone respect and like him. He was the son of a farmer near Richmond in Yorkshire, and he took a keen interest in his Hampstead cows, pigs, pony, poultry, dogs and cats, as well as in his lawn, flowers, and kitchen-garden. Soon after his twenty-one years' lease ran out, he had to move to a more urban residence in Hampstead Hill Gardens, and missed his live-stock and meadow.

He was cautious and sound in business, averse to show and notoriety, and everyone trusted him. Besides his own large London business, with Bohn's Libraries, &c., &c., he bought Deighton's business at Cambridge and Whittingham's Chiswick Press. He did good service by issuing cheap editions of his best books. When I asked him how he could manage to issue his Aldine Poets nicely bound at 1s. 6d. a volume—1s. 1d. at discount prices—he said that he was content with a halfpenny profit on each volume; he knew the books were good, and he wanted people to read them. At my request, he asked Dr. Richard Morris to re-edit Chaucer's Works in the Aldine Series; he re-issued his Keightley's Shakspeare at 2s. a volume instead of 6s.; he collected into one volume at 2s. 6d. Mr. Watkiss Lloyd's excellent Essays on the Plays, and he at once agreed to publish Mrs. Sutherland Orr's Handbook to Browning's Works, which she wrote at my suggestion. Mr. Bell, also at my desire, took up the Old-Spelling Shakspeare, in conjunction with the New Shakspeare Society—a book which I, alas, have so long delayed. He did me a great personal service too in connexion with our negotiations with the Clarendon Press for the publication of the Philological Society's New English Dictionary. He was a great helper of the Boys' Home in Regent's Park Road, and always backed his clergyman in every good work in his parish.

When I last met him at the Great Northern Station in August of the present year, taking tickets for his favourite Whitby, he looked so bright and happy that I hoped he had twenty years' more life in him. But it was not to be. He has gone; and he leaves behind him no more genuine, no truer, and kinder-hearted man than he was himself.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE December Expositor is, perhaps, in sympathy with the season. Bright and hopeful, though in no bad sense rhetorical, as Prof. Bennett's discourse on the Old Testament is, and much as one may appreciate Dr. Plummer's Recollections of Döllinger, it must be said that Prof. Beet's treatment of the New Testament teaching on future punishment, and Dr. Perowne's notes on Genesis, are of a somewhat narrow type. We hope that when the Bishop-Designate of Worcester gets clear of the shoals in the exegesis of the early chapters of Genesis, he will speak out more forcibly and with more critical impartiality. Mr. Peyton's affected style is irritating. "The Hebrew problem of the future," "An alliance in Jerusalem would provincialize the spiritual religion," "Miracles are a tyranny." Not so do great theologians write. And what is the use of liberal generalities such as, "We wait for a genius like that of John . . . a genius of distillation and unification." Why not, as Carlyle said to Stanley, "do the work that lies nearest to you"? Perhaps you will then be able to dispense with heaven-sent deliverers. At any rate, the exegesis of our Lord's second temptation is not much served by Mr. Peyton's exciting oratory.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CHAMBRUN, Le Comte de. Ælia: une étude d'esthétique. Paris: Chamerot. 5 fr.
EYSENHARDT, F. Italien. Schilderungen alter u. neuer Dichter. Hamburg: Gräfe. 5 M.
HAHN, L. Fürst Bismarck. Sein polit. Leben u. Wirken. Fortgeführt v. C. Wippermann. 5. Bd. 1885–1890. Berlin: Besser. 11 M.
HOLZ, A. Die Kunst, ihr Wesen u. ihre Gesetze. Berlin: Issele. 3 M. 50 Pf.
JOUIN, H. David d'Angers et ses relations littéraires. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
MATLEKOVITS, A. v. Die Zollpolitik der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie u. d. deutschen Reiches seit 1808 u. deren nächste Zukunft. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 21 M.
WOLFFLIN, H. Die Jugendwerke d. Michelangelo. München: Ackermann. 3 M. 60 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ACTA apostolorum apocrypha, post C. Tischendorf denuo edd. R. A. Lipsius u. M. Bonnet. Pars I. Leipzig: Mendelssohn. 12 M.
ANALYTA hymnica mediæ ævi. Hrsg. v. G. M. Dreves. IX. Sequentiæ ineditæ. 2. Folge. Leipzig: Reiland. 8 M.
BOUSSET, W. Die Evangelienentate Justins d. Märtyrers in ihrem Wert f. die Evangelienkritik, v. neuem untersucht. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 2 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ERSTEIN, J. u. A. Enüerungen auf dem Gebiete der sächsischen Münz- u. Medaillen-Geschichte. II. Dresden: Baensch. 8 M. 70 Pf.
HUEFFER, H. Die Kabinetaregierung in Preussen. u. J. W. Lombard. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte d. preuss. Staates. vornehmlich in den J. 1797–1810. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 12 M.
SAFTIEN, K. Die Verhandlungen Kaiser Ferdinand I. m. Papst Pius IV. üb. den Laienkelch u. die Einführung desselben in Oesterreich. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 1 M. 60 Pf.
WESTKAMP, A. Das Heer der Liga in Westfalen zur Abwehr d. Grafen v. Mansfeld u. d. Herzogs Christian v. Braunschweig. (1622–23.) Münster: Regensburg. 6 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- APPEL, H. Die Lehre der Scholastiker v. der Synteresis. Rostock: Voelckmann. 2 M.
BECK v. MANNAGETTA, G. Ritter. Flora v. Nieder-Oesterreich. 1. Hälfte. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 15 M.
BUCHENAC, F. Monographia Juncacearum. Leipzig: Engelmann. 12 M.
DORLTER, C. Allgemeine chemische Mineralogie. Leipzig: Engelmann. 7 M.
DRUDE, O. Handbuch der Pflanzengeographie. Stuttgart: Engelhorn. 14 M.
MITTHEILUNGEN aus d. k. mineralogisch-geologischen u. prähistorischen Museum in Dresden. 9. Hft. Cassel: Fischer. 10 M.
RICHTER, K. Plantae europaeae. Tom. I. Leipzig: Engelmann. 10 M.
SCHNEIDER, G. Die Hieracien der Westsudet. 2. Hft. Hirschberg: Heilig. 1 M. 50 Pf.
SCHUMANN, K. Neue Untersuchungen üb. den Blütenanschluss. Leipzig: Engelmann. 20 M.
ZEILLER, B. Bassin houiller et permien d'Autun et d'Épinac. Fac. II. Flore fossile. 1re partie. Paris: Baudry. 30 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- PRELLWITZ, W. Die deutschen Bestandteile in den lettischen Sprachen. 1. Hft. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SEYBOLD, Ch. F. Brevis linguae Guarani grammatica, hispanice a P. Restivo secundum libros A. Ruiz de Montoya et S. Bandini composita. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 10 M.
TIBUS, A. Beiträge zur Namenkunde westfälischer Orte. Münster: Regensburg. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ORDER OF RUNES IN THE FUTHORK.

Christ's College, Cambridge: Dec. 1, 1890.

I am glad to see what can be said by way of objection to my theory on this subject, as printed in the ACADEMY of November 22.

The chief difficulty, I am told, is chronological; and this must certainly be considered. I am not sure that the Charnay brooch can be accurately dated; the assumption that it was lost on a particular occasion is hardly capable of proof. It is, in fact, very difficult to date these early finds.

English was spoken on the continent before it was brought to this island. It is quite clear that the Northern nations acquired the runic alphabet at rather an early period; and, if they ever came into contact with Latin civilisation at all, the very first piece of writing they would become acquainted with would be the Pater-noster. It does not follow that a man who came to hear of this prayer, and who actually learnt some six clauses of it, was a Christian. He may have been a medicine-man and a bard, who thought it would make a good charm, and so adapted it to his purposes. It seems extraordinary that no Saxon or Angle should ever hear of Christian formulae, at a time when Christianity was well established in Britain. There was a British church; and an aggressive religion, such as Christianity, must have early attempted to reach the Germanic tribes. The Goths already had the New Testament, and more too, in the fourth century; and the difficulty of supposing that the Saxons knew the words of the Pater-noster is very little greater than the difficulty of supposing that they had an alphabet. We know, too, that they acquired several Latin words before they came to England—viz., "wine," "wick" (a village), "wall," "pine" (punishment), "mile," and perhaps "street"; so that very early contact of English with Latin is a proved fact.

The chronological difficulty is precisely that which my theory meets. For I suppose that a new order of the alphabet was made all at once, and of set purpose; the very slight dislocations in it which I have noticed could have occurred almost at the first. The opposite theory requires that the alphabet was shuffled and shifted many times over, for no reason whatever; and these changes, instead of being wrought almost in a day, would require long ages for their development. There is no time to spare for this. Let any one say how long it would take. This is a difficulty which has never been fairly met, but has been carefully kept out of sight.

We find Futhorks scratched on brooches and swords; but who would be so foolish as to scratch a mere alphabet on a sword? Is any such case known? Of course, the object was to safeguard the user of the sword, and such object could only be effected if the letters had some virtue. One can understand the use of Abracadabra, or of any nonsensical order of letters, if supposed to be magical; but the use of a mere alphabet is inexplicable, and no one has attempted to explain the good of it. Let this be considered.

I believe that I have furnished a useful clue, by the help of which more may be discovered, but only by such as will condescend to consider the question apart from preconceived ideas.

The Anglo-Saxon poem which I mentioned should be looked at. Very remarkable is the allusion to "the palm-twigged Paternoster." No one has explained this. I take it to mean simply the runic alphabet in a Paternoster order. The palm twigs are the runes themselves. These were to be cut on a man's sword, instead of the "fatal marks" inscribed by fiends. The man could then pray the alphabet to protect him; or, in Kemble's words, "ever let him sing when he his sword draweth, and joyfully pray to the palm-tree [the alphabet] that it will give him both life and hand [i.e., strength] when his foe cometh." Just so, and what can be more explicit?

I have shown that the old Paternoster had the reading ueniat instead of adueniat, as in the Vulgate. Similarly the Gothic version has simply kwimai, whereas the late Anglo-Saxon version of the tenth century has the compound tu-cume. This is worth considering.

I now leave my suggestion for experts to discuss. In course of time they may recognise its value. If not, there is no harm done.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

London: Dec. 3, 1890.

Having seen the above letter (by the courtesy of the editor) when on the eve of leaving England for Egypt, I desire only to say that a careful study of Runic palaeography will, I am sure, convince Prof. Skeat that his views as to the date and place of origin of the two earliest Futhorks are untenable.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

ENGLISH PROSE.

Oxford: Dec. 2, 1890.

Mr. Freeman's great accuracy in the use of titles and designations, whether of persons or institutions, is well known. It characterises all his writings, and it cannot have escaped the observation of anyone who is versed in historical literature. I have no hesitation in saying that in this branch of criticism, as in others, he has exercised a beneficial influence; and that if the terminology in use among historians is more exact now than it was forty years ago, it is to him more than to any other author—I should, perhaps, be nearer the truth if I said it is to him alone—that we are indebted for this sharpening of our discriminative faculties.

I have not been newly awakened to the recognition of this important service by Mr. Freeman's letter in last week's ACADEMY; on the contrary, it has been with me a matter of warm and attentive interest any time these forty years past. If in the passage which he has quoted from my English Prose I have seemed to question the refined propriety of his phraseology, I must conclude that he has read it with less than his usual penetration. It appears to me, as I refer to the place in my book, that the spontaneous tribute which I have written above, though not explicitly premised on the page, is all there by implication, and surrounds the paragraph like an atmosphere. What importance could be supposed to attach to the fact that an author prefers "cathedral church" to "cathedral," unless in the background there looms the premise, unrecited because notorious, that the terminology of that particular author merits more than ordinary attention? And how, but with this general presupposition, could I have said, in the words next after Mr. Freeman's quotation, as follows (the point is the tendency of adjectives to pass into the condition of substantives)?—

"The tendency is too strong to be checked by the hand of any one author; it may even be doubted whether an Academy could control it."

I will not, however, contend that this reference of mine to Mr. Freeman's diction is quite faultless and incapable of amendment. Perhaps I ought not to have said that he showed a disposition to resist a natural tendency of language; it would perhaps have corresponded better to the data if I had said that, in certain cases, he made a stand against the excesses of this tendency. More concession than this I cannot make; I cannot feign a compliance with the notion that any author can contract himself out of the liability to be criticized on the basis of general tendencies, however little he may himself be conscious of his relation to them.

So far in self-defence; I will now carry the war a little way into the enemy's country. I half wish that Mr. Freeman would extend that scrupulosity which has operated so beneficially on the political vocabulary—that he would, I say, extend it to the more familiar regions of ethical criticism. Why should he leave on his readers' minds, impressed with all the weight of his authority, the idea that my English Prose is a work that deals in "rebuks"? I doubt if it would be possible to cite a single place where I have assumed that attitude towards any author. If ever I felt that the necessary criticism might commit me to such an appearance, I have in that case given the quotation without reference. There is but one place, I think, in which, with due regard to choice of expression, "rebuks" can be charged upon me; and there it is not personal, but general and abstract. It is where I had incidental occasion to glance for a moment at that vice and poison of literature to which I will not here, in a context responsive to a friend, so much as give a name.

J. EARLE

THE MONARCHICAL SPIRIT IN FRANCE.

Autun: Nov. 26, 1890.

Some readers of the ACADEMY may perhaps remember that a few months ago, à propos of Mr. Hurlbert's book on Contemporary France, in which he said that it is still monarchical, I said it was not, but that the true monarchical spirit was extinct in France. One of your contributors supported Mr. Hurlbert, principally on the ground that the French Republic was not national. It is of no use simply to oppose one affirmation to another, so I let the matter drop. My impression that the monarchical sentiment is dead in France is gained from intercourse with French monarchists themselves, who seem to have no respect for the hereditary principle, which is the only safe foundation for monarchy. My view (this is my reason for recurring to the subject) has lately been very vigorously confirmed by the Bishop of Annecy in these words:—

"Si l'esprit monarchique subsiste parmi nous, la monarchie est possible, et l'on peut travailler à son rétablissement. Si l'esprit monarchique a disparu et complètement, la monarchie est impossible, et c'est se condamner à une entreprise sans issue que de s'efforcer de la faire revivre.

"Qu'est ce donc que l'esprit monarchique?

"C'est le sentiment qu'il y a et qu'il doit y avoir dans le pays une souveraineté, je ne dis pas un gouvernement mais une souveraineté;—c'est le sentiment que cette souveraineté appartient à une famille comme une maison appartient à une famille, et que les conditions de propriété et de transmission de cette souveraineté sont exactement les mêmes que pour la propriété et la transmission de tous les autres biens.

"Tel est l'esprit monarchique. Il a existé, en France, autant et plus peut-être qu'en toute autre contrée de l'Europe. Subsiste-t-il encore? Non.

"S'il n'y a plus en France ni esprit monarchique, ni même trace de cet esprit, comment une monarchie pourrait-elle être rétablie?"

It cannot be fairly said that the tendency of men in democracies to group themselves under some able leader, some Gambetta, Parnell, or Gladstone, is due to the monarchical sentiment. The essence of that sentiment is the acceptance of the heir as master whether he has capacity or not. When the monarchical principle is dying, the monarch may be dismissed for an unpopular law or a lost battle; and when it is dead, the heir of the dethroned monarch does not succeed to him, the people hesitate and look about, having a preference for this or that prince, as if there could be any question about the next ruler when the heir is living. This is what we mean when we say that the monarchical principle is dead in France; we are thinking of that kind of sovereignty which goes without question to the next heir. For example, the King of France is Don Jaime; and if the monarchical principle were alive, he would be on the throne. But of so-called monarchists some look to the Count of Paris, some to the Duke of Orleans, others would rather have the Duke of Aumale, some think of one Bonaparte, some of another, and many would be ready to accept the despotic authority of any General who could destroy Parliamentary Government. All this is not the religion of monarchy: it is political free-thinking.

Mr. Hurlbert contended that the Republic was not national. Of course, in a country divided as France is, no Government can be national in the sense of having universal support; but the Republic is strong enough to live and to maintain both order and liberty. The assertion that the Republic had a small numerical majority at the last general elections has an appearance of truth, but is in reality fallacious, because the reactionary candidates did not venture to present themselves openly as enemies of existing institutions. They presented themselves as friends of order, and the followers of General Boulanger entitled themselves Republicans. The popularity of the President has been called monarchical; but this is inaccurate, as no one thinks of making the headship of the State hereditary in his family.

P. G. HAMERTON.

THE SOURCE OF A CHAUCER SIMILE.

University College, Durham: Nov. 30, 1890.

Under the above heading, in the ACADEMY of November 29, a reference is given to Sozomen's History. But the fountain from which Chaucer's comparison of the monk with the fish (Prol. 179-81) sprung can be found even earlier. It occurs in the Life of Antony attributed to Athanasius, which, even if not by him, is contemporary, and therefore not later than A.D. 373. By Athanasius, Antony's words are given as follows:

ἔλεγε μὴ δύνασθαι χρονίζειν μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ παραδείγματι χαρίεντι τοῦτον ἐπειθε λέγων· ὅσπερ εἰ ἰχθύες ἐχρονίζοντες τῇ ξηρᾷ τῇ τελευτῶσιν· οὕτως οἱ μοναχοὶ βραδύοντες μετ' ὧμων καὶ παρ' ὧν ἐνδιατρίβοντες ἐκλύονται (Vita Antonii, c. 85).

H. ELLERSHAW.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 7, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Liberia," by Mr. E. B. Gudgeon.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Principles and Politics," by Mr. A. W. Hutton.
MONDAY, Dec. 8, 8 p.m. London Institution: "The Heat of the Moon and the Stars," by Prof. C. V. Boys.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Gaseous Illuminants" III., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.
8 p.m. Library Association: "The Battersea Public Libraries," by Mr. Inkster.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Explorations in Alaska and North-West British Columbia," by Mr. H. W. Seton-Karr.
TUESDAY, Dec. 9, 3 p.m. British Museum: "History of the Literature of Babylonia, II., The First Semitic Period," by Mr. G. Bertin.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The New Chitturati Bridge, Madras Railway," by Mr. E. W. Stoncy.
8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Aborigines of Australia," by Mr. Edward Greville.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "An Apparent Paradox in Mental Evolution," by the Hon. Lady Welby; "Patterns of Fingermarks," by Mr. Francis Galton.
WEDNESDAY, Dec. 10, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Electric Lighting Progress in London," by Mr. F. Bailey.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 10, 8 p.m. Geological: "Water-worn and Pebble-worn Stones from the Apron of the Severn Commissioners' Weir erected across the River at Holt Fleet about eight miles above Worcester," by Mr. H. J. Marten; "The Physical Geology of Tennessee and adjoining Districts in the United States of America," by Prof. E. Hull; "Certain Ornithosaurian and Dinosaurian Remains," by Mr. R. Lydekker.

THURSDAY, Dec. 11, 6 p.m. London Institution: "Our Commercial Relations with China," by Prof. R. K. Douglas.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Extension to Matrices of any Order of the Quaternion Symbols S and V," by Dr. Taber; "The Reversion of Partial Differential Expressions with two Independent and two Dependent Variables," by Mr. E. B. Elliott; "The Flexion of a Thin Elastic Shell under Pressure," by Mr. A. B. Basset; "Newton's Classification of Cubic Curves," by Mr. W. W. R. Ball; "Steiner's Poristic Systems of Spheres," by Prof. Matthews.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Annual General Meeting.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Dec. 12, 5 p.m. Physical: "Experiments with Selenium Cells," by Mr. Shelford Bidwell; "Electrolysis," and "Alternating Current Condensers," by Mr. James Swinburne.

8 p.m. New Shakspeare: "The History of 'Henry VIII.," by Mr. W. G. Roswell-Stone.

8 p.m. Ruskin: "Ruskin's Teaching, and Present-day Movements and Tendencies," by Mr. Phythian.

SCIENCE.

Maximiani Elegiae. Ad fidem codicis Etonensis recensuit et emendavit M. Petschenig. (Berlin: Calvary.)

This little work of thirty-seven octavo pages forms part of the eleventh volume of Berliner Studien. It is, however, to be obtained separately, and from every point of view should command a large sale. It contains the text of Maximianus' Elegies as based on the best MS., at Eton; a brief apparatus criticus; short explanatory notes explaining the editor's view of the readings he has adopted; and an excellent and quite exhaustive index of the words, usages, and constructions of Maximianus.

The present writer has a peculiar pleasure in calling attention to M. Petschenig's edition of the Elegies. In 1878 the Eton MS. was sent to the Bodleian for me to examine; and I then made a careful collation of its readings with the text as given in the Gryphian edition of Catullus Tibullus and Propertius (1553), where the Elegies are, as was usual then, ascribed to Cornelius Gallus. Some years later I collated four other MSS., two in the Bodleian, two in the British Museum. Dissatisfied with the arbitrary corrections of Bährens in the fifth volume of his Poetae Latini Minores (pp. 316-348), I studied the diction and metre of Maximianus in contrast and connexion with the Fables of Avianus; for not only are the two poets constantly found in the same MSS., but the time at which they wrote—Maximianus after 500 A.D., Avianus perhaps in the preceding century—makes it natural to compare them, especially as composers of elegiacs. The results of my researches were published in the American Journal of Philology, v. 1-15, 145-163. M. Petschenig has availed himself of these articles in preparing his edition.

The Eton MS. is written in Lombard letters, and is for that reason alone worth careful study. It is often difficult to read, which perhaps accounts for discrepancies in the collations of it. I have noted more than one or two places in which my own collation differs from that of the Austrian editor. Some things, too, he has omitted.

Readers of the new edition will greet M. Petschenig's editorial labours with various feelings. It is a great point to have the best MS. exhibited with faithfulness and accuracy. It is a great point to have an editor whose knowledge of the Latin poetry of the epoch is considerable. M. Petschenig's edition of Corippus attests his competence from at least one point of view.

But I must raise my protest against an assumption which underlies this new Maximianus—I mean that the earliest MS. represents therefore the only safe tradition: that when very gross violations of prosody are found in this MS., it is to be followed notwithstanding as the one sure guide; that any other readings are interpolated and valueless. In El. v. 57 the first i of uirilia is made long. This is a violation of prosody so gross as to be, in my judgment, almost, if not quite, impossible. Petschenig retains it, simply as found in the Eton MS., and does not even mention the reading of two MSS. of the highest excellence, both in the Bodleian, Auct. 5, 6 and Bodl. 38, flagrantia. Yet this reading is supported by the immediately following ignis in v. 59, and is, I cannot but believe, far more likely to be right than the other, which Petschenig alone of editors has the courage to retain. Because senectus pädagogus uerëcundia uirëniis Uliżes are admitted by a writer of the sixth century, it in no way follows that he would go to the extravagance of uirilia. Similar is the case of cāligant in i. 129. Petschenig accepts this (here, with all MSS. that I have seen) as right. Yet cāligine occurs i. 149, and uacillant is a correction as metrically satisfactory as slight palaeographically; though, of course, Maximianus may have written some other word.

To take another case, El. i. 271-2 are thus given in the Eton MS.:

"Fracta diu rabidi compescitur ira leonis Lentaque per senium aspera tigris erit."

For aspera most MSS. give caspia, or, as my Bodleian Auct. 5, 6 presents it, capsida. All editors before Petschenig (many of them, it is true, with no knowledge of the Eton codex) give caspia; Petschenig retains aspera—wrongly, I cannot but believe, though different readers will form different opinions on the matter. Yet, with a strange inconsistency, our editor changes diu to die, apparently ignorant of the fact that a precisely similar use of diu is found in Manilius, iv. 823—Mutantur sed cuncta diu, where the same correction die has been proposed. This passage naturally leads to another, where a similar question of hiatus at the end of the first half of the pentameter is raised by the Eton MS. i. 159, 160:

"Esse libet saturum: saturum mox esse pigebit, Præstat ut abstineam; abstinuisse nocet."

Abstineas, Bodl. 38, assigned by Mr. Falconer Madan to the eleventh or twelfth century. These are the only two cases of such pentametrical hiatus in Maximianus. In both cases Petschenig retains the reading of El. In both, MSS. of first-rate authority give a different reading.

Hence, as the assumption on which this new recension is based has to be proved; as, further, on examination of El. it is found in several cases to be wrong, where other MSS. are right, I cannot accept this recension as in a way final. Least of all can I accept

M. Petschenig's corrections. Many of them I believe to be quite wide of the mark, not a few completely wrong.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ZODIACAL CRAB.

Barton-on-Humber: Nov. 22, 1890.

Referring to my former letter on this subject (ACADEMY, February 21, 1885), and to Prof. Lacouperie's interesting letter on the Babylonian and Chinese Zodiacs (ibid., October 11, 1890), I would call attention to certain points connected with the Akkadian name of the Crab-month.

Prof. Lacouperie gives "III. A crab? LAMGA or NAMGARU"; Strassmaier (Astronomisches aus Babylon, 1889) reads nangaru, and the connected form nagar ("workman") is, according to Mr. Sayce, "probably a dialectic form of Ianga [= Semitic Lamech]... a name of the Man-god" (Religion of the Ancient Babylonians, p. 186, note). There is certainly a remarkable mythological connexion between the Moon and the Crab, and Cancer is, astrologically, "the House of the Moon": but I see no reason why we should not read the form in question (vide Sayce, Syl. No. 95) as As. pulukku, "division," and Jensen (Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 1890, p. 311) writes: "(P)pulukku = Krebs?" As., however, the zodiacal names are Sumero-Akkadian, we must endeavour to ascertain the Akk. equivalent of the As. pulukku, which word the Akkadai borrowed in the form puluq. This Akk. equivalent is χας, "to cut," "division" (Mr. Sayce kindly corrected my copy of his Syllabary as follows: "Ak. khas, As. khasu = pulukku"), which reappears in the Osmanli and Uigur kes-mak, "to cut"; the Magyar kes, "knife," and in many other allied forms.

That pulukku does not mean "crab," but "division," may be further illustrated by a parallel case. The Hindu astronomical writer, Varāha-Mihira, circa A.D. 500, renders the Greek names for the signs by the following forms: Kriya, Tavuri, Jituma, Kulira, &c. Here Kulira is not a Hindu variant of Karkinos, as Kriya is of Krios, &c., but stands for Kolouros, αὐλούρος ("the colures") being, according to Proklos, the two great circles passing through the solstitial points, Cancer and Capricorn, so that Kolouros is an equivalent of Karkinos ("the Crab"). Hence it is quite possible that χας, "division" = the solstitial colure, and is used instead of the sign-name, in the same way as Kolouros; and, further, that this Euphratean usage caused the Greek usage which we find in Proklos. On the Black Obelisk Shalmaneser calls himself "King of all the 4 zones of the Sun," which may, perhaps, refer to the 4 equal parts, marking the 4 seasons into which the ecliptic, "the sun-path," is divided by the equinoctial and solstitial colures. The Chinese sign shows, it seems, "an unknown beast," possibly like the "nondescript scorpion-crocodile-crab," mentioned in my former letter. On the stone of Nebuchadnezzar I. a kind of Turtle-crab appears side by side with his brother the Scorpion. The Crab, and also another Babylonian emblem, the Bee (vide Cullimore, Oriental Cylinders, Nos. 117, 129), were both connected with the lunar and Hittite Artemis Ephesia, whose chief priest was styled Essēn ("the King-bee"), the Moon herself being also called a Bee (Porphyrus, Peri tou tōn Nymph. Ant. 8); and what I stated respecting the connexion between the 4th Sign, the Crab, and the 4th Tablet of the Gilgames Cycle, which treats of the Storm-god Khumbaba (Kombabos in Lucian), receives a curious illustration from a gem given by Montfaucon (T. i., pt. ii., pl. 154, fig. 14), which bears on the obverse a large Crab, and on the reverse ΒΑΡΧΑ (= Heb. Barak, "Lightning"), while another (ibid., fig. 11) bears a Thunderbolt and a Bee (Heb. Deborah). The Thunderbolt is often alluded to on the monuments as a special weapon of Bel Merôdax, and both Crab and Bee bear a certain resemblance in form to the conventional Thunderbolt of later times. There may be also a play on words.

Appropos of Gilgames (ACADEMY, November 8, 1890, p. 421), Hercher in his edition of Aelian, 1864, reads Σενχόρος (not Sakkhoras) and Πλάγας. I find from Mr. Sayce that a variant reading is Ενχόρος, which I would identify with the Euêchoös of Alex. Polyhistor. As Gilgames is, in the tale in Aelian, the grandson of Euêxoros, and Euêchoös is the first Babylonian king after the Deluge, we thus obtain an idea of the (legendary) time between Gilgames and Zisursu (Xisouthros), the Deluge-hero.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Nov. 19.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, president, in the chair.—Mr. E. Gordon Duff exhibited a recently-discovered fragment of an unknown book printed by John Lettou, on which he made the following remarks:—John Lettou was the first printer in London, and may be classed in some ways apart from all other English printers. The works of Caxton, thanks to Mr. Blades and Mr. Bradshaw, have been fully chronicled; but Lettou has received no notice. Mr. Bradshaw, who of all others could have given us information, has left few notes on this printer, so that such information as I can give you (and very meagre it is) comprises all that is known at present on the subject. Lettou commenced to print in London in 1480, and began his career with three editions of John Kendale's Indulgence, asking for temporal assistance, and promising spiritual reward, to such as would fight at the siege of Rhodes against the Turks. Caxton was the first to issue this Indulgence, but his edition was printed in a large ragged type which he used for English books. Lettou followed with his edition in a small, neat, compact type much more suitable for Indulgences; and it was probably this competition which caused Caxton to cast his smaller type. Apart from these Indulgences, Lettou only printed two books, (1) Antonius Andreæ's Commentary on part of Aristotle (1480), and (2) Thomas Wallensis upon the Psalms (1481); but we have evidence in the two leaves exhibited this afternoon, lately found in Corpus Christi College, that a third book issued from his press, probably in 1481. The rarity of Lettou's productions is extraordinary. Of the Antonius Andreæ of 1480, one perfect and three imperfect copies are known. The perfect copy is in Sion College, and has only remained perfect owing to parts having been misbound. Of the Wallensis, only two perfect copies are known, in the University Library and the Bodleian. Of the Indulgences:—Of one edition one copy is known, which is in the British Museum; the other two editions are known only from fragments, used to line the quires of a Bible printed by Nicholas Gölitz, of Köln, but bound by Lettou, discovered by Mr. Bradshaw in the library of Jesus College. There are two things to be noted about Lettou. His methods of work are very different from those of his contemporaries. He used a type quite distinct from, and opposed in character to, any English xv. cent. type; and so little is this type known that it is quite possible that there are other books printed by him which have escaped notice. The type is a close copy of that used by Moravus at Naples, and by Christopher Arnoldus at Venice. Dibdin calls Lettou's work very careless and slovenly, and the appearance of his type very rude; but it is really far in advance of any other English printer of the time, and shows that he must have had some experience before he settled in England. Lettou was also a bookbinder, as most printers then were; but only two specimens of his work are known. One is in the Bodleian: the other, belonging to Jesus College, is now here. After 1482 Lettou ceased printing by himself, and went into partnership with W. de Machlinia; from this press six books were issued. About 1484 Lettou disappeared, and W. de Machlinia printed in future alone. We know nothing about Lettou except what we learn from his books. He would seem from his name to have been a Frenchman, and he was assisted with money by a merchant named W. Wilcock. There are exhibited to-day, (1) Fragments of the Indulgences; (2) A leaf of the Ant. Andreæ of 1480; (3) a copy of the Wallensis of 1481; and (4) the two leaves of the unknown book from Corpus. So then you have before you specimens of all Lettou's known productions.—Mr. Wood observed, with regard to the subject matter of these fragments, that the book of which they formed part was not the "Regulæ, Constitutiones et Ordinationes," or Rules of Procedure of the Roman Chancery, but a collection of Canonico-legal forms for use in ecclesiastical courts, and containing blanks for the filling in of names of persons and places. The words "Jo. officialis Coloniensis," which appear on one of the forms produced, seem to indicate that this book of forms was intended for use in the Province of Cologne. It is, therefore, probable that these fragments were printed by Lettou before he came to England (circa 1480), and that they were most likely printed at Cologne. If this supposition be correct, it is interesting as giving a little additional glimpse at Lettou's history, as well as showing us a fragment of work done elsewhere than in London.—Prof. Middleton exhibited a large signet in the form of a very massive silver thumb-ring, English work of the fifteenth century, which he described as follows: On the bezel, which is octagonal in shape, are, deeply incised, the initials M D, probably for "Mater Dei." Over the letters is a crown, and round them are three small ornamental branches. On the inside of the ring, extending all round the hoop, is the following inscription:

✱OGA✱OHORA✱OGVM✱

a meaningless combination of letters, such as often occur on mediaeval rings, but having a supposed cabalistic or magical virtue. Inscriptions of this class are often derived from Hebrew words, in a highly-blundered form, through repeated copying and recopying. The ring is a very fine and well-preserved example of mediaeval jewellery. It has been first cast, and then the device and letters have been cut on it. On one of the shoulders of the ring is a minute star, probably a maker's mark.—Mr. J. W. Clark exhibited an embroidered canopy, on which he commented as follows: The canopy which I have the pleasure of exhibiting to the society this afternoon is said by tradition to have been carried over Queen Elizabeth on the occasion of her visit to the University in 1564. Nichols prints two accounts in English of this visit. The writer of what I will term the first account, after describing her progress on horseback to the west door of King's College Chapel, and the speech of the public orator, says: "Then she alighted from her horse, and asking of what degree every doctor was, offered her hand to be kissed. And then four of the principal doctors, viz., Edmund Hawford, S.T.P., Master of Christ's College, and at that time Vice-Chancellor; Andrew Perne, S.T.P., Master of Peter House; John Porie, Master of Corpus Christi College; and Francis Newton, S.T.P., bearing a canopy, she, under the same, entered into the church, and kneeled down at the place appointed, between the two doors north and south; the Lady Strange bearing the train: and all the other ladies followed in their degrees. After a short service at a temporary lectern erected between the north and south doors of the antechapel, the Queen proceeded, under the canopy, to her 'trays' on the south side of the quire, between the stalls and the east end; and when evening service was over, the canopy was again used to conduct her through the north vestry to the Provost's lodging, then between the Chapel and the street. On the following day, Sunday, 'the Queene's Ma<sup>tie</sup> with her nobilitie, came to the King's Colledge chapel about 1xth of the clock in the morning, under a canopie carried by four doctors'; and at the end of the service the canopy was again used to conduct her to the Provost's lodging. The first account adds

'the footmen as their fee claimed [the canopy]; and it was redeemed for £3 6s. 8d.' The second account states the matter more fully: 'the Queen's footmen challenged the canopy, as a duty for delivering of the bedills staves. They required, in like manner, for the mace of the town a certain fee for redeeming thereof; the town gave them xlith shillings.' The delivery of the bedell's staves is thus described: On the Queen's arrival at the west door of King's College Chapel 'the three squire bedills' staffes were offered unto har Ma<sup>tie</sup> by Mr Secretary, and forthwith delivered to him, and soe to the bedills againe.' The canopy, which had evidently been provided by King's College, was redeemed by them; for the Mundum Book of 1564, under the heading expense facte super adventum domine Regine, has the following entry:

Item paid to y<sup>e</sup> Queene's Footmen for their fee for ye canabye wych was carried over the queene's maiestie iij<sup>li</sup>. vj<sup>s</sup>. viij<sup>d</sup>."

It may be conjectured that the canopy was given by King's College to the University, for it was preserved, until last June, in the University Library, where it was fixed to the ceiling of the music-room. Mr. Cooper (Annals, ii. 192, note) says "the canopy was long preserved in the schools, and afterwards in the registry's office." It is well known that the schools, as the university building, were used from very early times as a picture gallery and a museum, and it was natural that an historical relic such as the canopy before us should be kept there. When the registry was removed it remained behind, and I think that it was fixed in the place I mentioned by the care of Mr. Bradshaw. It has now been deposited in the Museum of Archaeology by a resolution of the Syndics of the Library. It measures 12 ft. by 5 ft. A strip of red velvet, 10 in. wide, divides it into two equal parts. This is crossed by a second strip of the same width, so that it consists of four quarters. The material appears to be silk, crossed by threads of gold. An elaborate pattern is still faintly discernable on the silk, portions of which were further enriched by raised velvet pile, which has now worn off. The places, however, to which it was attached can still be readily distinguished by the threads hanging from them. At the crossing of the two strips of velvet are the arms of Queen Elizabeth, England and France woven quarterly, supported by a lion (?) and a dragon. The other devices, of which there are twelve in the length and eight in the width, are the portcullis crowned, and rose of five petals in two rows, also crowned. The canopy, when we first received it, was thickly encrusted with dirt and torn in places. Baron von Hügel and I washed it with soap and water, and under the Baron's care it has been placed in a frame, so that the least damaged portions are before the public.

CLIFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Nov. 22.)

MISS FLORENCE HERAPATH, president, in the chair.—Mrs. Meyrick Heath read a paper on "Literary Partnerships." In the case of a work issued by two authors, there must always be much speculation as to the nature of the partnership; and the inquiry is as fascinating as it is fruitless. Partnerships of this kind are only found among dramatists and novelists, who both draw from the imagination. One would think that on graver subjects it would be easier to agree; but to be absolutely at one in directing the steps of creatures of the imagination must require almost superhuman tolerance. However, we do not lack in our own century abundant evidence of the happiest results of joint authorship; and in the case of Messrs. Besant and Rice we have, by the death of the latter, been allowed some decided, if negative, evidence of the way in which the work was divided. The equally delightful novels of Erckmann-Chatrian furnish as good an instance of the simultaneous working of two separate minds on a common subject, and quite recently we have had the literary conjunction of Mr. Rider Haggard and Mr. Andrew Lang. The Elizabethan dramatists were fond of joining forces; but most of the partnerships were fleeting and brief, with the exception of that between Beaumont and Fletcher.

In their case it would seem that Fletcher supplied most of the comedy, Beaumont the graver and more refined portions. From the hints which have been given of their respective powers, we are able to judge somewhat of the nature of the literary partnership. Between them they possessed very nearly all the requisites of a perfect writer of dramas. We may imagine Fletcher the originator, his exuberant wit and fancy literally running away with him; and Beaumont, with the better taste and judgment, pruning him down, culling what was fittest, rejecting what was extravagant, refining and arranging the raw material.—Miss Louisa Mary Davies in a paper entitled "In the Woods with Fletcher, Jonson, and Milton," compared and contrasted "The Faithful Shepherdess," "The Sad Shepherd," and "Comus." The theatre of the story, and the machinery by which the intricacies of the various plots are evolved are the same in each; and, if Jonson's fragment had been finished, each would probably have turned out to be an apotheosis of Purity. But, in carrying out this laudable idea, the differences of method and touch are so clearly accentuated as to suggest contrast rather than comparison. The differences exist in the style, and perhaps, if possible, even more in that subtle essence which is the spirit of the works, and which would probably resolve itself into the nature of the writer himself. Fletcher's style, as illustrated in "The Faithful Shepherdess," is indisputably graceful; but at times it carries that virtue to the point of insipidity. Sometimes, however, he is full of charm, as in a few lines in the priest's "Evening Hymn." Ben Jonson pitches his tune in a very different key. From various circumstances his life had a distinctly seamy side.

"The ups and downs, and buffets and crowns" which his portion in the bricklayer's yard, in the camp, on the stage, in the prison, in the very shadow of the pillory and gallows, and in the parlour of the "Mermaid" found him and left him pre-eminently a man; and though not all he wrote bespeaks a man at his best, yet in this fragment, "The Sad Shepherd," are to be found some lines equalling in vigour and beauty anything he ever wrote. The Lament of Aeglamour, with which it opens, is full of exquisite delicacy, while the description of the witch's dimble is a fine example of his power, and there are many instances of the picturesqueness of the poet's style and the wonderful harmony between his thought and language. In "Comus" the reader seems to be visiting another climate. The clear shining of Milton's poetry is the lustre of the diamond, produced solely by the clearing away of every obstacle to the showing forth of the essential glory within. In each of these pieces we have the writer's ideal of womanly purity; but it may be said that the virtue which the three poets magnify repels in the first, chills in the second, and allures only in the third.—Miss Florence Herapath read "A General Survey of 'The Knight of the Burning Pestle,'" showing that the play abounded in racy humour, pregnant wit, smart repartee, and good-humoured satire. The authors show a wide knowledge of human nature and a thorough mastery of English diction. Prose and verse alternate in quick succession, each having its own peculiar force, and each being used with telling effect. The prologue declares with a trumpet-like announcement the endeavour to maintain purity of thought and language, and this lofty tone is well kept throughout. If an analysis of Merrythought's songs be made, it will be found that, irregular as they are, they are capable of metrical classification, and each of them is appropriate to the subject in hand. That the writers were also capable of better things in verse than mere catch-doggerel, however witty, is shown by the dirge, which carries us away in real sympathy, and by the final tuneful song. The play well deserves the "patience and countenance" of all serious students of the drama contemporary with Shakspeare.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths read a paper on "The Play-Allusions in 'The Knight of the Burning Pestle,'" which include references to lost dramas such as those dealing with the legend of Whittington, the Story of Queen Eleanor with the Rearing of London Bridge upon Woolsacks, and the Bold Beauchamps. The first of these was entered in the Stationers' Registers on February 8, 1605. Of the second, relating to the times of Henry II., and of the third, undoubtedly celebrating the prowess of some member of the Warwick family, no information could be given. The Life and Death of Sir Thomas Gresham with the Building of the Royal Exchange was probably an early form of Part II. of Heywood's play of "If you know not me, you know nobody," published in 1605. The "Jane Shore" which the citizen's wife was once nearly seeing was probably one or both of the parts of Heywood's "Edward IV." Some details of these plays were given, and of "Mucedorus," "Jeronimo," and "The Four Prentices of London," all alluded to in the play.

FINE ART.

TWO BOOKS ON ROMAN ARCHES.

L'Arc de Triomphe de Salonique. Par K.-F. Kinch (Paris: Nilsson; London: David Nutt). The valuable and handsomely illustrated monograph, though written in French and published at Paris, is the work of a Danish scholar, who seems to have spent some years in exploration in the Levant, as an archaeological student on the Carlsberg trust. The result does equal credit to the author, to those who selected him for the task, and to the printing press and photographic establishment of Copenhagen. The Roman arch at Salonica is the only relic of antiquity at that town which has survived to this day—if, indeed, it has survived the great fire of the present autumn, which consumed the mosque of St. Sophia. Hitherto it seems to have attracted strangely little attention from archaeologists, perhaps because it bears no inscription and possesses no history. Of early travellers, Stuart assigned it to Theodosius, Pococke to the Antonines; but later opinion has connected it with the name of Constantine. This date was apparently not very far from the truth; for M. Kinch here adduces irrefragable evidence from the bas-reliefs to prove that the arch was erected in the closing decade of the third century, when Diocletian, Maximian, Galerius, and Constantius jointly shared the purple, and that the occasion of its erection was to commemorate the victories of Galerius over the Persians in 298. Of the details of this campaign hardly anything is preserved to us by historians; but M. Kinch shows that all that is known fits in with his interpretation of the sculptures. The use that he makes of numismatic evidence is particularly effective; and his detection of the words πατρικεὶς τύγχις seems to be decisive. Another interesting point is his explanation of the "Dacian" costume of the Roman soldiers (shown by a comparison with Trajan's column) by the facts that Galerius himself was a Dacian, and that his fellow-countrymen formed a large part of his army. We have only summarised the results of M. Kinch's researches. He deals exhaustively with every one of the bas-reliefs, which (he remarks) exhibit two different styles of sculpture; and he has attempted a reconstruction of the original arch, which has a larger span than any other Roman arch known to us, that at Aosta coming next. He also excavated the base of the structure, where the surface of the ground had considerably risen, and thus ascertained that there are no buried sculptures or inscriptions. The work concludes with ten plates, including five photographs.

M. SALOMON REINACH has printed, in a very elegant pamphlet (Paris: Durlacher), a lecture which he recently delivered before the Société des Etudes Juives upon "The Arch of Titus and the Spoils of the Temple of Jerusalem." He treats briefly of triumphal arches in general, of the capture of Rome by Titus, of the history of the well-known arch, and more particularly of the sacred objects from the temple which are there depicted. The chief interest, of course, attaches to the candlestick, which was, as M. Reinach points out, the restoration of Judas Maccabæus in place of that destroyed by Antiochus Epiphanes. What was the ultimate fate of this candlestick? M. Reinach can discover no authority whatever for the common legend that it was thrown into the Tiber by the Emperor Maxentius after his defeat at the Milvian Bridge in 312. Indeed, he cannot trace this legend further back than Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, though he has in vain appealed to Prof. Mommson and Prof. Harnack, which seems to put the responsibility of supplying some evidence for it upon English scholars. On the contrary, M. Reinach maintains (on the authority of Procopius) that the candlestick remained at Rome until 455, when it was carried to Carthage with other booty by Genseric. Belisarius brought it to Constantinople in 534; but the Emperor Justinian, from superstitious motives, restored it to Jerusalem, where it ultimately disappeared in the sack of that city by the Persian conqueror, Chosroes II., in 614. M. Reinach's paper is illustrated with an admirable heliogravure, showing on a large scale the well-known bas-relief on the Arch of Titus.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR NOEL PATON has been occupied for more than a year upon another of those symbolical subjects which have formed the latest class of his productions; and the work is now completed, and will shortly be exhibited in Edinburgh. It is titled "Beati Mundo Corde," and represents Youth made strong by Faith to withstand Temptation. The canvas shows, on a lonely mere overhung by the fading evening sky, a boat in which stands a stately, mail-clad young knight beside his steed, his head crowned with a helmet surmounted by great golden wings, and his gaze fixed earnestly upon the pure, upturned face of a white-robed, angelic figure who sits—significantly beside the anchor—at the prow and holds the oars. In the murky water of the lake, which seems touched with fire-flakes, float two sinister figures—Pleasure, crowned with roses and touching a lute, and Despair, tearing the poppies from her dusky tresses and disclosing a face of anguish. The picture has all the earnest imaginative power which characterises Sir Noel's work, and its execution bears witness that his hand has lost none of its artistic cunning.

THE exhibitions to open next week are: (1) a collection of water-colour drawings by Mr. Albert Goodwin, at the Fine Art Society's; (2) a series of water-colour drawings by M. Boutet de Monvel, in illustration of Xavière, at the Goupil Gallery; and (3) a number of pictures and works of sculpture, contributed by brother-artists towards a fund which is being raised for the widow and children of the late R. A. Ledward. This will be held at the Royal Arcade Gallery, in Old Bond-street, and will include works by four Associates—Messrs. Burne Jones, Onslow Ford, Alfred Gilbert, and W. L. Wyllie.

THE distribution of prizes to the students at the Royal Academy will take place on Wednesday next, December 10, at 9 p.m., when the president will deliver an address. The galleries containing the competition works for the prizes will be open to the public on the following day.

THE second and concluding volume of the new edition of Boyne's Trade Tokens, edited by Mr. G. C. Williamson, will be issued immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock. This volume will contain no less than eleven indices, comprising surnames, Christian names, localities, trades, shapes, values, issuers, devices, and peculiarities.

THE archaeological collections of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland are being removed from the inconvenient and greatly-overcrowded museum on the Mound, Edinburgh, to the large premises provided for them in the eastern portion of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery in Queen-street. The fellows met for the first time in their new library on Monday, December 1, on the occasion of their annual meeting; and it is expected that the arrangement of their collections will be completed in the course of next summer, previous to the visit of the Archaeological Institute to Edinburgh in August.

MR. ARTHUR ACKERMANN, of Regent Street, has sent us a number of Christmas cards, &c., published by Messrs. L. Prang & Co., of Boston, U.S. The cards proper are of an ordinary character; nor do we care very much for the large coloured plates. By far the best things in the parcel are the illustrated booklets of verse, among which we may specially mention A Summer Day, by Margaret Deland, and Haunts of Longfellow—both illustrated by Mr. Louis K. Harlow.

THE STAGE.

THE REVIVAL OF "CALLED BACK."

A VISIT to the Haymarket, to see the revival of "Called Back," will hardly, to any playgoer, be time wasted. At the very least there is an interest in seeing again Mr. Comyns Carr's skilful adaptation of the story by Hugh Conway which made such a sensation not many years ago. The story itself is now perhaps in danger rather of being neglected than of being overpraised. A generation of readers is rising up that knows it not. Yet though a part of the success of the play was due in the first instance to the curiosity provoked by Hugh Conway's tale, the piece, as an unquestionably effective melodrama, may now perhaps have the opportunity of outlasting the story. Hugh Conway, in his later writings, showed that he was the possessor of humour; but if we remember Called Back rightly, that little volume was not much concerned with the lighter graces or with gaiety of style. The play, however, has its amusing episodes; or, if not its amusing episodes, its sharp and pointed things. These we suppose Mr. Comyns Carr supplied. But the deeper debt which both the playgoer and the author of the original story owe to Mr. Carr is for his dexterity in dealing with the book with fair freedom and effectively. Of individual character-study there is not very much in the little novel, nor has it been attempted to make good on the stage whatever may have been the deficiencies under which the tale laboured in this respect. More subtle character-drawing would probably have been incompatible with the presentment of incidents in rapid succession; and what is most noticeable about the play is, first the rapid succession of dramatic incidents—the presence, so to speak, of a machinery which, while it is elaborate, works ever with smoothness and rapidity. We do not go to see the stage version of Called Back that we may be moved deeply to tears, or uncontrollably to laughter. We do not go to see it that we may get into the heart of things. But it is an excellent example of a popular play, making no excessive demand on our credulity, providing a variety of effect, and built up, little brick by brick, with cunning hands. If it were more literary, it might be less engrossing.

"Called Back," as it is now given at the Haymarket, is really admirably performed. Never, perhaps, has Mr. Tree displayed more distinctly his determination that his plays shall be strongly cast. It may be that it was not very difficult to show this in the present instance; for, though the dramatis personae number in all something like a score, the important scenes are in the hands of about five people. These five are, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Kerr, and Miss Julia Neilson—all of whom are, as actors, either famous or very promising. Mr. Terry and Mr. Kerr—and, perhaps, even Miss Neilson—may still be content, we shall suppose, to be classed among the latter. Mr. Terry, who is always sympathetic, elegant, and very evidently painstaking, must suffer us to tell him that it is time to beware of a certain mannerism of delivery—an even undue precision and completeness of speech which, if permitted to go further, will seem dangerously near to pedantry. And Mr. Kerr—thoroughly easy and unstaged—is (will he permit us to tell him?) now and then on the verge of an ineffective, because a too continuous, coolness. There is no reason to suppose that the young surgeon in "Called Back" took everything with quite the imperturbability of the typical young American in "Sweet Lavender." When Mr. Kerr makes up his mind to be a little more varied and a little less undemonstrative, he will have mastered, to our minds, more completely the requirements of a part which, on the whole, he fills well. The Dr. Ceneri of Mr. Fernandez is, of course, a powerful and thoroughly studied performance. We have, however, very frequently seen this most potent actor—this extremely able representative of an elder school—appear to better advantage. Miss Julia Neilson looks a very splendid Pauline—a creature, indeed, so magnificently strong that one doubts only whether Pauline's system would have been overthrown so completely by the shock which she received. This lady, at all events, can hardly be a victim of "nerves": she is of the type that withstands, rather than of the type which succumbs. Miss Neilson's performance is passionate and tender; admirably impulsive is her expression of devotion to the afflicted Vaughan—"I will be eyes and feet and hands to you." Mr. Tree's Italian scoundrel, Macari, is an amazing performance; and it is particularly noteworthy for its display of breadth of method in an actor with whom visible finish is a much commoner achievement. Of a truth, however, the Macari of Mr. Tree—which must have gained, we think, since it was last seen—is both broad and finished, too. The make-up, while simple, is exceedingly suggestive. The delivery of the words is always strong and pointed. But we find Mr. Tree reaching his greatest success in the completeness with which he seizes the Italian gesture—the gesture of a nature complex like Macari's, with luxurious indolence in him, as well as a volcanic energy—a lounge now, with whom the dolce far niente is the beginning and the end of life; and now a rapid-witted tiger, decisive and dangerous, who knows no limits to lust or to rage.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE "ION" AT CAMBRIDGE.

"Le bon critique," says a well-known French essayist, "est celui qui raconte les aventures de son âme au milieu des chefs d'œuvre"; and this is our modest purpose on the present occasion, though the "Ion" of Euripides—no connexion with the "Ion" of Mr. Serjeant Talfourd—scarcely perhaps comes up to the requirements of the above definition. In comparison with the "Medea" or the "Bacchae," to say nothing of the masterpieces of Aeschylus and Sophocles, it must, we think, be deemed second-rate; but notwithstanding this, it possesses sterling qualities as an acting play, and the Cambridge Committee have been abundantly justified in adding it to their répertoire, by the unquestionable success of last week's performances. Its earlier lyrical passages are universally celebrated for their extraordinary beauty; it contains many striking situations and much telling dialogue; and the working out of its complicated plot is very skilfully contrived. We are at a less exalted level of thought and diction than that of the "Agamemnon" or either "Oedipus"; but the play is more in touch with modern sentiment than any of those monumental dramas, and for that very reason is more within the powers of modern actors.

The story has been discussed so often during the last few days that we may be excused for leaving it untold here. Suffice it to say, that the whole action turns on one point—the parentage of Ion; and the successive stages by which the audience is led up to the final ἀναγνώρισις or "discovery" that in Apollo's graceful acolyte Creusa has met with her long-lost child, though their effect is undeniably discounted by the prosy opening of Hermes, are extremely ingenious. Dr. Verrall, indeed, who not unfrequently finds a good deal more in a Greek play than its guileless author ever put there, would have us believe that Creusa was, after all, mistaken; and that Ion, the offspring of a wholly different liaison, was palmed off upon her by an elaborate fraud. But the paradox, brilliantly as it is propounded, is singularly unconvincing, and we cannot feel the necessity for any explanation of the circumstances beyond that which has been hitherto generally accepted.

Turning to the performance itself, we may say at once that Mr. Powys, as Ion, achieved a very noteworthy success. If occasionally somewhat wanting in dignity, considering his quasi-sacerdotal office, he spoke his lines with a sprightliness and fluency that were beyond all praise, and his appearance as the youthful temple-attendant left nothing to be desired. He rendered the difficult song in the first act ἔγ', ὦ νειθαλὲς, δ καλλίστας προφάσεις δόφρας, κ. τ. λ.

with spirit and precision; was very natural in his scene with Xuthus, after the latter has received the oracle; and later on threatened the unfortunate Creusa, as she clung to the altar, in a lifelike and effective manner. His acting throughout was, in fact, distinguished by high intelligence, and he may be congratulated on having afforded a nearly ideal presentment of one of the most charming figures in Greek tragedy.

Mr. Newton, as Creusa, struggled manfully with the difficulties of his part, and at times did very well indeed, especially in the long and trying dialogues with the Slave and Ion. His gestures were scarcely varied enough; and the tones of his voice, rich as they were, showed the same defect. He also seemed afraid of letting himself go in the impassioned scene where Creusa, smarting under her long-concealed injury, upbraids the perfidious god upon the very steps of his temple:—

ὦ τὰς ἐκταφθόγγον μέλπον κισθράς ἰονῶν, ἔτ' ἀγρόυλοις κέραιον ἐν ἀψύχοις ἀχέῃ
Μουσῶν δμῶν ἐναχέτους, σοὶ μομφάν, ὦ Λατοῦς παῖ, πρὸς τὰνδ' ἀνὰν αἰθέρος ἀνδράσω.

This splendid speech, with its infinitely touching sequel, should have been delivered with more fire and pathos than Mr. Newton appeared capable of throwing into it. While maintaining a praiseworthy standard of general excellence, the worst that can be said of him is that he failed, at certain supreme moments, to carry his audience away.

Upon Ion and Creusa the main burden of the piece falls. Among the minor characters, the representatives of Hermes and Athene (Messrs. Markham and Buckler) made the most of the unpromising material provided for them by Euripides. The former was scarcely so picturesque a deity as Mr. Baillie, who impersonated the "messenger of the gods" in the "Eumenides"; but Pallas Athene looked every inch a goddess as she stood in a commanding attitude at the back of the stage, and apologised for her brother, who under the painful circumstances with which our readers are familiar, μή τῶν πάροιθε μέμψις ἐς μέσον μόλη felt a natural reluctance to come forward himself.

Mr. Jacques as Xuthus does not call for any particular comment; but a word of praise must be given to Mr. Palk, in whose hands the character of the Slave was invested with real interest. The sly cunning, and blind devotion of the narrow old fellow were admirably indicated, and the efforts of the actor were assisted by a skilful make-up. Equally good, in its way, was the acting of the Messenger (Mr. Bertram), who told the tale of the attempted murder of Ion with an exuberant vivacity which secured a round of applause. The entrance of the Pythian Priestess (Mr. Taylor), a solemn and stately personage, who appeared quite unconscious of the unworthy suspicions of Dr. Verrall, was very well managed. Instead of carrying the mysterious ἀντίπηγξ herself, which would have been a risky proceeding, she allowed that duty to devolve upon one of the two white-robed maidens by whom she was attended. An ἀντίπηγξ, it may here be stated, which on the authority of Liddell and Scott we had always regarded as the prototype of the modern perambulator, turns out in the light of recent antiquarian research to be a tiny wicker receptacle not unlike a doll's bassinette.

If Dr. Waldstein's training of the actors bore such satisfactory fruit, Mr. J. W. Clark's stage management, it is needless to observe, was excellent—perhaps most noticeably so in the scene when Creusa, pursued by the excited Delphians, takes sanctuary with the god who betrayed her. The manoeuvring of the large crowd in the restricted space afforded by the Cambridge theatre was extremely good. We fancied, however, that the change of structure which, while giving a larger frontage to the stage, precluded the chorus from using the doors at either side, was scarcely an improvement. Having to advance and retire over the upper stage, they seemed now and again to perform their evolutions a little awkwardly; and this was notably the case in the so-called "interlude," when the restlessness of their movements detracted, to some extent, from the charm of the music. Otherwise, their marching and singing was capital, and reflected the highest credit on their instructor, Prof. Stanford. Is it too much to expect, after the success of the bold experiment at Bradfield, that the university may some day provide itself with a properly-designed theatre for these representations, which have already become a permanent feature in modern education?

We cannot pretend to give an exhaustive criticism of Mr. Wood's music upon one hearing, but we are of opinion that it in no way suffered by comparison with the work of the distinguished composers who wrote for the "Ajax," "Birds," "Eumenides," and "Oedipus Tyrannus." Among much that was clever in the score we were particularly struck by the "pan-pipe" effect in the chorus at the close of the first act, descriptive of the haunt of Pan—ἵνα χοροὶ στείβουσιν ποδοῖν Ἀγλαύρου κόραι τρίγωνοι στάδια χλοερὰ πρὸ Πάλλαδος.

ναῶν συρίγγων
ὅπ' αἰόλας ἰαχᾶς
ῥμῶν, κ.τ.λ.

The admirable use made of the broad Delphic tune throughout was also noticeable. Two other exquisite numbers were the entracte with its passages of staccato bass, and the choric interlude with its delightful change to allegretto tranquillo, ushering in the passage—

ὅτε καὶ Διὸς ἀστερωπὸς ἀνεχόρευεν αἰθήρ χορεύει δὲ σελᾶνα
καὶ πεντήκοντα κόραι
Νηρηίδες, κ.τ.λ.

And nothing could be more appropriate to the situation than the joyous marching rhythm of the last chorus, which bids fair, we think, to become as popular as Dr. Hubert Parry's finale in the "Birds." It is to be hoped that the opportunity of hearing such portions of Mr. Wood's work as can be conveniently detached from their context will shortly be given to a London audience.

In conclusion, we cannot but express our acknowledgments to the committee which undertakes the arduous task of producing these dramas, and our hope that it may continue its valuable labours for many years to come. All the four great Athenian dramatists have now had a turn upon the Cambridge boards. May we venture to put in a plea for a revival of a second Aristophanic comedy at the next Dionysiac festival in St. Andrew's Street?

H. F. WILSON.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

M. PADEREWSKI gave his second pianoforte recital last Thursday week, and "by special request" (whatever that may mean), commenced with Handel's "Blacksmith" variations. His reading, though characteristic, lacked simplicity. Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 2, No. 3) is an early work, so far as opus number and most of the music are concerned; but the noble character and deep feeling of the Adagio entitle it to a place among the great slow movements of the second period. M. Paderewski's performance of this Sonata was excellent. He also played some Chopin pieces, including the seldom heard Ballade in F major. His technique in the A flat Polonaise was very fine, but it is a pity that he indulged in some exaggerations and gratuitous additions to the text.

Sir Charles Halle's second orchestral concert on Friday of last week was not better attended than the first, but it must be acknowledged that the weather was extremely unfavourable. The programme included Dvorák's pianoforte Concerto in G minor (Op. 33), first heard in this country at the Crystal Palace, in 1883, with Mr. O. Beringer as interpreter. The difficult pianoforte part is showy, but the composer has treated the solo instrument after the example set by Schumann. The work is really a symphony with pianoforte obbligato. Sir C. Halle played with his usual skill and refinement. The programme included Spohr's Larghetto from his Third Symphony, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, which was given with much energy.

On Saturday afternoon, at the Popular Concert, a Sonata in A minor (Op. 13) by M. Paderewski was introduced for the first time. It contains three movements. The music throughout has a decided Slavonic flavour; and the subject-matter, especially in the opening Allegro, is characteristic and pleasing. The composer possesses a skilful and fluent pen; the writing, however, is unequal. There are, as in Rubinstein's chamber music, passages in which the virtuoso element is far too prominent; and, like Rubinstein, M. Paderewski is apt to become diffuse. This was specially noticeable in the Finale. The work, interpreted by Mme. Neruda and the composer, was well played and well received. The pianist's solos were Schubert's Impromptu in B flat (Op. 142, No. 3), of which he gave a somewhat affected rendering, and Chopin's Polonaise in A flat. Mr. Plunket Greene sang some interesting songs. The programme further included a Haydn Quartet, and Rubinstein's popular Sonata in D for piano and 'cello.

There was an unusually small audience at the concert on the following Monday, but it must be confessed that the programme was not a strong one. The principal feature of interest was the appearance of Señor Albeniz, who played four Scarlatti pieces, or "Sonatas" as they were called. The first three were performed in a clear, crisp, and characteristic manner. In the fourth, the well-known movement in A, Señor Albeniz was somewhat flurried; there were one or two unfortunate slips, and the tone was scarcely delicate enough. He was, however, encored, and added another Scarlatti movement. Miss Liza Lehmann sang with much charm Hook's quaint song, "When first the East begins to dawn," and Thorne's "Les paroles d'or."

A concert was given on Tuesday evening, at St. James's Hall, by Mr. De Lara, assisted by Mme. Nordica, M. Maurel, and other well-known artists. The great French baritone sang the famous "Credo" from Verdi's "Otello" and several songs, besides joining Mr. De Lara in two duets. His wonderful dramatic power and variety of expression evoked enthusiastic signs of admiration from the more intelligent section of the audience. Others seemed to find pleasure in the sentimentality of four of Mr. De Lara's own songs, given by that gentleman in the style of which he has fortunately secured a monopoly.

A capital concert (the seventeenth) was given on Wednesday evening at the Town Hall, Westminster, by the Westminster Orchestral Society. The works played included Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G, the solo in which was taken by Miss Emily Skinner; a fine "Dramatic" Overture in D minor by Mr. Shakespeare, who conducted the work, and was enthusiastically applauded; Gounod's Overture to "Mirella"; and songs by Miss Ada Pattison and Mr. Edward Branscombe. Mr. C. Steward Macpherson conducted with conspicuous ability. There was a large and very appreciative audience.

MESSRS. NELSON'S NEW BOOKS.

THE ROYAL ATLAS AND GAZETTEER of AUSTRALASIA.
By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. Imperial 8vo, cloth extra. Containing 28 Maps, General Geographical Statistics, and Descriptive Gazetteer. Bound in cloth extra. 12s.
"The maps are excellent and full of instruction."—Times.

EVANGELICAL THEOLOGY. A Course of Popular Lectures by A. A. HODGE, D.D., Professor of Theology, Princeton. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LOYAL HEARTS. A Story of the Days of "Good Queen Bess." By EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Heiress of Wylmington," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

ALISON WALSHE: A Study of To-day. By C. EVELYN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s.

FRITZ of PRUSSIA: Germany's Second Emperor. By LUCY TAYLOR, Author of "The Children's Champion, and the Victories he Won," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 4s.

LA ROCHELLE; or, The Refugees. A Story of the Huguenots. By Mrs. E. C. WILSON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 4s.

WANDERINGS in SOUTH AMERICA, &c. By CHARLES WATERTON, Esq. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, cloth extra, 4s.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE ROUND the WORLD of H.M.S. "BEAGLE." By CHARLES DARWIN, M.A., F.R.S. With 16 full-page and 6 double-page Illustrations. 8vo, cloth extra, 4s.

ROYAL PORTRAIT GALLERY. With numerous Illustrations, small 4to, cloth extra, 5s. 6d.

PICTURES and STORIES from ENGLISH HISTORY. With numerous Illustrations, small 4to, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE LAND where JESUS CHRIST LIVED: a Book for the Young. By HESTER DOUGLAS. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

LITTLE LIVES, and THREADS of GOLD to GUIDE THEM. By Lady ALICIA BLACKWOOD. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

* * NELSON'S NEW DESCRIPTIVE BOOK-LIST POST-FREE ON APPLICATION.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, 35 and 36, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; Parkside, Edinburgh; and New York.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, UNIFORM WITH THE FIRST SERIES.

Fcap. 8vo, antique paper, olive cloth, price 6s.

Obiter Dicta. Second Series. By

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. Containing Essays on the following Subjects:—Milton, Pope, Johnson, Burke, the Muse of History, Charles Lamb, Emerson, The Office of Literature, Worn-out Types, Cambridge and the Poets, Book-buying.
"A volume of delightful essays. Mr. Birrell's great charm lies in his style. It is simply admirable, full of happy phrases, often reminding us of Lamb, a fit vehicle for the genial, graceful humour of the author."—Vanity Fair.

In fcap. 8vo, tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in olive cloth, price 3s. 6d.

The Spirit and Influence of Chivalry.

By JOHN BATTY

The great purpose of the writer is to arrive at the best definition of Chivalry—after viewing the subject in its many aspects—and to place before the sympathetic reader the result of his studies, by the production of a comprehensive and philosophical essay, on the spirit of Chivalry in all its bearings on society with many illustrative incidents calculated to render the book readable and entertaining.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, price 3s. 6d.

Shadow Land in Ellan Vannin: Folk

Stories from the Isle of Man. By I. H. LENEY (Mrs. I. W. RUSSELL).

"Decidedly interesting."—Public Opinion.

"A most acceptable little volume. From the careful and appreciative way in which the writer has woven her materials together, we shall look forward to more."—Spectator.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price One Shilling.

London of the Past; a Picture of the Olden City.

"Seldom have we seen a brochure which in such a concise and handy form gives us so vivid a picture of the London of the Middle Ages."—City Press.

"To those who wish to be instructed in the leading facts of the City's history, this little volume will be useful."—Evening News.

In handsome 4to, price £2 10s. net.

Vestiges of Old Newcastle & Gateshead.

By the Rev. J. R. BOYLE, F.S.A., Editor of "Memoirs of Master John Shawe," and Author of "The Lost Towns of the Humber." Illustrated by W. H. Knowles, Architect.

SECOND EDITION, with Maps, cloth, 5s.; Library Edition, calf, 12s. 6d.

Cæsar in Kent. By Rev. F. T. VINE,

M.A., Rector of Eastington, Glos.

By comparison of British with Latin Authors much new light is thrown on early British History, and the localities of Julius Cæsar's landing and early inland battles are in this work settled beyond dispute.

The book has been very favourably reviewed by the press, and recommended both as an educational and archaeological work.

London: ELLIOT STOCK,

THE GRAPHIC HISTORY of the BRITISH EMPIRE; from Celtic Times to the Present Day. Illustrated with Maps, Plans, and Tables. 803 pages. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. 6d.

NEW LIBRARY HISTORY. DICTIONARY of IDIOMATIC ENGLISH PHRASES. By JAMES MAIN DIXON, M.A. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 384 pp., 3s. 6d.

KIBBOO GANEY; or, The Lost Chief of the Copper Mountain: a Tale of Travel and Adventure in the Heart of Africa. By WALTER WENTWORTH. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

DULCIE'S LOVE STORY. By EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Winning the Victory," "Birdie's Resolve," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

BIRDIE'S RESOLVE, and HOW IT WAS ACCOMPLISHED: a Story for Children. By EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

THE BLACKSMITH of BONIFACE LANE. By A. L. O. E., Author of "Beyond the Black Waters," "Harold's Bride," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL: a Story of Brittany. By Miss GAYE, Author of "Dickie Winton." Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s.

PHILIP: A Story of the First Century. By MARY C. CUTLER. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s.

ARCHIE'S FIND. A Story of Australian Life. By ELEANOR STREDDER, Author of "Jack and his Ostrich," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

CAPTAIN POLLY. "Thou hast Gained thy Brother." A Story for Young People. By SOPHIE SWETT. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

DICK, and HARRY, and TOM; or, For our Reaping By-and-By. By FLORENCE E. BURCH, Author of "No Royal Road," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

A LITTLE BOY and GIRL; or, How Rollo and Tricksey Filled their Money-box. By FLORENCE E. BURCH. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

JACKO; or, The Slippery Highway. By HARRIET E. BURCH, Author of "Wind and Wave," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

JACK and FLOSS at HOME and at SEA: a Story for the Young in Words of One Syllable. By Mrs. ARTHUR G. K. WOODGATE. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

In handsome demy 8vo, cloth bevelled, gilt, price 10s. 6d.

The Dawn of the English Reformation:

its Friends and Foes. By the Rev. HENRY WORSLEY, M.A., Vicar of Ashford-Bowdler.

"No such full picture of the events which led up to so supremely important a change in the religious condition of England has yet been published, and the author is to be congratulated on the success with which he has combined the facts of History in a story of continuous interest."—Times Weekly.

In demy 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 5s.

Principia; or, The Three Octaves of Creation. By the Rev. ALFRED KENNION.

"Deserving of attentive study by those interested in the subject."—Graphic.

"We commend the book to the very careful study of all who are interested in the true interpretation of the history of creation."—Evangelical Magazine.

Tastefully printed, and bound in cloth, price 5s.

Spiritual Law in the Natural World.

A Divine Philosophy, applied to the Solution of Profound Problems of the Natural and Spiritual Worlds. By EDMUND SWIFT, Sen.

"The object of the author is to show that there is nothing in the Christian religion incompatible with the fundamental truths of science, and he helps less informed judgments by showing how they may be reconciled and devoted to the still wider diffusion of Gospel teachings."—Western Mercury.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

A Letter from Heaven, and other

SERMONS. By the Rev. DAVID ROBERTS, D.D., Wrexham. Being a Translation into English of Selected Sermons previously published in the Welsh Language by the Author, and Dedicated by Special Permission to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK ON BIBLE STUDY. UNIFORM WITH THE FIRST SERIES.

In handsome demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

A Handbook of Scientific and Literary

BIBLE DIFFICULTIES; or, Facts and Suggestions for the Solution of Perplexing Things in Sacred Scripture. Edited by Rev. ROBERT TUCK, B.A. (Lond.).

This Second part of the "Handbook of Bible Difficulties" includes the perplexities arising on questions which relate to Science, Religion, History (Ancient), Doctrines, Language, Authorship, and is a companion volume to the First Series which contained the Difficulties relating to Moral and Historical subjects.

In crown 8vo, tastefully bound in cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Moses and the Prophets. Their Unshaken Testimony as against the "Higher Criticism." Based on Naturalism. By the Rev. GAVIN CARLYLE, M.A.

62, Paternoster Row E.C.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.*GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS AND THE STRUGGLE OF PROTESTANTISM FOR EXISTENCE.

By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A.,
Late Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings and Maps. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

"The story of the struggle for existence of Protestantism narrated in this volume will find many sympathetic readers.....The work bears evidence of careful compilation, condensation, and discrimination on the part of the author."—Scotsman.

"The Campaigns against Tilly, Wallestein, and other noted Commanders of the 16th and 17th centuries, and the political consequences enable Mr. Fletcher to present a connected narrative which is as exciting as a well-told romance."—The Mail.

"An interesting sketch of an interesting career."—Glasgow Herald.

"The book is most interestingly and well written."—United Service Gazette.

"The style of the book is crisp, blunt, almost sturdy, but eminently readable."—Manchester Examiner.

Full Prospectus of the Series sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

VOL. VI. Now Ready.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, with Maps and Wood Engravings. In 10 vols., imperial 8vo. Entirely New Edition. Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., and VI. are now ready.

Price 10s. each, cloth; 15s. each, half-morocco.

The Work is also being issued in Monthly Parts, price 1s. each.

THE SPECTATOR.—"The leading literary, political, scientific, and artistic subjects have been intrusted to specially qualified writers, whose articles are, as a rule, entirely new. It is already evident that the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopedia will reflect the highest credit on its editor and its publishers."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Many distinguished names will be found amongst the list of contributors, and the articles throughout are models of conciseness, while embracing the latest facts."

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.—"The best men in all departments are contributors, while the aid of specialists has been largely enlisted to make the articles complete synopses of the latest knowledge."

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

SPENCER BLACKETT'S NEW LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF G. A. HENTY'S BOOK.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d. Illustrated.

THE CURSE of CARNE'S HOLD. By G. A. Henty, Author of "Gabriel Allen, M.P.," "All But Lost," &c., with numerous Illustrations by Charles Kerr.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MICAH CLARKE."

At all Booksellers and Libraries, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SIGN of FOUR. By A. Conan Doyle, Author of "The Firm of Girdlestone," "The Captain of the Polestar," &c.

"Is really a marvel of logical deduction, and equal to anything of Edgar Poe's."

Illustrated London News.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THREE CORNERED ESSAYS."

At all Booksellers and Libraries, crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

THE PHILOSOPHER in SLIPPERS: Zigzag Views of Life and Society. By the Author of "Three Cornered Essays."

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE PATERNOSTER REVIEW.

6d.] DECEMBER. [6d.]

FRONTISPIECE—THE NATIVITY. By LUCA DELLA ROBBIA.

SOUTH CENTRAL AFRICA. With Map. By H. H. JOHNSTON.

H.B.M. Consul, Mozambique.

ZONE RAILWAYS for LONDON. By E. S. SHELTON.

THE AMERICAN ELECTIONS and the MCKINLEY TARIFF BILL. By OAKLEY HALL.

THE JEWS in RUSSIA. By WILLIAM HENRY.

A MEMORY of SIR RICHARD BURTON. With Portrait. By L. A. SMITH.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION. By M. E. SADLER.

PARLIAMENT on CIRCUIT. By A. POINS.

REGISTRATION REFORM. By J. KENWICK SEAGER.

"BONA MORS." By HILAIRE BELLOC.

MONTHLY CHRONICLE

E. GILBERT ELLIS & Co., 11, Clement's Inn, London.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By

A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book.

Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF
THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Messrs. Leonard Boyne, Beveridge, Shine, Abingdon, Thalberg, Rignold, Dalton, Bassett Roe, East, &c.; Mesdames Olga Brandon, K. James, C. Jecks, E. Dane, and Mary Rorke.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by E. C. Carton, entitled
SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.
Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9. A farcical comedy in three acts, by Sydney Grundy, entitled
MAY AND DECEMBER.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.
Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney, Brandon Thomas, Allen Aynesworth, Saunders, F. Farren, Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington, Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBOHM-Tree.
Every Evening, at 8.15 (Mondays excepted), Messrs. Hugh Conway and Comyns Carr's successful drama,
CALLER BACK.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Fred Terry, F. Kerr, Allan, C. Hudson, Webster Lawson, Robb Harwood, Tapping, &c.; Mesdames Blanche Horlock, E. H. Brooke, Aylward, and Julia Neilson.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Lessee.
This Evening, at 8, RAVENSWOOD.
Mr. Henry Irving, Mr. Terriss, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Wenman, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Macklin, Mr. Howe, Mr. Tyars, Mr. Gordon Craig, Mr. Haviland, Mr. Lacey, Mr. Davis; Miss Ellen Terry, Miss Marriott, Miss Le Thiere, Mrs. Fauncefort.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. Lionel Brough, E. W. Garden, Michael Dwyer, Eric Lewis, John Peachey, Geo. Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Effie Clements, Annie Rose, Schubert, Adelaide Newton, St. Cyr, and Lila Clay.
Preceded, at 7.30, by THE SENTRY.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.
This Evening, at 7.45,
THE PEOPLE'S IDOL.
Messrs. Wilson Barrett, Austin, Melford, Cooper Cliffe, W. A. Elliott, A. Manning, and George Barrett; Mesdames Lillie Belmore, Jeffries, A. Cooke, L. Wilnot, and Winifred Emery.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act Farce, entitled
THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H. Panton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorn; Mesdames E. Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.
Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 7.45,
ANTHONY AND CLEOPATRA.
Messrs. A. Stirling, Kemble Cooper, Everill, Lorraine, Burleigh, Abye, Black, Hilton, Parkes, Gay, Beverley, Druce, Yardley, Fenwicke, M'Vicars, Pringle, Munro, and Carvill.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
This Evening, at 8.50, THE PHARISEE.
Messrs. Lewis Waller, Herbert Waring, J. Beauchamp, H. V. Esmond, Herbert-Basing, and M. Marius; Mesdames Lancaster-Wallis (Miss Wallis), Marion Lea, Florence West, Minnie Terry, Dennis, and Sophie Larkin.
Preceded, at 8, by MY LADY HELP.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. EDWARD TERRY.
Every Evening, at 9.0, A. W. PINFRO's three-act Farce, entitled
IN CHANCERY.
Mr. Edward Terry and Company.
Preceded, at 8.15, by
MY FRIEND JARLET.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.
This Evening, at 9, THE SOLICITOR.
Messrs. F. Mervin, F. Kaye, G. Wentworth, A. B. Francis, L. D'Orsay, H. W. Brame, H. Bedford, and E. Cranston; Mesdames Susie Vaughan, K. Rutland, L. Bell, V. Thornycroft, and Delia Carlyle.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.MADE SIMPLY WITH
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other
Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.
And all Booksellers.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free,
on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APART-

MENTS THROUGHOUT

ON

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1883.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)

Also for HIRE ONLY.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY &amp; SONS

COCOA

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment
Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT INVESTED FUNDS,
£24,400,000.

INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

ESTBD. 1835.

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and
Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen,
2s.; or very best Irish Linen,
2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White
Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d.,
5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape,
2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry.
Warm, durable, and comfortable.
Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker
Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., 6s. 9d., and 7s. 9d.
WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

IRISH SOX

B. &amp; E. M'HUGH &amp; CO., Limited, BELFAST

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,
NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,
And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed.

Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the *Encyclopedia
Brit.*, says "Prof. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus, containing opinions of pupils who have
PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic,
Clerical, etc., professions, post free from

Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the Five GOLD MEDALS that were awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

NEW BOOKS.

NEW EDITION OF STRATMANN'S MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Just published, small 4to, £1 11s. 6d.

A MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, containing Words used by English Writers from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century. By FRANCIS HENRY STRATMANN. A New Edition, Re-arranged, Revised, and Enlarged by HENRY BRADLEY.

Just published, New Volume, with 12 Maps, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. Vol. II. THE WEST INDIAN COLONIES. By C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College and the Colonial Office. Revised throughout by persons possessing special local knowledge of the several Colonies and Dependencies.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR FOR THE YEAR 1890.

* * The shape of the "University Calendar" has now been restored in many respects to that which it bore in the years immediately preceding 1863. The class lists and honour lists are inserted entire, and the names and colleges of the winners of the University Scholarships, Exhibitions, and Prizes, in most cases from the foundation of each, are also given.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "RULERS OF INDIA" SERIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, with Map, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MARQUESS of CORNWALLIS: and the Consolidation of British Rule. By W. S. SETON-KARR, sometime Foreign Secretary to the Government of India.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED.

THE MARQUESS of DALHOUSIE. Sir W. W. HUNTER.

AKBAR. Colonel G. B. MALLESON.

DUPLEIX. Colonel G. B. MALLESON.

WARREN HASTINGS. Captain L. J. TROTTER.

* * Other Volumes in active preparation.

NEW EDITION.

Just published, Third Edition, Revised, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

LOCKE'S CONDUCT of the UNDERSTANDING. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by THOMAS FOWLER, D.D., Author of "The Elements of Deductive and Inductive Logic," "The Principles of Morals," &c.
"I cannot think any parent or instructor justifying in neglecting to put this little treatise in the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed."
HALLAM'S Literature of Europe.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled, gilt lines, 4s. 6d., and in various superior bindings.

THE TREASURY of SACRED SONG. Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries; with Notes, Explanatory, and Biographical. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry, Oxford.

* * Also an Edition printed on the OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER, making an exceptionally light and handy volume, extra cloth, 10s. 6d.; and in superior bindings.

STANDARD BOOKS FOR PRESENTS AND PRIZES.

Third Edition, Revised, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of FRENCH LITERATURE. By G. SAINTSBURY, M.A.

"In many ways a masterpiece."—Athenaeum.

Medium 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.; half-roan, gilt top, 14s.

PLATO—THE REPUBLIC. Translated into English, with an Analysis and Introduction, by B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, and Regius Professor of Greek, Oxford. Third Edition, Revised and Corrected throughout.
The additions and alterations affect at least a third of the work.

DR. MARTINEAU'S GREAT WORKS.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

TYPES of ETHICAL THEORY. By James Martineau, D.D., LL.D., late Principal of Manchester New College, London. Third Edition.

"The most important and original work which English philosophy has produced for at least a century and a half."—Spectator.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

A STUDY of RELIGION: its Sources and Contents. By JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

"Will rank with the great works of Berkeley, Butler, and Cardinal Newman, amongst the most enduring efforts of philosophical thought."—Spectator.

N.B.—All Book Buyers will find it worth their while to examine carefully

THE CATALOGUE OF CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS,

CONTAINING MANY

STANDARD WORKS IN GENERAL AND EDUCATIONAL LITERATURE,

WHICH WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

UNIFORM WITH THE "WIT AND WISDOM OF SAMUEL JOHNSON."

Just published, tastefully printed in crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled gilt top, 6s.

THE WORLDLY WISDOM of LORD CHESTERFIELD.

Selected and Arranged by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Editor of the Clarendon Press Edition of Boswell's "Life of Johnson."

NEW EDITION REVISED AND CORRECTED.

Just published, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

OUTLINES of TEXTUAL CRITICISM applied to the NEW TESTAMENT. By C. E. HAMMOND, M.A. Fifth Edition.

Just published, 2 vols., 8vo, half-bound, 24s.

THE GILD MERCHANT: a Contribution to British Municipal History. By CHARLES GROSS, Ph.D., Instructor in History, Harvard University.

* * The present work is based mainly on manuscript materials, and in it the author aspires to throw light on the development, not merely of the gilds, but also of the municipal constitution. Much fresh and classified material illustrating general municipal history will be found in the text and notes.
From the PREFACE.

NEW EDITION OF CHAUCER'S PROLOGUE.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s.

CHAUCER.—PROLOGUE to the CANTERBURY TALES.

Edited by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Cambridge.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—MEMORABILIA. Edited for the use of Schools, with Introduction and English Notes, by J. MARSHALL, M.A., LL.D., Rector Royal High School, Edinburgh, Editor of "Xenophon Anabasis."

Now ready, Part I. and II., crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. each Part.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College; and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, and Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham Colleges, Oxford.

Part I. Books I.-III. Part II. Books IV.-VI.

"Mr. Papillon's elegant and accurate Virgilian scholarship is well known .... This edition will meet all the reasonable needs of an ordinary class taught by a competent master, or of an undergraduate who is not hopelessly backward. It is in handy size, and beautifully printed."
Saturday Review.

* * Books VII.-IX. will appear immediately, and the work will be completed by the end of the present year.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CLARENDON PRESS SERIES OF THE GERMAN CLASSICS.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S JUNGFAU VON ORLEANS. With

Historical and Critical Introductions, a Complete Commentary, &c. Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., F.C.F., Professor of German, King's College, London, Editor of the Series.

"Dr. Buchheim, by his excellent editions of the German Classics, has done far more than any other man to forward the study of German in England and America."—Westminster Review.

Second Edition, 4to, £2 4s.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the English Language. Arranged on an Historical Basis by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Cambridge.

A Supplement to the First Edition of the above, 4to, 2s. 6d.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

CONCISE ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the English Language. By W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SHAKESPEARE as a DRAMATIC ARTIST: a popular illustration of the Principles of Scientific Criticism. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A. Second Edition, Enlarged.

DEAN BRADLEY'S WESTMINSTER LECTURES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LECTURES on the BOOK of JOB. By the Rev. G. G. BRADLEY, D.D. Second Edition.

"Scholarly, yet most effective and popular. No one who takes up the volume is willing to lay it down."—Spectator.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LECTURES on ECCLESIASTES. By the same Author.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 971.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST.

New and Important Series of Popular Books.

EVENTS of OUR TIMES. A Series of Volumes on the most Important Events of the Last Half-Century. Each Volume will contain from 800 to 400 pages, and will be illustrated with Portraits on Copper, Maps, Plans, or other Engravings, and will be published at 5s., in cloth. Large-Paper copies 250 only.

Just published.

THE WAR in the CRIMEA. By General Sir Edward Hamley K.C.B. With Portraits of the Emperor Nicholas, Lord Raglan, General Todleben, and General Pelissier, and 5 Maps and Plans. Price 5s.; Large Paper Copies (250 only), price 10s. 6d.

"Sir Edward Hamley is always exact, giving a clean impression, and never letting the word go beyond the feeling. As a narrative his account of the Crimean War is an example of how much a writer can tell in a short space."—Saturday Review.

Just published.

THE INDIAN MUTINY of 1857. By Colonel Malleson, C.S.I. With Portraits of Lord Clyde, Sir Henry Lawrence, Sir H. Havelock, and Sir J. Outram, and 4 Maps and Plans, price 5s.; Large-Paper Copies (250 copies), price 10s. 6d.

In February.

ACHIEVEMENTS in ENGINEERING. By Professor Vernon HARCOURT. With many Illustrations.

In preparation.

THE LIBERATION of ITALY. By Edward Dicey. With Portraits.

Among the Volumes to follow may be named:—

THE REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE.

THE CIVIL WAR in AMERICA.

THE EXPLORATION of AFRICA.

THE OPENING of JAPAN.

Just Published.

MRS. THRALE (afterwards Mrs. Piozzi). By L. R. SEELEY, M.A. With 9 Copperplates after Hogarth, Reynolds, Zoffany, &c. Price 7s. 6d. cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (150 only), price 21s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

HORACE WALPOLE and his WORLD. Second Edition, 7s. 6d.

FANNY BURNBY and her FRIENDS. Third Edition, 7s. 6d.

Just published.

THE RUINED ABBEYS of YORKSHIRE. By W. C. LEFROY. With many Illustrations after A. Brunet Debaines and H. Toussaint. New Edition, price 6s., cloth.

"For trustworthiness and general attractiveness this book is to be warmly commended."

Notes and Queries.

Previous Volumes of the same Series:—

OXFORD. By Andrew Lang. 6s.

CAMBRIDGE. By J. W. Clark. 6s.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON. By Sidney Lee. 6s.

WINDSOR. By W. J. Loftie. 6s.

EDINBURGH. By R. L. Stevenson. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; rox., 5s.

The Guinea Editions of the four first named of these books, containing the original etchings, are still to be had.

A Second Edition of

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, Author of "A History of London," "Memorials of the Savoy," "Windsor Castle," &c. With 12 Plates and many minor illustrations, chiefly by H. Railton. Imperial 4to, cloth, 21s.; Large-Paper copies (100 only), £1 4s.

"Likely to be one of the most popular of the many books that have been written dealing with the great abbey."—Guardian.

THE EARLIER ENGLISH WATER-COLOUR PAINTERS. By COSMO MONKHOUSE. With 18 Plates after Turner, Martin, Bonington, Cotman, De Wint, Sandby, Hearne, Barret, Prout, Cozens, Copley Fielding, Cattemole, and David Cox. Super-royal 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

"This volume, with its sound criticism and display of solid knowledge, will be absolutely invaluable to the collector."—Saturday Review.

Just published.

THE LAUREATE'S COUNTRY. Scenes connected with the Life of ALFRED, Lord TENNYSON. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With 15 Copper-Plates, and many other Engravings of places connected with the Poet and his Works, from Drawings by EDWARD HULL. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (150 only), price Three Guineas net.

"A very charming book. Mr. Church has just that scholarly sympathy with Lord Tennyson's verse, just that delicate appreciation of the relations between genius and its surroundings, which make him an admirable cicerone neither tedious nor jejune, neither fulsome nor indiscreet. The illustrations by Mr. Hall are admirable and full of interest."—Times.

Just published.

FROM CHARING CROSS to ST. PAUL'S. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. With 12 Plates, and many other Engravings of Street Scenes in London from Drawings by Joseph Pennell. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (100 only), price £2 12s. 6d.

"An illustrated work of topographical gossip, which deserves high praise. Mr. Justin McCarthy is much at home in Fleet Street and the Strand. Mr. Pennell's drawings are full of force and life."—Times.

Just published.

THE LIFE of HENRY DAWSON, Landscape Painter. With 14 Copper Plates engraved by his Son, from the most characteristic Works of the Painter. Price One Guinea, cloth.

Large-Paper Copies (100 only), price £2 12s. 6d.

Just published.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUME for 1890, being the First Volume of the New Series. With 26 Copper Plates, and a large number of other Illustrations. Price 36s. cloth, or 42s. half-morocco.

The New Series has been in many ways improved, and the 12 numbers form a very handsome volume, which being quite complete in itself, makes a beautiful present for anyone with artistic tastes.

Some volumes of the old series are still to be had, but many have become scarce.

Just published.

A YOUNG MACEDONIAN in the ARMY of ALEXANDER the GREAT. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With 16 Illustrations from the Antique. Price 5s., cloth.

"A charming book, charmingly illustrated."—Full Mall Gazette.

"The book is full of true classical romance."—Spectator.

"Told in Mr. Church's very simple but vivid style."—Journal of Education.

Just published.

WINCHESTER MEADS in the DAYS of BISHOP KEN. A Story. By Mrs. MARSHALL. With 8 Illustrations. Price 5s., cloth.

Just published.

FRESH from the FENS; or, Three Lincolnshire Lassies. A Story. By E. WARD. With 8 Illustrations. Price 5s., cloth.

"This story is very pleasant reading."—Journal of Education.

"The tale is nicely told and interesting."—Manchester Examiner.

POPULAR BOOKS OF SCIENCE.

SUN, MOON, and STARS. By A. GIBERNE. With Illustrations, 17th thousand, 5s.

AMONG the STARS. By A. GIBERNE. With Illustrations, 4th thousand, 5s.

THE WORLD'S FOUNDATIONS. By A. GIBERNE. With Illustrations, 5th thousand, 5s.

THE OCEAN of AIR. By A. GIBERNE. With Illustrations, 3rd thousand, 5s.

THE ODES of HORACE. Translated into English Verse by Rev. J. L. S. HATTON, Rector of West Barkwith, Lincolnshire. Price 5s.

THE CHEMISTRY of PAINTS and PAINTING. By A. H. CHURCH, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Academy. Price 5s.

LONDON: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
HATCH'S BAMPTON LECTURES, by the REV. JOHN OWEN	555
LEWIS CAMPBELL'S VERSE TRANSLATION OF AÆSCHYLUS, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	556
SMALLEY'S LONDON LETTERS, by ARTHUR ARNOLD	557
OSWALD CRAWFORD'S ROUND THE CALENDER in PORTUGAL, by MRS. CASHEL HORY	559
NEW NOVELS, by G. COTTERELL	560
GIFT BOOKS	561
NOTES AND NEWS	564
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	564
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	564
OBITUARY: Dean Church	565
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	565
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	565
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Cathedral" and "Bishop-designate," by E. A. FREEMAN; "The Order of Runes in the Futharc," by H. BRADLEY; "Odysseus and Helen," by A. LANG	565
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	568
SOME BOOKS ON GEOMETRY, by J. S. MACKAY	568
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Eurasian, Mediterranean, and Aryan Origins, by J. S. STUART GLENNIE	569
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	569
J. L. PETIT'S ARCHITECTURAL STUDIES IN FRANCE, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	569
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Hero of the Chaldean Epic, by WILLIAM HAYES WARD	570
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	570
STAGE NOTES	571
BERLIOZ'S "LES TROYENS" AT CARLSRUHE, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	571
MUSIC NOTES	572

ONE GUINEA PRIZE ESSAY COMPETITION.—For particulars see the Christmas Number of "LITERARY OPINION," price 6d. (annual subscription, 3s. post-free).—Office: 138, Fleet Street, E.C.

SECRETARY.—A late Indian Official has ONE or TWO VACANCIES for Gentlemen of energy having fr. m £250 to £500 to invest.—H. B. M., 285, Regent Street, W.

JAMES I. and CHARLES I. New Historical Dramatic Poems. 166 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled, 3s. 6d., delivered.—ARTHUR E. TROSCHEL, Harewood House, Darling. n, Author and Publisher.—For schools, reduced price, cloth boards

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Registers searched; Wills found; Pedigrees traced, in British Museum, Record Office, and Local Registries; Books and Papers copied and translated in any language from manuscript or type.—PEACOCK & PEACOCK, Antiquarian Genealogists, 1, Doughty Street, W. C.

STAMMERERS should read a book by a gentleman who cured himself after suffering nearly forty years. Price 13 stamps.—B. BRASLEY, Brampton Park, near Huntingdon.

THE Author of various large Works, extensively Reviewed, and of numerous published Magazine Articles, is open to WRITE WORKS, ESSAYS, or LECTURES on Historic, Philosophic, Theosophic, Recondite, and General Subjects, in a popular, inclusive, or elevated style, or to undertake Translations (at sight) from French, German, Italian, or Swedish.—Address C. W. H., 67, South Lambeth-road, London, S.W.—Anonymous letters or post-cards will not be noticed.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions à la carte. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of BOOKS (No. 183) in GENERAL LITERATURE, comprising many rare books, now ready.—FRANCIS EDWARDS, Bookseller, 83, High Street, Marylebone, London, W.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Three-pence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT & FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE WRITING.—1d. per folio (72 words), or 1s. per thousand. Duplicates 4d. per thousand. Neat, accurate, and prompt. Notes taken, rapid shorthand. Technical and scientific reporting and type writing a speciality. Reference.—Mr. BLACKWELL, 7, Canal Street, Waltham, S.E.

SWAN SONNENSCHN &amp; CO.

LUCAS MALET'S NEW NOVEL
The Wages of Sin. By the Author of "Colonel Enderby's Wife," &c. In 3 vols.

MRS. SPENDER'S NEW NOVEL
Lady Hazleton's Confession. By the Author of "Her Brother's Keeper," &c. In 3 vols.

Just published, price 1s., boards.

Speeches on the Irish Question 1887-90. By the Right Hon. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, M.P. Issued under the auspices of the National Liberal Union. Uniform with "Home Rule and the Irish Question, 1881 to 1887." 1s. each.

Monumental Brasses. By the Rev. H. W. MACKLIN. With 13 Full-page Plates, 118 full-length figures, and 18 other Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

"The manual is the best that has appeared." Scotman.

SCHOPENHAUER SERIES.

Edited by T. BAILEY SAUNDERS, M.A. Oxon. Each 2s. 6d.

1. The Wisdom of Life. [Second Edition.]
  2. Counsels and Maxims. [Second Edition.]
  3. Religion: a Dialogue, &c. [Second Edition.]
  4. The Art of Literature. [In preparation.]
  5. Studies in Pessimism. [Ready.]
- "Mr. Saunders has done English readers a genuine service." Athenæum.
- "Let your view of Schopenhauer be what it may, you cannot help enjoying and admiring the wealth of observation, reflection, and wisdom." Truth.

DR. PFLEIDERER'S VERY IMPORTANT WORK.
DEVELOPMENT of THEOLOGY in GERMANY and GREAT BRITAIN since 1825. Thick large 8vo, 10s. 6d. After devoting 300 pages to German Theology, the Work enters upon a Survey of the Progress of Theology in Great Britain since 1825, treating of the SCHOOLS OF PHILOSOPHY IN THEIR RELATION TO THEOLOGY (Coleridge, Carlyle, F. W. Newman, Jas. Mill, Sir W. Hamilton, Mansel, F. D. Maurice, Mat. Arnold, Seeley, Herb. Spencer, J. Caird, T. H. Green, Seth. Flint, Martineau) and PARTIES AND MOVEMENTS IN THEOLOGY (J. H. Newman, Froude, Keble, Pusey, Whately, Arnold, Hampden, Milman, Thirlwall, Hare, F. D. Maurice, Erskine, J. M. Campbell, Kingsley, Jowett, Stanley, R. W. Mackay, Seeley, Edersheim, Davidson, Westcott, Robertson Smith, Hatch). This Work forms the Fourth Volume of SONNENSCHN'S LIBRARY of PHILOSOPHY, edited by J. H. MURHEAD, M.A.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

Scarlet cloth, 2s. 6d. each.
The NEW VOLUME is by Mr. LAURANCE GRONLUND, entitled
OUR DESTINY: the Influence of Socialism on Morals and Religion; an Essay in Ethics. By the Author of "The Co-operative Commonwealth." English Copyright Edition, bearing Royalty to the Author.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| Work and Wages. THOROLD ROGERS.                     | Bismarck and State Socialism. W. H. DAWSON.      |
| Civilisation. E. CARPENTER.                         | Godwin's Political Justice. Edit. H. S. SALT.    |
| Quintessence of Socialism. Dr. SCHAFFLE.            | The French Revolution. E. BELFORT BAX.           |
| Darwinism and Politics. D. G. RITCHIE, M.A. (Oxon). | Co-operative Commonwealth. L. GRONLUND.          |
| Religion and Socialism. E. BELFORT BAX.             | Essays and Addresses. B. BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon). |
| Ethics of Socialism. E. BELFORT BAX.                | Charity Organisation. C. S. LOCH.                |
| Drink Question. Dr. KATE MITCHELL.                  | Thoreau's Reform Papers. Edit. H. S. SALT.       |
| Promotion of Happiness. Prof. MACMILLAN.            | Self-Help 100 Years Ago. G. J. HOLYOAKE.         |
| England's Ideal, &amp;c. E. CARPENTER.              | State Reformatory of Elmira. A. WINTER.          |
| Socialism in England. SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.            | Common Sense about Women. T. W. HIGGINSON.       |

NEW BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

Uniformly bound in cloth, gilt edges, 1s. 6d. each. Illustrated.

SHORT BIOGRAPHIES.

By FRANCES E. COOKE.

The Publishers can most confidently recommend this Series, as supplying parents and young readers with PRECISELY WHAT IS SO MUCH WANTED: Biographies of Great Men, told in good literary style, faithful in facts and surroundings, and yet forming reading matter as interesting as fiction. The Books are already in large use in family circles; one is adopted by the New Home Reading Circle, and the Cobden Club has already ordered more than 4,000 Copies of "AN ENGLISH HERO" (the Life of Richard Cobden), for gratuitous distribution.

1. A BOY'S IDEAL: Story of the Life of Sir Thomas More.
2. TRUE TO HIMSELF: Story of the Life of Savonarola.
3. LATIMER'S CAN-DLE: Story of the Life of Latimer.
4. An ENGLISH HERO: Story of the Life of Richard Cobden.
5. TYNDALE'S VOW: Story of the Life of Tyndale.
6. AN AMERICAN HERO (Lloyd Garrison).
7. FATHER DAMIEN.

Uniform with the above, 1s. 6d. each. Illustrated.

8. CHARLES DARWIN. By W. MAWER, F.R.G.S.
  9. MATTHEW CAFFIN. By FLORENCE GREGG.
  10. JOSEPH STURGE. By A. PECKOVER.
- OTTO in SEARCH of the FAIRIES. By C. EDEN. Illustrated by R. Andrs. 1s. 6d.

IN the DAYS of LUTHER.

By ESMÉ STUART, Author of "Caught in a Trap," &c. Illustrated. Cloth extra, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

ALMA; or, the Story of a Little Music-Mistress. By EMMA MARSHALL. Illustrated. Cloth extra, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

MAGGIE in MYTHICA. By F. B. DOVETON. With Twelve Full-page Illustrations by T. Harrington Wilson. Cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

MY BOYNIE. By Evelyn EVERETT-GREEN. Illustrated by Ethel King. 2s. 6d.

"Little readers are sure to like it." Literary World.
"A very beautiful and pathetic tale of child-life." Scotman.

SCHOOLBOY TRUTH and HONOUR. By A. H. BIGGS. With Four Full-page Plates by R. André. 2s. 6d.

"One of the best story-books that can be given to a boy." Manchester Examiner.
"Well-written sketches of grammar-school life." Schoolmaster.

A KING and NOT a KING. By MARGARET SPRING-RICE. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

"The story is a charming one." Fall Mall Gazette.
"A really interesting story." Guardian.

Uniformly bound in cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

KNIGHT ASRAEL. By UNA ASHWORTH TAYLOR. 3s. 6d.
"Singularly delightful." Literary World.
"Full of picturesque and poetical fancies, very gracefully expressed." Scotman.

Messrs. SWAN SONNENSCHN'S NEW ANNUAL CATALOGUE (Nov., 1890), comprising over 600 WORKS, will be sent post free on application.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

Will be issued early in 1891.

The Poems of John Ruskin.Written between the Ages of Seven and Twenty-six, with an Appendix of Later Poems.Now First Collected from Original Manuscript and Printed Sources; and Edited, in Chronological Order, with Notes, Biographical and Critical.

By W. G. COLLINGWOOD, M.A.

In 2 vols. of about 320 pp. each, with about 25 Plates, never before published, from Drawings by the Author, illustrative of some Places mentioned in the Text, and Facsimiles of Two Poems and an Early Letter to his Father.A SPECIAL EDITION (Limited) on Arnold's Unbleached hand-made Paper, and the Plates on India Paper, large post 4to, Three Guinea.

The ORDINARY EDITION, with all the Plates, 4to, 30s.

An Edition, with Facsimiles only, uniform with small Editions recently published, small post 8vo, 10s.

ALSO BY JOHN RUSKIN.

HORTUS INCLUSUS: Messages from the Wood to the Garden. (Mr. Ruskin's Letters to the Sister Ladies of The Thwaite, Coniston.) With a Preface by Mr. RUSKIN. Cloth, 4s.; roan, gilt edges,
6s. 6d.THE RUSKIN BIRTHDAY BOOK.With Portrait of the Author, specially engraved for the Work. A Selection of Thoughts, Mottos, and Aphorisms for Every Day in the Year. Cloth extra, 10s.; Large-Paper Edition, with India Proof Portrait, 15s. Several other bindings kept in stock. This Work gives a general insight into Mr. Ruskin's teaching and style.THE KING of the GOLDEN RIVER; or, The Black Brothers: a Legend of Styria. With numerous Woodcuts. Ninth Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.UNTO THIS LAST. Four Essays on the First Principles of Political Economy. Seventh Edition. 3s., cloth; 4s., roan, gilt edges, 12mo.FRONDES AGRESTES. Readings in "Modern Painters." Tenth Edition. Cloth, 3s.; roan, gilt edges, 4s."OUR FATHERS have TOLD US:"
Sketches of the History of Christendom. Part I.—THE BIBLE of AMIENS. With Four Steel Engravings and Plan of the Western Porches of Amiens Cathedral.
Cloth, 6s.ROADSIDE SONGS of TUSCANY.Translated and Illustrated by FRANCESCA ALEX-ANDER, and Edited by JOHN RUSKIN. With Articles by Mr. Ruskin on Domestic Usefulness, the Virtues Necessary to Sainthood, the Priest's Office and Gipsy
Character; also Preface and Editorial Notes.In Ten Parts, each containing Two Illustrations by the Platotype Process from Drawings by Miss Alexander, 7s. each Part; or the Complete Work, in cloth, £3 10s., medium 4to.CHRIST'S FOLK in the APENNINE:Reminiscences of the Tuscan Peasantry. By FRANCESCA
ALEXANDER. Edited by JOHN RUSKIN. Cloth,
7s. Second Edition.IGDRASIL, Vol. I. (Jan. to Sept., 1890.)

Cloth, 6s.

"Igdrasil" has entered upon a wider sphere with the adoption of this symbolic title. It contains much that is interesting, especially the sections devoted to Ruskiniana, and a series of striking articles on 'Social Problems' by Mr. Henry Rose."
*Athenaeum.*Letter from the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE to the EDITOR.
"I thank you for kindly presenting to me the first volume of 'Igdrasil,' and I sincerely wish well to every effort to keep at a high level the principles of art considered as the incorporation of beauty."

By the late CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D., F.S.A.

"GOSSAMER and SNOWDRIFT."

A Volume of Posthumous Poems.

With Introduction by ERIC MACKAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GEORGE ALLEN, Orpington; and 8, Bell Yard, Temple Bar, London.

BLACKIE &amp; SON'S PUBLICATIONS.

JUST COMPLETED.

In Eight Volumes, square 8vo, cloth, 48s.; or half-morocco, 68s.

BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA
OF UNIVERSAL INFORMATION.

Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

With numerous Pictorial Illustrations and a Series of Maps.

"A model and a marvel of accurate information."—Spectator."An excellent work of its kind."—Athenaeum."Some handy form of encyclopaedia has long been wanted. This is comprehensive, without being bulky. The information is succinctly given, sufficiently copious and strictly relevant."—Saturday Review.

JUST COMPLETED.

In Eight Volumes, small 4to, cloth, gilt top, £4 4s.; Roxburghe, £5.

THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by HENRY IRVING and FRANK A. MARSHALL.

With a General Introduction and Life of Shakespeare by Professor DOWDEN.

With 550 Illustrations in Text and Thirty-seven Etchings by GORDON BROWNE, W. H. MARGETSON, MAYNARD BROWN, and FRANK DADD."We congratulate publishers, editors, and all concerned, in having successfully brought to a conclusion this noble edition of the great dramatist."—St. James's Gazette."The result is so good that we must congratulate all concerned in it: and one especial feature can hardly fail to ensure its success as a popular edition—it is profusely illustrated by Mr. Gordon Browne, whose charming designs, executed in facsimile, give it an artistic value superior in our judgment to any illustrated edition of Shakespeare with which we are acquainted."
Athenaeum.

In Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in Portfolio, £2 12s. 6d.

A SELECTION FROM THE LIBER STUDIORUM OF
J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.

For Artists, Art Students, and Amateurs.

Comprising Four Facsimile Reproductions in Mezzotint by Photogravure, Fifty-one Facsimile Reproductions of the Etchings, including Seven Rare Unpublished Plates, and Thirty-seven Text Reproductions of the Finished Engravings."Ought to have a wide circulation, not only among students and in art schools, but among all persons who love English landscape and are jealous of the fame of our greatest landscape painter."—Times.

In Four Volumes, imperial 8vo, cloth, £5; or half-morocco, £6 6s.

THE IMPERIAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A Complete Encyclopaedic Lexicon, Literary, Etymological, Scientific, Technological and Pronouncing.

By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D.

New Edition, carefully Revised and greatly Augmented. Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

Illustrated by above 8,000 Engravings on Wood.

"So far as vocabulary and treatment are concerned, we should not wish for anything better than the new 'Imperial.'
The etymology is clear and concise, and the illustrations are copious, appropriate, and well executed."—Times."It is the best English Lexicon of the time."—Spectator.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

A Rough Shaking. By GEC. MACDONALD, LL.D., Author of "David Elginbrod," "At the Back of the North Wind," &c. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.
"One of Mr. George MacDonald's wonderful and charming stories."—Athenaeum.

BY G. A. HENTY.

By England's Aid; or, the Freeing of the Netherlands (1585-1604). With 10 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s."The story is told with great animation, and the historical material is most effectively combined with an excellent plot."
Saturday Review.By Right of Conquest; or, With Cortez
in Mexico. With 10 Page Illustrations by W. B. Stacey, and 2 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.
"This admirable and ingenious story."—Saturday Review.Maori and Settler; a Story of the New Zealand War. With 8 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s."This is in Mr. Henty's best style, and cannot fail to be popular. It is just the kind of book boys will delight in."
Journal of Education.A Chapter of Adventures; or, Through the Bombardment of Alexandria. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. H. Overend. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d."The chapter of adventures is so brisk and entertaining we could have wished it longer than it is."—Saturday Review.

BY GORDON STABLES.

'Twixt School and College: a Tale of
Self-reliance. With 8 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson.
Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.
"Pleasant, readable, and instructive."—Spectator.

BY G. NORWAY.

Hussein the Hostage; or, a Boy's Adventures in Persia. With 8 Page Illustrations by John Schönberg. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.
"One of the best and most original boys' books of recent seasons."—Graphic.

HALF-CROWN SERIES.

Hal Hungerford; or, the Strange Adventures of a Boy Emigrant. By J. R. HUTCHINSON, B.A. Illustrated.The Secret of the Old House: a Story
for Children. By EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke.The Golden Weathercock. By JULIA GODDARD. Illustrated by W. Parkinson.

TWO-SHILLING SERIES.

Nuthrown Roger and I: a Romance of the Highway. By J. H. YOXALL. With Illustrations.The Light Princess; and other Fairy Stories. By GEORGE MACDONALD. A New Edition,
Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke.A Rash Promise; or, Meg's Secret. By CECILIA SELBY LOWNDES. With Illustrations.* * Blackie & Son's New Illustrated Catalogue of Books, suitable for Presentation, &c., sent post-free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO.'S

New Illustrated Books for Christmas and New Year's Presents.

NOLANS VOLANS; or, the Adventures of Don Lavington. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. Author of "Dick o' the Fens," "The Golden Magnet," etc. With 15 Illustrations by W. Rainey. Crown 8vo., 416 pages, cloth extra, gilt edges, 5s.

MAD JOHN BURLEIGH: A Story of Heroic Self-Sacrifice. By Mrs. CHARLES GARNETT, Author of "Her Two Sons." Crown 8vo., cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

GRACE ASHLEIGH; or, His Ways are Best. By Mary D. R. BOYD. New Edition. With 8 full-page Engravings by Robert Barnes. Crown 8vo., 320 pages, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

HAMILTON OF KING'S. By Alice Price, Author of "Hilary St. John," etc. With 10 Illustrations by A. Pearce. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

RED MOUNTAIN OF ALASKA. By Willis Boyd Allen, Author of "Pine Caves," "The Northern Cross," etc. With 15 Illustrations. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY STORIES. By Mary Howitt. With 32 full-page Engravings by Harrison Weir, L. Huard, etc., and numerous smaller Illustrations. Cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 2s.

CLIOVE AND MADGE. By Mrs. G. S. Reaney, Author of "Our Daughters," "Found at Last," etc. Crown 8vo., illustrated, cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

GERALD'S DILEMMA. By Emma Leslie, Author of "Bolingsbroke's Folly," "The Five Cousins," etc. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

FINE GOLD; or, Ravenswood Courtenay. By Emma MARSHALL, Author of "Eaglehurst Towers," "A Flight with the Swallows," etc. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

THE HOME LIBRARY (NEW VOLUMES). Crown 8vo., 320 pp., handsome cloth covers. Illustrations. 2s. each.

A BUNCH OF CHERRIES. By J. W. Kirton.
WITHOUT A THOUGHT; or, Dora's Discipline. By JENNIE CHAPPELL.

THE HOUSEHOLD ANGEL. By Madeline Leslie.
Thirteen other Volumes in this Series, same Style and Price.

POPULAR BIOGRAPHIES

(NEW VOLUMES).
Crown 8vo., 160 pp. Fully Illustrated. Cloth extra. 1s. 6d. each.

JAMES CALVERT; or, From Dark to Dawn in Fiji. By R. VERNON.
HENRY MARTYN: His Life and Labours—Cambridge, India, Persia. By JESSE PAGE, Author of "Samuel Crowther, the Slave Boy who became Bishop of the Niger," etc.

TWO NOBLE LIVES: John Wicliffe, the Morning Star of the Reformation; and Martin Luther, the Reformer. By DAVID J. DEANE, Author of "Robert Moffat, the Missionary Hero of Kuruman," etc. With 14 full-page Illustrations.
Thirteen others in this Series, same Style and Price.

*S. W. Partridge and Co.'s New Illustrated Catalogue post free on application. Also Specimen Packet of their Illustrated Periodicals and Magazines.

LONDON: S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO., 9, PATERNOSTER-BOW.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' NEW BOOKS.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.
HORATIO NELSON and the NAVAL SUPREMACY OF ENGLAND.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL,
Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS and the STRUGGLE of PROTESTANTISM for EXISTENCE.

By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A.,
Late Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.
Illustrated with numerous Engravings and Maps. Large crown 8vo., cloth gilt, 5s.: Roxburgh, 6s.

"The story of the struggle for existence of Protestantism narrated in this volume will find many sympathetic readers. The work bears evidence of careful compilation, condensation, and discrimination on the part of the author."—Scotsman.

"The campaigns against Tilly, Wallenstein, and other noted Commanders of the 16th and 17th centuries, and the political consequences enable Mr. Fletcher to present a connected narrative which is as exciting as a well-told romance."—The Mail.

"An interesting sketch of an interesting career."—Glasgow Herald.

"The book is most interestingly and well written."—United Service Gazette.

"The style of the book is crisp, blunt, almost sturdy, but eminently readable."—Manchester Examiner.

Full Prospectus of the Series sent on application.

HOLLAND and its PEOPLE. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian by Caroline Tilton. New, revised edition, printed from new plates. With 77 Illustrations. Pp. 460, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

Contents:—Holland—Zealand—Rotterdam—Delft—The Hague—Leyden—Haarlem—Amsterdam—Utrecht—Broek Zaandam—Alkmaar—Helder—The Zuyder Zee—Friesland—Groningen—From Groningen to Arnhem.

HISTORY of NORWAY. By HJALMAR H. BOYESEN, Professor of the German Language and Literature at Columbia College. With 79 Illustrations and Maps. 560 pages, crown 8vo., cloth gilt, 6s.

LIBERTY and a LIVING. How to get Bread and Butter, Sunshine and Health, Leisure and Books, without Slaving Away One's Life. By F. G. HUBERT, Jun. 16mo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: 27, KING WILLIAM ST., STRAND; AND NEW YORK.

BIGGS & CO.'S BOOKS FOR PRIZES.

My Schoolfellows. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d. A Companion Book to "Our Stories."

"Boys of to-day owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Ascott Hope's 'Schoolfellows.'"—Journal of Education.

Our Stories. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Ascott Hope tells his stories, which have a more than common look of truth and nature, as well as usual."—Spectator.

May Hamilton. By M. B. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

"Charmingly told."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Mont Orgueil Castle. By J. E. CORBIERE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

"The story is a stirring one, well told, and the heroes of the brief but brilliant struggle are made lifelike."—Spectator.

The Fortune of the Quittentuns. By R. D. CHETWODE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

"It will be a treasure book that boys will delight in reading."—Fwa.

Scenes from our Century. By HOPE MONCRIEFF. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

This edition is intended to be used as a reading-book for the higher classes in schools. The chapters are selected from the best historians, and relate to the most striking historical scenes of the century.

Duty Wins. By JOSEPH FORSTER. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 1s. 6d.

"A cheery, rollicking humour pervades the book."—Schoolmaster.

A Book about Bow-wows. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 1s. 6d.

Bonnie Boy's Soap Bubble. By MAGGIE SYMINGTON. Crown 8vo., 1s.

"Charming little volume."—The People.

Old Mat's Lad. By L. JOYCE TOMLINSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 1s.

Is a tale about a Liverpool Waif, and the friends who rally round him in his distress.

Our College Theatricals. By LILY CROFT. Illustrated. 12mo., 6d.

"The book is especially written for young beginners, but older amateurs may benefit by some of the suggestions."—Queen.

Little Margy and Dorothea's Garden. By Mrs. C. LORD. Illustrated. 12mo., 6d.

"Both well told, and of a highly moral tone."—Aberdeen Journal.

BIGGS & CO., 139-40, SALISBURY-COURT, LONDON, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
AND
2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

FOLK LORE SOCIETY.

The NEXT EVENING MEETING will be held at 8 o'clock on WEDNESDAY, the 17th DECEMBER, at 2, ALBEMARLE STREET, W., when Short Papers will be read by Members of the Society, and a Paper on "HUNGARIAN FOLK LORE" by L. H. KIRBY.

J. J. FOSTER, Hon. Sec.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter).

PATRON—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
PRESIDENT—THE LORD ABERDARE, G.C.B.

THURSDAY, 18th DECEMBER, at 8.30 p.m.

The following paper will be read, "REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT," by OSCAR BROWNING, M.A., V.P.R.Hist.S.—20, Hanover Square, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is NOW OPEN, 5, FILL MALL EAST, from Ten till Five. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S. Secretary.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

LONDON I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS.
AND II. INDIAN C.S., &c. III. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT, 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W., under T. MILLER MAQUIRE, LL.D., Bar-at-Law.
DUBLIN. DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.
Est. 1852.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

"The most important [among Christmas Books] is 'Picturesque London.'"—Times.

PICTURESQUE LONDON. By Percy FITZGERALD. Extra Crown 4to., 25s., with upwards of 100 Illustrations by Eminent Artists.

"A triumph of the printer's art."—St. James's Gazette.
"The work is plentifully and beautifully illustrated."—Scotsman.
"The author and the artists between them have produced a book full of charm and instruction."—Graphic.

THIRTY YEARS of MY LIFE on THREE CONTINENTS. By EDWIN DE LEON. 2 vols., with a portrait, 21s.

SOCIAL ENGLAND UNDER the REGENCY. By JOHN ASHTON. 2 vols., demy 8vo., 30s., with 90 Illustrations.

"Bright and pleasant reading. . . . One of the chief merits of the two volumes is that they reproduce in excellent style a large number of contemporary caricatures by Gillray, Rowlandson, Cruikshank, and others."—Times.

POEMS. By the late John Francis O'DONNELL. With an Introductory Sketch by RICHARD DOWLING. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

A NEW HUMOROUS STORY BY GEORGE MANVILLE FENN.

A FLUTTERED DOVECOCK. By G. M. FENN. With 60 Illustrations by Gordon Browne. Cloth gilt, 5s.

BRAYHARD. By F. M. Allen, Author of "Through Green Glasses," etc. Illustrated by Harry Furniss. New Edition. 2s. 6d.

"Every page is provocative of laughter."—Public Opinion.
"A quaint book of nonsense. . . . Delightful reading."—Daily Telegraph.

PERFERVID. By John Davidson. Illustrated by Harry Furniss. New Edition. 2s. 6d.

"A delightfully ridiculous story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVELS.

HANDFASTED. By A. C. Bickley, Author of "Mid-Surrey Hills," and GEORGE S. CURREYER. 8 vols.

THE CRIMSON CHAIR. By Richard Dowling. 6s.

BETA. By the Author of "Two Loves in One Life." 3 vols.

LOVE'S LEGACY. By R. Ashe King ("Basil"). 3 vols.

THE LOST EXPLORER. By J. F. Hogan. 3s. 6d.

LOCUSTA. By W. Outram Tristram. 5s.

A STRANGE WOOLING. By Charles Gibbon. 6s.

12, YORK-STREET, COVENT-GARDEN, LONDON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST OF BOOKS

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION.

THE VIKINGS in WESTERN CHRISTENDOM, A.D. 789—888. By C. F. KEARY, Author of "Outlines of Primitive Belief," &c. With Map and Tables. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.
 "Presents on a broad canvas a powerful and, in the main, a true and vivid picture of the growth of the new and the death of the old Europe."
Scotsman.

"RIP VAN WINKLE'S" LIFE.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of JOSEPH JEFFERSON. With many Full-Page Portraits and other Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 16s.
 "He never writes anything in bad taste; he is never prosy; and though he has produced a volume of very substantial size, he leaves the reader at the end dissatisfied, and eagerly 'asking for more.'"—Manchester Examiner.

TRAVELS IN THE HOLY LAND.

WITH the BEDUINS. A Narrative of Journeys to the East of the Jordan and Dead Sea, Palmyra, &c. By GRAY HILL. 68 Illustrations and Map. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 15s.
 "Mr. Hill's Book is altogether apart from the ordinary run of volumes of travel in the Holy Land, on account alike of the vividness of the style, the novelty of scenes to which it introduces us, and the thrilling interest of many of its incidents."—Scotsman.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE STORY OF AN AFRICAN FARM."

DREAMS. By OLIVE SCHREINER. Frontispiece Portrait. Fcap. 8vo, buckram, gilt, 6s.
 CONTENTS.—1. The Lost Joy. 2. The Hunter. 3. The Gardens of Pleasure. 4. In a Far-off World. 5. Three Dreams in a Desert. 6. A Dream of Wild Bees. 7. In a Ruined Chapel. 8. Life's Gifts. 9. The Artist's Secret. 10. I Thought I Stood —. 11. The Moonlight Fell across my Bed.

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE LIFE and TIMES of SAVONAROLA. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI. Translated by LINDA VILLARI. Portraits and Illustrations. Two volumes, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, 21s.
 "Not only a masterly portrait of Savonarola, but a graphic and picturesque delineation of a very remarkable period of Italian history."
Full Mail Gazette.

NOW READY, VOL. V. OF "THE ADVENTURE SERIES."

THE BUCCANEERS and MAROONERS of AMERICA: Being an Account of the Famous Adventures and Daring Deeds of Certain Notorious Freebooters of the Spanish Main. Edited and Illustrated by HOWARD PYLE. Crown 8vo., cloth, 5s.

VOLUME XXVII. OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

MEXICO. By SUSAN HALE. Map, Illustrations, and Index. Crown 8vo, fancy cloth, gold lettered, 5s.
Illustrated Catalogue of the Series on application. [December 4.]

OUR FIELDS and CITIES; or, Misdirected Industry in the Present Epoch of Civilisation. By SCRIVENER C. SCRIVENER. Two Plans. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

A STUDY IN SOCIAL SCIENCE.

EMIGRATION and IMMIGRATION. By RICHMOND D. SMITH, Professor of Political Economy and Social Science in Columbia College. Square Imperial 16mo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

INTRODUCTION to PHILOSOPHY. An Inquiry after a Rational System of Scientific Principles in their Relation to Ultimate Reality. By GEORGE TRUMBALL LADD, Professor of Philosophy in Yale University, Author of "Introduction to Philosophy," "What is the Bible?" &c.
[Just Ready.]

THE GOVERNMENT HANDBOOK: A Permanent Record of the Forms and Methods of Government in Great Britain, Her Colonies, and Foreign Countries. With an Introduction on the Diffusion of Popular Government over the Surface of the Globe, and on the Nature and Extent of International Jurisdiction. By LEWIS SERGEANT, Author of "New Greece, &c." Large crown 8vo, roxburgh, 10s. 6d.

FAMOUS MUSICAL COMPOSERS. Biographies of Eminent Musicians. By LYDIA T. MORRIS. Numerous Portraits. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

"Adorned by a series of attractive portraits, and written in a readable style."—Scotsman.

VIOLIN CHATS for BEGINNERS. By Rev. A. H. RAIKES, M.A. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A STORY OF NEW ZEALAND LIFE.

PHILOSOPHER DICK: Adventures and Contemplations of a New Zealand Shepherd. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"A well-written and vivid picture of life in the New Zealand bush."—Scottish Leader.

UNWIN'S NOVEL SERIES. Vol. VII. just ready.

A MAR IAGE de CONVENANCE. By C. F. KEARY. Second Edition. Cloth, 2s.
 "Full of descriptive passages, flashes of epigram and acute analysis."—St. James's Gazette.

VOLUME II. of "THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY."

THE STORY of ELEANOR LAMBERT. By MAGDALEN BROOKE. 24mo. Paper, price 1s. 6d.

JUST READY, Volume VI. of "THE CAMEO SERIES."

LYRICS. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON (Madame Jas. Darmester). Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, half bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED LIST of BOOKS, suitable for PRESENTS and PRIZES post free on application.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

BOOKS FOR PRESENTATION.

ILLUSTRATED TABLE-BOOKS.

GREEK PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By J. P. Mahaffy, M.A., D.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, Author of "Social Life in Greece," "Greek Life and Thought," "Rambles and Studies in Greece," &c. With 2 Maps and many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges; or in morocco, elegant, 28s.

"Unquestionably the best book of the kind which has yet appeared. Dr. Mahaffy knows Greece as few Englishmen know her."—St. James's Gazette.
"We linger over the pages of text and illustration, and no doubt many will be similarly fascinated if they adopt our advice to read and mark every portion of this, one of the most delightful books of the 'Pen and Pencil Series.'—Queen.
"Altogether a very charming volume."—Saturday Review.

LONDON PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By the Rev. Richard Lovett, M.A., Author of "Norwegian Pictures," "Irish Pictures," &c. Profusely Illustrated. Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsome cloth, gilt edges; or in morocco, elegant, 28s.

"The handsome form of the book, with its admirable printing, is fully justified by the interesting nature of its contents."—Times.
"This pleasant, chatty account of London—with just enough archaeology and history to instruct and yet not to bore—is the very book to interest both the dweller and the visitor to the Metropolis."—Record.
"One of the best books written on London. The style is graphic, the usual humdrum statistics are happily absent, and historical and geographical London is portrayed in a most interesting manner. The book is nicely printed, well bound, and is admirably suited for presentation."—Metropolitan.

BOOKS FOR LADS AND MAIDENS.

THE GIRL'S OWN INDOOR BOOK. Edited by Charles

PETERS. 528 pp., with over 150 Illustrations, 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges.
"It has almost every characteristic of an encyclopaedia but its dryness."—Manchester Examiner.
"A complete repository of female occupation."—Times.
"Our girls who profit by the teaching will certainly be as useful in domestic life as ornamental in society."—Graphic.

INDOOR GAMES and RECREATIONS: a Popular Encyclopaedia for Boys. Edited by G. A. HUTCHISON. Including Chapters by J. N. MASKELYNE, Lieutenant-Colonel CUTHELL, Dr. GORDON STABLES, R.N., Rev. A. N. MALAN, M.A., C. STANSFIELD-HICKS, Dr. STRADLING, and others. With many Engravings. A Splendid Gift-Book or Prize for Boys. 528 pp., 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges.

"No more valuable gift-book could be chosen for young people with active brains."—Saturday Review.

THE GIRL'S OWN OUTDOOR BOOK. Containing

Practical Help on Subjects relating to Girl-Life when Out of Doors or when absent from the Family Circle. Edited by CHARLES PETERS. Profusely Illustrated, 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges.

"An excellent compendium of open-air games and exercises."—Saturday Review.
"A very nice book to look at, and one which every intelligent girl will be glad to possess."—Queen.

THE BROOK and its BANKS. By the Rev. J. G. Wood, Author of "The Handy Natural History," &c. With many Illustrations. Imperial 16mo, 6s., cloth gilt.

"Few writers have done so much to familiarise boys and girls with the simple facts of natural history as Mr. Wood, for he always painted the inhabitants of fields, forests, and rivers from actual eye-witness, and pressed home his lessons by cheery anecdotes sure to be remembered."—Graphic.

NEW POPULAR ANNUALS.

These Annuals form a most attractive series of Gift-Books. They each contain SERIAL STORIES by WELL-KNOWN WRITERS, which, when published separately will sell for nearly as much each as is now asked for the Volumes containing several of them. Besides Stories and most useful, interesting, and instructive General Articles, there is a profusion of Illustrations, and a very Attractive Binding.

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL for 1890. 856 pp., imperial 8vo, profusely Illustrated, 7s., in handsome cloth.

THE SUNDAY at HOME ANNUAL for 1890. 828 pp., imperial 8vo, profusely Illustrated by Coloured and Wood Engravings, 7s., in handsome cloth.

THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL for 1890. The Twelfth Volume of the Boy's Own Paper. 832 pp., with Ten Coloured and upwards of 500 Wood Engravings, 8s., in handsome cloth.

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL for 1890. The Eleventh Volume of the Girl's Own Paper. 832 pp., profusely Illustrated, 8s., in handsome cloth.

A NEW VOLUME of each of the above Popular Periodicals COMMENCED with NOVEMBER Monthly Part. December Parts are now ready.

NEW STORIES FOR ALL READERS.

The Society has just issued upwards of 40 Stories at prices from One Penny to Five Shillings. Interesting Tales by popular writers, well printed and attractively bound. Please ask your Bookseller for them. They are specially prepared as Gift Books for youthful and for adult readers.

LONDON: THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, PATERNOSTER ROW; AND OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.
A SHORT HISTORY of CLENT. By John Amphlett, M.A., S.C.L., Barrister-at-Law.

PARKER & Co., Oxford; and 6, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

TO THE CLERGY.
FOR LOCALISATION.
THE PENNY POST.
MONTHLY.—32 PAGES.—PRICE ONE PENNY.

Contains Complete Serial Tales, Descriptive Articles, Miscellaneous Articles, Notes from and on Books, Music, Poetry, Fiction.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

FORTIETH YEAR OF ISSUE.—EXTENSIVELY LOCALISED IN COUNTRY PARISHES.

Specimen Number, together with Notes on Localising this Magazine, on receipt of 1d. Stamp.

NEW VOLUME for 1890, NOW READY.

832 pp., 8vo, sewn in wrapper, 1s., post free 1s. 2d.; neatly bound in cloth, 2s., post free 2s. 1d.—Publishers cloth cases for binding, 1s.

"The Penny Post, 'an old and trusted friend, continues its wholesome work.'"—Church Times.
"A really wonderful pennyworth."—Church Review.
"The Penny Post 'excels itself this month. Innumerable are the good things for which Churchmen are indebted to this magazine, which we may well call the oldest and most popular of Church miscellanies.'"—Church Review.
"The Penny Post 'is a sound Church magazine, cheap and readable, and in strong contrast to the many undenominational, wishy-washy publications circulated amongst our Churchpeople by clergymen of the 'safe' school.'"—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.
"This favourite periodical well fulfils its title as a magazine for all readers."—English Churchman.

PARKER & Co. Oxford; and 6, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

FIRST EDITION SOLD OUT THE DAY OF PUBLICATION.

"GENERAL" BOOTH'S SOCIAL SCHEME.

An Examination Of.

By C. S. LOCH,

Secretary to the Charity Organisation Society.

Adopted by the Society. 1s. (post free, 1s. 1d.)

"These letters (Prof. Huxley's and a short explanatory letter from Mr. C. S. Loch) ought, in my opinion, to make any sensible man pause before committing himself to the scheme of General Booth."

PROF. TYNDALL'S LETTER in the Times of DEC. 6.

SWAN SONNENSCHN, 16, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

NOW READY.

THE FAUNA OF BRITISH INDIA,

Including Ceylon and Burmah. Published under the authority of the Secretary State for India in Council. Edited by W. T. BLANDFORD. Medium 8vo, with numerous woodcuts.

MAMMALIA. By W. T. BLANDFORD, F.R.S. Part I. price 10s.
FISHES. By F. DAY, C.I.E., LL.D. 2 vols. price £1 each.

BIRDS. By EUGENE W. OATES, F.Z.S. Vol. 1, price £1; Vol. II., price 15s.
REPTILIA AND BATRACHIA. By G. A. BOULENGER. 1 vol. complete, price £1.

London: TAYLOR & FRANCIS, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street.
Calcutta, THACKER, SPINK & Co.; Bombay, THACKER & Co., Limited;
Berlin, R. FRIEDLANDT and SOHN, Carlstrasse, 11.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By

A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book. Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRASURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by HOLL, R.A.; OULESS, R.A.; PETTIE, R.A.; PRINSEP, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING" by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

THROAT IRRITATION

AND
COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7½d.; tins, 1s. 1½d., labelled "JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

DEAN &amp; SON'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Now ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, large post 8vo.
price 10s. 6d.

SCENES THROUGH the BATTLE

SMOKE; being Reminiscences in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. By the Rev. ARTHUR MALE, Army Chaplain at Lucknow, and in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. With Portrait of the Author, and 8 large Illustrations by Sidney Paget, War Artist to the Illustrated London News in these Campaigns.

Lord Cranbrook writes:—"Mr. Male's personal knowledge of the events makes his interesting book more valuable."

Large post 8vo, handsomely bound, price 7s. 6d.

FRENCH SOLDIERS in GERMAN

PRISONS; being Reminiscences during and after the Franco-German War. By Canon E. GUERS, Army Chaplain to the French Forces.

The work is illustrated with Portraits of the leading actors in these terrible scenes. The thrilling narrative helps one to realise the self-denial and heroism of those who gave up much of the comfort of this life to tend the sufferings of the sick, wounded, and helpless soldiers suddenly interred in fortress and hospital.

Handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 6s.

SOUVENIRS of the SECOND

EMPIRE; or, the Last Days of the Court of Napoleon. By the COMTE de MAUGNY, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

This interesting volume of the reminiscences of a Cabinet Minister is full of anecdotes relating to all that passed amongst the Court and Society, the Clubs and the Theatres, in the reign of Napoleon III.; also numerous portraits and particulars as to the lives of all the celebrities of the period.

Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 6s.

THE DOYLE FAIRY BOOK. Con-

sisting of Twenty-nine Fairy Tales. Translated from various Languages by ANTHONY R. MONTALBA. With 24 Illustrations by RICHARD DOYLE, a Memoir of Doyle, and an Introduction by a Member of the Folk-lore Society.

Fcap. 4to, handsomely bound, cloth, price 6s.

BERGE'S COMPLETE NATURAL

HISTORY of the ANIMAL, MINERAL, and VEGETABLE KINGDOMS. Edited by R. F. CRAWFORD, F.R.S. With 16 large exquisitely Coloured Plates, containing over 250 Animals and over 100 smaller Illustrations.

This is the most complete book of any yet issued on this subject, inasmuch as it deals fully with Birds, Beasts, Reptiles, Insects, Trees, Plants, Minerals, Fossils, &amp;c., each part of the subject being profusely illustrated, thus showing at a glance the appearance of the object described.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, large post 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME: his Life and

Character. By a FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great ex-Chancellor, from his childhood upwards.

Cloth, handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

BY MADAME CARETTE,

Private Reader to the Empress Eugénie.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS of the

COURT of the TUILERIES; or, the Eve of an Empire's Fall.

THIRD EDITION. Price 6s. Large post 8vo.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MY MISTRESS the EMPRESS

EUGENIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries.

Handsomely bound in cloth boards, 4to, price 2s. 6d.

UNCLE DUMPIE'S MERRIE MONTHS.

By ROBERT ST. JOHN CORBET.

A most amusing Story, told in lively Verse, showing the Adventures of Uncle Dumpie and his Nephews and Nieces in the Channel Tunnel. With 12 humorous Full-Page Illustrations, and numerous smaller ones by J. H. Roberts.

Crown 4to, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, red edges, price 7s.

The LITTLE ONE'S OWN COLOURED

PICTURE ANNUAL for 1891. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gold and colour, with over 500 Stories in Prose and Verse, and 208 Full-Page fresh novel Pictures in Chromo Colours, besides Kindergarten Lessons, Riddles, Puzzles, &amp;c.

Just ready, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, emblematic cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED BOOK of WONDERS,

EVENTS, and DISCOVERIES. By JOHN TIMBS, Author of "Things not Generally Known," &amp;c. New and Revised Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

London. DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet Street, E.C.,
Office of "Debrett's Peerage."

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST OF BOOKS.

IN TWELVE MONTHLY PARTS, 2s. 6d. each. Beginning December 1st, 1890.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

An entirely New Edition, thoroughly Revised, considerably Enlarged and reset in new type from beginning to end.

By the Rev. M. F. SADLER, Prebendary of Wells,

Author of "Church Doctrine—Bible Truth," "Communicant's Manual," &amp;c.

Just published, in crown 8vo, 6s.

THE EPISTLES to TITUS, PHILEMON, and the HEBREWS.

With Notes, Critical and Practical, and an Excursus, on the Epistles to the Hebrews, and Eucharistic Worship.

Third Edition, Enlarged, price 15s.

THE BOOK of SUNDIALS, Collected by Mrs. Alfred Gatty, Author of "Parables from Nature," &amp;c. Edited by HORATIO K. F. EDEN and ELEANOR LLOYD. With an Appendix on the Construction of Dials by W. RICHARDSON. And numerous Illustrations.

"We have quoted many of these beautiful legends, which would serve as texts for many a sermon. But no one who does not turn to the book itself can realise how many beauties remain untold. The collection which Mrs. Gatty originated, and which has been continued by loving and painstaking hands, is, we repeat, a unique one."—Guardian.

Fcap. 4to, with more than 280 Illustrations, 15s. net.

ARCHITECTURAL STUDIES in FRANCE. By the late Rev.

J. T. PETIT, F.S.A. New Edition, with Reduced Facsimiles of the Author's Sketches. Revised by EDWARD BELL, M.A., F.S.A.

"This scholarly and painstaking book appeals alike to the artist and the antiquary, and abounds in valuable information gathered by its author during his visits to upwards of three hundred French churches."—Speaker."We gladly welcome a new edition of his extremely valuable 'Architectural Studies in France.'"—St. James's Gazette.

Wide crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

LATIN VERSE: English Poetry Translated into Latin Verse,

chiefly Elegiacs. For the Use of Classical Tutors and Students. By the Rev. C. H. BOUSFIELD, M.A., Oxford, Vicar of Heatherlands, Dorset.

THE ALDINE EDITION OF THE BRITISH POETS.

A New and Cheaper Re-issue in Fortnightly Volumes, price 2s. 6d. The Volumes are printed on Toned Paper at the Chiswick Press, in fcap. 8vo size, and tastefully bound in cloth by Messrs. Burn &amp; Co.

"This excellent edition of the English classics, with their complete texts and scholarly introductions, are something very different from the cheap volumes of extracts which are just now so much too common.... We have nothing but praise for this new re-issue of the Aldine Poets, on the whole, as regards form and outward appearance, to say nothing of intrinsic attractions."—Saturday Review."An excellent series. Small handy, and complete."—Saturday Review.

BLAKE. With a Memoir by

W. M. ROSSETTI, and Portrait. [Ready.]

KEATS. With a Memoir by the late

LORD HOUGHTON, and Portrait. [Ready.]

CAMPBELL. Edited by his Son-in-

Law, the Rev. R. W. HILL. With Memoir by W. ALLINGHAM, and Portrait. [Ready.]

COLERIDGE. With Introduction and

Notes by T. ASHE, B.A., St. John's College, Cambridge.

With Portrait and an Engraving of Gret Hall. 2 vols. [Ready.]

CHATTERTON. Edited by the Rev.

W. W. SKEAT, M.A. Including the acknowledged

Poems and Satires, the Bowley Poems, with an Essay proving their authorship, a Memoir of the Poet, and Selections from his Prose Writings. 2 vols. [Ready.]

VAUGHAN. Sacred Poems and Pious

Ejaculations. With Memoir by Rev. H. LYTE.

Dec. 15.

ROGERS. With Memoir by Edward

BELL, M.A., and Portrait.

Jan. 1.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

NEW AND RECENT VOLUMES.

NORTH'S LIVES of the NORTHS.

Right Hon. FRANCIS NORTH, Baron GUILDFORD,

the Hon. Sir DUDLEY NORTH, and the Hon. and Rev.

Dr. JOHN NORTH. Edited by A. JESSOPP, D.D.

With 3 Portraits. 3 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

"Dr. Jessopp has added a reprint of the autobiography of the author, which was published by him in a limited, and now scarce, edition a few years ago.... Lovers of good literature will rejoice at the appearance of a new, handy, and complete edition of so justly a famous book, and will congratulate themselves that it has found so competent and skilful an editor as Dr. Jessopp."—Times.

EDGEWORTH'S STORIES for CHILDREN. With 8 Illustrations by L. Speed. 3s. 6d.

Contents:—Lazy Lawrence—Tarleton—The False Key—The

Birthday Present—Simple Susan—The Bracelets—The Little

Merchants—Old Poz—The Mimic—Mademoiselle Panache—

The Basket-Woman—The White Pigeon—The Orphans—

Waste Not, Want Not—Forgive and Forget—The Barring

Out—Eton Montem.

ARTHUR YOUNG'S TRAVELS in

FRANCE. Third Edition of this Issue, 3s. 6d.

"Arthur Young could not have found a more capable or sympathetic editor."—Times."Sure to secure a wide circulation."—Daily News.

BJORNSSON'S ARNE and the FISHER

LASSIE. Translated, 3s. 6d.

"Their charm and fresh simplicity have no parallel in modern fiction."—Scotsman.

PLUTARCH'S MORALS: Ethical

Essays. Translated, 5s.

"A thoroughly good translation."—St. James's Gazette.

JOHNSON'S LIVES of the POETS.

Edited, with Notes, by Mrs. ALEXANDER NAPIER, and an Introduction by Professor J. W. HALE, M.A.

3 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

"A valuable addition to 'Bohn's Standard Library.'"—Athenaeum."Mrs. Napier has adopted the plan which is at once sensible and scholarly by retaining the ipsissima verba of the original, and giving in foot-notes all necessary corrections and elucidations. These notes are in every way admirable, careful, brief, and to the point."—Manchester Examiner.

RACINE'S PLAYS. A Metrical

English Translation. By Mrs. BRUCE BOSWELL,

M.A., Oxon. Second and Concluding Volume, containing

Bajazet, Mithridates, Iphigenia, Phaedra, Esther,

Athalie. 3s. 6d.

"The translation alike of the tragedies and of 'Les Plaideurs' is both faithful and spirited."—Guardian.

HOOPER'S WATERLOO. New Re-

vised Edition. 3s. 6d.

"An able monograph."—Athenaeum.

BOHN'S HANDBOOKS of GAMES.

New Edition. In 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each. Vol. I. ready.

Vol. II. in the press.

Vol. I. TABLE GAMES: BILLIARDS, with POOL,

PYRAMIDS, and SNOOKER. By Major-General

A. W. DRAYTON, F.R.S., with a Preface by W. J.

PEALL—BAGATELLE. By "BERKELEY."

CHESS. By R. F. GREEN—DRAUGHTS, BACK-

GAMMON, DOMINOS, SOLITAIRE, REVERSI,

GO-BANG, ROUGE ET NOIR, BOULETTE, &amp;c.,

HAZARD, FARO. By "BERKELEY." [Ready.]

LONDON: GEORGE BELL &amp; SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Illustrated by Sir J. E. Millais, Sir J. Gilbert, Holman Hunt, Birket Foster, John Leech, John Tenniel, J. Laslett Pott, &c.

The following is a List of the Works now comprised in this Popular Series, any of which can be obtained of all Booksellers throughout the Kingdom.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, WITH FRONTISPIECE, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

SAM SLICK'S NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.

"The first volume of Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's Standard Library of Cheap Editions forms a very good beginning to what will doubtless be a very successful undertaking. 'Nature and Human Nature' is one of the best of Sam Slick's witty and humorous productions, and is well entitled to the large circulation which it cannot fail to obtain in its present convenient and cheap shape."—Post.

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

"This story is very interesting. The attachment between John Halifax and his wife is beautifully painted, as are the pictures of their domestic life, and the growing up of their children; and the conclusion of the book is beautiful and touching."—Athenaeum.
"The work abounds in incident, and is full of graphic power and true pathos. It is a book that few will read without becoming wiser and better."—Scotsman.

THE CRESCENT and the CROSS. By ELIOT WARBURTON.

"Independent of its value as an original narrative, and its useful and interesting information, this work is remarkable for the colouring power and play of fancy with which its descriptions are enlivened. Among its greatest and most lasting charms is its reverent and serious spirit."—Quarterly Review.

NATHALIE. By Julia Kavanagh.

"Nathalie" Miss Kavanagh's best imaginative effort. Its manner is gracious and attractive. Its maker is good. A sentiment, a tenderness, are commanded by her which are as individual as they are elegant."—Athenaeum.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"A book of sound counsel. It is one of the most sensible works of its kind, well written, true-hearted, and altogether practical. Whoever wishes to give advice to a young lady may thank the author for means of doing so."—Examiner.

ADAM GRAEME. By Mrs. Oliphant.

"A story awakening genuine emotions of interest and delight by its admirable pictures of Scottish life and scenery. The author sets before us the essential attributes of Christian virtue with a delicate power and truth which can hardly be surpassed."—Post.

SAM SLICK'S WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.

"We have not the slightest intention to criticise this book. Its reputation is made, and will stand as long as that of Scott's or Bjørn's novels. The remarkable originality of its purpose, and the happy description it affords of American life and manners, still continue the subject of universal admiration."—Messenger.

CARDINAL WISEMAN'S RECOLLECTIONS OF THE LAST FOUR POPES.

"A picturesque book on Rome and its ecclesiastical sovereigns, by an eloquent Roman Catholic. Cardinal Wiseman has treated a special subject with so much geniality that his recollections will excite no ill-feeling in those who are most conscientiously opposed to every idea of human infallibility represented in Papal domination."—Athenaeum.

A LIFE for a LIFE. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"In 'A Life for a Life' we recognise all the characteristics of the popular author of 'John Halifax'. We find the same aspirations, the same purity of tone, the same delicacy of portraiture, the same truth in the portrayal of home life."—Daily News.

THE OLD COURT SUBURB. By Leigh Hunt.

"A delightful book, that will be welcome to all readers, and most welcome to those who have a love for the best kinds of reading."—Examiner.

"A more agreeable and entertaining book has not been published since Boswell produced his reminiscences of Johnson."—Observer.

MARGARET and her BRIDESMAIDS.

"We recommend all who are in search of a fascinating novel to read this work for themselves. They will find it well worth their while. There are a freshness and originality about it quite charming."—Athenaeum.

THE OLD JUDGE. By Sam Slick.

"Full of the Clockmaker's shrewdness and quaint comicities."—Examiner.

DARIEN. By Eliot Warburton.

"This last production of the author of 'The Crescent and the Cross' has the same elements of a very wide popularity. It will please its thousands."—Globe.

FAMILY ROMANCE; or, Domestic Annals of the Aristocracy. By Sir BERNARD BURKE, Ulster King of Arms.

"It was impossible to praise too highly this most interesting book. It ought to be found on every drawing-room table."—Standard.

THE LAIRD of NORLAW. By Mrs OLIPHANT.

"In 'The Laird of Norlaw' first-rate talent, exquisite taste, and great knowledge of character combine to create a charming novel."—Sun.
"The 'Laird of Norlaw' is worthy of the author's reputation. It is one of the most exquisite of modern novels."—Observer.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN in ITALY.

"We can praise Mrs. Grettton's book as interesting, unexaggerated, and full of opportune instruction."—Times.

NOTHING NEW. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"Nothing New displays all those superior merits which have made 'John Halifax' one of the most popular works of the day."—Post.

FREER'S LIFE of JEANNE D'ALBRET.

"Nothing can be more interesting than Miss Freer's story of the life of Jeanne d'Albret, and the narrative is as trustworthy as it is attractive."—Post.

THE VALE of a HUNDRED FIRES.

"If asked to classify this work, we should give it a place between 'John Halifax' and 'The Caxtons'."—Standard.
"The spirit in which the whole book is written is refined and good."—Messenger. [Athenaeum].

THE ROMANCE of the FORUM. By PETER BURKE, Sergeant-at-Law.

"A work of singular interest, which can never fail to charm. The present cheap and elegant edition includes the true story of the Colleen Bawn."—Illustrated News.

ADELE. By Julia Kavanagh.

"'Adele' is the best work we have read by Miss Kavanagh. It is a charming story, full of delicate character painting."—Athenaeum.
"'Adele' is a love story of very considerable pathos and power. It is a very clever novel."—Daily News.

STUDIES from LIFE. By the Author of 'John Halifax, Gentleman'.

"These 'Studies from Life' are remarkable for graphic power and observation of the book will not diminish the reputation of the accomplished author."—Saturday Review.

"These 'Studies' are truthful and vivid pictures of life, often earnest, always full of right feeling, and occasionally lightened by touches of quiet, genial humour. The volume is remarkable for thought, vivid sense, shrewd observation, and a kind and sympathetic feeling for all things good and beautiful."—Morning Post.

GRANDMOTHER'S MONEY. By F. W. ROBINSON.

"We commend 'Grandmother's Money' to readers in search of a good novel. The characters are true to human nature, and the story is interesting."—Athenaeum.

A BOOK ABOUT DOCTORS. By J. O. JEAFFERSON.

"A delightful book."—Athenaeum.
"A book to be read and re-read. Fit for the study as well as the drawing-room table and the circulating library."—Lancet.

NO CHURCH.

"We advise all who have the opportunity to read this book. It is worth the study."—Athenaeum.
"A work of very high merit."—Literary Gazette.
"A work of originality, merit, and power."—Standard.

MISTRESS and MAID. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"A good, wholesome book, gracefully written, and as pleasant to read as it is instructive."—Athenaeum.
"A charming tale, charmingly told."—Standard.

LOST and SAVED. By the Hon. Mrs. NORTON.

"The 'Lost and Saved' will be read with eager interest. It is a vigorous novel."—Morning Post.
"A novel of rare excellence. It is Mrs. Norton's best prose work."—Examiner.

"This story is animated, full of exciting situations and stirring incidents. The characters are delineated with great power. Above and beyond these elements of a good novel, there is that indefinable charm with which true genius invests all it touches."—Daily News.

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor Hugo.

Authorised Copyright English Translation.
"The merits of 'Les Misérables' do not merely consist in the conception of it as a whole; it abounds, page after page, with details of unequalled beauty. In dealing with all the emotions, doubts, fears, which go to make up our common humanity, M. Victor Hugo has stamped upon every page the hall-mark of genius."—Quarterly Review.

BARBARA'S HISTORY. By Amelia B. EDWARDS.

"It is not often that we light upon a novel of so much merit and interest as 'Barbara's History'. It is a work conspicuous for taste and literary culture. It is a very graceful and charming book, with a well-managed story, clearly-out characters, and sentiments expressed with an exquisite diction. It is a book which the world will like."—Times.

LIFE of the Rev. EDWARD IRVING.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.
"A truly interesting and most affecting memoir. Irving's life ought to have a niche in every gallery of religious biography. There are few lives that will be full of instruction, interest, and consolation."—Saturday Review.

"Mrs. Oliphant's 'Life of Irving' supplies a long-felt desideratum. It is copious, earnest, and eloquent. Irving, as a man and as a pastor, is exhibited with many broad, powerful, and lifelike touches, which leave a strong impression."—Edinburgh Review.

ST. OLAVE'S.

"This charming novel is the work of one who possesses a great talent for writing, as well as experience and knowledge of the world. St. Olave's is the work of an artist. The whole book is worth reading."—Athenaeum.

SAM SLICK'S AMERICAN HUMOUR.

"Dip where you will into this lottery of fun you are sure to draw out a prize."—Post.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE. By the Author of 'John Halifax, Gentleman'.

"A more charming story has rarely been written. The writer has hit off a circle of varied characters all true to nature, and has entangled them in a story which keeps us in suspense till its knot is happily and gracefully resolved. Even if tried by the standard of the Archbishop of York, we should expect that even he would pronounce 'Christian's Mistake' a novel without a fault."—Times.

ALEC FORBES, of HOWGLEN. By GEORGE MAC DONALD, LL.D.

"No account of this story would give any idea of the profound interest that pervades the work from the first page to the last."—Athenaeum.

A NOBLE LIFE. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"This is one of those pleasant tales in which the author of 'John Halifax' speaks out of a generous heart the purest truths of life."—Examiner.

AGNES. By Mrs. Oliphant.

"Mrs. Oliphant is one of the most admirable of our novelists. In her works there are always to be found high principles, good taste, sense, and refinement. 'Agnes' is a story whose pathetic beauty will appeal irresistibly to all readers."—Post.

NEW AMERICA. By Hepworth Dixon.

"A very interesting book. Mr. Dixon has written thoughtfully and well."—Morning Post.
"We recommend every one who feels an interest in human nature to read Mr. Dixon's very interesting book."—Saturday Review.

ROBERT FALCONER. By George Mac DONALD, LL.D.

"'Robert Falconer' is a work brimful of life and humour, and of the deepest human interest. It is a book to be returned to again and again for the deep and searching knowledge it evinces of human thoughts and feelings."—Athenaeum.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"The 'Woman's Kingdom' sustains the author's reputation as a writer of the purest and noblest kind of domestic stories."—Athenaeum.
"'The Woman's Kingdom' is remarkable for its romantic interest. The characters are masterpieces. Edna is worthy of the hand that drew John Halifax."—Morning Post.

ANNALS of an EVENTFUL LIFE. By W. G. DARENT, D.D.L.

"A racy, well-written, and original novel. The interest never flags. The whole work sparkles with wit and humour."—Quarterly Review.

DAVID ELGINBROD. By George Mac DONALD, LL.D.

"A novel which is the work of a man of true genius. It will attract the highest class of readers."—Times.

A BRAVE LADY. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"We earnestly recommend this novel. It is a special and worthy specimen of the author's remarkable powers. The reader's attention never for a moment flags."—Post.
"A 'Brave Lady' thoroughly rivets the unmingled sympathy of the reader, and her history deserves to stand foremost among the author's works."—Daily Telegraph.

HANNAH. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"A powerful novel of social and domestic life. One of the most successful efforts of a successful novelist."—Daily News.
"A very pleasant, healthy story, well and artistically told. The book is sure of a wide circle of readers. The character of Hannah is one of rare beauty."—Standard.

SAM SLICK'S AMERICANS at HOME.

"One of the most amusing books we ever read."—Standard.
"The 'Americans at Home' will not be less popular than any of Judge Halliburton's previous works."—Post.

THE UNKIND WORD. By the Author of 'John Halifax'.

"The author of 'John Halifax' has written many fascinating stories, but we can call to mind nothing from her pen that has more enduring charm than the graceful sketches in this work. Such a character as Jessie stands out from a crowd of heroines as the type of all that is truly noble, pure and womanly."—United Service Magazine.

A ROSE in JUNE. By Mrs. Oliphant.

"'A Rose in June' is as pretty as its title. The story is one of the best and most touching which we owe to the industry and talent of Mrs. Oliphant, and in its slender grace and playful satire may hold its own with even 'The Chronicles of Carlingford'."—Times.

MY LITTLE LADY. By E. Frances POYNTER.

"This story presents a number of vivid and very charming pictures. Indeed the whole book is charming. It is interesting in both character and story, and thoroughly good of its kind."—Saturday Review.

PHOEBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. Oliphant.

"This last 'Chronicle of Carlingford' not merely takes rank fairly beside the first, which introduced us to 'Salem Chapel', but surpasses all the intermediate records. Phoebe, Junior, herself is admirably drawn."—Academy.

LIFE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By Prof. CHARLES DUKE YONGE.

"A work of remarkable merit and interest, which will, we doubt not, become the most popular English History of Marie Antoinette."—Spectator.

SIR GIBBIE. By George Mac Donald, LL.D.

"Sir Gibbie" is a book of genius."—Fall Malt Gazette.
"This book has power, pathos, and humour."—Athenaeum.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE. By the Author of 'John Halifax, Gentleman'.

"Young Mrs. Jardine is a pretty story, written in pure English."—Times.
"There is much good feeling in this book. It is pleasant and wholesome."—Athenaeum.

LORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia B. EDWARDS.

"A very readable story. The author has well conceived the purpose of high-class novel writing, and succeeded in no small measure in attaining it. There is plenty of variety, cheerful dialogue, and general sense in the book."—Athenaeum.

IT WAS a LOVER and his LASS. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

"In 'It Was a Lover and his Lass' we admire Mrs. Oliphant exceedingly. It would be worth reading a second time, were it only for the sake of one ancient Scottish spinster, who is nearly the counterpart of the admirable Mrs. Margaret Maitland."—Times.

THE REAL LORD BYRON—The STORY of the POET'S LIFE. By JOHN CORDY JEAFFERSON.

"Mr. Jeafterson comes forward with a narrative which must take a very important place in Byronic literature; and it may reasonably be anticipated that this book will be regarded with deep interest by all who are concerned in the works and the fame of this great English poet."—Times.

THROUGH the LONG NIGHT. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON, Author of 'Fabiola Kemball'.

"It is scarcely necessary to sign 'Through the Long Night' for the practiced pen of Mrs. Lynn Linton stands revealed on every page of it. It is like so many of its predecessors, hard and bright, full of entertaining reflection and brisk development of plot."—Saturday Review.

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

Messrs. Walter Smith & Innes's
LIST.THE MONTHLY PACKET.
NEW SERIES.

EDITED BY C. M. YONGE AND C. E. COLERIDGE.

Attention is called to new arrangements in Miss YONGE'S MAGAZINE. A NEW SERIES commences with the New Year. While the essential features of the Monthly Packet, as a magazine intended for girls and ladies who are members of the Church of England, remain unchanged, the scope of the New Series will be widened, greater variety introduced in the contents, and the type and general appearance will be improved.

The Serial Stories for the year will be written by C. M. YONGE, the Author of "Atelier du Lys," and "Helen Shipton." Papers on Employments for Women, by persons writing with authority; on the "Greek Forerunners of Christ," by Rev. P. LILLY; and Miss YONGE'S "Cameos from English History," will be regular features. Some Letters of Mrs. BARBAULD may also be mentioned.

Among those who have promised Stories, Articles, or Poems during the year are:—Mrs. OLIPHANT; ANDREW LANG; Author of "Mademoiselle Mori"; DOCTOR GARNETT; Mrs. MACQUOID; F. T. PALGRAVE; Miss PEARD; W. W. FOWLER; Miss SHIPTON, Author of "The House of the Wolf"; LUCY LILLIE; J. E. GORE, F.R.S.; Miss WORDSWORTH; WALTER C. SMITH; Miss BRAMSTON; Miss MARY HULLAH; Rev. P. LILLY; ESME STUART; Hon. EVA KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN; Miss SEWELL; the EDITORS, &c., &c.

The JANUARY NUMBER includes, besides the Serials, contributions from Mrs. OLIPHANT, Mrs. MACQUOID, Miss ETHEL BOYCE, A.R.A.M., Miss YONGE, &c.

The FEBRUARY NUMBER will include contributions from F. T. PALGRAVE, W. W. FOWLER, Rev. P. LILLY, Mrs. CHURCH, Miss YONGE, &c. Competitions, Discussions, and Correspondence.

Price, 1s. Monthly; Extra Double Christmas Number, 2s. Now Ready.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF
THE MONTHLY PACKET CONTAINS—

The SATIN GOWN, by Edith Carrington—MULBERRY LEAVES, by Madame Galletti di Cadilhac—TRANSFORMING A MULBERRY LEAF, by Beatrix F. Cresswell—TOUCHED AND GONE, by Mary Bramston—KIT and KEN, by C. E. Coleridge—ONLY AN OLD MAID, by F. A. W.—The DOOM of the GRANTS, by F. E.—HIDE and SEEK—The LAZY FOOT of TIME, by Eadgyth—MYRTLE PORK, by Marnel Hubert—The STORY of a WALK, by Miss Field—The MISTRESS of RYETHORPE HALL, by Mellicent Wyman—A GAVOTTE by GLÜCK, by F. C. Playne—A LOVE PICTURE in THREE STROKES, by S. M. Crawley-Bovey—TOUT VIENT A QUI SAIT ATTENDRE, by Mrs. Dawson—ANCELOT and his JOURNEY, by Spinning-Jenny.

PRICE 2s.

NEW STORIES.

SHREDS and PATCHES. By E. N. LEIGH FRY. Illustrated, 5s.

"The children are admirably drawn; as good as any that we have seen in fiction for a long time. Altogether, 'Shreds and Patches' is a good bit of work."—Spectator.

"The author has a thorough knowledge of little people's literary needs. . . . Will give great pleasure to many young readers, which will be shared by some of their elders."—Morning Post.

"The prettily-bound and pleasantly-illustrated stories in 'Shreds and Patches' will delight the children they are written for. They are bright, simple, and natural relations of everyday occurrences. The talk is the talk of children, and the life child-life, which cannot be often said of these things in children's books."—Academy.

MADEMOISELLE. By FRANCIS M. PEARD. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"One of the pleasantest studies of family life that even this agreeable writer has published. . . . As carefully written as it is agreeable."—Spectator.

"Mademoiselle is a pleasing character. Her kindness towards the other and lower heroine, the pluck and patriotism which she shows throughout the book, her noble and gentle nature, win a reader's affection."—Speaker.

"An interesting and well-written little tale."—Saturday Review.

LITTLE PRINCESS ANGEL. By STELLA AUSTIN. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"A very pretty story."—Spectator.

LEAL SOUVENIR. By ALICE WEBER. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"We rarely meet with such real comprehension of the ways and thoughts of children."—Literary World.

"A tender and well-written romance."—Athenæum.

TRUTH with HONOUR. By C. R. COLERIDGE and M. BRAMSTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"A very pleasant novel—healthy in tone, broad in views, well written. It is seldom that one meets with a more lovable and charming heroine than Maisie Despard."—Speaker.

"A most effective story, worthy of the two distinguished writers who have combined to produce it."—Spectator.

NATURE and WOODCRAFT. By JOHN WATSON, Author of "Confessions of a Poacher."

"Sylvan Folk," "A Year in the Fields," &c. Illustrated by G. E. LODGE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"It is long since we have met with a more delightful book on rural subjects than 'Nature and Woodcraft'."

LONDON:

WALTER SMITH &amp; INNES 31 and 32, Bedford St., Strand.

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

DR. NANSEN'S GREENLAND EXPEDITION.

THE FIRST CROSSING OF GREENLAND.

By FRIDTJOF NANSEN.

Translated from the Norwegian by HUBERT MAJENDIE GEPP, B.A., Lecturer at the University of Upsala. With 5 Maps, 12 Full-page Plates, and 157 Illustrations in the Text, and a Preface by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian of the Royal Geographical Society.

2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

COMPLETION OF MR. LECKY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

SECOND EDITION of Vols. VII. and VIII. now ready.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By W. E. H. LECKY.

Vols. VII. and VIII., 1798–1800, with Index to the Complete Work, 8vo, 36s.

* Vols. I. and II., 1700–1760, 36s. Vols. III. and IV., 1760–1784, 36s. Vols. V. and VI., 1784–1793, 36s.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE CRUISE OF THE "ALERTE":

The Narrative of a Search for Treasure on the Desert Island of Trinidad.

By E. F. KNIGHT, Author of "The Cruise of the Falcon."

With 2 Maps and 23 Illustrations.

CABINET EDITION OF WALPOLE'S ENGLAND.

HISTORY of ENGLAND from the CONCLUSION of the GREAT

WAR in 1815 to 1868. By SPENCER WALPOLE. Cabinet Edition. 6 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

NEW BOOK BY DR. MARTINEAU.

THE SEAT of AUTHORITY in RELIGION. By JAMES MARTINEAU,

LL.D., D.D., D.C.L. Second Edition. 8vo, 14s.

* This work is the Author's attempt to make clear to himself the ultimate ground of pure religion in the human mind, and the permanent essence of the religion of Christ in history. It is addressed to the requirements, not of specialists, philosophers, and scholars, but of educated persons interested in the results of modern knowledge.

POEMS. By NINA F. LAYARD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Characterised by a lively fancy, pure feeling, and sincerity of heart. One other great merit the authoress also possesses, and this is a style capable of expressing the best ideas without puzzling the simplest readers."—Glasgow Herald.

CHAMBER COMEDIES: a Collection of Plays and Monologues for the Drawing Room. By Mrs. HUGH BELL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Lovers of amateur theatricals will be hard to please if they cannot find something to suit them in Mrs. Hugh Bell's book. The author, who has evidently studied the French stage with much profit, has a sound dramatic instinct, a vein of shrewd and genial humour, and a keen eye for the comic aspects of ordinary life."—Times.

LETTERS to YOUNG SHOOTERS. (First Series.) On the Choice

and USE of a GUN. Reprinted from the Field. By Sir RALPH PAYNE GALLWEY, Bart. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [In a few days.]

THE PHILOSOPHY of FICTION in LITERATURE: an Essay. By

DANIEL GREENLEAF THOMPSON, Author of "A System of Psychology," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STEPS of the SUN. Daily Readings of Prose. Selected by

AGNES MASON. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

* This Book is uniform with the Original Edition of "FIVE MINUTES," by H. L. SIDNEY LEAR.

"A dainty gift-book. . . . The extracts are selected with admirable taste from a wide field in literature."—Speaker.

THE STORY of DENMARK. By CHARLOTTE S. SIDGWICK. With

6 Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

VERY YOUNG; and QUITE ANOTHER STORY. Stories for Girls.

By JEAN INGELow. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS.

NEW NOVEL BY H. RIDER HAGGARD AND ANDREW LANG.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE. By H. RIDER HAGGARD AND ANDREW LANG.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Messrs. Haggard and Lang's production is, in the most liberal sense of the word, incomparable. In its audacity of conception, in sustained power of execution, in the sweet and stately rhythm of Mr. Lang's Homeric sentences, and in the ghostliness of Mr. Haggard's Egyptian sorcery, 'none but itself can be its parallel.'"—Guardian.

VIRGINIE: a Tale of One Hundred Years Ago. By VAL PRINSEP,

A.R.A. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

A LIVING EPITAPH. By G. COLMORE, Author of "A Conspiracy

of Silence," &amp;c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A strongly dramatic and interesting story."—Court Circular.

"A strange story. . . . Miranda Dane is a remarkable study."—Scotsman.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, &amp; CO.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

ERNEST RENAN'S NEW WORK.

THE FUTURE of SCIENCE: Ideas of 1848.

By ERNEST RENAN.

Demy 8vo, 18s.

[This day.]

SECOND EDITION.

WITH STANLEY'S REAR-COLUMN.

By J. ROSE TROUP.

With Portraits and Illustrations, demy 8vo, 16s.

* In addition to Mr. Troup's diaries, his book contains an Introductory Chapter replying to Mr. Stanley's criticisms on the Rear Column, as well as the entire correspondence between Mr. Stanley and Mr. Troup on the subject. With these exceptions the book is left intact, as it was before Mr. Stanley obtained his injunction restraining the publication a year or two ago.

With 130 Illustrations, including 36 Full-Page Plates, of which 18 are Etchings.

THE BARBIZON SCHOOL of PAINTERS: Corot, Rousseau, Diaz, Millet, and Daubigny. By D. C. THOMSON. Small-Paper Edition, 4to, cloth, 42s.

"The most complete account of the five painters."—Times."He has put the men before us as they lived and wrought."—Glasgow Herald."It may be candidly commended to all lovers of Art as a desirable treasure."—Scotsman.

WITH PREFACE BY WALTER CRANE.

WOOD CARVING in PRACTICE and THEORY, as APPLIED to HOME ARTS. With Notes on Designs having special application to carved wood in different styles. By F. L. SCHAUERMANN. Containing 124 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"It is written in a brief, business-like, and practical fashion, and is full of valuable instruction."—Scotsman."A very excellent and useful manual."—Daily Graphic.

A MOST ATTRACTIVE BOOK.

WANNETA the SIOUX. By Warren K. Moorehead. With Illustrations from Life, large crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is a remarkably well-written and interesting account of life among the Sioux tribe of Red Indians..... A most attractive book."—Glasgow Herald.

"A charming little quarto, profusely illustrated."—THE TIMES.

CITY BOYS in the WOODS; or, a Trapping Venture in Maine. By HENRY P. WELLS. With 137 Illustrations, crown 4to, 9s.

"With great clearness and detail the incidents of hunting, which make up the daily round of a trapper's life, are cleverly described, and this is interwoven with the threads of a story in which the element of adventure is well represented..... A lively and entertaining book."—Speaker.

"Delightfully illustrated."—Saturday Review.

WITH TWENTY-SEVEN ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE GOLDSMITH'S WARD: a Tale of London City in the Fifteenth Century. By Mrs. R. H. READE. With 27 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

PRINTED IN COLOURS.

SKETCHES of INDIAN LIFE. By W. W. Lloyd, late 24th Regiment, Author of "On Active Service." Oblong 4to, printed in colours, 6s.

"A book which is capable of giving genuine entertainment to readers of any age."—Morning Post.

"Display intimate acquaintance with the every-day incidents of the life of both natives and of residents in India."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE SECRET of the PRINCESS: a Tale of Country, Camp, Court, Convict, and Cloister Life in Russia. By Mrs. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"If you wish to read a really graphic and accurate story of things and people as they really exist in the land of the Tsar, I should counsel you to send for Mrs. Sutherland Edwards's capital novel."

G. A. S. in Sunday Times.

AN HONOURABLE ESTATE. By Louisa Crow. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

[Now ready.]

SUNDORNE. By Bertha Thomas. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"There are many reasons why 'Sundorne' should make not only a success, but a sensation... this remarkable story... is intensely interesting... Every sentence is full of vitality, and does something towards completing a really powerful and able work of fiction: one of the cleverest novels of the day."

Court Journal.

IN LOW RELIEF: a Bohemian Transcript. By Morley

ROBERTS. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"We seldom come across a book so clever as 'In Low Relief,' and at the same time so rich in those graces which are of much more value than mere cleverness."—Spectator.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

DAVID DOUGLAS'S LIST.

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

THE JOURNAL OF SIR WALTER SCOTT FROM THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT AT ABBOTSFORD.

ANNOTATED AND ILLUSTRATED FROM HIS LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE.

"This book is one of the greatest gifts which our English literature has ever received."—Spectator.

"Reads like a romance."—Scotsman."The story is as thrilling as any tragedy."—Times.

"Although many of the details are melancholy, yet the interest of the whole is entrancing, and the 'Journal' is a most precious relic of Sir Walter Scott."—Quarterly Review.

1 vol., demy 8vo, 12s.

GEORGE BUCHANAN:

Humanist and Reformer: a Biography

By P. HUME BROWN.

"Is written in fine, delicate English, is instinct throughout with a rare enthusiasm for its theme, and in these modern days of book-making is a marvel of loving research and scholarly erudition."—Athenaeum.

Now ready.

CELTIC SCOTLAND: a History of Ancient Alban. By WILLIAM F. SKENE, D.C.L., LL.D., Historiographer-Royal for Scotland. Second Edition, carefully Revised by the Author, with a New Index to the entire Work. 3 vols., demy 8vo, 45s.

Vol. I.—HISTORY and ETHNOLOGY. 15s.

Vol. II.—CHURCH and CULTURE. 15s.

Vol. III.—LAND and PEOPLE. 15s.

Now ready.

DR. JOHN BROWN and his SISTER ISABELLA.

Outlines by E. T. M'LAREN.

Fourth Edition, with Three Portraits, small 4to, 5s.

Third Edition, fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"To have these delicately conceived sketches of Dr. John Brown and Isabella Brown presented to us in this beautifully printed and illustrated form is a real gain to literature."

"A most pleasing exhibition of gentle admiration."—Spectator.

"It is more than a sketch, it is a living picture of the beloved physician."—Murray's Magazine.

"We have the fourth edition of one of the most delightful little studies in Scottish humanity ever written. In their present form these pictures have all the charm of a new book."

"This is an exquisite little book; a masterpiece of its kind. Every sentence adds something to the picture."—British Weekly.

"Will be read with avidity and interest. The portraits of Dr. Brown and his sister are full of character."

Manchester Guardian.

Now ready, Second Edition, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LETTERS of the REV. JOHN KER, D.D., 1866–85.

"Dr. Ker's correspondence is marked by the same delicacy of touch and refinement, the same spirit of wholesome piety, and the same broad interest in all phases of human thought and life which characterised everything he wrote."

"The quality of the letters, from the literary standpoint, is of the highest..... Worthy to rank with those of Cowper."

"Less elaborate than his celebrated 'Sermons,' they are certainly not less subtle or piercing in their vision."—Freeman.

"There is nothing in the volume that is not worthy of Dr. Ker."—Scotsman.

"The tone of the letters is excellent."—Athenaeum.

DAVID DOUGLAS'S SERIES OF AMERICAN AUTHORS.

New Volume just added.

THE SHADOW OF A DREAM.

By W. D. HOWELLS,

Author of "A Foregone Conclusion," "The Lady of the Aroostook," "Indian Summer," &amp;c.

Price 1s.

"Mr. Howells is quite at his best in 'The Shadow of a Dream.'... The characters are etched with admirable truth and delicacy of touch."—Truth.

"In some respects his story marks a new departure, for it is unquestionably one in which 'something happens'; something, too, that should satisfy the most truculent advocates of incident."—Guardian.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS, 10, Castle Street.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, &amp; Co., Limited.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

IBSEN'S FAMOUS PROSE DRAMAS.

(IN FIVE VOLUMES.)

EDITED BY WILLIAM ARCHER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

Uniform and Authoritative Edition, published under arrangement with HENRIK IBSEN.

Latest Volumes. VOL. III.

"LADY INGER of OSTRAT" "The VIKINGS at HELGELAND." "The PRETENDERS."
With an Introductory Note and Portrait of Ibsen.

VOL. IV.

EMPEROR and GALILEAN: A World-
Historic Drama.

Ready shortly. VOL. V.

(A Special Interest is attached to this Volume, as it will contain IBSEN'S LATEST DRAMA.)

"ROSMERSHOLM"; "The LADY from the SEA"; and "A NEW DRAMA," translated by WILLIAM ARCHER.

"The name and fame of Henrik Ibsen are advancing day by day in England."—Contemporary Review.
"The art of prose translation does not perhaps enjoy a very high literary status in England, but we have no hesitation in numbering the present version of Ibsen, so far as it has gone
(Vol. I. and II.), among the very best achievements, in that kind, of our generation."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. per volume; half morocco, 6s. 6d. per volume.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. per volume; half-morocco, 6s. 6d. p r volume.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

EDITED BY HAVELOCK ELLIS.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

SANITY AND INSANITY. By Dr.

CHARLES MERCIER. Numerous Illustrations.

"The brightest book on the physical side of mental science published in our time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. Albert Moll,

Berlin.

"The latest and fullest information on the subject now accessible."—Echo.

MANUAL TRAINING. By Dr. C. M.

WOODWARD, Director of the Manual Training School, Washington University (St. Louis, Mo.). Numerous Illustrations.

"There is no greater authority on the subject of Manual Training than Professor Woodward."—Manchester Guardian.

To be Published on 15th December.

THE SCIENCE OF FAIRY TALES. By EDWIN SIDNEY HARTLAND.

This volume deals with those fairy tales or folk-tales which contain a supernatural element, and which are known as Sagas and Nursery Tales (or Märchen)—tales which are known to be often of world-wide extension, and the study of which (significant and interesting on so many accounts) is now an important and fascinating branch of Folk Lore.

BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

W "BOOKLETS."

Bound in white Grained Boards, with Gilt Lettering, price One Shilling each Where Love is there God also.

The Two Pilgrims. | What Men Live by.

Just ready.

If you neglect the Fire, you don't put it out.

THE GODSON.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

A NEW COMPREHENSIVE EDITION OF THE POETS.

In Shilling Volumes, square 8vo, cloth, red edges, 1s.; cloth, uncut edges, 1s.; red roan, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.; padded morocco, gilt edges, 5s.; and in half morocco, gilt top, antique (in a variety of new reproductions of old tints).

Latest Volume ready 25th inst.

WOMEN POETS of the VICTORIAN

ERA. Selected and Edited, with an Introduction, by Mrs. WILLIAM SHARP.

This well-known Series now includes about Eighty Volumes.
Complete List post free on application.

THE CAMELOT SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s., cut and uncut edges; and in a variety of morocco and other bindings.

COMEDIES, by Alfred de Musset.

Translated, with an Introduction, by S. L. GWYNN.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

EDWARD STANFORD'S PUBLICATIONS.

"A series of beautiful Gift-Books."—Christmas Bookseller.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES, AND OTHER LECTURES.

A SEQUEL TO "THE FAIRYLAND OF SCIENCE."

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. Fisher).

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with nearly 100 Illustrations, 6s.; bound in calf extra, 11s.

Contents.

CHAP.

1. THE MAGICIAN'S CHAMBER by MOONLIGHT.
2. MAGIC GLASSES and HOW to USE THEM.
3. FAIRY RINGS and HOW THEY are MADE.
4. THE LIFE-HISTORY of LICHENS and MOSSES.
5. THE HISTORY of a LAVA STREAM.

CHAP.

6. AN HOUR with the SUN.
7. AN EVENING with the STARS.
8. LITTLE BEINGS from a MINIATURE OCEAN.
9. THE DARTMOOR PONIES.
10. THE MAGICIAN'S DREAM of ANCIENT DAYS.

Works by the Same Author, uniform in size.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE. Twenty-third Thousand. 6s.; calf 11s.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN. Thirteenth Thousand. 6s.; calf, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE. 2 vols., cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. each (sold separately).

SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE. Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d.; calf, 14s.

ANIMALS from the LIFE. 255 Coloured Illustrations. Drawn by HEINRICH LEUTEMANN, with Descriptive Letterpress. Edited by ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. Fisher).

Crown 4to, handsome cloth binding, 10s. 6d.

"This is a really beautiful child's book. The drawings of the animals depicted are as superior to the old class of picture book as a portrait by Millais is to a signboard. The chromo-lithography is also extremely good. In reproducing Leutemann's work for English children, Mrs. Fisher has made considerable alterations, rendered necessary in a book designed for use in our own schoolrooms and nurseries. No more excellent children's Christmas gift-book could be found."—Bookseller.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of the EARTH.

A POPULAR ACCOUNT OF GEOLOGICAL HISTORY.

By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON, B.A., F.G.S.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

Contents.

CHAP.

1. CLOUD-LAND.
2. THE KEY to GEOLOGY.
3. AN ARCHAIC ERA.
4. CAMBRIAN SLATES.
5. SLATES and ASHES of SILURIA.
6. THE OLD RED SANDSTONE.
7. THE MOUNTAIN LIMESTONE.
8. FORESTS of the COAL PERIOD.

CHAP.

9. A GREAT INTERVAL.
10. THE CHESHIRE SANDSTONE.
11. NEW PHASES of LIFE.
12. BATH OOLITES.
13. AN AGE of REPTILES.
14. THE CHALK DOWNS.
15. THE NEW ERA.
16. THE ICE-AGE and ADVENT of MAN.

THE CANARY ISLANDS AS A WINTER RESORT.

By JOHN WHITFORD, F.R.G.S.

With 7 Maps, and 25 Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

MADEIRA: its Scenery, and

How to See It. With Letters of a Year's Residence, and Lists of the Trees, Flowers, Ferns, and Seaweeds. By ELLEN M. TAYLOR. Second Edition, Revised. With Frontispiece, Map of the Island, and Plan of Funchal.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Miss Taylor's volume is an admirable vade-mecum for persons travelling to or in Madeira .... An excellent map and a good plan of Funchal greatly add to its practical value."

Saturday Review.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL BASIS OF EVOLUTION.

By JAMES CROLL, LL.D., F.R.S.

Large post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, UNIFORM IN SIZE.

STELLAR EVOLUTION and its RELATIONS to GEOLOGICAL TIME. Large post 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"If Dr. Croll has not finally settled the theory of creation, he has at least made a most substantial contribution towards the discussion of the great problem in physics which yet remains for philosophers of the foremost rank to settle."

Philosophical Magazine.

Recently published, THIRD EDITION, REVISED and ENLARGED.

STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS of UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY.

Quarto Edition. Containing 46 Coloured Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Steel and Copper Plates, and an Alphabetical Index to the Geography of the World. Half-morocco, cloth sides, gilt edges, 30s. Size when shut, 12½ inches by 15 inches. Weight, 4 pounds 8 ounces.

"New friends and new loves are capital things provided they are not allowed to displace the old, and for our part we have no intention of ever putting out of its place Mr. Stanford's 'London Atlas,' the third edition of which in quarto form is now before us. We have used it constantly for years, and we have never found it surpassed for the combined merits of handiness, cheapness, accuracy, and clearness. The maps, of course, are fewer and on a smaller scale than those of its larger rivals; but this drawback is perhaps compensated by greater ease of reference. We are not sure ourselves that a compendious atlas, supplemented at different times by the sheet maps which all the best publishers issue at times when a particular district is of interest, is not a better thing than a more extensive volume, which, after all, never can pretend to extreme detail on the small scale. However this may be, all good things are good in their own way, and in its way the 'London' is one of the best."

Saturday Review.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOW READY.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE TEMPLE LIBRARY.

"May fairly rank as an edition de luxe. The publishers well deserve the gratitude of all book collectors."

Athenæum.

The POETICAL WORKS of THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES. 2 vols. post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE, and with Two Etchings by Herbert Ralston.

The text includes the exceedingly rare "Improvvisatore," and several Poems now for the first time printed from the MS. in the possession of the late Mr. Robert Browning. The edition is limited to 500 copies. There is also a Large-Paper Edition of 125 copies, but it is already completely out of print at the Publishers.

The following is a List of Works already issued in this Library:—

LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA. Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. (Only fifteen copies remain unsold.)

POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLD-SMITH. Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON.

SELECT ESSAYS of Dr. JOHNSON. Edited by BIRKBECK HILL.

LANDOR'S PERICLES and ASPASIA. Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

Each having Six Etchings by Herbert Ralston. All the Large-Paper Copies of the above are completely out of print; and very short numbers of the Small-Paper remain.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

ANNOTATED AND ACCENTUATED.

With Illustrations of English Life in Chaucer's Time. By JOHN SAUNDERS.

"No better edition of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales' has been produced for many a day. The illustrations from the Ellesmere MS. are capital guides to the student, as giving an authoritative glimpse into the life of Chaucer's time. A special word of recognition must be awarded to the scholarly essay under the title 'Concluding Remarks,' in which the author briefly but powerfully surveys what Chaucer did for his own time, for ours, and for remotest posterity. The volume forms a thoroughly trustworthy text-book."—Daily Telegraph.

J. M. DENT & CO., ALDINE HOUSE 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET, E.C.

5s. PIXIE 5s.

AND

HILLHOUSE FARM.

By Mrs. GERARD FORD.

Profusely Illustrated by J. Cadenhead and Florence M. Cooper.

Cloth gilt.

The best Christmas Story for Children published.

LONDON:

C. GILBERT, ELLIS & CO., 11, CLEMENT'S INN.
SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.,
Limited, STATIONERS' HALL COURT.
1890.

5s. 5s.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.
And all Booksellers.

LORD TENNYSON'S POETICAL WORKS.

J. M. DENT & CO. are now supplying LORD TENNYSON'S WORKS (Macmillan's 7s. 6d. Edition), with 12 Etchings by Herbert Ralston and John Jellicoe, price, in cloth extra, gilt top, 12s. 6d.; and in various extra leather bindings, of which they will be pleased to forward lists to the Trade.

These Etchings can also be supplied bound up with the Eight-Vol. Edition in leather bindings.

CHARLES LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. With an Etching by Herbert Ralston. New and Cheap Edition. Cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

"This edition of the Gentle Elia is one of the most dainty that has been issued for a long while. The style is decidedly artistic, the paper of the best, and the editing most judicious."—Bookseller.

WITH the POETS. A Selection of English Poetry.

By ARCHDEACON FARRAR. New and Cheap Edition. With 10 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Has long taken its place in the first rank of selections of English poetry."—Bookseller.

SONGS from TENNYSON. 16mo, cloth gilt edges, 1s. 6d., with six photos, 2s. 6d.

REVERIES of a BACHELOR; or, a Book of the heart. By IK MARVEL, with an Etching by Percy Moran. A volume of delicate Essays, elegantly printed. Cloth extra, with special design on back and side. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

DREAM LIFE: a Fable of the Seasons. By the Author of "Reveries of a Bachelor," with an Etching by Percy Moran. Cloth extra to match above volume. 1 vol., post 8vo, 5s.

A New Volume Commences in January. 33rd Year of Publication.

THE LADIES' TREASURY.

A HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE. Edited by Mrs. WARREN.

7d. Monthly.

THE JANUARY PART CONTAINS:—"A MYSTIFICATION." The opening chapters of a New Serial Tale, by the author of "Behind the Kates."

ROMANCES of OLDEN DAYS. Illustrated by a Fine Engraving.

WALKING LEAVES and DANCING ORCHIDS. With Illustrations.

THE FOOTLESS GHOST. By the Author of "The Doctor's Story."

DOMESTIC MANNERS and CUSTOMS of GERMANY. By Miss DRAINE.

PORTRAITS of H.R.H. the PRINCESS VICTORIA of PRUSSIA, Sister of the Emperor William II. of Germany, and of her husband, PRINCE ADOLF WILLIAM VICTOR of SCHAUMBURG-LIPPE.

FABLES of the SKY: The Sun, Moon, and Stars.

MANAGEMENT of HOUSE and SERVANTS. By Mrs. WARREN.

FANCY WORK and NEEDLEWORK. With Engravings and Descriptions.

COLOURED DESIGN of SWALLOW for a SCREEN PANEL. Painted or Embroidered on Satin.

COLOURED PLATE of CHILDREN'S COSTUMES, for Fancy Balls and Dances.

WINTER FASHIONS for LADIES. With Engravings in the Newest Styles.

COOKERY. Caprices of the time.

GARDENING. Sayings and Doings of the Day.

PASTIMES PUZZLES. With Money Prizes.

CHESS. ANSWERS to CORRESPONDENTS.

"Crisp and sparkling story and article, coloured fashion plates, and effective illustrations, amusement and instruction, are all happily and cleverly blended."—Lincoln Free Press.

LONDON: BEMROSE & SONS, 23, OLD BAILEY; AND DERRY.

NOW READY

ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF LITERARY OPINION.

Price SIXPENCE.

CONTENTS.

Reviews with summary and consensus of Press opinions on:—

THE LIFE of LORD HOUGHTON.

THE JOURNAL of SIR WALTER SCOTT.

LORD BEACONSFIELD.

EMIN PASHA and the REBELLION at the EQUATOR.

WITH STANLEY'S REAR COLUMN.

MACKAY of UGANDA, &c., &c.

Articles, with portrait, and summary and consensus of Press opinions on:—

THE LATE MR. MUDIE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

NEWSPAPERS III.—The Daily News. An Old-Time Almanac.

BRIEF REVIEWS.

NOTES and NEWS AT HOME.

NOTES from the CONTINENT and ABROAD.

NOTES FROM AMERICA.

NOTES on CATALOGUES.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

ESSAY for the MONTH.

Offices: 138, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Criss Cross Lovers.

3 vols.

By the Hon. Mrs. H. W. CHETWYND.

A Homburg Beauty. 3 vols.

By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.

Jack's Secret. 3 vols.

By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON

Basil and Annette. 3 vols.

By B. L. FARJEON.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL

(SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION).

The FOURTH EDITION of

HE WENT FOR A SOLDIER.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER, Author of "Bootles' Baby," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

"John Strange Winter has given further proof of her skill in character-sketching, and in producing a most delightful story.... True genius is displayed by the authoress in springing on the reader a surprise near the end of the story."—Manchester Examiner.

"The writer describes barrack life and the life led by children at the seaside with unfailing vividness and grace."—Manchester Guardian.

"It possesses all the pleasing features which have gained for its author so marked popularity as a novelist. The style is fresh and vigorous, and the humorous and the pathetic are both well delineated in the story, which has as its theme the outs and ins of a love affair. Not the least entertaining parts are the sketches of army life in its various phases."—Dundee Courier.

AT ALL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS, &c.

"BELGRAVIA" ANNUAL.

(Illustrated), price 1s., containing contributions by JOHN STRANGE WINTER, "RITA," FLORENCE MARRIAT, LADY DUFFUS HARDY, E. S. DREWRY, JESSIE SALE LLOYD, the AUTHOR of "Miss Molly," and others.

"LONDON SOCIETY" Christmas

Number (Illustrated), price 1s., containing contributions by Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON, Mrs. HUNGERFORD (Author of "Molly Bawn"), B. M. CROKER, W. W. FENN, Miss ALEXANDER, JEAN MIDDLEMASS, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, and others.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

MESSRS. ISBISTERS' LIST.

SIXPENCE Monthly. Beautifully Illustrated.

GOOD WORDS.

Edited by DONALD MACLEOD, D.D., one of H.M. Chaplains.

A New Volume begins with the January Number, and will contain—

THE MARRIAGE OF ELINOR.

A NEW THREE-VOLUME STORY. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

Questions of the Christian Life.

SHORT SUNDAY READINGS.

By the Rt. Rev. A. W. THOROLD, D.D., Bishop-Designate of Winchester.
TO BEGIN IN JANUARY AND BE CONTINUED MONTHLY.

THE LITTLE MINISTER.

A NEW THREE-VOLUME STORY.

By J. M. BARRIE, Author of "A Window in Thrums," &c.

With Illustrations by J. Watson Nicol.

Among the Summer Isles. By "SHIRLEY" (JOHN SKELTON, D.C.L.).

With Illustrations by C. Whymper.

The Peak of Longing. A Carpathian Legend. By CARMEN SYLVA.

Boys' Brigades. By Professor HENRY DRUMMOND.

The People who Lived in Homer's Time. By ANDREW LANG.

Wrinkles on the Face of Mother Earth. By Professor A. H. GREEN.

Who is my Neighbour? By ANNIE S. SWAN.

Bournemouth in Winter. By HARRY FURNISS.
With Illustrations by the Author.

Popular Science Papers. By

Prof. W. F. BARRETT, | Dr. J. G. McPHERSON,
Prof. J. E. THORPE, | W. B. TEGETMEIER,
and others.

Covent Garden Market. By WILLIAM SENIOR.
With Illustrations by A. Morrow.

Rome and Southern Italy. By the EDITOR.

The Glasgow Foundry Boys. By HENRY JOHNSTON.
With Illustrations by A. S. Boyd.

Religious Papers: Biblical and Practical. By

The Bishop of RIPON, | Rev. W. PAGE-ROBERTS, | R. W. DALE, LL.D.,
Professor MOMERIE, | Professor MARCUS DODS, | Rev. R. F. HORTON,
&c. &c.

Along with Important Contributions by

Prof. Sir G. McLEOD, | JOHN BROWN, D.D., | Sir H. MAXWELL, M.P.
C. BIRLEY, | Rev. T. VINCENT, | C. BLATHERWICK,
JAMES STALKER, D.D., | TYMMS, | MARGARET HOWITT,
WILLIAM JOLLY, | HENRY ALLON, D.D., | &c. &c.

TWO NEW CHRISTMAS STORIES.

Now ready, price 6d.

IN THE SHADE OF SCHIEHALLION.

THE "GOOD WORDS" CHRISTMAS STORY.

By C. BLATHERWICK,

Author of "Peter Stonnor," &c. With numerous Illustrations.

Now ready, price 6d.

THE FLIGHT OF THE SHADOW.

THE "SUNDAY MAGAZINE" CHRISTMAS STORY.

By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D.,

Author of "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne.

MR. GLADSTONE'S NEW BOOK.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE IMPREGNABLE ROCK of HOLY SCRIPTURE. A

Series of Old Testament Studies. Revised and Enlarged from Good Words. By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

"We do not think that the story of Creation has ever been treated with so large a sagacity and so full an appreciation of what could and what could not be taught to primitive and, we may say, infantine man..... Mr. Gladstone applies these principles with what we may call a statesmanlike insight and subtlety."—Spectator.

NEW WORK BY THE DEAN OF GLOUCESTER.

Now ready, imperial 8vo, 21s.

DREAMLAND in HISTORY: the Story of the Norman

Dukes. By H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. With 60 Illustrations by Herbert Railton.

DEAN PLUMPTRE'S LIFE OF KEN.

Popular Edition, Now Ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 12s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of THOMAS KEN, Bishop of Bath and Wells.

By E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D., Dean of Wells.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR'S NEW WORK.

TRUTHS to LIVE BY. A Companion to "Every-day

Christian Life." By F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo, 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "WHENCE COMES MAN?"

Now ready, demy 8vo, 12s.

WHY DOES MAN EXIST? The Continuation and Completion of "Whence Comes Man?" By ARTHUR JOHN BELL.

BY THE EDITOR OF "THE POETS' BIBLE."

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SILENT VOICE; and other Discourses, chiefly Practical.

By W. GARRETT HORDER, Editor of "The Poets' Bible," &c.

DEAN PLUMPTRE'S "DANTE."

THE DIVINA COMMEDIA and MINOR POEMS of DANTE ALIGHIERI. A New Translation. With Biographical Introduction, Notes and Essays, &c. By E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D., Dean of Wells.

Volume I.—LIFE. HELL, PURGATORY. Medium 8vo, 21s.

Volume II.—PARADISE, MINOR POEMS. STUDIES. Medium 8vo, 21s.

GOOD WORDS

VOLUME FOR 1890.

With over 200 Illustrations by the best Artists, and containing New Stories

By B. L. FARJEON,

J. M. BARRIE,

and HELEN SHIPTO

Along with Important Contributions by

Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
Prof. Flint, D.D., LL.D.
Sir R. S. Ball, F.R.S.
R. H. Hutton.

Edward Whymper.
Prof. Rücker, F.R.S.
Bishop of Peterborough.
Bishop of Ripon.

Dean of Gloucester.
Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.
Prof. Marcus Dods, D.D.
Rev. Harry Jones.

&c. &c.

[Now ready.]

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE

VOLUME FOR 1890.

With over 200 Illustrations by the best Artists, and containing New Stories

By ANNIE S. SWAN,

SILAS K. HOCKING,

And Others.

Along with Important Contributions by Archbishop of Canterbury.

Bishop of Rochester.
Bishop of Ripon.
Bishop of Sodor and Man.

Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.
H. Montagu Butler, D.D.
R. M. Ballantyne.
L. T. Meade.

Agnes Giberne.
Darley Dale.
Mrs. Fawcett.
Prof. W. G. Blaikie.

&c. &c.

[Now ready.]

15 & 16, TAVISTOCK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS.

Now ready. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

Musical Reminiscences of Half-a-Century. By WILLERT BEALE, Author of "The Enterprising Impresario," &c.

"Mr. Willert Beale has, in his Reminiscences, given us a greater romance of real life than will be found in twenty volumes of novels by the most eminent authors. Yet all so naturally and so simply told."—"The Baron de Bookworms" in Punch.

THE LIFE OF

THOMAS SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"A book which will attract and interest many as the unpretending record of a long life and a varied experience. Mr. Cooper has lived through an unparalleled series of social changes; he has seen and known many famous men, and his own life has not been without its romantic story of a rise from obscurity to renown."—Times.

BY MR. BARKER.

WAYFARING in FRANCE; or, Highways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous illustrations, 16s.

"In his attractive volume, Mr. Barker describes what has hitherto been regarded as indescribable; he takes his readers to regions, we may be quite sure, no less new to most than 'Darkest Africa.' This spirited, unaffected record of a pedestrian in French by-ways is most agreeable reading." Full Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALEXIA."

THE LITTLE ONE. By Eleanor C. PRICE, Author of "Red Towers," &c. 2 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ACTE."

THE DELIVERANCE OF ROBERT CARTER. By HUGH WESTBURY, Author of "Frederick Hazzleden," &c. 2 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."

A DAUGHTER OF THE PYRAMIDS. By LEITH DERWENT, Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c. 3 vols.

"There is something very 'creepy' about this strange story of hypnotism, dissection, clairvoyance, and other provinces of occult or transcendental science. The choice of material, and method of construction, are alike admirable in producing a book with decided merits of its own. It plunges at the outset in medias res; it never forsakes the almost lurid path it designs to follow; it culminates with an appropriately wild suggestion."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA!"

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Ardath," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

"A story of absinthe and absintheurs—a grim, realistic drama."—Athenaeum.

"Few modern writers have a greater command of eloquently vigorous language than Miss Corelli. It flows through the greater portion of the present thrilling work in lava torrents of bitter passion and pitiless revenge. The reader is whirled about like a leaflet amidst lurid flashes and wild gusts of maddened invective, almost blinded by the efforts he or she makes to realise the tempest which rages through the man possessed of the 'liquid fire.'"—Kensington Society.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. 3 vols.

"Miss Broughton is as vivacious and readable as usual in her last novel."—Daily Telegraph.

"In this novel, the author strikes, perhaps, a deeper and truer note of human sympathy than has been audible in any other of her fictions. The interest is not only well maintained, but wholesome and edifying."—Globe.

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF H.H. THE MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM.

Now ready, Vols. I. and II., 4to, cloth, £2 2s. each net. Subscription price for the 4 vols., payable in advance, £5 5s.

THE HYMNS OF THE RIG-VEDA.

With SAYANA'S COMMENTARY Edited by F. MAX MULLER.

Second Edition based on a collation of new MSS.

Vols. I. and II. containing Mandala I. to VI.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the Five GOLD MEDALS that were awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW BOOKS

NEW EDITION on the OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER.

Just ready, extra fcap. 8vo, extra superfine cloth, gilt line, 7s. 6d.; and in other superior bindings.

ADDISON.—SELECTIONS from ADDISON'S PAPERS in the SPECTATOR. Edited, with Introduction, by THOMAS ARNOLD, M.A.

Just ready, New Volume, with 12 Maps, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. Vol. II. The WEST INDIAN COLONIES. By MR. C. P. LUCAS, of Balliol College and the Colonial Office.

* Revised throughout by persons possessing special local knowledge of the several Colonies and Dependencies.

NEW EDITION OF "STRATMANN'S MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY."

Just published, small 4to, £1 11s. 6d.

A MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Containing Words used by English Writers from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century. By FRANCIS HENRY STRATMANN. A New Edition, Re-arranged, Revised, and Enlarged by HENRY BRADLEY, Joint Editor of the "New English Dictionary."

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR

DAR for the YEAR 1890.
* The shape of the "University Calendar" has now been restored in many respects to that which it bore in the years immediately preceding 1883. The Class Lists and Honour Lists are inserted entire, and the Names and Colleges of the Winners of the University Scholarships, Exhibitions, and Prizes, in most cases from the foundation of each, are also given.

UNIFORM with the "WIT and WISDOM of SAMUEL JOHNSON."

Just published, tastefully printed, in crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE WORLDLY WISDOM of LORD

CHESTERFIELD. Selected and arranged by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Editor of the Clarendon Press Edition of Boswell's "Life of Johnson."

NEW EDITION REVISED AND CORRECTED.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

OUTLINES of TEXTUAL CRITICISM

APPLIED to the NEW TESTAMENT. By C. E. HAMMOND, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford. Fifth Edition.

Now ready, crown 8vo, roan limp, 10s. 6d.

A FINNISH GRAMMAR. By C. N. E.

ELIOT, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford.

* The author's object in writing this book has been to give an account of Finnish sufficient to enable anyone to understand the grammatical structure of the written language, and also to place before the student of philology an account of the chief phenomena it presents. The present work is believed to be the only grammar of Finnish in the English language, and to contain the only syntax (except brief sketches) in any language more generally accessible than Swedish.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SONG of LEWES. Edited with

Introduction and Notes, by C. L. KINGSFORD, M.A., St. John's College, Oxford.

* It is the most complete contemporary statement of the programme put forth by the constitutional party, and it is to this that the song owes its position as an historical document of the first importance.

NEW EDITION OF CHAUCER'S PROLOGUE.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s.

CHAUCER.—PROLOGUE to the CANTERBURY TALES. Edited by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Cambridge.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth bevelled, gilt lines, 4s. 6d., and in various superior bindings.

THE TREASURY of SACRED SONG.

Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries; with Notes, Explanatory, and Biographical. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry, Oxford.

* Also an Edition printed on the OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER, making an exceptionally light and handy volume. Extra cloth, 10s. 6d., and in superior bindings.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth," "Princess of Thule," &c., &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY DR. BIRKBECK HILL.

FOOTSTEPS of DR. JOHNSON

(SCOTLAND). By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. With about 150 illustrations, including 18 Heliogravures, sketched on the spot by Lancelot Speed, and beautifully reproduced by Lemerrier & Co., of Paris.

EDITION DE LUXE. Limited strictly to 150 copies—100 for the United Kingdom, and 50 for America. Bound in plain boards, uncut edges, £7 7s. net. [In a few days.]

This Edition is being rapidly subscribed for. ORDINARY EDITION. 1,000 copies, bound in half-morocco, gilt tops, uncut edges, £3 3s. net. [Now ready.]

BY HENRY DUNCKLEY, LL.D.

VISCOUNT MELBOURNE. By Henry

DUNCKLEY, LL.D. ("Verax"). Being the Second Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE EARL of BEACONSFIELD, K.G.

By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, D.C.L. Being the First Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We believe that Mr. Froude's estimate of Lord Beaconsfield, on the whole, will be the one accepted by posterity."—Standard.

NEW WORK BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of

Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections. By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "Our Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CHARLES GOUNOD: his Life and

Works. By MARIE ANNE BOVET. With Portrait and Facsimiles. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BY ALPHONSE DAUDET and HENRY JAMES.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by HENRY JAMES. Numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Myrbach, Rosel, and Montégut. Square 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

KILGROOM: a Story of Ireland. By

J. A. STEUART, Author of "Letters to Living Authors," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Mr. GLADSTONE says of this book: "I find it truthful, national, and highly interesting. The praises deservedly given to Miss Lawless for her 'Hurriah' are due to you, but in a higher degree for a fuller and better adjusted picture."

THE CARE of the SICK, at Home and in the Hospital. A Handbook for Families and for Nurses. By Dr. TH. BILLROTH, Professor of Surgery in Vienna, &c., &c. Translated, by special authority of the Author, by J. BENTALL ENDEAN. Crown 8vo, with Portrait and 51 Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

NEW JUVENILE GIFT-BOOKS.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY JULES VERNE.

The Purchase of the North Pole: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon." Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

The Family without a Name. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

Bevis: a Tale for Boys. By RICHARD JEFFERIES, Author of "Amaryllis at the Fair," &c. New Edition. Edited by G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

New York to Brest in Seven Hours. By ANDRÉ LAURIE, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

Stories of Strange Adventures. By Capt. MAYNE REID, and others. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Recollections of My Childhood's Days.

By LOUISA M. ALCOTT, Author of "Little Men," "Little Women," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Harper's Young People. VOLUME for 1890.

4to, in handsome cloth cover, 7s. 6d.; gilt edges, 8s. Containing numerous Original Stories, Hundreds of Illustrations, and Twelve Coloured Plates.

"It far surpasses all that the enterprise and skill of our publishers have been able to produce."—W. E. GLADSTONE, in the North American Review for January, 1890.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,

and RIVINGTON, Limited,

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1890.

No. 971, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1888."—The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages upon the Christian Church. By Edwin Hatch. (Williams & Norgate.)

THIS posthumous work of Dr. Hatch—for it was left incomplete at his death—possesses a twofold interest. Besides that pertaining to the subject, which must always attract the thoughtful and cultured inquirer into the sources of Christianity, there is the not inferior attraction of its relation to the author. For we may certainly take it for granted that this book represents, more than all Dr. Hatch's other writings, the cause which was nearest his heart. Indeed, his remaining works seem capable of being classified as Prolegomena to this important subject. The development of Christianity from its simple commencement to its dogmatic maturity, the speedy hardening of its spontaneous emotions into intellectual propositions, the transformation of its rhetoric into logic, together with the manifold mischief which followed the process, and how those mischiefs might best be remedied, formed the great central question of his life. The subject thus presented itself to Dr. Hatch under a twofold aspect, each of which finds its due place and emphasis in this volume. It was his estimate of the history of Christianity in the past, and it embodied his aspiration for its welfare in the present and future.

That Christianity at a very early period became leavened with Hellenism is, of course, no new discovery; nor is the theory a novel one that in its constructive development the Christian Church eventually suffered from that contact. Suggestions of the prejudicial effect of Greek speculation on the primary simplicity of the Gospel meet us even in St. Paul's Epistles, while the Johannine Gospel may almost be called a Hellenistic version of the origin of Christianity. Moreover, almost every apologetic treatise on the commencement of Christianity from its earlier history to our own time has found it necessary to dwell on the Hellenic contribution to the formation of Christian doctrine. In Christmas sermons of the last and first half of the present century, it used to be a stereotyped argument, especially when the text had reference to the "fulness of time," that such fulness was made up of the philosophical enlightenment of the Greek, the conception of law and order of the Roman, as well as the religious instincts of the Hebrew; and it would be difficult to question the truth or appropriateness of the argument. But while Dr. Hatch's starting-point is not novel, the systematic method and many-sided elaboration of his argument is decidedly new. The influence of Greek ideas and usages on Christianity has never before received, at any rate from an English theologian, such scrutinising insight, such well-directed research, such a calm judicial estimate, as it has now obtained at his hands. We must the more regret, not only that the book was left incomplete at his death, but that its important subject was never more destined to receive—what I venture to think it would have received had his life been spared—still further elaboration, and probably are cast of particular points and issues, from his persistent labour, his ever widening knowledge, and his maturer and mellowed judgment in this particular domain of theological science.

Dr. Hatch emphasises the contrast between Judaism and Hellenism by comparing the Sermon on the Mount with the Nicene Creed. That or some similar comparison has often been made, in order to present forcibly either the radical difference between Christianity at its birth and its perverted development in the fourth century, or the legitimate growth of dogma during the intervening ages. In either case, and whether for recognition or deprecation, the contrast is sufficiently striking. At the same time, we must admit that the comparison is not quite so simple as its easy definitive terms would imply. We may admit as a general truth that "the roots of the Gospel were in Judaism, but of fourth century Christianity in Hellenism," without ignoring the fact that the Judaism of the Gospels had already become permeated with Greek influences, that in its very cradle Christianity was indebted, humanly speaking, for much of its breadth and catholicity to the liberalisation of Judaism by foreign and especially Greek culture. For more than a century B.C., these cultural and cosmopolitan influences had diffused themselves first among the Judaism of the Diaspora and then more gradually among that of Palestine. As a result, it may be said that, if the roots of Christianity were Jewish, the soil and climate were largely Hellenic: in other words, if the initial inspiration of Christ's teaching came from Jewish sources, were sanctioned and sustained by Jewish aspirations, the seed-bed in which these germs were deposited was that Graecised Judaism which we have in the Apocryphal books of Ecclesiasticus, Wisdom, and the Maccabees, as well as in portions of the Gospels themselves. Even accepting as Jewish the root-thought, e.g., of the Sermon on the Mount, readers of Wetstein's New Testament, especially those who have compared his notes with Lightfoot (the Puritan divine), Schoetgen, &c., are quite aware that the parallel passages in Greek authors are just as numerous, and oftentimes more striking, than those culled from Jewish sources. This point has been so superabundantly elaborated in the two Hellenistic volumes of Havet's Christianisme et ses origines as not to need further reference here. While, therefore, I agree with Dr. Hatch that the Sermon on the Mount, in its original inspiration, was a product of Judaism, I do not think he has sufficiently considered how far the Judaism among which it emerged was already permeated by Hellenising influences. It was precisely this favourable regard of foreign culture and interests on the part of Christ that aroused the suspicion of the Pharisees, and contributed, among other causes, to His death.

This criticism may not essentially affect Dr. Hatch's main position, but that which I am about to offer seems to me to do so. I do not think Dr. Hatch has duly estimated how far the transformation of the starting-point of Christianity, together with its appeal to the spiritual instincts and conscience of mankind, to the dogmatic induration of the Nicene Creed, and its appeal to ecclesiastical authority, however deplorable, was, under the circumstances, inevitable. As to the chasm that separates the two formulae, I am quite at one with Dr. Hatch. Considered in its effect on the whole after history of the Christian Church, nothing could be more disastrous than the comprehension of all Christian truth in the form of a dogmatic creed made up of abstruse metaphysical propositions. It was the first step in the ruinous course that made orthodoxy the substitute of moral rectitude. Nothing that Dr. Hatch or anyone else could urge as to the mischievous character of the transformation would be at all commensurate with its demerits. At the same time, I am prepared to acknowledge that the wretched transmutation was inevitable. It is not only difficult, but impossible, to conceive how the Church could have made headway among the cultured circles of Rome and Alexandria without the metaphysical definitions and abstractions which, however useless in themselves and injurious to practical religion, had become current in Greek speculation. Now, I venture to think that Dr. Hatch has not sufficiently realised this inevitableness, nor the inherent and gradual growth of the transformation. For however much we, with the ecclesiastical history of eighteen centuries to warn us, deprecate the metaphysical dogmas of the Nicene Creed, we cannot deny that they subserved at first a distinct utility—they constituted a kind of scaffolding by means of which the spiritual fabric was raised; and if the scaffolding has been so elaborated by the craft and selfishness of its builders as to dwarf the building and arrogate to itself its uses, we must accept it as one of those perversions in human history which require centuries of increasing illumination to set right. Besides, we must not conceal from ourselves the fact that some theological metaphysics are inherent in the earliest claims of Christianity, nor that they formed a needed barrier against the crude religious notions of Palestinian Judaism. To take a single instance; it is clear that the Logos doctrine of St. John presented to the enlightened thinker a more acceptable blending of the Divine and Human—the foundation-truth of Christianity—than was furnished by other and more materialistic explanations.

I have adduced these qualifying criticisms of Dr. Hatch's Lectures as prima facie reflections which may probably occur to any thoughtful student of the work. While they place the problem to be solved in a new light, they do not materially detract from the value of the solution propounded by him, still less do they diminish the inestimable worth of its attendant exposition. The scope of the subject, its proposed treatment, and the style of the author, all receive such striking illustration from the last paragraph of the Introduction that I must find space for transcribing it (p. 23):—

"We may enter upon the study with confidence, because it is a scientific inquiry. We may hear, if we will, the solemn tramp of the science of history marching slowly but marching always to conquest. It is marching in our day, almost for the first time, into the domain of Christian history. Upon its flanks, as upon the flanks of the physical sciences, there are scouts and skirmishers who venture sometimes into morasses where there is no foothold, and into ravines from which there is no issue. But the science is marching on—Vestigia nulla retrorsum. It marches, as the physical sciences have marched, with the firm tread of certainty. It meets, as the physical sciences have met, with opposition, and even with contumely. In front of it, as in front of the physical sciences, is chaos: behind it is order. We may march in its progress, not only with the confidence of scientific certainty, but also with the confidence of Christian faith. It may show some things to be derived which we thought to be original; and some things to be compound which we thought incapable of analysis; and some things to be phantoms which we thought to be realities. But it will add a new chapter to Christian apologetics; it will confirm the divinity of Christianity by showing it to be in harmony with all else that we believe to be divine; its results will take their place among those truths which burn in the souls of men with a fire that cannot be quenched, and light up the darkness of this stormy sea with a light that is never dim."

On the march thus eloquently indicated I cannot profess to follow Dr. Hatch; indeed, my remarks have already run to such a length that I am compelled to cut short what remains unsaid in the way of imperative criticism.

Little but unqualified commendation can be given to the third and fourth Lectures on Greek and Christian Exegesis and Rhetoric. Dr. Hatch shows how the methods of interpretation and oratory long current among the Greeks were gradually introduced into Christianity, with effects on Christian ideas and usages persisting to our own day. He refers on the subject of allegorism to Origen's admission, that men's difficulties in Biblical exegesis arise from "their lack of the spiritual sense, without which he himself would have been a sceptic." The remark is capable of a wide field of illustration. Lord Beaconsfield said of one of his characters that "he committed suicide for lack of imagination"; and ecclesiastical history abounds with examples of thinkers who have escaped the diseases of extreme negation and disbelief by the antiseptic virtue of the spiritual sense or devout imagination. Schleiermacher was a well-known case in point. He confessed that, but for the profound mystic devotion derived from his association with the Moravian Herrnhüter, he would have been a disbeliever.

In his fifth lecture Dr. Hatch classifies and discusses the dogmatizing tendencies which Christianity derived from Hellenism. The first of these was the tendency to define.

"The earliest Christians had been content to believe in God, and to worship Him, without endeavouring to define precisely the conception of Him which lay beneath their faith and worship."

The second was the tendency to speculate, i.e., to draw inferences from definitions, and to weave the inferences into systems:

"The earliest Christians had but little conception of a system . . . their beliefs reflected the variety of the world, and of men's thoughts about the world."

The third stage was the actual formulation of dogma.

"The holding of approved opinions was elevated to a position at first co-ordinate with, and at last superior to, trust in God and the effort to lead a holy life."

We come here to the very pith of the subject, and it would not be easy to better Dr. Hatch's exposition. But it seems to me open to the objection I have already indicated, i.e., it fails to take into account the actual circumstances. The question has still to be answered—Would the Church have become consolidated without those tendencies to definition and speculation? We may deprecate and lament a tendency without wishing to deny that it is inevitable and even from some points of view useful.

In an erudite and elaborate argument like this of Dr. Hatch's, it is clearly impossible to note all the particulars which deserve the reader's attention; but I must not omit to call attention to the tenth Lecture on the influence of the Greek Mysteries upon Christian usages. Few among the ritualistic worshippers in our churches are probably aware how many elements in the elaborate ceremonial in which they delight, and in the doctrines which they profess to regard as equally important and infallible, are derived from Pagan cults and mysteries, and form no part of the teaching of Christ. The following quotation bears so directly upon the usages and controversies of the Church of our day that I must find room for it (p. 309):

"In the splendid ceremonial of Eastern and Western worship, in the blaze of lights, in the separation of the central point of the rite from common view, in the procession of torch-bearers chanting their sacred hymns—there is the survival, and in some cases the galvanised survival, of what I cannot find it in my heart to call a pagan ceremonial, because, though it was the expression of a less enlightened faith, yet it was offered to God from a heart that was not less earnest in its search for God and in its effort after holiness than our own."

The conclusion of Dr. Hatch from his subject is, if not wholly practical, at least aspirational. Hellenism, with its dogmatic spirit and tendencies, is a damnum hereditas of Christianity. With most of the elements of thought and usage derived from Greece the Christianity of our own time can well afford to dispense. On this point I need hardly say I am quite at one with the eloquent lecturer. Whatever might be the causes in its original promulgation that rendered the assimilation of Hellenism with Christianity expedient, if not essential, they have now ceased to exist. Indeed, there seem to me very distinct intimations in the signs of the times that the spirit of Hellenism is being gradually exorcised from Christianity. There is a growing disbelief in the supreme importance of dogma, an increasing persuasion that religion must mean more than a passive acceptance of abstruse metaphysical definitions and conclusions. Indeed, the current eagerness of churches and sects to precipitate themselves into every project of social amelioration or practical utility indicates a growing discontent with the dogmatic theorizing which formerly constituted their sole energy. The change must, from every point of view, be cordially welcomed. Whatever the utility of Hellenism in the past in the work of building up and consolidating the Church, it is now no longer needed. The Christian Church, though its growth is not complete, is at least able to stand alone. It does not need the scaffolding which it was compelled to use in the first centuries of its growth, and which, besides being unsightly and dilapidated, is now an actual hindrance to the further progress and completion of the spiritual building.

JOHN OWEN.

Aeschylus: The Seven Plays in English Verse. By Lewis Campbell. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is pleasant to learn that, in publishing this complete translation of Aeschylus, Prof. Campbell has been "encouraged by the kind reception which, on the whole, has been accorded to Sophocles in English Verse."

No one has traced the difference between Aeschylus and Sophocles more delicately than Prof. Campbell in the "Prefatory Note" prefixed to his version of the latter poet. He sees their unlikeness, if any man does, adequately; if, as I incline to think, he does not in his translation adequately show their unlikeness, he fails honourably where success is practically out of reach. He is probably one of the two best living Sophoclean scholars in England; how far his equals or superiors may be found on the Continent, I cannot say. Furthermore, his language, in both translations, is the language of poetry: that is to say, it is not pedantic, nor affected; it is not stiff—a defect which the Dean of Wells, e. g., never quite throws off; it is always lucid and intelligible, and seldom prosy. This last is "the last infirmity of noble" translators, who rightly seek after literal renderings: to have avoided it is no small praise. Yet I think that an intelligent reader, who was ignorant of the original poems and read these translations to form an idea of Aeschylus and Sophocles respectively, would conclude that they were much more alike than they really are. To put the matter briefly, I think Prof. Campbell unconsciously approximates the style of Aeschylus to that of Sophocles, to the latter of whom, as we all know, he has dedicated such abundant labour.

The ordinary view, that Aeschylus is grand, profound, and sonorous, and that Sophocles is subtle and fine, has positive rather than negative truth in it: that is to say, it needs to be supplemented with the reminder that Aeschylus is subtle too, and Sophocles grand. If the close of the "Prometheus" is grand, so is the mysterious end of Oedipus: if the "Oedipus Tyrannus" is a masterpiece of subtlety, so is the "Agamemnon." But there is a difference, partly in their styles, partly in the quality of their respective visions, which any one can recognise in reading the originals, but which nothing but absolute poetic genius could reproduce in translation. If only, one feels inclined to say, Marlowe had rendered this, and Milton that—if Shelley had not limited himself to the "Cyclops"—if Goethe and Schiller had collaborated over certain parts of Sophocles—if Victor Hugo had fairly sat down to the "Prometheus"—nay, if, even yet, Mr. Swinburne would give us the "Persae," we might have these things adequately, though in a modern dress. But there is much disappointment, as well as much virtue, in an if.

Apart from "counsels of perfection," one may compare Prof. Campbell with himself, and see how far he differentiates the two poets in point of style. Let us take, for instance, two opening scenes of widely different character, that of the "Prometheus," and that of the "Oedipus at Colonus"; and let Aeschylus have precedence, as chronology commands:

"Power. We are come to far Earth's limit—to a land
Where no foot, save of Scythian, moves—a waste
Without inhabitant. Fire-god! 'tis thine
To execute the mandate of our sire
And yoke this felon to yon beetling crag,
Pinned fast in adamantine bonds. Thy pride,
Fire—sovereign secret of all arts—he stole
And lavished on frail mortals. Such the sin
Whereof he must receive Heaven's recompense,
That he may learn to accept the almighty sway
Of Zeus, and cease befriending human kind."

Then let Sophocles speak in his turn:

"Oedipus. Antigone, child of the old blind sire,
What land is here, what people? Who to-day
Shall dole to Oedipus, the wandering exile,
Their meagre gifts? Little I ask, and less
Receive without a murmur, since my woes,
And the long years ripening the noble mind,
Have schooled me to content. But, O! my child,
If thou espiest where we may sit, though near
Some holy precinct, stay me and set me there,
Till we may learn where we are come. 'Tis ours
To hear the will of strangers, and to obey."

These are not presented as select specimens of the translator's skill. On the contrary, they are average passages, nothing more; but they may perhaps serve as illustrations of something which I seem to find all through this version of Aeschylus—a too Sophoclean touch. A style which charms us in a rendering of Sophocles leaves something to be desired when it presents Aeschylus in the same cadences, without his vehemence, and weight, and mixture of concise expression with fervid and sonorous style.

If, however, the version leans, as a whole, too much to the style of Sophocles, I am far from saying that it does so everywhere in an equal degree. In this point, the rendering of the "Persae" is greatly superior to that of the other plays. An illustration will, I am sure, be welcome to readers of the ACADEMY. It is from the opening chorus, and describes the high hope with which the armament of Xerxes passed over to Europe—(pp. 52-3).

"Over the firth and away
To the opposite neighbouring shore
That conquering host and their leader have passed
In royal array,
On the deep by the daughter of Athamas once ferried o'er;
He hath bridged the sea-ways with a close-framed flax-bound floor,
And the neck of the prancing brine hath felt his yoke.
For the monarch his mandate spoke,
And innumerable Asia's lord
Drives over the face of the wondering world his divinest flock,
Over lands and seas in their ordered myriads poured
By the aid of his war-proof leaders, who ne'er broke word,
But obey their awful sovereign, of race divine.
With arms unnumbered, and ships in an endless line,
With the basilisk's murdering glance in his fierce dark eyes,
Pursuing the furious course of his Syrian car,
He brings on the spear-famed folk overwhelming war,
And the shaft-shower's fell surprise.

"By a god crewhile on the Persian this task was sent,
In stress of the battle with uttermost hardiment,
To destroy fenced cities, and jostle with chariots, and carry away
Whole nations captive at once in the joy of the fray.
And they know, while the fierce winds rave on the whitening deep,
To look on the forest of billows, and steadily sweep
O'er the wide sea-paths, as they trust to the whistling cordage small
And the man-bearing slender strength of the timber-wall."

There is a limp, here and there, in these lines; but, on the whole, they are strongly inspired with the spirit and the form of the original passage, over which, with all its exultation and pride, there broods a dim forecast of the disaster which Juvenal records in his splendid sharp-cut line—

"Ille tamen qualis rediit, Salamine relicta?"

Neither is this an incidental success in the translation of the "Persae," the whole of which is admirably done. It is, perhaps, of all Aeschylus's plays the one least like Sophocles; and hence perhaps Prof. Campbell was, unconsciously, writing with a freer hand.

I gather from the translation as a whole that Prof. Campbell regards rhyme as practically essential for rendering regular choric odes, though he employs blank verse at times in "commatic" passages (see advertisement, p. ix.); and that he preserves strophic and antistrophic effect in general, but without exact or pedantic precision. It seems to me probable that the difference which an English reader feels between rhymed and unrhymed poetry is the nearest approach to the difference between chorus and dialogue, as felt by a scholar, that is readily attainable by a translator. It is an inadequate approach, of course; it gives too often the swing of the ode without the balance of the thought. The worst of it is, that short rhyming lines in English rarely sound solemn enough to reproduce the Greek measures. Here, for instance, is Prof. Campbell's rendering of a famous passage ("Agamemnon," 432-444) where the urns and ashes of the warriors return to their loving homes:

"From Grecian lands together forth they went,
Each by their loved ones sent,
And now the soul of friends is sore
To think whom they shall see no more.
Whom they sent forth they know,
But to their bitter woe,
No well-loved form, but urns of crumbling earth
Return to each man's natal hearth.
Ares, grim usurer of blood and breath,
That swings his balance o'er the field of death,
Sends back from Ilium to their friends
(For warriors' loss no just amends)
Their ashes blackened by the funeral fire,—
Poor dust! so heavy not with gold but grief,
Affording to the dumb desire
Of tears but scant relief."

There are pretty touches here; but, on the whole, even Prof. Campbell is baffled in the attempt to combine brevity and simplicity with pathos and solemnity, as Aeschylus does without an effort. The translation is pretty without being grand, delicate without being quite dignified—magnis tamen excidit ausis.

One or two minor points may be raised, not so much to give an opinion as to call attention to Prof. Campbell's views. In "Agamemnon," 916-7, ἑνασίμους Αἰεὶν, παρ' ἄλλων χρὴ τόδ' ἔρχεσθαι γέρας, he renders,

"Yet praise that rightly squares with my desert Must come to me from others."

If it must be, it must; but it appears to me that, by this interpretation, a cold and well-deserved rebuke to Clytemnestra for her self-praise becomes a flat and unreasonable dogma that a man's wife should not praise him. The farewell of Cassandra (ll. 1321-30, pp. 188-9) is cut in two by the translator, who gives the famous ὡ βρότεια πράγματ', κ.τ.λ. to the chorus. The objection that I should respectfully raise to this may be mere conservatism; but is it not on the whole more likely that the chorus in the following verses are echoing in their own way Cassandra's last words, than that they should say the same thing twice over, first in iambs and then in anapaests?

A little metrical trick or plan is observable throughout the book. Prof. Campbell seems to make "drink-offering" "thank-offering," &c., scan as simple cretics, e.g., on p. 178:

"Rich thank-offerings for mercies long despaired."

It seems difficult to make this satisfactorily metrical; its recurrence, however, makes one think it intentional, and therefore probably defensible.

I have endeavoured to indicate where the most general fault, apart from little details, may be found with this version of Aeschylus. But beyond question it is a beautiful and scholarly piece of work, an excellent attempt at the impossible. What a πικρὸν ὄπρις, what a flickering marsh-fire, is the ideal goal of translators! The thing cannot be done; and yet, "qui a bu, boira; the feet are drawn back to the ancient ways."

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

London Letters and Some Others. By G. W. Smalley. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

MR. SMALLEY has been so long with us that we hardly recollect he is an American. We are rather disposed to look upon him as an Englishman with American connexions. If his purpose in residing among us had been to represent American politics or government, to expound the constitution of the United States, he might have been known for what he is. But quite otherwise, he has not dwelt here for our advantage unless we benefit by these volumes. His purpose has been to know everybody, to go everywhere, to hear everything, to see all great scenes and functions, and to transmit the result of his observations to the New York Tribune, whose London correspondent he has been for more perhaps than twenty years.

Few Englishmen, and probably no American, can have had equal opportunities for such observation. It makes all the difference, too, in print, whether the observer is skilful and qualified, and also whether the occupation is a pastime or a business. It has been Mr. Smalley's daily work, and any competent reader of these capacious volumes will recognise in the author a critic of very excellent capacity. We took up the book with the feeling that such re-service of that which has been given as the daily food of newspaper readers in current months and years is rarely valuable; we are quite prepared, however, to make an exception in the case of these letters, and to accept them with cordial appreciation as a useful and interesting contribution to the literature of our time. More than that, these letters, dealing with persons and scenes of whom and of which we also have seen and known something, leave upon our judgment so high a mark of Mr. Smalley's qualifications that we incline to think he has obscured the value of his collected work by a title needlessly ephemeral as to the best part of it, and that his volumes may be found to have some permanent value—if only for true and shrewd and clear-sighted illustrations by the way of personal and picturesque details. These "London Letters" are the more acceptable because the Tribune is not widely read in England. But everyone, however ignorant of the press of New York, will recognise that only a journal great in every good way will desire such correspondence; and in this republication for English readers Mr. Smalley has indeed rendered indirect service to the society of America by showing that the sort of representation of English life they prefer is such as our sentiments of international pride and of kinship would on the whole lead us to wish they should receive. We have seen these volumes referred to as "new journalism." They are better than that in not a few of its manifestations; they are some of the best journalism.

Bismarck is the first subject of Mr. Smalley's "personalities," which are as to completeness rather than as to literary merit very unequal. That is probably a fault of necessity. The journalist does not always choose his topics. They come to him by occurrence and opportunity. So it happens that some of Mr. Smalley's sketches are very inadequate and superficial. But we have met with none devoid of insight, though in several cases circumstances have greatly altered the perspective. To Mr. Smalley, Bismarck quitting the Reichstag after reading a message from the Emperor Frederick, suggests the following; to us the words may be suggestive of a more recent and signal departure:—

"The door opens, as a door opens on the stage, wide before him, with invisible hands. He fills it as he passes through; the broad shoulders, the towering form, the kingly head of this king of men, are set in a frame for one instant, then vanish. He has done what he came to do, done it in that rapid, workmanlike, decisive way of his, with energy, with authority; done it, though no great matter, once for all, and with the dignity befitting the occasion."

Possibly it needs some acquaintance with leading statesmen to have formed the true opinion that "there can be, perhaps, no very able man in public life deficient in that power [which Mr. Smalley attributes to Count Herbert Bismarck] of entire concentration of thought." Mr. Smalley thinks Gambetta's speech on a motion for a committee of inquiry into the acts of the government of the Duc de Broglie "the greatest single effort of oratory" he has ever heard.

"The head was thrown back, the blood ran freely through the arteries which feed the brain, the long black hair fell low, the single eye glowed and flamed. If ever there was a born orator, a man with authority and sympathy, here he was. . . . Then came the sentence I referred to above as Gambetta's own account of himself: 'Je suis un homme de mon temps, vous n'êtes pas un homme de votre temps.' His oratory answered exactly and fully to that maxim of the great orator of Greece who demanded first, second, and third, as the condition of successful speaking—energy."

There is, however, a defect, but it is too obvious to be harmful, in Mr. Smalley's correspondence. With austere ostentation he reminds us now and then, at rare intervals, that he is a citizen of a Republic; but all the while the fact is much in evidence that he is the medium, the translator, of the "upper circles" of England to their correlatives in America. Perhaps he is a better appraiser of art, of literature, of all that is meant by culture, of high life, and of fashion, than of the English people. It was not from them he learnt that this is "a country where the word principle is unpopular in politics." It was from the upper ten thousand he caught the unworthy sneer at the enthusiasm of Fawcett for the employment of women. Mr. Smalley can be spiteful.

"He flooded the offices, telegraph offices included, with women, with the result that the telegraph service of England is talkative and inaccurate. . . . The female mind may, by-and-by, be educated into habits of precision, but the education is carried on at the expense of the service and of the public."

These letters, however, are plainly not concerned with the life of the masses. The readers of the Tribune look to London rather for tidings of the great and of the grand and gorgeous, and they have been served accordingly—and very well served. Mr. Smalley was, of course, on the side of Mr. Forster, of whom he says:—

"He was accused of imprisoning 900 suspects, and keeping them in prison without trial. Whoever else may accuse him, accusation would come with a poor grace from us in America, who during the war locked up nearly 40,000 men on suspicion of disloyalty, and seldom thought of trying them."

Mr. Smalley knew Bright well, and could have treated of the man and his great career more amply had he chosen. His remarks by way of portraiture are generally vivid with accuracy. Sometimes they touch matter so trifling as an article of dress. "It was his habit to wear a black velvet waistcoat long after other people had ceased to wear them." Mr. Smalley caught the note of Bright's distinction:

"In every speech, as in the whole life of this carpet-weaver of Rochdale, there is the note of distinction. He stands apart. He breathes the upper air. No man is more remote from the sordid and common, more hostile to the vulgarity of thought amid which he passed his life."

To the end and towards the close, Mr. Smalley had no breach of political sympathy with Bright. When Bright smote so many of his own familiar friends, hip and thigh, in the election of 1886, he was cheered in the Tribune; and when, in the final year of his life, nervous and disconsolate, Bright, though much in London, never entered the House of Commons, he had the same support. Had Bright's view of the Irish question been different, is it not possible that the most excellent rebuke which Mr. Smalley administered to the Senate of the United States would not have been needed? He was moved to anger because no official word of sorrow came from Washington.

"Precedent? It would be the time to talk of precedent when another rebellion had put the Union in peril, and another John Bright had pleaded the American cause. Government? We owe it in some measure to Bright that we have still a government. The Senate? Let us speak of the Senate with respect, and impute no motives. The motives of these gentlemen matter chiefly to their own consciences. But it is to be said plainly that their act brings upon their country the reproach of such ingratitude to one of its benefactors as the best motive cannot excuse. The Irish! I say it is to the everlasting honour of the Irish race that their chosen orator in the British Parliament claimed the right to lay an Irish wreath on the grave of this great Englishman. Why should Americans have been willing to claim less? . . . The time will come when Americans will lament the cold silence of those who might have spoken for them, and that blank page in the records of the Senate will be thought the least honourable in all its history."

Mr. Smalley shows that, with the time and scope which are denied to journalism, he could do great things in political portraiture. His suggestion of "a more interesting personage than Lord Carnarvon the minister, and that was Lord Carnarvon himself," is followed by a very slight but life-like sketch of one who "had, for all those who knew him, the irresistible attractiveness which is felt only under the influence of a beautiful nature." Of Lord Randolph Churchill the author gives a confident opinion and prediction.

"Here is the one man among the English Tories who has shown capacity for leadership in something more than a party sense. . . . The day will come when the Tory Ministry will again be in difficulties, and must again appeal to the country. Then, if not before, they will bethink themselves of the discarded colleague who has the ear of the country."

Mr. Smalley gives good examples of Lord Randolph's audacious speaking. "The forest laments in order that Mr. Gladstone may perspire," is his way of alluding to the statesman's favourite exercise. Of Mr. Chamberlain, his personalities differ greatly with circumstances. In 1885 Mr. Chamberlain is one to whom "a law is only something to be repealed," "a man whose range of acquired knowledge of what had been done in the world before he was born into it is not in proportion to the energy of his natural abilities." But when Mr. Chamberlain became Lord Salisbury's emissary to Washington, Mr. Smalley had discovered that which is quite true, that "there is no better debater—no man in England who surpasses him in the power of effective speaking."

Several of the later "personalities" are so thin and shadowy as to be hardly worth reproduction. Yet they are never without some merit or interest; and not one, to say the least, fails to display the skill of the writer in dealing with material probably at very short notice. The second volume is made up with Letters on Social Life, never, by the way, descending very much below the peerage; on Parliament, full of incidents extremely well narrated, and with accuracy enough to make them valuable in times far removed from that of their occurrence; on Pageants, generally including appearances of royalty, a picture gallery of great English scenes well filled with the prominent figures of our day. The conclusion is a bundle of some twenty "Miscellanies," of which perhaps the best conveyed to the American people a true and valuable record of the English sympathy and sorrow which attended the mortal wounding and the death-bed of President Garfield.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

Round the Calendar in Portugal. By Oswald Crawford. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. OSWALD CRAWFORD is, par excellence, "the man who knows" about Portugal, and who has told us all we know of the country in which he has lived for twenty years. Many sides of the subject have been made attractive in his former works by his graphic, lucid, and elegant style; but the aspect of Portuguese life revealed by the present volume has a charm which surpasses them all. "I desire," says the author in his Introduction, "to treat chiefly of rural matters, of the ways of rural folk, and of the fields, the woods, the rivers, and the roadsides. . . I, therefore, beg the reader to allow me to be discursive." Mr. Crawford's reviewer is impelled to make a similar request, for one seldom has a chance of so revelling in a book as in this delightful one, which treats him to a year's tour in Arcadia.

Far out of hearing of the ominous cracking and splitting of the political system, and the fuss and fury of the African question, we tread the round of the seasons—from March, "when the shrill, thrice-repeated call of the wryneck gives audible sign and token that winter has departed," to February, when country life is least attractive, even in that corner of the continent which is "unique in Europe." And then the author gives us a glimpse of Oporto, as characteristic and convincing as Mr. Napier Hemy's remarkable picture in the Grosvenor last summer. First, we have to get well into our mind the only strip of land in the latitude of mild winters which is protected east and north by lofty mountains, well supplied by stream and river, and within the full influence of the Gulf Stream; and next the facts that in this favoured nook the east wind is not depressing and exasperating, but dry and bracing, and that if one goes into the night air while that wind is blowing "one's lungs are filled with long, delicious draughts of pine-scented air, aromatic, wholesome, invigorating." Is it any wonder that we linger over the author's description of climate, and landscape, and out-of-door life as hungry children linger at the windows of a cake shop? Here is one of his pictures:

"In this highland country, full of springs and water-rivulets, the hill-tops are covered with woods of pine and chestnut, the waste land is overgrown with furze and white and yellow broom and flowering cistus, and the narrow valley sides are terraced everywhere into tiny meadows, each one bordered with vines borne on espaliers of wood, and each meadow is green throughout the winter with grass or clover, and in summer rich with waving crops of maize. The farmers themselves are the owners of the land they till and of the houses they dwell in, and there are signs of their ownership in the richness and comfort of their surroundings. Near each house is a krait-yard, and generally orange and lemon trees grow hard by. Often there is a garden-patch gay with old-fashioned country flowers in due seasons. Very often there is a camellia tree or two, as large as apple trees with us at home, covered in very early spring with white or red blossoms. . . . There never fails to be the broad flat expanse of trellised vines, covering arbour-wise a perch or two of ground, the vine-bearing wood-work supported on tall stone pillars. Beneath the shade of the vine-branches the ground is trodden flat and firm by the naked feet of men and women, for here is the peasant's drawing-room. Here, to the tinkling of their mandolins, they dance their rustic rounds and chant their strange old-world songs and madrigals."

This is by no means the most striking passage in the book, but it is that one which we carry in our minds all through, and the figures fit themselves into it. Harmonious with it are the author's delightful pictures of that golden land whose every bank and corner are gay with wild flowers and its coppices alive with the songs of birds, and "where there is an incredible wealth and force and luxuriance of life." Harmonious with it, too, is his portrayal of the people, and their ways—of their peaceful, happy, industrious, self-respecting existence, undegraded by the inhuman toil and hopeless penury that must spoil, by the mere fact of their existence, the fairest scene that nature can show. The peasants of Northern Portugal are a grand race. "These are the Portuguese I have read of in history," said a distinguished diplomatist who had passed some years in Lisbon—"another race of men altogether [than the Southerners]." "In their veins runs," says Mr. Crawford, "the blood of the dominant Northern race who invaded the country in very early days. Their looks and their stature proclaim it, and their manly character and the splendid record of their achievements prove it."

There are pages of this book which are not to be read without emotion, not only for their sheer beauty, but because of the longing they inspire to see some such lives of the poor, with the grace of music and dancing (the proud and pure dancing of these people), of simple enjoyment and laughter, of light-hearted content in them. In the Minho province the happy pastoral life of to-day is still such as Theocritus sang, where the rules and methods of tillage are the same as the ancients followed, where "every mistake and shortcoming is apparent that a modern enlightened farmer would smile at: the unimproved plough, made of a crooked tree branch; the unimproved cows, that give but a fifth of the milk of an Alderney; the grass blades slowly and painfully reaped by a toy reaping-hook and carried on the heads of men and women."

The life of men and animals is so happy that one cannot read of it without a choke. "It is all too utterly stupid and old-world," says the author, "and yet every one is thriving and content. The little houses are snug and warm, the cattle sleek under their masters' kindly eyes."

"The tiny granaries are full to overflowing, the men on Sundays and feast days well dressed, well fed, and light hearted, the women comely and gay in their coloured bodices and bright silk kerchiefs, and their necks covered with a sensible weight of old-fashioned gold jewellery. The valleys are ringing with the joyous antiphons of youths and girls, that speak as plainly of their content with life and of their hopefulness as the spring song of the birds tells of theirs."

Well may the writer who has lived among these people, and who knows them and their industries better than any other foreigner knows them—as his exhaustive story of the wine-growing shows—deprecate the application of the logic of political economy to them. He does not assert that a golden age ever existed anywhere out of a poet's imagination, far less that it exists to-day in rural Portugal; but he does say that, after travelling over most of the countries of Europe, he has found nowhere a pastoral life so like what the poets have fabled in their legends of early man. It is no wonder that he dwells upon the contrast which our own country presents.

To understand the old classical enthusiasm for the month of May, one must live in rural Portugal throughout its long sunny lapse, for there and then are the pastoral poets of Greece and Rome justified, and May deserves everything that ever was sung in its praise. The life of the peasant farmer and the fisherman is at its best, the face of nature at its fairest, and the peculiar customs of the people most evident, from their religious pilgrimages or "Romanias" which draw their tens of thousands to the Holy Places, to their dances (Mr. Crawford gives a charming description of these serious rhythmical performances) to the curious game played with earthenware jars, which is apparently unknown out of Portugal. The threshing-floor is the peasant's ballroom.

"In the long May gloamings," says the author, "a young man with his mandolin will take his way, strumming careless chords and snatches of those strange airs in the minor key which the Portuguese call Fados, and which are of lineal descent from music of old Moorish times. As he passes along, the girls and lads stop their labour to accompany him; lovers will suspend their love-making to follow too, or continue their courting to the rhythmic tinkling of the mandolin. When the music and its following reaches the dancing place and the partners are all arranged in a circle, the dance will begin with the strangest, slowest, most old-fashioned steps, the like whereof has not been danced under a civilised roof for centuries. The musicians, or the three or four of them whose mandolins make the orchestra, dance in the round with the others, and when the time in the dancing arrives turn and set to their partners like the other dancers."

To June belong the legends and the strange, sometimes beautiful, superstitions of these delightful people. This is a fascinating chapter, and ought to be dear to all poets and lovers of romance were it only for the rhyme of the Rosemary and that which tells of what was done:—

"All for the flower of the Linolar."

Of this latter the author says:

"Of its species and genus I can tell nothing, nor have I cared to inquire of the learned; for I believe it grows in regions where they have never botanised—namely, these where elfin steps have passed and the horns of elf-land been heard to blow."

Animal life in Portugal is delightful to read of, for there the good creatures of God are the friends as well as the servants of man, and cruelty is an almost unknown and utterly condemned vice. There are books of travel which one is obliged to read, but opens with a prophetic shudder; this record of rural Portugal is a consolation and a reward for many such tasks. Then there is a bird chapter—it marks September—which is full of interest, information, and picturesqueness; and the same qualities mark the portion of his work that the author devotes to the woodlands, the plants, the gardens, and the wine districts of the Iberian Arcady. He tells us curious things about Portuguese art, in pottery especially, and in wood carving, the truly marvellous ox-yokes on which infinite pains are lavished being striking samples of the latter.

It is a little trying to read of November as they know it in Portugal, where "no weather is so perfect through all the year as this second summer time, when, for its first two weeks, the birds of passage bound southward linger in the fields and copses as if aware that no more genial climate awaits them in all the tropic lands." At this time of year at happy village-gatherings the grand old songs that have died out of other countries may be heard in Northern Portugal, and especially the noble ballad of "Donna Guimar, The Maiden who went to the Wars," which, as our author says, "brings back the gone-away time of gallant deeds and noble endurance, and has power to stir us yet." It has such a power in his version also, although he calls the latter only a line-by-line rendering of it into English, without the rhyme, and with only a faint echo of the rhythm of the original.

Of the workmanship of the book it is hardly necessary to speak. It is long since Mr. Crawford took his high place among the most refined and cultured writers of our time. If all his readers appreciate the quality of his style, the fineness of his humour, and the sustained interest with which he invests his subject, so highly as his reviewers must needs appreciate them, that place will be made even more secure by Round the Calendar in Portugal.

F. CASHEL HOEY.

NEW NOVELS.

Alas! By Rhoda Broughton. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The Honourable Miss. By L. T. Meade. In 2 vols. (Methuen.)

Sundorne. By Bertha Thomas. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Sign of Four. By A. Conan Doyle. (Spencer Blackett.)

Fickle Phyllis. Edited by Gwen D'Esterre. (Ward & Downey.)

Miss Blake of Monkshilton. By Isabella O. Ford. (John Murray.)

Mademoiselle. By Frances Mary Peard. (Walter Smith & Innes.)

Mademoiselle Ire. By Lanoe Falconer. (Fisher Unwin.)

Kilgroom. By John A. Steuart. (Sampson Low.)

SUCCESS is an inconstant thing, and it must be owned that for once it has forsaken the brilliant pen of Miss Rhoda Broughton. There is something ominous in the very name of Alas! and the omen points rather to the deficient merits of the story than to the vicissitudes of the characters. One scarcely knows whether to assign the place of heroine to Amelia Wilson or to Elizabeth Le Marchant, but neither of them will much fascinate the reader, while as to the two men who may be almost regarded as rival heroes practically nothing can be said to their credit. As the story is constructed, everything at first turns upon the fortunes of Amelia. It was a piece of cruelty, however, to bring that young woman into the story at all. When we first hear of her, Jim Burgoyne had been engaged to her for eight years. During that long period he seems to have more or less neglected her, and she to have borne the neglect with the patience and meekness of one who has not the courage to complain. Why, where, or how Burgoyne fell in love with Amelia we are not told; but when they appear upon the scene he is trying with a very ill grace to pay her the attentions which are due from him, and she is nervously anxious to keep what little apology for affection he gives her. Presently the fascinations of Elizabeth turn his head, and add to the already sorrowful burdens of Amelia's lot. A drudge for the members of her own family, the uncomplaining victim of Burgoyne's selfish procrastinations—poor, plain, unattractive, but faithful to humbleness—she at last dies, and one feels that she ought never to have lived. There is a romance—a mystery—about Elizabeth, whom Burgoyne had known as a child. He is distasteful to her, because he reminds her of something in her youthful past which the reader conceives to be of a very tragic or dreadful nature. But she impresses him as poor Amelia had failed to do, and if he were not pledged to Amelia he would be wooing Elizabeth. His friend Byng does that, with a boyish precipitancy, but he is deterred from marrying the little witch by the revelation of her mystery. This turns out to be a perfectly harmless escapade, totally insufficient to account for Byng's sorrowful relinquishment of her—he is revealed to us banging his head on the table and the floor, and reducing Elizabeth's note to a piece of pulp with his tears—and equally inadequate for the purpose it is made to serve in the story. Byng's retirement and Amelia's death lead up to the result foreshadowed from the beginning, but it is attained by means which are felt to be feeble and unfitting. There are, of course, some good points in the tale. The contrast between Amelia and Elizabeth—the former with her tepid, undemonstrative, but unchanging affection, and the latter flitting with unconcern from lover to lover—is well shown. Byng and Burgoyne make another contrast, but an uninteresting one. That word, indeed, expresses the character of the novel. A reader must be very imaginative or very ardent who can get up an enthusiasm for any of these people, or for their surroundings.

In spite of its meaningless title, The Honourable Miss is a good story. Its chief merit consists in its more trivial details. Novelists do not often condescend to small things. They borrow most of their society from fashionable life, while few of their incidents are such as happen every day. In Miss Meade's story the people, with one or two exceptions, are the plain folk of the old-fashioned town she describes. Each of them knows the affairs of all the others, and a good part of the two volumes consists of the not ill-natured scandal they talk over their tea-tables. This ought, no doubt, to be very uninteresting, but it is not. On the contrary, the reader finds Mrs. Butler, Miss Peters, Mrs. Bell, and the other gossiping dames so real that he enters with zest into their petty jealousies, and is disposed to argue with one and agree with another just as they do among themselves. The little community is aggrieved because a newcomer at the manor house gives herself airs, and will not mix with the townspeople. When Mrs. Bertram calls on Mrs. Meadowsweet the interest of all the other dames takes the form of curiosity. They are not jealous of Mrs. Meadowsweet, because she is a general favourite, for her own sake and her daughter's; but they flock down upon her to learn all they can about the fine lady at the Manor. It turns out that Mrs. Bertram has a secret, which she wishes to keep. She has a son, too, through whose tendency to fall in love the discovery of the secret is precipitated. Into these critical parts of the plot we must not enter. It is enough to say that the story is well worth reading for its bright, simple, and perfectly natural presentations of character.

In a theatrical romance one scarcely expects to find any resemblances to real life. There are very few in Sundorne, which is theatrical in every sense. The objectionable person whose name is also the name of the story wrote plays in the full belief that he was a genius. It does sometimes happen that the fortunes of the dramatist are made by the actor, and those of Sundorne were clearly the work of the actor Carroll. Carroll and his wife Marcia are two of the best portraits in the book. He is sensitive, excitable, irritable; but her calm and intelligent support gives his mind the necessary balance, and with her help he has gained the highest place in his profession. Their domestic and social relations are all of the pleasantest kind, which is again due to the admirable qualities of Marcia, who impresses the reader as a model wife and mother and a noble woman. All this is changed by the insufferable playwright Sundorne. With the prerogative of genius, he makes love to Marcia; and for no conceivable reason, except that she too recognises the paramount claims of genius, she goes to live with him, and forsakes her husband, home, and children. Guilty alliances in real life are scarcely brought about in this way, and why this particular example of false and vicious relations should be made the subject of a story one cannot imagine. Sundorne's self-conceit will tire and disgust the reader, who cannot but be impatient of the docility with which Marcia does his bidding and anticipates his wishes. From having been a woman of great strength of mind and high character, she makes herself, in her absurd affection for him, a nonentity and a slave. There is nothing in the book to atone for its nauseating plot. Even the English is questionable; the conversations are stilted; some of the scenes are positively vulgar. And though one or two of the secondary characters are fairly true to life, they are only interesting because they try to alleviate the misery which has been so wantonly brought about.

Detective stories always have a certain charm, and perhaps the charm is greatest when the detective element is non-professional. The accomplished amateur in the fine art of discovering crime and hunting down the criminal is a much more wonderful personage than the official detective. At any rate, Sherlock Holmes, in The Sign of Four, was such a personage. The curious incidents, the mystery of which he unravels, make a capital story, which is told with a directness that keeps the reader's attention fixed till he gets to the sequel. After the sequel, as part of the story, follows the narrative of the man who has been hunted down; and though this is interesting in itself, and has a bearing upon the plot, it is somewhat flat after a breathless chase which has been breathlessly described. It has the effect of an anti-climax. Sherlock Holmes is the best-drawn of the characters, perhaps because there was most character in him to draw. The young lady is rather insipid, but she had not much to say or to do. The man with a wooden leg, who was nearly a match for Holmes, is also nearest to him in point of vivid portraiture.

The cleverness of Fickle Phyllis is not to be denied, but is greatly to be regretted. If such books are to be written, one could wish that the false attractions of the vice they depict were not aided by the charm of a brilliant literary style. Phyllis describes her own career, which is one of unscrupulous and shameless depravity. It may be urged, perhaps, for such books that they serve the purpose of a foil to virtue; but virtue needs no such foil. There are to be found here and there in these pages a few smart and wholesome reflections on the unwholesome life they describe, but one does not care to pick pearls out of such mire.

Miss Blake of Monkshilton is a story of quite another kind. It carries us back to the days of our grandfathers, when stern discipline and unbending demeanour were insisted upon in the family life. Miss Blake, who is somewhat ancient, upholds the rigid traditions of her early days. Her younger sister, Emma, is of a milder type, and sympathises with the still younger Anne, the niece of the sisters, who has the longings and interests of a simple girl of to-day. It is interesting to study these three dissimilar elements in contact with each other. Aunt Emma in every way occupies the middle place; but while she yields on the one hand to the buoyant spirits of the girl, she is overborne on the other by the uncompromising firmness of Aunt Jane. It is needless to say that youth has its way in the end. The daily life of the three is well told. The story is a pleasant peep into a remote if not very distant past, which is refreshing as a change from the general atmosphere of modern novels. Miss Ford's name is apparently new among writers of fiction; but one may venture to hope that it will not remain so.

The naïve and pretty style of Mademoiselle makes what is on the whole a troubled story very charming. The period is that of the Franco-Prussian war, and the scene is laid mostly in Paris during the siege. Jacquette, who tells the tale, is another "Gardener's Daughter," and the good angel of her sister Angèle, and of Mademoiselle Hildegarde, whose father lives at the château near the gardener's cottage. Angèle goes to reside in Paris, and thither, too, go M. Galland and his daughter Hildegarde. Jacquette follows when war is imminent, in order to be with her sister; and she describes the terrible events of the siege, the treachery of the National Guard, the bloodthirstiness of the Communists, and the fate of many innocent "friends of order." A domestic story runs alongside all this, which is told in the simplest and most pleasing manner. It is in this that "Mademoiselle" is most seen, with Jacquette's devotion to her, and to everybody else whom she can benefit.

Mademoiselle Ire—the person, not the book—is of a very different type from the Mademoiselle we have just spoken of; but she, too, had a remarkable power of fascinating others. A young lady who is capable of the gentlest things and the most desperate is obviously a heroine of whom much can be made. She is the central figure in a story which for some time appears to concern only one or two country houses, and the families in them; but then an exciting event occurs, and the whole scene is transformed. We must not tell the secret of the plot, especially as it is so well kept by the author until the time arrives for its disclosure. This little volume is the first of a series, called "The Pseudonym Library." Its narrow single column of clear type is very inviting; the paper is good and the cover pleasing; but the interfolding and overlapping of the leaves almost make a magic paper-knife necessary.

A present-day Irish story, which is dedicated in terms of extravagant compliment to Mr. Gladstone, betrays its Nationalist character on its first page. In Kilgroom we meet, as we expect to do, with aggrieved tenants, patriotic agitators, noble priests, tyrannous policemen, high-handed and brutal agents, and—when he is visible at all—the exacting absentee landlord. The book is not without merit, and the purely Irish non-political episodes are amusing; but the general effect is spoiled by the too evident colouring of the whole story.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

GIFT BOOKS.

The Children of the Castle. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by Walter Crane. (Macmillan.) Mrs. Molesworth has two methods—or perhaps in the case of such an author, we ought to say two periods; and her present book belongs, alas! to her later and less happy one. Her reputation was made by those naïve narratives of child-life—its sorrows, its naughtinesses, and its pathos of unappreciated troubles—which have won supreme eulogy from Mr. Swinburne, and would have appealed no less strongly to the tender heart of De Quincey. Need we mention such household names as Carrots and Herr Baby? In a very different genre, she also wrote Four Ghost Stories, which, though not masterpieces, are likewise deserving of high praise. Unfortunately, she has since attempted to combine the two methods, and to moralise child-life (which she herself has taught us is neither moral or unmoral) by the introduction of a supernatural element. The result is, in our opinion, almost as deplorable as when Lewis Carroll, in Sylvie and Bruno, introduced modern figures and sermonising into the realm of fairyland. Not that the present book is a failure, except as judged by Mrs. Molesworth's own standard. It has many charming touches, even in the supernatural parts; but the whole is vitiated by the dominant want of reality, and by the consciousness on the part of the reader that nothing very much matters when a deus ex machina is always at hand to set it straight. Mr. Walter Crane has at least two pretty pictures—those facing pp. 23 and 81.

The Great Taboo. By Grant Allen. (Chatto & Windus.) Two years ago Mr. Grant Allen published a story entitled The White Man's Foot, the scene of which was laid in the South Sea Islands. He now returns to the same locality, which affords an unrivalled field for the display of his anthropological learning. Readers of the former book will not have forgotten that its plot turns upon the survival of savage superstitions beneath a veneer of Christianity. In the present case there is no Christianity at all, except so much as may be represented by "a passing Christian English steamer"; and the savage superstition chosen for illustration is none other than that which has been so elaborately worked out by Mr. J. G. Frazer in his "epoch-making" work, The Golden Bough. A subordinate idea, treated with great ingenuity, is the revelation of the secret by the mouth of a parrot, of patriarchal age, who has been taught it some two centuries before by a shipwrecked English sailor. Politicians may also learn something from these pages about the practice of "shadowing," which has certain advantages from the point of view of a evaded chaperon. Mr. Allen was rather bold to make his hero and heroine be swept overboard from an ocean steamer, and washed ashore on the fringing reef of a coral island. But if the introductory chapter or two challenge comparison with Mr. Clark Russell, the remainder of the story shows Mr. Allen in his own domain, moving with equal ease amid mythological problems and the discoveries of modern science. All boys will read the book with avidity, and will unconsciously learn from it a moral which the author himself repudiates.

A Young Macedonian, in the Army of Alexander the Great. By the Rev. Alfred J. Church. With sixteen Illustrations. (Seeley.) While yielding to none in our admiration for the "Stories" which Prof. Church has re-told for English boys from the classical poets and historians, we have never felt that he is equally happy in telling a story on his own account. Of his knowledge of ancient history there is no doubt; and we also allow him gladly the possession of a pure literary style, suitable to the subject. These are great merits, especially when we remember by what inferior qualities popular reputations have been gained. But a far more ignorant and less refined author may nevertheless be endowed with the supreme gift of imagination, which will make his characters and scenes, however extravagant, fix themselves in the memory. We should not like to say that Prof. Church has no imagination; but he certainly has not got so much imagination as some others who shall be nameless here. And, that being so, it is idle to dictate to young readers—or old readers, either—in their choice of favourites. We have read A Young Macedonian with sympathy, but without enthusiasm. The opening picture, where the hero is disqualified at the Olympian games, is very effective; and so are most of the other early chapters, of which the scene is laid in Greece. But when the story shifts to Asia, our interest is dissipated between the fictitious adventures of the hero in war, travel, and love, and the historical battles of Alexander. We feel that the king himself ought to have been the central figure; nor can we entirely reconcile ourselves to the future of our hero and his half-Persian wife as "proselytes of the gate." The illustrations are taken from various sources; those apparently from vases are the best.

Syd Belton: The Boy who would not go to Sea. By G. Manville Fenn. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne. (Methuen.) Mass' George: or A Boy's Adventures in the Old Savannahs. By G. Manville Fenn. Illustrated by W. T. Smith. (S.P.C.K.) Like some others of our popular writers, Mr. Manville Fenn runs the risk of overstocking his market. We should be afraid to say how many boys' books he has written, which all resemble one another in describing the adventures of a pair—or sometimes a trio—of boys, one of whom always belongs to the upper, and another to the lowest rank in society. Both his stories of this year are of this same class; and, though we have been so far faithful to an old favourite as to read them through, we confess that neither of them appears to us to be equal to some of their predecessors. The date of both is somewhere about the middle of the last century. The earlier in time (the title of which we have placed second), describes the settlement of Georgia by English planters, when Red Indians and Spaniards alike harassed the infant colony, and negro labour was first introduced. Our author has, of course, availed himself of the opportunity to display his knowledge of natural history, and the fighting is not bad; but we do not feel that we have got a true picture of early colonial life. The other book—which we have put first, as in our judgment the better of the two—opens with a rather tedious scene in England, where two boys, both the sons of sailors, refuse at first, for no sufficient reasons, to follow their fathers' profession. The son of the boatswain gets the ropes-ending he deserves, though he remains a cur to the end; and the son of the post-captain would, in those days, certainly have received similar treatment. However, the two boys do go to sea at last, in company with their fathers; and the description of life in the midshipman's mess is worthy of Marryatt. Then comes the main incident of the book, when our young hero has to fortify and defend a rock off one of the French islands in the West Indies. This portion is all first-rate, except the character of a brother middy, who begins by being a bully and ends as a traitor. It is needless to praise Mr. Gordon Browne's illustrations.

Adventures of Alfán. By the late John Holme Burrow. (Roper & Drowley.) This is an admirable story of a very old-fashioned and yet high-class kind, in which a sound moral is taught without being too much obtruded upon the reader. Alfán, a bright Cairene boy, gets possessed of an amulet of the usual wonder-working kind, which takes him from his native place into the desert and converts him into the boy-king of a great state. As such, he conquers a formidable enemy, gets rid of a troublesome prime minister, and defeats various conspirators against his own life and the peace of his kingdom. He fails, however, quite to satisfy his subjects or his own ideal of the royal position; and, in obedience to his amulet, which tells him that there is no place like home, he returns to his mother. Some of the adventures of Alfán—notably his battles—are remarkably well told. Apart from its moral, this story is as bright and in every way as readable as any intended specially for boys that have been published during the present season.

The Slaves of Sabinus. By Charlotte M. Yonge. (National Society.) This graceful story by Miss Yonge is sure to be popular. It is a tale of the times of Vespasian, giving us a glimpse of the supposed Christian household of Flavius Clemens, Vespasian's nephew, and introducing the Trophimus of the Acts, Clement of Rome, and other Christians of the time whose names have come down to us. The facts upon which the plot is founded are taken from Plutarch, but the characters are of course imagined and elaborated by Miss Yonge herself. The story helps us to realise how Christianity spread upwards from the slaves to the masters, and describes gracefully and yet vividly the gradual conversion of the slave Telamon and his influence upon his master Sabinus. The book is by no means wanting in exciting incidents; boys will be delighted with the account of the cave in the German forest in which Sabinus takes refuge. But the quiet refinement of the author's mind and style is apparent in every chapter of her tale, and fuses its varied scenes into a homogeneous whole.

Hussein the Hostage. By G. Norway. (Blackie.) This is a story of a boy's adventures in Persia. The scene is laid among the Bakhtiari mountains, inhabited at the commencement of this century by a nomadic race chiefly living in tents, driving their herds up into the mountains during the summer months, and bringing them down to the plains when the snow covers their pastures. The chief of this wild tribe is captured by treachery by the Matamet, a bloodthirsty eunuch of the late Shah of Persia. The opening chapter is very picturesque. The men are seated around blazing fires, with piles of mountain goats and red-legged partridges lying beside them, while their wives in their red linen trousers and white chemises and coloured chintz jackets are waiting on their lords and masters. Then it is that the aged Ahmed tells the savage warriors around him the story of their chief's revenge. The book is picturesque throughout, and closes as dramatically as it opens. The Matamet has just handed over Askar, the brave boy-hero of the story, to the torturers, when—but the reader must discover this for himself. The tone of the book is manly and good. The portrait of Tom, the English orphan boy, in the travelling Persian circus is excellent. Tom, a poor London waif, had promised a gentleman who had been kind to him to repeat the evening hymn before he went to sleep. "I was mighty fond of him, and so I always do it. It does not seem right somehow unless I do." When Askar first hears the hymn, he asks Tom what it is, and, on being told, says, "It's pretty. Sing more of it, please. What does it mean?" "Oh, you would not care to know; it is a sort of a prayer." "Why don't you take off your shoes while you say it, then?" "Because those aren't our Christian ways." "Are you really a Christian?" "If I'm aught in that way. But I don't know much about it." Then Tom explained to Askar who taught him the hymn and why he sang it. "What do Christians believe, Tom?" "How can I tell?" growled Tom. "Shut up, Askar."

Little Sir Nicholas, by C. A. Jones (Frederick Warne), is a prettily-written story of the Lord Fauntleroy type. Little Nicholas, the heir of the Tremaines, is supposed to be drowned with his parents on their way from India; and a search is made for the next-of-kin, who is found living in great poverty with his mother and sister. Though Gerald is only a distant cousin, he soon wins the affections of Lady Tremaine. The story of the finding of Nicholas in a Breton peasant's cottage by an artist, an old family friend, is very prettily told. Little Sir Nicholas, who is brought home to his unknown relatives, and knows only a few words of English, has many troubles to go through. The chief of these is the jealousy and unkindness of his cousin Gerald, the ex-baronet. He also suffers much from his great dread of the sea, which, as he is the heir to a long line of naval heroes, is a bitter disappointment to his grandmother, Lady Tremaine, and brings on him the taunt of cowardice from Gerald. The brave way in which he conquers his fears, and wins his cousin's love by saving his life at sea, though rather improbable, is charmingly told. The story ends happily, as all children's stories should. Little Sir Nicholas will make a very pretty Christmas gift. It is well got up, and the illustrations are charming.

Fifty-Two More Stories for Girls. Edited by Alfred A. Mills. (Hutchinson.) This is probably, owing to the amount and good variety of its contents, as attractive and popular a gift-book for a girl as has been published during the present season. Among the authors there occur such familiar names as Mrs. John Lillie, Rosa Mulholland, E. J. Whitney, Sarah Doudney, Agnes Repplier, and David Ker; while the contents are arranged under such heads as "Tales of Home and School," "Tales of Heroism," "Historical and Legendary Tales," "Tales of Adventure," and "Fairy Tales." As might naturally be expected, the stories of adventure and heroism are the most interesting and exciting; but there is nothing that savours of nambysism in the domestic tales. The editor has made his selection both of writers and of stories with great judgment. Three-fourths, indeed, of this book will be enjoyed quite as much by boys as by girls.

Master Rockafellar's Voyage. By W. Clark Russell. With illustrations by Gordon Browne. (Methuen.) The author has here put into a story for boys what may very well be a chapter of his own personal experiences some twenty or thirty years ago; and his readers will like it all the better because no lady-love is introduced. We have, instead, a simple description of a midshipman's life during his first voyage on an Australian sailing-ship, eked out with a capital yarn of an ocean tragedy early in the century. The name "Rockafellar" we took to be an ingenious invention, like "Midshipman Easy" or "Peter Simple," until we happened to come across it in the newspapers as borne by a railway magnate in America. The pencil of Mr. Gordon Browne has been admirably employed in realising many of the author's incidents—especially the humorous ones.

A Pearl in the Shell. By Austin Clare. (S. P. C. K.) This is a tale of life and love in the North Country. Robert Cranston and Margaret Walton are engaged when quite young, and before Robert leaves Felgate to make his way in the world. Robert returns looking "maist like a gentleman" to find his old sweetheart, grown into a beautiful woman it is true, but still only the blacksmith's daughter. The tale is not merely a pretty one, but is written with great sympathy for the poor and their ways of thought. Austin Clare gives us not only the language, but the feelings and prejudices of a Cumberland village. An author who can thus record "the simple annals of the poor" must not be offended at being judged by a higher standard than is usually applied to the writers of children's books. He seems to us to slightly mar a beautiful chapter—"On the Old Bridge—Parting"—by making Robert talk about the Holy Communion. Nor is he doing the Church a service in drawing our attention to the contrast between the noble girl, who does not stay for the Sacrament, and the mean sneak who is "a regular communicant." However, our criticism is, in itself, a compliment; for every word of Austin Clare's heightens our admiration for the low-born heroine. Though the conception of her character is quite original, we must say, in closing this delightful little book, that Maggie Walton is not unworthy of ranking as an artistic creation with Maggie Tulliver.

Dangerous Jewels. By M. Bramston. (National Society.) This is a tale of 1793. Baron de Kergoët, a Breton nobleman, sends his motherless children—two little girls and a boy, aged twelve, eight, and ten—for safety across to England, where his wife's family live. They are despatched together with the family jewels—the "dangerous jewels"—in a smuggling smack. The children are not very comfortable in the cabin of the "Lively Nancy," and Margot, the eldest sister, sings to them a religious ballad:

"I rose when morn was breaking,
I donned my gown of grey,
I passed athwart the postern
To the garden white with May."

On their landing at Barcombe the children are kidnapped by gypsies. This mishap befalls them owing to the spite of Mehalla, a gypsy servant in their father's employ. Some weeks later Mehalla joins them, and takes them up to a hut among the bogs of Dartmoor. Margot has just perfected their plans to escape, when Mehalla is struck down with the small-pox. Margot hesitates, but decides on nursing her oppressor instead of regaining her liberty. Her self-sacrifice is amply rewarded. This is a well-written book, and can be highly recommended.

Lennard's Leader. By E. N. Hoare. (S.P.C.K.) Mr. Hoare's alternative title "or, On the Track of the Emin Relief Expedition" explains the object of his book. It endeavours to weave into a story for boys an account of Mr. Stanley's last expedition. The task is clumsily performed, but the book is not without merit. Mr. Hoare shrinks from the bold course of making his hero one of Mr. Stanley's party, and consequently has to keep him dodging about just before or just behind the Emin Relief Expedition; and there is no obvious reason why the doings of the latter should be described at all. The accounts of Lennard's voyage to the Congo, of the Chinese cook who goes mad from eating opium, of the wreck of the Zembra on the African Coast, of the Soko hunt, of the storm on Lake Tanganika, of the hippopotamus hunt, are all well done. Along with the private histories of Lennard and his friend Captain Felton they make up a capital tale for boys, to which the account of the Emin Expedition is somewhat awkwardly attached.

An Old Chronicle of Leighton. By Sarah S. Hamer. (Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) "Her eyes fell before the 'glory' of his, in its zenith, as he gazed." Bernard's eyes are remarkable for their "glory," printed very mysteriously with quotation marks, and alluded to more than once. This is not the only quaint affectation which somewhat disfigures a very pleasant and readable tale. The story is about the machine riots, and introduces some delightful Quakers, and has about it an old-fashioned flavour which is wholesome and refreshing. The character-drawing is quiet but true, and easy so far as it goes, and the author's occasional extravagances are perhaps after all ornaments rather than defects. The number of engaged parties is somewhat confusing, and the dialect of the district is fearfully and wonderfully made; but the plot is interesting, and the general style and conduct of the tale original and piquant. There is a really pretty frontispiece.

The Duke's Page; or, In the Days of Luther. A Story for Boys. From the German by Sarah M. S. Clarke (Mrs. Pereira). With sixteen Illustrations. (Nisbet.) We do not know how it is that no indication is given of the authorship of this book. Was the German original published anonymously? Whoever may be the author, the tale was quite worth translating. Perhaps it is a little overlaboured, as German historical fiction is wont to be; but it is really interesting and skilfully constructed, and shows sound knowledge of the history. The period to which the story belongs is that of Luther's last days and the few years following his death. The historical personage who is the chief subject of the tale is the Elector Maurice of Saxony. Luther only appears twice, and the scenes in which he is introduced are scarcely among the best in the book. The translation is, at all events, good English; without the intimation in the title-page we should scarcely have guessed that the book had been originally written in a foreign language. The illustrations, which are excellent in a peculiar style that is seldom seen in English book-work, are decidedly effective.

In the Days of Luther; or, The Fate of Castle Löwengard. By Esmé Stuart. With sixteen Illustrations by C. J. Staniland. (Sonnenschein.) The title of this story is the same as the second title of that last noticed, but the two books have not much in common. The appearance of Luther before the Diet of Worms, his concealment in the Wartburg, and the outbreak of the peasant insurrection, are among the events related, and several historical personages are brought on the scene. But the interest of the story lies more in the imaginary incidents and characters than in those taken from history. The book is pleasantly written. Mr. Staniland's illustrations, though well drawn, are rather commonplace in design.

The Blacksmith of Boniface Lane, by A. L. O. E. (Nelson), is a tale of the persecution of the Lollards in the reign of Henry IV. From those who accept the curious views of fifteenth-century history that are traditional among a certain class of evangelical Protestants, this little book will be sure to meet with approval. It is gracefully written, and not without pathos.

The Locked Desk. By Frances Mary Peard. (National Society.) It is somewhat disappointing to find that there is no mystery connected with the cave which, early in the story, one of the heroes is at considerable pains to discover; and Mrs. Barton's excessive terror lest the bad deeds of her scapegrace brother should become known to her friends is improbable as well as morally weak. But these are not very serious defects. The story is told carefully, and will interest young people. The book is prettily bound and illustrated.

Stories of Strange Adventures. By Captain Mayne Reid and Others. (Sampson Low.) Captain Mayne Reid is the author of two stories in this collection, and his name is a guarantee that the collection will suit boys. The "others" are anonymous, but many of their efforts are exceedingly good. There are one or two humorous tales cleverly told, which relieve the prevailing tone of excitement. The illustrations are as heterogeneous as the tales, but none of them below the average.

The Secret of the Old House. By Evelyn Everett-Green. (Blackie.) This is a story for children between the ages of ten and fifteen. A girl, the eldest of a family of seven, goes with her little brother Tim from the Black Country to Devonshire. The merit of the book, and it is not a slight one, is its great simplicity and directness. The dialogue is racy, and exactly such as children would themselves use. The characters of Aunt Tabitha and Gerald, the boy so fond of "posing," are well drawn. A Tim, the little Jacobite, who asks his grandmother whether she can remember Charles the First, is a charming creation. So original a child as Tim must win the hearts of all who read this pleasant tale.

The Family Coach, by M. and C. Lee (National Society), is sure to be well received by the young people, with whom the two authors are deservedly popular. It is a charming story of the adventures (numerous and exciting) of a family of children on their way to join their parents in Mentone, with no more efficient protector than an old nurse. Their attempts to secretly convey a large black cat across in a bag, and the indignant Peterkin's escape at Dover, are most amusingly told. From this point a chapter of accidents begins for the Strangways family. Henrietta, an ambitious and self-confident girl of sixteen, imagines herself quite capable of driving the family coach without the assistance of the elders. The accidents she meets with on the way teach her the useful lesson that youth is not infallible, and that bold, self-confident natures often fail completely in the time of emergency. Altogether, The Family Coach is one of the most amusing children's books that have appeared this Christmas.

THE seventeenth volume of St. Nicholas (Fisher Unwin) is quite on a footing of equality, as regards the variety and the high literary quality of its contents, with its predecessors; while it is, to say the least, quite as handsome as any volume of the ordinary gift-book kind. The illustrations, especially of games and of geographical discoveries, are exquisite. Of the innumerable stories, long and short, which find a place in this volume of St. Nicholas, "Crowded out o' Crowfield," by Mr. William O. Stoddard, deserves a special word of commendation.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. MARTINEAU, having finished his life's work with Types of Ethical Theory and The Seat of Authority in Religion, has recently been engaged in collecting for republication a number of essays, reviews, and addresses, most of which he wrote very many years ago, and which are now inaccessible, except in unauthorised American reprints. The whole will form four volumes, of which the first, sub-entitled "Personal and Political," may be expected immediately after Christmas. The others will follow at intervals of three months.

THE Lectures on Egyptology, recently delivered in America by Miss Amelia B. Edwards, will shortly be published with considerable additional matter and many illustrations. The book will be issued simultaneously in England and in the United States.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR, returning to his first ambition in literature, has written a novel about early Christianity, which will be published shortly by Messrs. Longmans in two volumes, under the title of Darkness and Dawn.

MESSRS. LONGMANS propose to follow the example of Messrs. Macmillan in publishing some of their important works at net prices. This will be the case with Newman's Correspondence in the English Church—which we may mention, will be introduced by a brief autobiographical memoir—and also with Sir Edwin Arnold's The Light of the World. Both of these books may be expected early in January.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish next week the first monthly part of a new illustrated edition of Robinson Crusoe. The illustrations, numbering upwards of one hundred, have been specially drawn for the work by Mr. Walter Paget, and are carefully reproduced by wood-engraving.

The Return to Paradise, and Other Fly-leaf Essays, by Mr. J. J. Piatt, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week a volume called Recipes for the Million, which gives in alphabetical order two thousand directions for cooking dishes and for curing ailments.

A LITTLE work, entitled Violin Chat for Beginners, will appear from the same publisher. The author is the Rev. A. H. Raikes. Special attention is devoted to the making and makers of the violin.

MR. STANLEY J. RILEY will publish this month a political novel entitled The Flowing Tide, by Mr. John Littlejohns. The work will set forth the writer's impressions regarding the relation of politics to religion.

ON and after the first week in January the Publishers' Circular will appear weekly instead of fortnightly, having been published twice a month for fifty-three years.

MR. ARTHUR SIDGWICK will deliver a lecture on "Browning" at Teynbee Hall on Sunday next, December 14, at 7.30 p.m.

COUNT FERRERO is announced to deliver a lecture to-day (Saturday) at St. James's Hall, on "Dante," with musical illustrations composed for the occasion. The special subject of the lecture will be the first and second Circles of the Inferno, ending with the episode of Francesca da Rimini.

THE following are the lecture arrangements at the Royal Institution before Easter: Prof. Dewar, six Christmas lectures to juveniles on "Frost and Fire"; Prof. Victor Horsley, nine lectures on "The Structure and Functions of the Nervous System (Part I.—The Spinal Cord and Ganglia)"; Mr. Hall Caine, three lectures on "The Little Manx Nation"; Prof. C. Hubert

H. Parry, three lectures on "The Position of Lulli, Purcell, and Scarlatti in the History of the Opera"; Prof. C. Meynott Tidy, three lectures on "Modern Chemistry in Relation to Sanitation"; Mr. W. Martin Conway, three lectures on "Pre-Greek Schools of Art"; Lord Rayleigh, six lectures on "The Forces of Cohesion." The Friday evening meetings will begin on January 23, when a discourse will be given by Lord Rayleigh on "Some Applications of Photography." Succeeding discourses will probably be given by Lord Justice Fry, Prof. J. W. Judd, Prof. A. Schuster, Dr. E. E. Klein, Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, Dr. J. A. Fleming, Dr. Felix Semon, and Prof. W. E. Ayton.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued this week a most charming little edition of the Poetical Works of Lord Tennyson—so-called, apparently, to indicate that the dramas are omitted. But it contains everything else that was given in the Works of Lord Tennyson (1889) with the important addition of the whole of the Demeter volume, published just twelve months ago, which has not been included in any previous collection. For frontispiece, it has the portrait of which we are unable to say more than that it appears in the first Macmillan edition (seven vols., 1884), but was not reproduced in the eight volume edition of 1888. It is perhaps also worthy of note that the designation of "poet laureate" is omitted from the title-page. For the rest, the print is clear and the paper opaque; but the latter is not equal to that of which the Clarendon Press seems to possess a monopoly. The binding is of limp morocco, with rounded corners, so as to go into the pocket, though none need feel ashamed of being seen carrying it—even on Sundays.

Correction: We are assured that the late George Bell's father was a bookseller at Richmond in Yorkshire, and not a farmer, as stated in the ACADEMY of last week.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE January number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain an article on "Russia and the North of Asia," by Prof. Vambéry; and another on "Afghanistan: Past and Present," by Dr. W. H. Bellew, who, it will be remembered, was chief political officer in that country in 1879-80.

THE Reliquary for January will contain articles on "The Mace of the House of Commons," by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope; "The Peel Towers of Northumberland," by Mr. Charles Clement Hodges (illustrated); "Encaustic Tiles from Dale Abbey and Morley," by Mr. John Ward (illustrated); and "Glaston Parochial Papers, Rutland," by Canon Wordsworth.

THE January number of Leppincott's Magazine will print a complete novel by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, entitled "The Light that Failed."

A NEW series of The Monthly Packet will commence in January, Miss C. M. Yonge having taken Miss C. R. Coleridge into partnership. The essential features of the magazine, which is intended mainly for girls and ladies who are members of the Church of England, remain unchanged; but its scope will be somewhat widened, and a greater variety introduced in the contents. Among those who have promised contributions during the year are Mrs. Oliphant, Mr. Andrew Lang, the author of the Atelier du Lys, Dr. Garnet, Mrs. Macquoid, Miss Peard, Mr. F. T. Palgrave, Miss Shipton, Mr. W. W. Fowler, Miss Wordsworth, and the Rev. P. Lilly. Some unpublished marginalia of Coleridge, and letters of Mrs. Barbould, may also be mentioned. Messrs. Walter Smith & Innes are the publishers.

A NEW monthly, entitled Child-Life, will appear in January, mainly as an organ for the open discussion of all matters connected with Kindergarten teaching. The first number will contain "The Reminiscences of Frau Froebel," translated by Miss Lyschinska; "A Simple Method of Teaching Staff-Notation Sight-Singing to Young Children," by Mr. J. Taylor, organist at Kensington Palace; and "Search Questions in Natural Science," by Mrs. Fisher (Arabella Buckley). It will be published by Messrs. George Philip & Son.

"CAPTURED BY INDIANS: a Tale of the American Frontier" is the title of a new story by Mr. Edward S. Ellis, author of "The Boy Hunters of Kentucky," &c., which will commence in Little Folks Magazine for January.

THE name of Women's Penny Paper will henceforth be changed to Women's Herald.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER is now correcting for the press his second course of Giffard Lectures, delivered at Glasgow this year. The subject is Physical Religion.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish shortly a volume of nine lectures delivered by Prof. W. Sanday, as Ireland professor of exegesis at Oxford. It will be entitled The Oracles of God; and it will deal with the nature and extent of Biblical inspiration, and the special significance of the Old Testament Scriptures at the present time.

MR. M. J. M. HILL, professor of mathematics at University College, London, has been approved by the general board of studies at Cambridge for the degree of Doctor in Science.

MR. A. H. L. NEWSTEAD, of Christ's College, has been appointed, on behalf of the University of Cambridge, to occupy a table in Dohrn's zoological laboratory at Naples.

MR. ERNEST GARDNER, director of the British School at Athens, will deliver a course of lectures at Cambridge next term upon "Greek Religious Antiquities, illustrated by Inscriptions."

THE Senate at Cambridge has voted grants of books printed at the University Press to the following public libraries: Bradford, Brentford, Croydon, Putney, Rotherhithe, Southampton, and Southport.

A SOCIETY has been formed at Oxford for the study of German literature and thought, under the presidency of Prof. A. A. Macdonell. It consists of twenty members, graduate and undergraduate, who meet twice a month, to read a German play or to discuss, in German, a paper on some German subject. During the past term the president gave an inaugural address on "The Literary Influences of England on Germany"; and Gutzkow's "Zopf und Schwert" was read.

MR. W. F. R. WELDON, of St. John's College, at present university lecturer on invertebrate morphology at Cambridge, has been appointed to the Jodrell chair of comparative anatomy and zoology in University College, London, vacant by Prof. Ray Lankester's removal to Oxford.

THE Rev. C. Merk has been appointed professor of German language and literature at Queen's College, Harley-street.

A PERFORMANCE of the "Antigone" of Sophocles in the original Greek, with Mendelssohn's music, will be given by the students of Queen's College, Harley-street, on Thursday and Friday of next week, under the direction of Prof. Wilson and Prof. Gadsby.

Correction: Mr. Freeman elsewhere corrects a blunder under this heading in the ACADEMY of last week. We have also another to apologise for. The Combined Catalogue of Periodicals, &c., taken in by the College Libraries at Oxford (which we had not seen) does include those taken in at the Taylorian Institution. He does not include those taken in at the Bodleian, because they have been already published.

OBITUARY.

DEAN CHURCH.

THE year just ending, like the one that preceded it, has been memorable for the deaths of a company of great divines. Newman and Döllinger, Lightfoot and Delitzsch, had each a European reputation. Liddon was the foremost preacher of the English Church. Oxford, in particular, has had to mourn for Hatch, Edersheim, and Aubrey Moore. To these must now be added Dean Church, who, though not emulating the others in the domain of theology, maintained the traditional dignity of his high post by his devotion to scholarship and to letters. His name never came much before the public, as that of Dean Stanley did; for, whether as tutor of Oriel at the height of the Oxford Movement, as rector of a little country parish, or even as head of the cathedral church of London, his life was modelled on the maxim "bene vixit qui bene latuit."

Nor is the amount of his published work large. Apart from a few sermons, the whole is comprised in the five volumes which Messrs. Macmillan issued in 1888, uniform with the works of Emerson. These volumes, too, consisted entirely of reprints; for it was characteristic of the author to speak out once from the ripeness of his learning, and not to attempt revision. In plain truth, he was, like his contemporary, Mark Pattison, a reader all his life, rather than a writer; a full man, rather than a ready man. Neither has left behind books which will adequately show what was the living influence of their example and their character.

Of all Dean Church's works perhaps the most important is his study of Anselm. This originally appeared as two articles in the British Critic so long ago as 1843, was recast for Macmillan's "Sunday Library" in 1870, and has since passed through eight editions. It is not a monograph, in so far as it does not pretend to be exhaustive; but it is unrivalled as a penetrating and sober estimate of a great historical character. Next most readers would place his essay on Dante, which was written for the Christian Remembrancer (1850), as a review of Dr. Carlyle's prose translation of the "Inferno." After all that has been published since, it still remains the best popular introduction to the meaning of the poem. Of the Dean's two contributions to the "English Men of Letters," his Spenser ranks as high as his Bacon ranks low in that unequal series. His latest publication was an article on "Sordello" for Macmillan's Magazine (1887); but it is understood that he had finished his Reminiscences of the Oxford Movement, which the same publishers announce for this winter.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary keeps up its character. There are no papers this month which indicate much original research; but there is much pleasant reading, and not a single article that can be said to be unworthy of a place therein. The most interesting is Mr. Ditchfield's translation of Bosschaerts's account of the Abbey of Ripon. Bosschaerts was a canon of Antwerp, who wrote a history of the conversion of Frisia to Christianity. So far as we can remember, he gives no new information, but it is pleasant to read a description of the great Northern house of religion written from a Low German point of view. Mr. Scarlett's paper on "Costume in Heraldry" is entertaining, but far too short. Some of the arms granted during last century and in the early years of the present one furnish many strange examples. We are happy to say that the Heralds have of late years refrained from granting those picture-coats which were fashionable a hundred years ago. The Rev. Joseph Hirst contributes a curious account of an African Reliquary of the fifth century. Unhappily, it is unaccompanied by any engravings; so that, even from this accurately worded description, it is not very easy for anyone who has not seen it to realise what it is like. Mr. R. C. Hope continues his account of Holy Wells. In the present number he deals with those of Shropshire and Sussex.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DÜRRER'S, A. Bandzeichnungen aus dem Gebetbuche d. Kaisers Maximilian I. München: Franz. 12 M.
FOURNEREAU, L. Les ruines Khmères (Cambodge et Siam). Documents complémentaires. Paris: Leroux. 50 fr.
HAUSSMANN, Mémoires du Baron. T. 3. Paris: Victor-Havard. 7 fr. 50 c.
LANSON, G. Bossuet. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
LE FAURE, G. Romans patriotiques: aventures de Sidi-Froussard. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
MATTÉI, Le Commandant. Bas-Niger, Bénoué, Dahomey. Grenoble: Baratière. 5 fr.
MUGNIER, F. Madame de Warens et J. J. Rousseau. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
OLYMPIA. Die Ergebnisse der v. d. Deutschen Reich veranstalteten Ausgrabung, hrag. v. E. Curtius u. F. Adler. 4. Bd. Die Bronzen u. die übrigen kleineren Funde, bearb. v. A. Furtwängler. Berlin: Asher. 300 M.
ROD, E. Nouvelles romandes. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
STÄHELIN, A. In Algerien, Marokko, Palästina u. am Roten Meere. Basel: Schwabe. 6 M. 40 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- GUTSCHMID, A. V. Kleine Schriften. Hrag. v. F. Rühl. 2. Bd. Schriften zur Geschichte u. Literatur der semit. Völker u. zur älteren Kirchengeschichte. Leipzig: Teubner. 24 M.
PARKE, F. Frisillanus, e. Reformator d. 4. Jahrh. Würzburg: Stuber. 6 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ARENHOLD, L. Die historische Entwicklung der Schiffstypen vom römischen Kriegsschiff bis zur Gegenwart. Kiel: Lipsius & Fischer. 30 M.
FORSCHUNGEN zur brandenburgischen u. preussischen Geschichte. Hrag. v. R. Koser. 3. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
GERHARD, E. Etruskische Spiegel. 5. Bd. 10. Hft. Berlin: Reimer. 9 M.
GEYER, P. Kritische Bemerkungen zu S. Silvius Aquitanæ peregrinatio ad loca sancta. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
MONUMENTA Germaniae selecta ab a. 789 usque ad a. 1250. Ed. M. Doerfler. 4. Bdchn. München: Lindauer. 5 M. 50 Pf.
NEUMANN, W. A. Der Reliquienschatz d. Hauses Braunschweig-Lüneburg. Wien: Holder. 90 M.
RANKE, L. V. Zur eigenen Lebensgeschichte. Hrag. v. A. Dove. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 14 M.
RAUSCHEN, G. Die Legende Karls d. Grossen im 11. u. 12. Jahrh. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 4 M. 80 Pf.
STARCKE, A. N. La famille primitive: ses origines, son développement. Paris: Alcan. 6 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BLIND, A. Lehrbuch der Gleichungen d. II. Grades (quadratische Gleichungen) m. 1 Unbekannten. Stuttgart: Maier. 10 M.
HANNER, A. Analytische Geometrie d. Punktes, der Geraden u. Kegelschnitte. Prag: Dominicus. 10 M.
HORN, J. Ueb. Systeme linearer Differentialgleichungen m. mehreren Veränderlichen. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 3 M. 60 Pf.
KLIMPERT, R. Lehrbuch der Statik flüssiger Körper (Hydrostatik). Stuttgart: Maier. 8 M.
MATEJKA, H. Crania Bohemica. 1. Thl. Böhmens Schädel aus dem 6.—12. Jahrh. Prag: Haerpfer. 6 M.
SARASIN, P. u. F. Ergebnisse naturwissenschaftlicher Forschungen auf Ceylon in den J. 1884—6. 2. Bd. 4 Hft. Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte u. Anatomie d. ceylon. Blindwühle Ichthyophis glutinosus. 4. Thl. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 22 M.
WESTERLUND, C. A. Katalog der in der paläarktischen Region lebenden Binnenschnecken. Berlin: Friedländer. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- APOLLONIUS Pergaei quae graece exstant cum commentariis antiquis, ed. et latine interpretatus est I. L. Heiberg. Vol. I. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M. 50 Pf.

- BRUGSCH, H. Thesaurus inscriptionum aegyptiacarum. 5. Abth. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 100 M.
HOFFMANN, E. Der mundartliche Vokalismus v. Basel-Stadt. Basel: Geering. 2 M.
HUTH, G. Die tibetische Version der Nāgārjaka-prajñāpāramitā-kādharmas. Buddhistische Sūtraregeln aus d. Prati-mokasāstram. Straßburg: Trübner. 2 M.
INSCRIPTIONES graecae Siciliae et Italiae etc. Galliae inscriptiones ed. A. Lebègue. Berlin: Reimer. 90 M.
LOESCHKE, E. Œuvres de Gautier d'Arras. T. 2. Ille et Gaius. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
MEYER, G. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der albanesischen Sprache. Straßburg: Trübner. 12 M.
WILMOTTE, Etudes de dialectologie wallonne. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"CATHEDRAL" AND "BISHOP-DESIGNATE."

Oxford: Dec. 8, 1890.

I should not have troubled you with a word more on the small question which I raised in the ACADEMY of November 29, had it not seemed to me that I had, however slightly, wounded the feelings of a friend of many years like Mr. Earle. He does not like my speaking of his criticisms on some sayings of mine "as partly approval, partly friendly rebuke." But Mr. Earle is one who has a right to rebuke, and I am ready to receive his rebukes. I accept the rebukes that he gives in pp. 289 and 499, and I mean to alter the two passages that he speaks of.

But I am afraid that, after all, I did not make my meaning clear to everybody. Among the odd things that are often sent to me, I have got a scrap from a newspaper where I am said to have "discoursed learnedly" in a letter where there is not a word of learning, and to have practised "philological hair-splitting" where there is not a word of philology. But the point is that the literary gentleman who writes this still thinks, what I was afraid Mr. Earle's remarks might make people think, that I want everybody to say "cathedral church" every time they speak of a church which contains a bishopstool. My aim is the exact opposite. I wish to keep up, or even to call back, the good old local and traditional names for such churches—"minster," "abbey," "great church," or any other. To go on insisting on the cathedral rank of a particular church every time you mention it is like calling a man "honourable" or "right honourable" every time you speak of him.

Your editorial note says that the boys of Winchester college talk of Saint Swithun's church as "cathedral." That I knew very well. But I asked for a "true, natural, unlearned way of speaking." The historic name of the cathedral church of Winchester is "the old minster"; Hyde abbey is "the new minster." When and how did those names go out of use? Anyhow I can set schoolboys against schoolboys. One Durham friend tells me that the ancient name of "abbey" for the church of Durham, cast aside by the high-pollite, is still used by the schoolboys, and even by a few old people in the city. Another Durham friend told me that there was no such usage, and that "abbey" would mean the abbey of Finchale a little way off. I know which to believe.

From the ecclesia cathedralis the step is easy to the cathedra, and from the cathedra the step is easy to its occupants present and future. I was a little startled by a passage in your number of December 6, which ran thus:

"The sermon preached in the chapel of Queen's College, Oxford, on November 2, by Dr. Thorold, bishop-designate of Winchester—an honorary fellow of the college, and now its visitor—has been printed for private circulation."

The person described as "Bishop-designate of Winchester" is, I fancy, the present Bishop of Rochester. The rumour is that the Bishop of Winchester is likely to resign his see, and that, when he does so, the Bishop of Rochester is likely to succeed him. But it seems to take some time to get rid of a bishopric; and it certainly takes a very long time to get possession of one. Bishop Thorold cannot be Bishop, or even Bishop-elect, of Winchester for some time to come. And I do not see how, either in his present character of Bishop of Rochester, or in his probable future character of Bishop of Winchester, he can be visitor of Queen's College, an office which belongs to the Archbishop of York.* But it is the description of anybody as "Bishop-designate," about which, in the character which Mr. Earle is good enough to ascribe to me of the champion of accuracy of language, I wish to say a few words. A few days ago I tried to hinder the Convocation of the University of Oxford from using that vulgar, slipshod phrase in a formal decree. Behind the reason that Dr. Thorold, now Bishop of Rochester, is some day to be Bishop of Winchester, there was a further reason that, whenever Dr. Thorold becomes Bishop of Winchester, Mr. Davidson, now Dean of Windsor, is likely to succeed him. But, to make Mr. Davidson Bishop of Rochester will take even longer than to make Dr. Thorold Bishop of Winchester. For, besides being recommended, elected, and confirmed, he will have to be consecrated. Altogether it will be a good while before Mr. Davidson can be within measurable distance of the see of Rochester. No legal or canonical step can be taken to make him so till the see of Rochester is vacant, and as yet even the see of Winchester is not vacant. Yet Mr. Davidson's friends were in such a hurry to pay him a compliment that a degree was voted to him by the ridiculous description of "Bishop-designate of Rochester." And I see that in the Oxford Kalendar, Dr. Thorold appears as "Bishop-designate of Winchester," and Mr. Davidson as "Bishop-designate of Rochester." I am therefore driven to suppose that those who drew up the Oxford Kalendar, and, what is more serious, those who drew up decrees for Convocation to pass, gravely believe that "Bishop-designate" is a real description, implying some legal or canonical status, and not simply a silly phrase of the newspapers to express something that most likely will happen some time hence.

I remember perfectly when this way of talking began. I cannot say in what year it was; but a colonial bishop, nominated by the Crown, but not yet consecrated, published a book. His proper description of course was "Bishop-elect." But he or his publisher seemingly thought that election was a process which needed several electors, and could not be done by one only. So, as he was not elected by a chapter, but nominated by the Crown, he described himself, or was described, not as "Bishop-elect," but as "bishop-designate." I suppose the title sounded pretty, and perhaps those who are likely to be bishops were glad to be called something fresh as soon as they could. So the next stage has been to apply the name to persons who are not yet even "bishops-elect," to persons about whom it is pretty certain that they will be bishops some time, though as yet no legal step has been taken to make them so. The description is absolutely without formal meaning. Dr. Thorold is Bishop of Rochester and nothing else. Mr. Davidson is Dean of Windsor and nothing else. The newspapers may call people what they please, but it is too bad when the Oxford Kalendar sticks in such nonsense among notices of real honours and offices. And it is still worse when the House of Convocation, which ought to draw up its decrees in words that have a legal meaning, sinks to follow such a slovenly practice.

* This was an unpardonable slip on the part of the writer. He can only plead that, though himself some time fellow of Queen's, he never came under the visitatorial jurisdiction.—[ED. ACADEMY.]

But it is not only bishops or future bishops who have this nickname given to them. In the dim future, when Mr. Davidson has become Bishop of Rochester, somebody is marked out to succeed him in the deanery of Windsor, and somebody else to succeed him in some preferment that he vacates. And in this long catena patrum, these smaller personages are "designates" too. I certainly saw something the other day about a "dean-designate" of Windsor. I have before now seen a "head-master designate," and even a "curate designate." Nay, for some months of 1884 I was in this "designate" or pupa state myself. I was going to be professor; but I was not yet professor. In that interval the University of Edinburgh was good enough to give me the degree of LL.D. I was horribly afraid lest I should be described in some way as grotesque as that in which Mr. Davidson was described here last week. But the University of Edinburgh had more sense, and nothing absurd was tacked on to my name. I hope my own University, the next time anybody is going to be made anything that calls for a degree, will follow that good example, and will call the lucky man simply whatever he is, and not something else which does not exist in rerum natura.

EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

THE ORDER OF RUNES IN THE FUTHARC.

London: December 6, 1890.

On reading Prof. Skeat's letter in the ACADEMY of November 22, my first impression was one of amazement that so much seeming plausibility could be given to a theory which, so far as I could see, was on historical grounds wholly inadmissible. The impression was so strong that for some time I felt compelled to ask myself whether after all this thing might not contain a kernel of truth that might, in some as yet inconceivable way, be reconciled with the necessary conditions of the problem. I soon ceased to entertain this possibility; and my next thought was that Prof. Skeat had furnished me with a splendid contribution to my collection of instances in proof of my favourite crotchet, that people generally underrate the likelihood of remarkable fortuitous coincidences; or, to put it in other words, that chance simulates law far oftener, and to a far great extent, than is commonly suspected. On examining the matter more closely, I find myself disappointed in both respects. I see no hope of being able to congratulate Prof. Skeat on a discovery, and I do not even think that his theory is wonderfully plausible.

The first point that calls for notice is that Prof. Skeat's results are not based on any authentic text of the Anglo-Saxon Paternoster, but on a new translation made on purpose to suit his theory. We are bound to scrutinise this translation closely. If it had been a question merely of confirming a theory otherwise powerfully supported, it might perhaps have been sufficient to show that a correct translation could be so framed as to produce the coincidences pointed out. But when a theory, otherwise unlikely, is wholly and solely based on the coincidences which the order of the runes exhibits with that of the initials of the words in a hypothetical translation, stricter canons of evidence are necessary. I think it is not unreasonable to lay down the two following rules. First, that if a particular coincidence can be elicited only from one of two or three equally probable versions, its evidential value shall be divided by two or three. Second, that a coincidence which can be elicited only from a version in itself rather unlikely, shall be ruled out of court altogether; or, at all events, that it shall be excluded provisionally, to be re-admitted, perhaps, when by more reliable evidence it shall appear that the case is all but proved.

Now to begin with, it must be acknowledged to be a curious coincidence that the first three runes, F, U, Th, are really the initials of the first three words of the Paternoster in every Old Teutonic language except Gothic. This has already been pointed out, I think, by Mr. Magnusson. Still, even here there is a slight abatement to be made, for in Old English, as the versions of St. Luke show, the third initial might be S instead of Th, and the F and U might change places. The fourth rune, A (before a nasal dialectally o), is satisfactorily accounted for by this theory, as the Wessex version has on heofonum; but as the other versions have in, the evidence of this coincidence must be halved. (One of the variants of the Northumbrian version would require B to come in here, but this I pass over.) Prof. Skeat's theory requires that "sanctificetur nomen tuum" should be rendered hālgod-sj thin nama. The hyphen is meant to get rid of the inconvenient S, and is a forced contrivance; and all the prose versions read, not hālgod, but gehālgod. Hence it seems probable that, if the theory were true, the Futhorc should have had S, if not also G, in close contiguity with the N. The clause "veniat regnum tuum" has to be rendered thin rice cume. This deserts the Latin order without any justification from English idiom; for cume thin rice (or cume rice thin) is, if anything, more in accordance with ordinary Old English practice than the arrangement proposed. Hence the Futhorc ought, according to the theory, probably to have had the sequence C R rather than R C. The two runes following the C, namely, G, W, are accounted for by geweorthe willa. But then we are not sure that G ought not to have been used up before in gehālgod; and the recorded versions of this clause in the Gospels show that geweorthe is only one of three possible renderings of "fiat," so that, even leaving gehālgod out of account, the value of the coincidence must be divided by three. The next words in the Latin are "sicut in celo et in terra." If Prof. Skeat had rendered this literally, or had followed any of the existing renderings (in St. Luke the Latin reading followed by the Wessex translator was different), he would have got an initial S, which he wants to avoid; so he renders it "both on heaven and in earth" (ge on heofonum ge in eorþan). This translation yields, in their proper order, the runes for I and Eo. But here there are several remarks to be made. Would the translator in the same clause have written "on heaven" and "in earth?" Either preposition is admissible in itself; but on the principle that (provisionally, at least) no weight is to be accorded to the results of strained renderings, we must ignore what relates to the I rune. Moreover, the particle ge would probably, at the early date to which in his second letter Prof. Skeat proposes to go back, have been written with the jāra rune; if so, the Futhorc sequence ought to have been J I instead of I J, as it is. Still further, there is no satisfactory evidence that the thirteenth rune originally stood for eu. Its name in the Salzburg MS. is ih; the powers there assigned to it are i and h. Curiously enough, in the Ruthwell inscription it stands for the palatal h in almehittig, and in another English inscription it stands for the long i in Gisheard; and that is about all we know respecting it, for none of the other texts in which it occurs have been satisfactorily deciphered. Such a name as ih was not possible in West Saxon phonetics: hence in the MS. of the Rune-poem it has been normally changed into coh, and in accordance with this the Latin equivalent there given is eo; but that the rune was ever used as the initial of eorthe is unproved, and not very probable.

It would not, I think, amount to very much if, by this process of repeatedly making an arbitrary and sometimes an unlikely selection of one out of several possible renderings, Prof. Skeat had really succeeded in accounting for the order of the first thirteen runes. But he has not yet accomplished it; he has still to make the further assumption that H, N have "somehow" been shifted from the 5th and 6th places to the 9th and 10th. Is it too much to say that no cause has so far been shown for entertaining the novel hypothesis?

But now Prof. Skeat changes his method altogether. It seems that his "ingenious friend," the arranger of the Futharc, after finding places for thirteen runes by the plan of setting down the letters in the order of their first occurrence as initials in the English Paternoster, discovered that this plan would not give him the entire alphabet. (So it was an alphabet he wanted to make, not a mere quintessence of the magic virtues of the Paternoster, but never mind.) He therefore turned from the English Paternoster to the clause in the Latin original, beginning at the point at which he had arrived; and instead of setting down the letters in the order in which they occurred as initials, adopted the new method of setting them down in the order in which they first occurred in any position. Whether this hypothesis is likely is a question on which there certainly are two opinions. But let us see how it works. Prof. Skeat's theory, without any tinkering, yields the following sequence: P, E, M, S, T, B, L, D, O.* Only two changes are needed, and this is transformed into the correct order of the last part of the Futharc (omitting the impracticable Z and Ng): P, S, T, B, E, M, L, O, D. Is this such a wonderful coincidence? Let us see if we cannot match it easily. Psalm 151 (spurious) in the Vulgate begins with the following words: "Pusillus eram inter fratres meos, et adolescentior in domo patris mei; pascabam." Treated according to Prof. Skeat's method, this yields the following consecution: P, S, L, E, M, T, O, D, B. Just as in the case of Prof. Skeat's clause from the Paternoster, only two alterations are needed to bring out the result desired. Let L and T change places, and let B move six steps back; and you have as before the magical P, S, T, B, E, M, L, O, D. I did not hunt through the Vulgate for this verse. I simply took the first likely-looking passage that occurred to my memory; and I doubt not that others could be found as good.

To show how little importance is to be attached to coincidences of this sort, I will ask Prof. Skeat and your other readers to consider what sort of a case could be made out for the theory (in which I do not at all believe) that the Futharc was produced by first arranging the letters according to the Latin order, and then removing certain specially lucky runes to the beginning and certain specially unlucky ones to the end. In the first place, I will make two modest assumptions, which Prof. Skeat at least ought not to regard as "wild." First, inasmuch as the rune which on philological grounds is believed to have stood originally for Z, certainly stood in historical times for a sort of R, and cannot historically be proved to have been anything else, let it be assumed that the arranger of the Futharc considered it to be the phonetic equivalent of the Latin R, and regarded the reda-rune as having no Roman equivalent. Secondly, as Prof. Skeat thinks that the thirteenth rune is eo, and this sound is not so very remote from o, let it be assumed that my "ingenious friend" (a different person from Prof. Skeat's) identified this rune phonetically with the Roman O, and hence treated the ðhil as having no Roman equivalent. Now, observing these assumed correspondences, let us write out the Roman values of the runes according to the order of the Thames Sword Futharc, omitting the letters that have no Roman values:

F, U, A, C, G, H, N, I, O, P, R, S, T, B, E, D, L, M.

If for NI we read IN, the eleven letters from A to T turn out to be in Roman alphabetical order. And if for ED we read DE, the following five letters are also in alphabetical order. If Prof. Skeat is unkind enough to deny me my two little assumptions, it is still an indisputable fact that the eight letters, A, C, G, H, I, P, S, T, occur in both the runic and Roman alphabets in precisely the same order. It seems to me that this coincidence is a good deal more wonderful than that which Prof. Skeat has so clearly proved to exist between an arbitrarily transposed Futharc and an invented hybrid English-Latin Paternoster, provided that the latter is subjected to two diverse methods of treatment. Shall we say that the correspondence I have pointed out must needs be something more than mere coincidence? I think not; I give it only as a warning against the danger of putting faith in delusive plausibilities.

It really seems to me that Prof. Skeat has absolutely no case, even apart from any question of historical improbabilities; but I do not see that in his letter in to-day's ACADEMY he does anything to answer Canon Taylor's objections. I may say that on some points I should not be so hard to satisfy as Canon Taylor is. I do not, for instance, think that the problem has already been solved. The Charnay brooch (which was not found lying on the ground, as Prof. Skeat seems to think, but in a tumulus) may date from A.D. 500; but I dare not treat as an absolute fact the plausible conjecture that Charnay was the site of an unrecorded battle between Clovis and Gundobad. The historic battle was on the Oscara, many miles off. By the way, the name Charnay (<**Carnācon*) suggests that the tumuli, or some of them, were there before Gaulish ceased to be spoken. Anyway, I think no one who has studied runes at all closely would consider either this brooch or the Vadstena bracteate, on palaeographical grounds, to be later than 600, a date which puts Prof. Skeat's theory in an uncommonly tight place. The great difference in development between these and the Anglian runes is visible at a glance. But, it seems, Prof. Skeat is quite willing to carry the date of his "ingenious friend" into the pagan English period. He argues that the heathen English certainly picked up abundance of Latin words, designating things connected with Roman civilisation and with the institutions of the Christian Church. They did. But was there a heathen Englishman who (1) knew the Latin Paternoster as a valuable charm; (2) knew that somebody had made a sort of condensed extract of its magical virtues, by arranging all its component letters in the order of their first occurrence; (3) thought that an English translation of the words would have magic virtues like those of the original, and therefore made one; (4) set to work to make a condensed extract of four clauses of his translation and one clause of the Latin original; and (5) succeeded in inducing all the runic-writing people in England and Scandinavia to accept his magical formula as their alphabet? The existence of this remarkable heathen is at present only a matter of faith.

Prof. Skeat thinks it incredible that people should inscribe a mere alphabet on their swords; that they should inscribe a magical formula, he can understand. But is it incredible that, when writing was an art known only to a few, it was regarded as magical? This would quite adequately explain the use of the Futharc as a charm. If Prof. Skeat's theory be correct, how is it that the Thames Sword inscription is a real alphabet, including a number of supplementary characters not belonging to the original Futharc?

In his first letter, Prof. Skeat talked about exposing himself to the ridicule of "infallible critics." To that class I, at least, do not belong, as I have made some big blunders in my time, and feel a melancholy certainty that if I live long enough I shall make some more. Therefore I cannot well afford to crow over one of the most learned and sagacious of living English scholars, even if I have succeeded in showing that he, too, is not "infallible."

HENRY BRADLEY.

ODYSSEUS AND HELEN.

London: Dec. 1, 1890.

The remarks of Mr. J. B. Allen on The World's Desire encourage me to say a word or two on the characters of Odysseus and Helen.

Mr. Allen condemns "harrowing scenes of cruelty and gory combats" in the novel as if these were new things in the adventures of the Ithacan. Combats have a way of being gory, so much so as to require the use of sulphur in purifying the hall of Odysseus. As to cruelty, I am not aware that there is any example of it in the novel, in action at least. In Homer we find Melanthius first tortured and then hewed piece-meal; we find the hanging of Penelope's maids, and so forth. One speech of Odysseus in the novel, to the man whom he has pinned to the yard-arm, and who is dead, was suggested by the similar address to Melanthius under torture. In the tale I do not think that Odysseus can be called "subject to sensual yearnings." He is once deceived as to the person of Helen by "shape shifting," the old device of the Volsung's Saga, the Mort d'Arthur, of Amphitryon, and, finally, of Greek tradition. Eustathius mentions that Paris put on the semblance of Menelaus by magic, and so beguiled Helen; he thinks that Homer was acquainted with this legend. To treat Helen as "an impalpable [sic] representation of ideal beauty" is a system justified, perhaps, by the studies of Helen in the essays of M. Paul de St. Victor and of Mr. J. A. Symonds. Servius has remarked that she was "immortal"; Herodotus tells us that, as in the tale, she was worshipped by the Egyptians under the name of "The Strange Aphrodite" or Hathor. The extremely learned article on Helen in Rosscher's Lexikon illustrates her immortality of beauty, her red star, stone, and other attributes, by passages familiar to few even of those who know Greek mythology well. The invisible defenders of Helen are paralleled by Pausanias's legend of the ghost of Aias in the Locrian ranks.

However, these considerations interest one less than the character of Odysseus in Homer. In his recent work, Mr Gladstone has defended the unity of the character: his view has been impugned, partly because of Odysseus's hair-brained adventure with the Cyclops. His conduct was out of character, indeed; but the whole plot of the Odyssey turns on it. Remove the Cyclops, and you have no Odyssey. The hero's wanderings, the subject of the poem, are caused by the wrath of Poseidon, and that by his blinding of Poseidon's son, Polyphemus.

* That is to say, it does so if we assume with Prof. Skeat that ðhil stands for long and not also for short o. But the assumption is hardly sound. In the extant English inscriptions ðhil is not o at all, but æ; both ð and ð being represented by the ans-rune. Prehistorically, the English ðhil must have been both ð and ð (cf. HORN on the Gallehus horn). Hence Prof. Skeat ought, according to the date he selects, either to have omitted the O, or placed it before his S.

For this cause, too, the hero must wander to the Saltless Men even after his return to Ithaca. Thus the Cyclops and Odysseus's apparently inconsistent conduct to him are the key-stone of the whole arch. The poet who composed the Odyssey as we possess it built it all up to and from that point; so, if he makes Odysseus inconsistent, it is with his eyes open and knowingly. The inconsistency, such as it is, is not accidental, the result of dove-tailing, but essential.

By the way, why does Canon Taylor, in his review of Mr. Gladstone's book in the ACADEMY of November 8, say that the people of the Iliad do not eat fish? He must allow that they angled for them, at least, with bait. I am sorry to say the passage is too familiar to need quotation.

A. LANG.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Dec. 14, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "The Vatican," by Mr. B. F. C. Costelloe.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Social Virtues," by Mrs. Bryant.
7.30 p.m. Toynbee Hall: "Browning," by Mr. A. Sidgwick.
- MONDAY, Dec. 15, 4 p.m. Asiatic: "The Akkadian Version of the Story of the Creation," by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches; "Three Inscriptions of Sennacherib," by Mr. S. Arthur Strong.
5 p.m. London Institution: "English Architecture of the Middle Ages," illustrated, by Mr. Arnold Mitchell.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Gaseous Illuminants," IV., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium, "Does our Knowledge of Perception of the Ego admit of being Analysed?" by Messrs. H. W. Blunt, A. Bontwood, and G. F. Stout.
- TUESDAY, Dec. 16, 3 p.m. British Museum: "History of the Literature of Babylonia, III., Second Akkado-Semitic Period," by Mr. G. Bertain.
7.30 p.m. Statistical: "Statistics of the Defence-Expenditure of the Chief Naval and Military Powers," by Sir Charles W. Dilke.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Lansdowne Bridge over the Indus at Sukkur," by Mr. F. E. Robertson; and "The New Chittavrati Bridge, Madras Railway," by Mr. E. W. Stoney.
- WEDNESDAY, Dec. 17, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Impressionism in Photography," by Mr. George Davison.
8 p.m. Geological.
8 p.m. Microscopical.
- THURSDAY, Dec. 18, 6 p.m. London Institution: "Alexander and his Successors: their Influence on Art and Manners," by Prof. R. S. Poole.
8 p.m. Linnean: "The Structure and Development of the Cystocarps in Catenella opuntia," by Mr. R. J. Harvey Gibson; "The Effect of Exposure on the Relative Length and Breadth of Leaves," by Mr. G. F. Scott Elliot.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Constitution of Dehydracetic Acid," by Dr. N. Collie; "The Theory of Dissociation into Ions and its Consequences," by Mr. S. N. Pickering; "Phenolic Acid," by Dr. A. Colefax.
8.30 p.m. Historical: "Republican Government," by Mr. Oscar Browning.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON GEOMETRY.

- Euclid's Elements of Geometry.* Books I., II. By H. M. Taylor. (Cambridge: Pitt Press.)
- The Harpur Euclid.* Books V., VI., XI. By E. M. Langley and W. S. Phillips. (Rivingtons.)
- Elements of Euclid.* Book I. By H. Deighton. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell, & Co.)
- Elements of Solid Geometry.* By R. B. Hayward. (Macmillan.)
- Geometrical Conics.* Part I. "The Parabola." By Rev. J. J. Milne and R. F. Davis. (Macmillan.)

It ought to be said at the outset that Mr. Taylor's edition of the first two books of Euclid's Elements is a scholarly production, and that it contains, in the way of notes, additional propositions, and exercises, an amount of geometrical knowledge large enough to satisfy the appetite of any beginner. Several of the objectionable features in the reprints of Simson's editions have been removed, and in many cases simplified proofs have been introduced for Euclid's more cumbersome ones. From the definitions Mr. Taylor discards those of trapezium, rhomboid, and gnomon as unnecessary; and figure, rhombus, square are defined somewhat differently from what has been usual. Among the postulates he includes what are sometimes called geometrical axioms, as well as two others regarding closed figures, thus bringing the number of them up to nine. The general axioms given by Euclid are mentioned, but not referred to in the text of the propositions. With respect to the propositions, the sequence of Euclid is adhered to, and, in general, Euclid's proof is retained, but not in the second book. There only five of the propositions are demonstrated in Euclid's manner, and the diagrams for the propositions from the fourth to the tenth consist of a single straight line. The outlines of the alternative proofs annexed to these propositions give all that is necessary to satisfy the inquiries made by intelligent beginners for ocular demonstration. The changes made on the propositions in the first book are the following:—The pons asinorum and its converse and the 26th proposition are proved by superposition, Euclid's defective proof of the 24th is replaced by a sound one, and the 45th is solved by the help of a subsidiary proposition inserted as 41A.

While some of the changes made by Mr. Taylor on the venerable text-book will commend themselves at once to mathematical teachers, others, it seems to us, will not. A few of these may be specified. The enunciations of propositions 35 to 41 are not so simple as the time-honoured phraseology to which we have been accustomed, and they are not a whit more accurate. The use of capitals and small letters in the proofs of the 5th and 6th propositions of the first book is embarrassing to young beginners when they have to reproduce the proposition either orally or in writing. An easier proof of the 24th proposition than that given by Mr. Taylor might have been substituted for Euclid's. As regards the changes which Mr. Taylor has not made, we may specify the enunciations of the second book, which are mostly left in their unmemorable forms, and the absence of a convenient symbolic notation. The want of this notation will go far to render the proofs Mr. Taylor has given of the propositions from the fourth to the tenth, if not unteachable, certainly more difficult to understand and remember. It seems hard to see why a notation which is in use throughout the civilised world should be proscribed in Cambridge elementary text-books, though permitted in more advanced ones, or why the connection of things algebraical and things geometrical should be of set purpose ignored. The correspondence which exists between certain of Euclid's propositions might have been more emphasised than it has been. Why should not, for instance, the diagrams of the 9th and 11th propositions of the first book be lettered to correspond, and the construction and proof thus shown to be the same for both? Many of the diagrams have, no doubt intentionally, a curious tilted-over appearance, and no distinction as by thickening or dotting has been made between lines given and lines constructed.

Messrs. Langley and Phillips have now completed their edition of those parts of Euclid's Elements which are usually read in schools. In the fifth book they employ the notation recommended by De Morgan and adopted by the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching, thereby simplifying the proofs of Euclid's propositions. They retain the expressions componendo, dividendo, convertendo, &c., which in their ancient forms may have been significant to a Greek, but might now be superannuated. In the sixth and the eleventh books several changes have been made on Euclid's modes of proof, and these changes are in most cases improvements. The employment of small letters and capitals in the demonstrations of VI., 18 and 20, is, perhaps, an exception to the last statement; and so also are the omission of a definition of the phrase "similar and similarly described," and the use, as synonymous with it, of the phrase "similar and similarly situated." Appended to the sixth book are short sections treating of loci, harmonic division, similarity, maxima and minima, and a few miscellaneous theorems the purport of which will be understood from the names of their authors—Ceva, Menelaus, Pascal, Brianchon, Chapple, Feuerbach. The feature which distinguishes this edition from other lately published ones is the prominence given to some of the new discoveries regarding the triangle. A large number of technical words that promise or threaten to become current are explained and illustrated, and the book, as a whole, can be emphatically recommended as one of the best of recent editions.

Mr. Deighton has issued a revised reprint of Euclid's first book, taken from his larger work. The reprint differs from the original edition in using symbols and abbreviations, the letters which refer to diagrams are in bolder type, and a few additions have been made to the exercises. Perhaps it ought to be again pointed out that the first exercise on the first proposition cannot be proved at that stage if Euclid's definition of a rhombus be retained, and that there seems no need for the statement on the title-page "newly translated from the Greek text." Nothing of mathematical interest is now to be gained by translating Euclid's six books afresh; and Mr. Deighton's rendering, while it conveys accurately enough Euclid's meaning, does not give a close approximation to his style.

Mr. Hayward's short treatise on solid geometry has been developed out of a syllabus submitted by him to the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching. An idea of its scope may be formed from the statement that in six sections he treats of intersections and parallels, normals and obliques, dihedral and solid angles, polyhedra and other solids (the three round bodies), stereometry, and spherical surface geometry, and that there is prefixed a preliminary discussion of the postulates of geometry. It will thus be seen that Mr. Hayward gives much more than a mere substitute for the score or so of propositions in Euclid's eleventh book which it has been usual to prescribe for school and college examinations. Whatever may be thought of Euclid's treatment of plane geometry, there can be no doubt that his treatment of solid geometry is much less satisfactory, and that many of his proofs are highly artificial. Like others who have deviated from Euclid's ways, Mr. Hayward has sought to "bring the propositions nearer, along the line of deduction, to the fundamental postulates"; and he has not failed of success. It may be worth while calling attention to the term "cuboid," which he has coined to replace the long-winded "rectangular parallelopiped." It is a very happy one, certainly more expressive than De Morgan's "right solid," and deserves to be adopted. To some of the propositions of his treatise Mr. Hayward has added a reference to the corresponding proposition in Euclid. He might have added a few more by going beyond the eleventh book. One excellent historical note accompanies the theorem about polyhedra which it has been usual to attribute to Euler.

Messrs. Milne and Davis, in the preface to their Geometrical Conics, state that, instead of presenting the subject in the customary form of a series of detached propositions, they have endeavoured to make it a continuous treatise. This announcement seems somewhat misleading; for, except that the propositions are often followed by notes, corollaries, and exercises, the treatment resembles that of other text-books. In one respect, certainly, their treatment differs from the usual presentation of the subject, as they have endeavoured "to bring the argument into closer agreement with that found in analytical text-books." This has some advantages, but for beginners to whom co-ordinate geometry is unknown it has also some drawbacks. The authors do not confine themselves to the properties of chords, tangents, normals, diameters, which form the bulk of many similar manuals. They introduce the student to the theory of envelopes, curvature, confocal parabolas, and some other matters useful to anyone who is interested in modern geometrical developments. A century of exercises is appended to the text, along with solutions or hints to the solution of the first eighty. This is an excellent feature. While nothing but praise can be given to the authors for their performance, it may be permitted to throw out a suggestion of improvement. The suggestion is that, instead of making one figure serve for several propositions and thus complicating it with lines, two or more figures might be given, and that a figure should not be on the back of a page of text referring to it.

J. S. MACKAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE EURASIAN MEDITERRANEAN AND ARYAN ORIGINS.

Wimbleton Common: November 30, 1890.

In a notice in the ACADEMY of November 29, of Prof. Huxley's Nineteenth Century article on "The Aryan Question," special attention is called to the "novel argument" which he draws from the former existence of "a vast inland sea, including the Aral, the Caspian, the Euxine, together with the plains of the Danube and the Volga, and discharging itself into the Arctic Ocean by the valley of the Obi." This midland sea Dr. Huxley calls the "Ponto-Aralian Mediterranean" (p. 764). But as its eastern shores are in Asia and its western in Europe, I venture to think that "Eurasian" would be a preferable adjective; and that the sea usually called the Mediterranean might, when necessary, be similarly distinguished as the Eurafrian.

As to the "novel argument," will you permit me to say that I had already, in the Babylonian and Oriental Record of last August, pointed out some of the important historical consequences of the recognition of this former geographical fact, and of the geological convulsions which probably led to the draining-off of this Eurasian Mediterranean; that, in the paper read before the Historical Society, which was reported in the same number of the ACADEMY, I drew certain further conclusions from the same fact; and that these conclusions were illustrated by a large map, on which, with the assistance of Mr. Bolton, of Stanford's Geographical Department, I had corrected, from the orographical maps of Ramsay and the geological maps of Berghans, the somewhat conjectural sketch of this Eurasian sea given long ago by Lenormant in his Atlas d'Histoire Ancienne?

Let me add that, for all questions of ultimate historical origins, no less important than recognition of this former Eurasian Mediterranean is recognition of the wide distribution of non-Aryan and non-Semitic white races, and—considering ethnographical monuments, traditions, and observations—of the very high probability, to say the least, that the ruling classes of the ancient empires both of Egypt and of Chaldea belonged to the widespread stock of white races.

Combining the considerations arising from these two sets of facts—geological and ethnological—I have been led to a conclusion which appears to reconcile the old Asiatic and the new European theories of Aryan origins. So far as the problem was treated as a question of the origin of the white race, the Asiatic solution was probably right. The white race did, as I have endeavoured to show, probably originate in Asia, and not in Europe, at the time when Europe and Asia were separated by a Mediterranean stretching from the Arctic Ocean almost to the Ægean. But so far as the question of Aryan origins is a question simply of the locality of the origin of Aryan speech among white tribes, the European solution will probably hold good; and that form of it, particularly, which regards the South Russian steppes, after the draining-off of the Eurasian Mediterranean and the consequent inrush of various white and other tribes into these "pastures new," as the most likely "Aryan cradleland," properly so-called. I need not here point out how the theory thus briefly indicated differs from Prof. Huxley's.

Permit me, in conclusion, to correct two errors in your otherwise accurate report of my Historical Society paper—"a mere," for "a more scientific procedure"; and "camp," for "centre of origin."

J. S. STUART GLENNIE.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.—(Monday, Nov. 24.)

Prof. G. H. Darwin, president, in the chair.—The following were elected honorary members:—Francesco Brioschi; on the ground of his contributions to mathematical science by his investigations in the theory of forms, the theory of equations, and in elliptic and hyperelliptic functions.—Leopold Kronecker; on the ground of his contributions to mathematical science by his investigations in the theory of numbers and elliptic functions.—Sophus Lie; on the ground of his contributions to mathematical science by his investigations in geometry, in the theory of differential equations, and in the theory of groups.—Henri Poincaré; on the ground of his contributions to mathematical science by his investigations in the theory of functions and in mathematical physics.—George William Hill; on the ground of his contributions to astronomical science by his investigations on the secular motion of the moon's perigee and other researches in the lunar theory.—J. Willard Gibbs; on the ground of his contributions to physical science and specially to the sciences of thermodynamics and electromagnetism.—Heinrich Hertz; on the ground of his contributions to the science, of electromagnetism, and specially for his brilliant experimental verification of Maxwell's theory.—Arthur Schuster; on the ground of his contributions to physical science, and specially for his researches on spectrum analysis and on the passage of the electric spark through high vacua.—Victor Meyer; on the ground of his contributions to chemical science, namely, his researches on the nitro-compounds of the fatty series, on the thiophenes, on pyro-chemistry, his development of Raoult's researches, and many other investigations.—James Dwight Dana; on the ground of his contributions to mineralogical and geological science, namely, his researches on coral islands, his great work A System of Mineralogy, and numerous other papers.—Henry Bowman Brady; on the ground of his zoological researches and in recognition of his generosity in presenting to the university a valuable collection of foraminifera.—Rudolf Heidenhain; on the ground of his contributions to physiology, dealing with the physiology of secretion and absorption, and the physiology of muscles.—Elias Metschnikoff; on the ground of his researches in many fields of biological science, and especially in the study of embryology.—Melchior Treub, director of the Botanical Gardens, Java; on the ground of his general researches in botany.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Dec. 1.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. B. Bosanquet read a paper on "The Fundamental Outline of Greek Theory concerning the Beautiful." Having explained that the title of the paper alluded to the fact that, of Greek views concerning the beautiful, a large part could not be called aesthetic theories, the writer proceeded to distinguish three main principles, dominant in all Greek speculation about the beautiful before Plotinus, and having a common root in the metaphysical assumption that representation or "imitation" is an imperfect kind of common-place reality (common-place reality as apprehended by average feeling and perception). These three principles were stated as (1) Moralistic, viz., the notion that the content of art, being simply a repetition of the facts of life, was moral or immoral, according to the same standard as those facts. (2) Metaphysical, viz., that an artistic representation is merely a common reality reproduced in a mode which deprives it of all practical value. (3) Aesthetic, viz., that beauty can only consist in conformity to abstract conditions derived from the conception of unity in variety. Omitting the further treatment of the first two principles, the writer proceeded to illustrate the application by ancient writers of the formal or abstract aesthetic principle of unity in variety from general definitions of beauty in which it is the main factor, and also from special cases in which it guided their analysis; such as purity of colour and tone, elementary geometrical form, very simple music, the lesser arts and formative art, and the drama, noting that in the three latter cases the principle, though treated as substantive, is really no more than a limiting condition. The relation of such a limiting condition to individual expressiveness was elucidated by the relation between the shape of a picture and its subject or content, on the provisional assumption that the golden-section rectangle is, in itself, the most beautiful form of the rectangle.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

FINE ART.

Architectural Studies in France. By the Rev. J. L. Petit. New Edition, revised by Edward Bell. (Bell.)

We are very glad to see an improved edition of these Architectural Studies, first published, in folio, in 1854. The drawings are in some instances reduced in size; but, far from having lost, they seem rather to have gained thereby. Mr. Petit's rough and rapid, yet really accurate and truthful, sketches acquire thus a certain softness without losing any of their characteristic vigour. Mr. Petit's artistic talent was not confined to drawing churches; his sketches of shipping were equally excellent. In both cases the excellence was the result of a thorough knowledge both of principles and details. He knew and understood thoroughly the whole rigging and furniture of a ship, the use and exact position of every rope, and spar, and sail; and he reproduced it all truthfully, he put his full knowledge into his sketches. His belief was that every necessary detail could be included by a skilful artist. He had the instinct to choose at once, even in a strange town, the very best point of view; hence the trustworthy workmanlike character of his drawings, so different from the pretty but weak attempts of the uninstructed amateur.

The present volume gives full proof of Mr. Petit's mastery of the principles and details of Church architecture. It is not, indeed, nearly so complete for France as is Mr. Street's Gothic Architecture in Spain for Spain. Mr. Petit visited only portions of the country. His sketches comprise Normandy, but not Brittany; Paris and its neighbourhood, but not the North, or French Flanders; the churches of Anjou, Poitou, and Perigord, but a few only of those of Auvergne and Guienne; the South-East, Burgundy, and Lorraine are hardly touched. Another difference from Mr. Street's volume consists in the wider architectural sympathies of Mr. Petit. He is no fanatic of the Gothic and of the Gothic only. "The Gothic," he says, "is not a bad style" (p. 354). He admires it greatly; but he sees merit also in the Italian, and in the Renaissance, and especially in the original model of our St. Paul's. His peculiar preference seems to be given to the cruciform, central-turreted, Angevin church, where the Romanesque passes into the Gothic, where we find Gothic sometimes on a Romanesque foundation, and even sometimes Romanesque on Gothic—a style which attained its height in the eleventh and twelfth centuries.

It is with this style that the volume chiefly deals; but its connexion with the earlier Gallo-Roman architecture on the one hand, and with the Norman, as we know it in Great Britain, is not thoroughly worked out. Chap. xi., "Roman Work," shows that Mr. Petit saw some connexion, but he was not able to work it out satisfactorily to himself; he grasps a great deal of the truth, but he lacked the material which might have enabled him accurately to distinguish between different periods. A wider study of the remains of Southern France and of Northern Spain might have done this. Our author studies architecture and construction only. This he does admirably and thoroughly; and, could the solution have been given conclusively by this alone, he would probably have found it. But there are other elements which often fix the date of a building more certainly than the mere architecture; mosaics, or the fragments of them, as at Lescar, Sorde, &c.; sarcophagi, altars, inscriptions. By paying attention to these a distinction might be made between Roman and Romanesque; the one prevailing from the sixth to the tenth century, while the other appears in perfection in the eleventh and twelfth. The Romanesque Church of the eleventh and twelfth centuries is a perfect style, complete in itself, as beautiful and as well adapted for its ends as any other style that followed it, and fully justifying Mr. Petit's preference; but the Roman is mere imitation, often debased imitation, chronologically continuous with Roman work, never equalling it, and never attaining to the definite completeness and beauty of the true Romanesque. It was by no means confined to ecclesiastical architecture.

Mr. Petit mentions some of the marks which we should regard as characteristic of the earlier work; for instance, the use of brick and tile in the construction, in layers with stone work, but especially among the voussoirs or stones of the arch; sometimes a peculiarly hard cement or mortar replaces these tiles—a cement used not only to bind the stone work, but as a real factor in the construction, so hard that it often stands out with sharp edges where the stone has completely worn away. The secret of it in engineering work was long preserved, and perhaps even improved upon, in Spain. It stands out in the canal of Tauste, in the sea-wall of Montevideo, and in some of the earliest work in Mexico. Mr. Petit was, we think, nearer the truth than he was aware when he speaks of such buildings as S. Jean of Poitiers (p. 194)

"perhaps nearer Roman than Mediaeval. . . . The south wall has also some curious work, in which the straight-sided arch appears, also some round arches of very Roman character; brick as well as stone is used in the construction."

Again, p. 200, describing a church at Courcôme, near Ruffec, he remarks:

"It is in such buildings as the present, where the difference in character between different parts of a Romanesque work is stronger and more evident than even between the latest Romanesque and Gothic, that we are induced to assign a remote date to certain portions, and to seek for the characteristics of a style belonging to an earlier period than we feel justified in confidently fixing as the date of any of our own buildings."

Elsewhere (p. 342) he speaks of recognising Roman work in the South of France, such as the Palais Gallien at Bordeaux, as the type or model of some of the principal churches of the eleventh or twelfth century. This continued imitation of Roman work is still more apparent in some of the castles and bridges. Unless we are utterly mistaken, bridges, exactly copying in arch, width of roadway, and construction the old Roman bridges, were continued to a very late date in the remoter parts of Southern France, just as some of the agricultural and domestic implements and forms of pottery remained the same almost to the present time. The non-recognition of this fact, the continuance of Gallo-Roman work and methods, though often degraded, yet aspiring to something new, has led to confusion between two styles. Not seldom has some of this Roman work been attributed to Moorish influence, to which it has some occasional resemblance, and into which mould modern restorers have often forced it. It has indeed occurred to me whether the horse-shoe arch may not have arisen from carrying the inner line of the tall arch to the edge of the huge inner projecting capital, so common in the Roman; but this fact would not make such work really Arabic.

I have dwelt so long on this that I have no space for other portions of the volume. Differences of opinion will exist as to some points treated of in the last chapters. The rest is all thoroughly well done; the architectural illustrations, whether by Mr. Petit or the few by Mr. Delamotte, are excellent. The geometrical formulae, the numerous and careful outlines of mouldings, show how completely Mr. Petit entered into and mastered his subject. The additional notes of Mr. Bell are few, but all are valuable. This edition, besides being more convenient, is a real improvement on the former one. The book should be on the shelves of every lover of French ecclesiastical architecture, and especially of that of Anjou, Poitou, and Perigord.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE HERO OF THE CHALDEAN EPIC.

New York: Nov. 13, 1890.

Allow me to add a word to Mr. Sayce's letter in the ACADEMY of November 8, identifying Gilgames, the true reading for "Gishubar," with the Gilgames of Aelian, son of the daughter of Sakkhoras, king of the Babylonians, who was thrown by his grandfather from the top of a tower, but saved by an eagle in mid-air.

It is curious that the same October issue of the Babylonian and Oriental Record, which contained Mr. Pinches's announcement of the discovery of the name Gilgames, contained also the material for confirming Mr. Sayce's subsequent identification of Gilgames with Aelian's Gilgames. In that number was an article by myself, in comment on Sir Henry Peek's Collection of Cylinders, edited by Mr. Pinches, in which I recalled that No. 18 of that collection had been previously published by me, and had then been compared with another cylinder which I saw, and of which I took an impression in Southern Babylonia. Both of these cylinders give the representation of a small naked human figure astride the back of a flying eagle and holding to its neck. I said that "we must wait for Eastern mythological literature to offer us its variant or original of the Ganymede myth." Here we seem to have the explanation. The personage being borne by the eagle on these two cylinders, which I offered evidence to show were archaic and from Southern Babylonia, is apparently no other than the Gilgames of Aelian, the Gilgames of Mr. Pinches's Syllabary, and the "Gishubar" of the famous Babylonian epic. The two dogs looking up at the eagle and the child are not in a worshipful attitude—an idea of animals foreign to Babylonian art—but are disappointed of their prey. It is not unlikely that the man driving his flock on both these cylinders is the husbandman to whose care the child was committed by the eagle.

George Smith first found for us the portrait of Nimrod; it is interesting to see how we are slowly recovering his biography.

WILLIAM HAYES WARD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE archaeological survey of Egypt recently announced by the Egypt Exploration Fund has received the hearty approval of the French and English authorities at Cairo. Mr. George Fraser and Mr. Percy Newberry, officers of the Fund, have arrived in Cairo for the purpose of immediately commencing operations.

THE council of the Royal Geographical Society has made a grant of £200 to Mr. Theodore Bent, to assist him in making a systematic exploration of the ancient ruins in Mashonaland, which have recently been so much talked about.

THE Guild and School of Handicraft propose to publish before the close of the present year the first volume of their Transactions, edited by Mr. C. R. Ashbee. Mr. G. F. Watts has written a preface; and among the contents will be—Mr. Holman Hunt's address on the opening of the Whitechapel picture exhibition; an address on "Sculpture," by Mr. Alma Tadema; "The Artistic Aspects of Looking Backward," by Mr. H. Holiday; and "Gesso," by Mr. W. B. Richmond. There will also be some forty block illustrations, mostly of a practical nature; and recipes for gesso, stucco, &c., by Mr. Walter Crane.

THE thirtieth annual exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts will open on Monday next, December 15.

THE first annual volume of The Art Decorator, which is announced for immediate publication, will have an introduction by the president of the Royal Society of British Artists, and will be dedicated, by special permission, to the Princess Louise.

A PORTRAIT of Mr. Felix Joseph is, at the unanimous request of the corporation of Nottingham, to be painted by an eminent artist and placed in the Castle Museum in that town, in recognition of his valuable and varied services to art in the Midland Counties, and notably in Nottingham, where his name is held in the very highest esteem.

IN view of the visit of the Archaeological Institute to Edinburgh next August, a loan exhibition illustrative of heraldry in its various aspects is at present being organised, and will probably be held in one or more of the rooms of the National Galleries, Queen Street, in which the collection of Scottish portraits and the Museum of Antiquities are now preserved. An influential general committee is in process of formation, and the name of the Marquis of Bute is already included in the list of patrons. Mr. A. Ross, Marchmont Herald, has undertaken the secretaryship of the historical section of the display, which will deal mainly, but not exclusively, with Scottish examples. Especial attention will be devoted to the artistic and decorative aspects of heraldry; and in this department, under the charge of Dr. Rowand Anderson, architect, and Mr. J. M. Gray, of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, examples of fine heraldic emblazonings, of all countries and periods, will be collected. The exhibition will probably be open, free, during July and the greater part of August. Subscriptions may be forwarded to Mr. A. W. Inglis, secretary of the Board of Manufactures, Edinburgh; and notices of available exhibits should be addressed to the chairman of the general committee, Mr. J. Balfour-Paul, Lyon-King-of-Arms.

WE note another important error among the ascriptions of the casts newly added to the department of the Italian Renaissance at South Kensington. The famous marble holy-water vase from Siena Cathedral is not, as stated, "by Lorenzo di Mariano (Il. Marrina) circa 1508"; but is, like its pendant in the Duomo, a well-authenticated work of an earlier and more vigorous Siennese sculptor, Antonio Federighi, executed circa 1462. Moreover, the great bronze "St. John the Baptist," of Donatello, not only "formerly" adorned the cathedral of Siena, as the South Kensington authorities persist in stating, but still constitutes the chief ornament of the chapel dedicated to the saint there.

THE STAGE.

WE shall next week be able to discuss Mr. Wilson Barrett's important new production, "The People's Idol," which was produced a few nights since at the New Olympic with every token of popular approval.

THE last nights of "Ravenswood" are announced at the Lyceum. The piece—good as it is, and admirably acted—would appear to have been less thoroughly popular than many of its predecessors in Wellington Street. "The Bells" in the first instance, and afterwards "Much Ado about Nothing," are to be revived by Mr. Irving.

"CAPTAIN SWIFT" and "The Red Lamp"—perhaps the most successful works of Mr. Haddon Chambers and Mr. Outram Tristram respectively—are to be the next Monday night productions at the Haymarket.

MR. THACKERAY'S well-known "Rose and the Ring" has been arranged for the theatre as a pantomime for "great and small children," by Mr. Savile Clarke—the music by Mr. Walter Slaughter—and its production will take place at the Prince of Wales's just before Christmas.

MUSIC.

BERLIOZ' "LES TROYENS" AT CARLSRUHE.

IN 1855 Berlioz visited the Princess Wittgenstein at Weimar, and spoke of his intention to write an opera on the subject of Troy and the Trojans; from earliest youth the Aeneid had fascinated him. The Princess replied: "Something grandiose and new will be the result of your passion for Shakspeare combined with this love of the antique;" and added, "Il faut le commencer et le finir." Her prophecy proved a true one. Berlioz, immediately on his return to Paris set to work, and after more than three years' labour, finished "Les Troyens," producing something altogether new, and in many places grandiose to the highest degree. "Les Troyens" consists of five acts. The first and second are connected with Troy, and the rest with Carthage. Berlioz carefully timed the opera, and calculated that the music would take 206 minutes; allowing for entr'actes, the performance, commencing at 7.30, could conclude before midnight. It is worth noting that the composer evidently objected to encores; his music, drama, indeed, is so arranged as to make them almost impossible. In 1863, M. Carvalho, director of the Théâtre Lyrique at Paris, proposed to give only the second part—"Les Troyens à Carthage." So Berlioz wrote a Prologue, consisting of music (Il Lamento) and a recitation recalling, the one, by means of a theme connected with the destruction of Troy, and the other by words, the events contained in the first part "la Prise de Troie." In this patched-up form the second part was produced and performed twenty-one times, and then withdrawn. Some terrible cuts were made, of which the composer bitterly complains in his Mémoires; and he was really glad when the work was abandoned. It was favourably received the first night, but made little or no impression afterwards. Berlioz's early opera—Benvenuto Cellini—had already failed in 1838; even his "Faust" did not satisfy the Parisians; so that, as a composer, he cannot be said to have had honour in his own country. Since his death, in 1869, some measure of justice has been done to his memory. His Symphonies, the "Messe des Morts," and "Faust," have been received with acclamation in Paris; but no attempt has hitherto been made there to revive, or, as we ought rather to say, produce "Les Troyens." The failure of the second part in 1863 could scarcely be taken as a criterion of the work; for Paris hissed "Tannhäuser" in 1861. Had the work been announced at any time since the reaction in favour of Berlioz, surely curiosity would have drawn the public to see it. During his lifetime the composer found many sympathetic friends in Germany; and now, thanks to the enthusiasm and energy of Herr Capellmeister Mottl of Carlsruhe, "Les Troyens" in its entirety has been produced, and with brilliant success. Paris will probably regret that she has lost such a splendid opportunity of paying homage to the memory of one of her greatest musicians. It is all very well to say there should be no nationality in art, but in this special case Paris ought certainly to have taken the lead. The musical world will, however, be thankful to Herr Mottl for making known a masterpiece which has thus been suffered to lie in oblivion for so many years.

The Capellmeister was anxious that the whole, or very nearly all, of the music should be heard, so he played the first part on Saturday evening, December 6, and the second part on the following evening, when he gave the introductory "Lamento" mentioned above. In thus departing from the composer's intentions he committed no grave sin. For the one night performance Berlioz has indicated cuts, sacrificing some of the most characteristic music, which all present at Carlsruhe were thankful to hear.

In "La Prise de Troie" Cassandra commands supreme attention. When the singing, dancing, relic-seeking crowd, that issues from Troy to view the camp deserted by the perfidious Greeks has retired, the maiden strikes the key-note of the tragedy. She has seen the ghost of Hector wandering over the battlements of the city, and she tells of coming woe. The youth Chorebus appears and tries to calm her, and talks of love. She reciprocates his affection, but warns him that death is at hand. As Wagner with Brünhilde, so Berlioz shows the tender as well as the mystical side of his heroine, and thus arouses the sympathy of the audience. The next scene presents the Trojans without the walls, singing praise to the gods of Olympia. Wrestlers exhibit their feats of strength before Priam and Hecuba; Andromache (dressed in black, and not in white as prescribed by Berlioz), leading Astyanax by the hand, advances to an altar, at the foot of which the child places a garland. Aeneas arrives in haste, and relates the Laocoon tragedy. The crowd rushes away to bring the fatal monster, left by the Greeks, within the city as an offering to Pallas. Cassandra remains behind; and as she hears the noise of the advancing procession and the sounds of the inspiring Trojan march, utters passionate exclamations of sorrow and bitter warning. This contrast of joy and mourning is most striking. But the drama grows in intensity. The ghost of Hector surprises Aeneas while asleep in the palace, and bids him fly. In the last scene Cassandra, and the Trojan women who have fled from the scenes of carnage in the streets, assemble round the altar of Vesta. She appeals to them to die rather than become slaves of the conquerors, and is the first to stab herself.

We have given the briefest outline of the story. The music is essentially dramatic and thoroughly original. The music-drama is worked out with consummate skill and genius. It is Berlioz's masterpiece, and as far beyond his other works as Beethoven's Ninth Symphony is beyond his First. Where everything hangs so perfectly together, where the various parts combine to form one grand whole, it is almost impossible to single out any passage for special mention. We will therefore only note the wonderful orchestration in the ghost scene. The composer never displayed his skill in the handling of the orchestra to greater advantage. And now for the inevitable comparison. How does Berlioz as here revealed stand with regard to Wagner? Our answer shall be a bold one: in all but one point the French master deserves to be placed on a level with the Bayreuth master. But this point is an important one. Of the two, Wagner is stronger as a musician. With Berlioz the music sometimes lacks depth; but his drama is so nobly conceived and well developed, that this judgment is formed not at the time. It is the result of cold reflection after the excitement is over. Berlioz holds his audience spellbound from first note to last.

The rôle of Cassandra was taken by Frau Reuss, and Carlsruhe may be proud of such a singer and actress. We have all the while been indirectly praising her, for how could she have produced the wonderful impression she did had the impersonation been tame or faulty? She rose to the situation; her classic attitudes, her earnest gestures, cannot be too highly praised. The other performers deserve commendation.

The staging and scene painting were excellent, but for its due effect "La Prise de Troie" demands a larger stage and immense resources. Carlsruhe did its best. There is one dangerous moment in the drama—the Grecian Horse passes along the back of the stage. The appearance of the monster, like that of the dragon in Siegfried, seems to us a mistake. But Berlioz by his genius triumphed, and one felt that it was not a time even to smile.

In "Les Troyens à Carthage," all the personages are new except Aeneas and Pantheus. It was somewhat difficult to forget the tragedy of the preceding evening, and to listen to music of a very different kind. The opening scene is laid in Dido's palace at Carthage, where the queen is holding high festival. The Carthaginians sing their "Gloire, Gloire, à Didon" to a theme quite Handelian in character. Then builders, sailors, labourers enter, receiving in turn presents from the queen. The music accompanying the various deputations is clever and characteristic. A long duet ensues between the queen and "sister Anna," in which there are many fine passages. The arrival of shipwrecked mariners is announced, and straightway the orchestra gives out the Trojan March "dans le mode triste." The Trojans, with Aeneas disguised, appear; and Ascanius offers as presents the sceptre of Ilione, the crown of Heecuba, and Helen's veil. Suddenly it is reported that Iarbas, the barbarian, is about to attack the city. Aeneas now reveals himself, and offers to fight against the invaders. During all this the music is interesting. The March in the minor key makes a striking impression, and the finale is striking and characteristic. Certain changes in the order of the scenes were here made by M. Mottl, but it is not possible now to describe them in detail. It must suffice to state that the "Chasse Royale" Intermezzo placed next by Berlioz is illogical, seeing that the public are not yet aware of the victor's return. After a duet between Sister Anna and Narbel, Dido's prime minister, the queen receives the conqueror of Iarbas. Then follows a graceful ballet, a quaint dance of Nubian slaves, and a song by Jopas, the court poet. The queen interrupts the last, for Aeneas alone occupies her thoughts. In a fine quintet, a septet of wonderful charm and refinement, and a duet, the fatal passion of the royal lover is fully revealed. In this "Carthage" opera the composer follows to some extent the showy manner of Spontini and Meyerbeer; the elegance and individuality of his music, however, deserves to be fully recognised. The duet is graceful and soothing, but too long. The Intermezzo mentioned above is an orchestral movement of wonderful power and imagination. The stage represents an African forest; naiads are swimming among the reeds; fairies and satyrs flit by; hunters pass and re-pass. Amid rain and lightning Dido and Aeneas appear, and seek refuge from the fury of the storm in a grotto. The means at command at Carlsruhe were insufficient to present this scene with becoming magnificence. But the programme music was finely rendered, and one got a glimpse of the effect which might be made of this curious episode. The departure of the Trojans is at hand. Berlioz attempts another ghost scene; but after the extraordinary apparition already noticed, the spectres—for this time there are several—do not make a very strong impression. A sailor's song and a duet between two soldiers are characteristic. Up to this point Berlioz has written much that is interesting; but it is evident that he was writing for the public more than for himself. There are fine moments, but also some in which interest flags. In the last act, however, inspiration once more seizes the composer, and enables him to present the death scene of Dido with all due solemnity and grandeur. The chorus of the priests of Pluto, the Queen's farewell words—everything is impressive. In style and power it may be compared with "La Prise de Troie." As Dido stabs herself, a vision of the Roman Capitol is seen, and the Trojan March is given in loudest tones by the orchestra. This ending seems to us poor, not to say commonplace.

With reference to the performers, we can only add that Fräulein Friedlein as Anna, and Herr Plank as Narbel were good; but the great success of the evening was undoubtedly Fräulein-Mailhac, whose impersonation of the Queen was worthy of the highest praise. The chorus was good. The audience was again enthusiastic, and there were many recalls. Capellmeister Mottl conducted the whole performance with immense care, intelligence, and energy, and was enthusiastically applauded each night. The opera was, of course, sung in German, the translation of O. Neitzel being used.

The work is to be repeated again this week, and probably in January. It is to be hoped that it will soon be given in London as well as in Paris.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

CONCERTS are so numerous just now that brief notice of the most important is all that can be attempted in the space at our disposal. On Thursday of last week, the latest prodigy, Master Jean Gerardy (aged twelve and a half), gave a violoncello recital at St. James's Hall. This really gifted child had already in private aroused the enthusiasm even of those least favourably inclined, towards exhibitions of the sort, so that critics were not altogether unprepared for the excellence of his performances. The maturity of his expression, however, astonished everyone; and this, aided by the modesty and simplicity of his manner, made it possible to feel that Master Gerardy's claims are based on artistic merits rather than on extreme youth.

At the second of Mr. Henschel's London Symphony Concerts a Suite in E for strings was given. It is adapted from a string Quintett produced at Leipsig some six years ago, and therefore cannot be regarded as a test of the composer's present powers. The Suite is fairly well written; but, except in the slow movement, the themes are trivial and are not made more interesting by development. The remaining items were Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, extremely well played, the Pastoral music from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and the selection from Wagner's "Meistersinger." A notice was circulated with the programme that, in consequence of inadequate subscriptions, Mr. Henschel will be compelled to discontinue these concerts unless further support be forthcoming. Subscriptions are, therefore, invited for the remaining concerts; and on the result of this appeal their continuance will depend. We sincerely trust that a generous response will be made, for the cessation of these concerts under such circumstances would be distinctly discreditable to the taste of London amateurs.

At the ninth Crystal Palace concert, Mr. MacCunn's Ballad, "The Cameronian's Dream," and Dr. Parry's Cantata "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso," were performed for the first time in (or near) London. Mr. MacCunn's work cannot be regarded as altogether worthy of him. It is picturesquely, and, indeed, imaginatively scored; but the quality of inspiration seemed to us, on a first hearing, sadly lacking in thematic material. The treatment, too, in places, borders on the conventional. We have a right to ask Mr. MacCunn for better work than this. Of Dr. Parry's Cantata we spoke fully on the occasion of its production at Norwich. The performance on the present occasion left something to be desired. Mr. Henschel rendered the baritone part with all due effect; but Miss Amy Sherwin was so obviously out of voice that it would have been only fair to ask indulgence for her. The choir did fairly well, considering their unfamiliarity with the music. An excellent rendering of Berlioz's brilliant and beautiful Overture, "Waverley," was given under the direction of Mr. Manns. Dr. Parry and Mr. MacCunn conducted their own works.

TRISCHLER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the BRITISH EMPIRE; or, A Witch's Cavern. By an Anonymous Author. In 1 Vol., 291 pp., crown 8vo, extra cloth, bevelled boards, 6s.

The Glasgow Herald says:—"The Decline and Fall of the British Empire" assumes the shape of a story of London Life and abounds in very vivid and forcible sketches of the state of the Modern Babylon at the close of the nineteenth or beginning of the twentieth century."

The Norwich Argus says:—"Full of profound sympathy with the suffering poor, being an attempt to analyse the disintegrating forces acting upon English Society, such as poverty, lawlessness, unbelief, and false economic theories and to estimate their significance. The result is presented in popular form, in a story of highly imaginative character."

ATALANTA. Vol. III. The Gift-Book of the Season. This volume consists of 800 pages, beautifully printed on highly-finished paper, with 400 illustrations by the first English and American artists. Imperial 8vo, handsomely bound in extra cloth, 8s.

The Spectator says:—"Atalanta" deserves a special word of welcome among the yearly volumes of magazines. It may fairly claim to equal, if not surpass, all its English competitors; it may well challenge comparison with magazines from the other side of the Atlantic."

A VILLAGE PRIEST. The Original Story of (upon which is founded the successful play produced by Mr. BEERBOHM TREE at the Haymarket Theatre). Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Cloth 2s. 6d., picture boards 2s.

UNDER the GUM-TREES. A Collection of Australian Stories by Australian Authors. Edited by Mrs. PATCHETT MARTIN. Paper covers, 1s.

The Whitehall Review says:—"Mrs. Patchett Martin, who has most ably edited this excellent collection of stories, has certainly succeeded in presenting an extraordinary good shillingworth to the public. The volume contains no fewer than a dozen stories by, for the most part, well-known writers."

THE PRISONER of CHILOANE; or, With the Portuguese in South-East Africa. By WALLIS MACKAY. With about 90 illustrations, sketched on the spot by the Author (late the "Captious Critic" of the Sporting and Dramatic News). Bevelled boards, fcap. 4to. Illustrated Cloth Cover in gilt and colours, 7s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"The narrative is written in a bright spirited style; and the illustrations, which, are by the author himself, are full of fun and movement."

The Queen says:—"The perils and adventures he experienced . . . are most amusingly related. Possessed of a marvellous facility for sketching and hitting off the salient peculiarities of the various races which he interviewed. . . . Unlike an ordinary dry matter-of-fact book of travel."

HEART WINS (by Mrs. ALEXANDER) and other Stories.

The Queen says:—"Ten stories are included in this two-shilling volume, among the writers, besides Mrs. Alexander, being Mrs. Newman, Miss Adeline Sergeant, and Ina Cassilis. The tales are varied in character as well as in interest, and therefore offer something attractive to various kinds of readers."

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.—A SECOND EDITION of the “LIFE, LETTERS, and FRIENDSHIPS of RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, First Lord Houghton,” by T. WEMYSS REID, is now ready in 2 vols., with 2 Portraits, price 32s.

The Times says:—

“No more agreeable volumes have appeared for many a day than the two which deal with ‘The Life, Letters, and Friendships of Richard Monckton Milnes, First Lord Houghton.’ The volumes which his biographer has compiled are a perfect storehouse of interesting things, grave and gay, political, philosophical, literary, social, witty. At every page we meet with distinguished men and women; with letters from and to, or conversations with, the men and women who have played leading parts in the vast and complex history of the past three-quarters of a century. Politicians, poets, philanthropists, historians, novelists, men of the world—they all knew Monckton Milnes, were liked and appreciated by him, and wrote to him, or received from him the letters which have been preserved and which can be read in these volumes.”

The Observer says:—

“Space forbids us to say more than this—that for wealth of anecdote, pleasant literary and political gossip, for a moving and brilliant panorama of the best society of our time, we know of no recent biography that can be named in rivalry with Mr. Reid’s ‘Life of Lord Houghton.’”

The Spectator says:—

“These charming volumes are more interesting than most novels, and fuller of good stories than any jest-book. Mr. Wemyss Reid has done his work admirably, has inserted nothing he should not, and omitted nothing he should retain; so that for once we have piquancy without illnature, and gossip which will neither raise scandal nor give pain. The Life is a perfect repertoire of anecdotes, almost invariably of interest, which turn up in the most unexpected way.”

The Athenæum says:—

“Mr. Wemyss Reid has produced an excellent and most entertaining book about one of the kindest of men, and most really estimable in spite of faults which lay upon the surface. Lord Houghton is allowed by his biographer to tell his own tales, and right well he tells them; and the volumes, which would seem to need no lightening, are further brightened by some amusing letters from other persons. It is high Praise, but deserved, to say that Houghton’s old friends will be satisfied with this book, and that those who did not know him, or had but a mere acquaintance with him, will read it feeling it to be fair and truthful, and by reading it will have their opinion of the man, if they have formed one, raised.”

A SELECTION OF VOLUMES SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR’S GIFTS.

FINE-ART VOLUMES.

- *The Picturesque Mediterranean. With a Series of Magnificent Illustrations from Original Designs. Vol. I. 42s.
- The Rivers of Great Britain: Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial. Rivers of the East Coast. With numerous Engravings. 42s.
- The Royal River: The Thames, from Source to Sea. With a Series of Beautiful Engravings. 42s.
- Picturesque Europe. Popular Edition. Containing 65 Exquisite Steel Plates, and nearly 1,000 Original Illustrations. 5 vols. 90s.
- Picturesque America. With 48 Steel Plates, and 800 Original Wood Engravings. 4 vols., 42s. each.
- Picturesque Canada. With 600 Illustrations. 2 vols., 63s. each.
- *Picturesque Australasia. With upwards of 1,000 Illustrations. Complete in 4 vols., 7s. 6d. each.
- Egypt: Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque. By Prof. G. EBERS. Popular Edition. 2 vols. With about 800 Original Engravings, 42s.
- *Abbeys and Churches of England and Wales; Descriptive, Historical Pictorial. Edited by the Rev. Prof. BONNEY, F.R.S. Series 1 and 2, 21s. each.
- *The Cabinet Portrait Gallery. Containing 36 Cabinet Photographs of Eminent Men and Women of the Day. With Biographical Sketches. First Series. 15s.
- *The Magazine of Art. Yearly Volume for 1890. With 12 Exquisite Etchings, &c., and several Hundred Engravings. 16s.

ILLUSTRATED VOLUMES.

- The World of Adventure. Yearly Volume. Fully Illustrated, 9s.
- *London Street Arabs. By Mrs. H. M. STANLEY (Dorothy Tennant). With Pictures handsomely reproduced. Third Edition, 6s.
- *Cassell’s History of England. Revised throughout, and Illustrated with Original Engravings. Vols. I. to III., 9s. each.
- Our Earth and its Story. Complete in 3 vols., 9s. each.
- The Life and Times of Queen Victoria. 2 vols., 9s. each.
- *The Quiver. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. 7s. 6d.
- *Cassell’s Family Magazine. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. 9s.
- *Cassell’s Saturday Journal. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. 7s. 6d.
- Peoples of the World. By Dr. ROBERT BROWN. 6 vols., 7s. 6d. each.
- Our Own Country. With 1,200 Illustrations. 6 vols., 7s. 6d. each.
- Old and New Edinburgh. 600 Illustrations. 3 vols., 9s. each.
- Greater London. By E. WALFORD. 400 Illustrations. 2 vols., 9s. each.
- Old and New London. With 1,200 Illustrations. 6 vols., 9s. each.
- Gleanings from Popular Authors. Illustrated. 2 vols., 9s. each.

* Books thus marked are New Volumes or New Editions.

SCIENTIFIC WORKS.

- *The Story of the Heavens. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, F.R.S., F.R.A.S. With Coloured Plates and Wood Engravings. Cheap Edition. 12s. 6d.
- Star-Land. Being Talks with Young People about the Wonders of the Heavens. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, F.R.S., Illustrated. Third Edition. 6s.
- *Electricity in the Service of Man. Translated and Edited by R. WORMELL, D.Sc., M.A. With nearly 850 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. 9s.
- Science for All. Edited by Dr. ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., &c. With about 1,500 Illustrations. 5 vols., 9s. each.
- Cassell’s New Natural History. Edited by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN, M.B., F.R.S. With 2,000 Illustrations. In 6 vols., 9s. each.
- *Nature’s Wonder Workers. Being some Short Life Histories in the Insect World. By KATE R. LOVELL. Illustrated. 5s.

WITH COLOURED PLATES AND WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

- Familiar Wild Birds. By W. SWAYSLAND, F.Z.S. Four Series. 12s. 6d. each.
- Familiar Garden Flowers. By SHIRLEY HIBBERD. Five Series. 12s. 6d. each.
- Familiar Wild Flowers. By F. E. HULME. Five Series. 12s. 6d. each.
- Familiar Trees. By G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S. Two Series. 12s. 6d. each.
- Cassell’s Popular Gardening. 4 vols. 5s. each.
- European Butterflies and Moths. By W. F. KIRBY. 35s.
- *Birds’ Nests, Eggs, and Egg-Collecting. By R. KEARTON. Second Edition. 5s.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

- *Wanted—a King; or, How Merle set the Nursery Rhymes to Rights. By MAGGIE BROWNE. With Original Designs by HARRY FURNISS. 3s. 6d.
- A LITERARY CURIOSITY.
- *The Marvellous Budget; being 65,536 Stories of Jack and Gill. By the Rev. F. BENNETT. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
- *Lost in Samoa. By E. S. ELLIS. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- *Tad; or, “Getting Even with Him.” By E. S. ELLIS. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- *Magic at Home. By Prof. HOFFMAN. Illustrated. 5s.
- *Schoolroom and Home Theatricals. By ARTHUR WAUGH. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.
- *“Little Folks” Christmas Volume. Illustrated. Boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s.
- *Bo-Peep. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. Boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.
- Flora’s Feast; a Masque of Flowers. Penned and Pictured by WALTER CRANE. 5s.

NEW VOLUME OF “THE INTERNATIONAL SHAKESPEARE.”

O T H E L L O.

Illustrated with a Series of exquisite Photographures from Original Drawing, by FRANK DICKSEE, A.R.A., now ready, price £3 10s.

** A Prospectus will be sent on application.

** Upwards of 1,000 VOLUMES suitable for GIFT-BOOKS will be found in CASSELL & COMPANY’S COMPLETE CATALOGUE, a copy of which will be forwarded post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON; PARIS AND MELBOURNE.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day. The Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS

							6 Months		12 Months.
							£ s. d.		£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	0 12 0	...	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	0 17 6	...	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1 3 0	...	2 2 0
For Eight ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1 15 0	...	3 3 0
For Fifteen ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3 0 0	...	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	0 12 0	...	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	0 17 6	...	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1 3 0	...	2 2 0
For Four ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1 8 0	...	2 10 0
For Six ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1 15 0	...	3 3 0
For Twelve ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3 0 0	...	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	5 5 0	...	9 9 0
For Thirty-six ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8 0 0	...	14 2 6
For Forty-eight ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	10 10 0	...	18 16 0
For Sixty ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	13 0 0	...	23 9 0
For Seventy-two ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	15 10 0	...	28 2 0
For Eighty-four ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	18 0 0	...	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information, can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by
R. C. CARTON, entitled
SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.
Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.
Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9. A farcical comedy in three acts, by Sydney Grundy, entitled
MAY AND DECEMBER.
Preceded, at 8.15, by MADCAP.

COURT THEATRE.
Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.
Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.
Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Woodney,
Brandon Thomas, Allen Ayneworth, Saunders, F. Farren,
Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence
Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellissen, Harrington,
Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 8.50, LONDON ASSURANCE.
Messrs. Chas. Wyndham, W. Farren, Geo. Giddens, A.
Bourchier, W. Blakeley, Cyril Maude, H. H. Vincent,
F. Atherley, S. Hewson, F. Emery; Mesdames Mary Moore,
M. A. Victor, F. Frances, E. Vining, E. Terriss, and Mrs.
Bernard Beere.
Preceded, at 8, by W. Gordon's Comedietta, entitled
DEAREST MAMMA.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERHOHM-TREE.
Every Evening, at 8.15 (Mondays excepted), Messrs. Hugh
Conway and Comyns Carr's successful drama,
THE PEOPLE'S IDOL.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Fred Terry, F. Kerr, Allan, C.
Hudson, Webster Lawson, Robb Harwood, Tapping, &c.;
Mesdames Blanche Horlock, E. H. Brooke, Aylward, and Julia Neilson.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.
Every Evening, at 8.10,
THE PEOPLE'S IDOL.
a new drama, by Wilson Barrett and Victor Widnell.
Preceded at 7.15 by THE CLERICAL ERROR.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.
Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act
Farce, entitled
THE JUDGE.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestock, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H.
Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E.
Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.
Preceded, at 8, by SMOKE.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 7.45,
ANTHONY AND CLEOPATRA.
Messrs. A. Stirling, Kemble Cooper, Everill, Loraine,
Burleigh, Adye, Black, Hilton, Parkes, Gay, Beverley, Druce, Yardley, Fenwick, McVicar, Pringle, Munro, and Carvill.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
ROSE AND THE RING.
Dramatised (by permission) from Thackeray's well-known "Fire-side Pantomime" by Savile Clarke, and music composed by Walter Slaughter (author and composer of "Alice in Wonderland"), will be produced on SATURDAY AFTER-NOON, December 20, and will be played every afternoon and evening during the Christmas Holidays.

SAVOY THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTÉ.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled
THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.
This Evening, at 8.50, THE PHARISEE.
Messrs. Lewis Waller, Herbert Waring, J. Beauchamp,
H. V. Esmond, Herbert-Basing, and M. Marius; Mesdames
Lancaster-Wallis (Miss Wallis), Marion Lea, Florence
West, Minnie Terry, Dennis, and Sophie Larkin.
Preceded, at 8, by MY LADY HELP.

TERRY'S THEATRE.
Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. EDWARD TERRY.
Every Evening, at 9.0, A. W. PINERO's three-act Farce, entitled
IN CHANCERY.
Mr. Edward Terry and Company.
Preceded, at 8.15, by
MY FRIEND JARLET.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.
Manageress, Miss VIOLET MELNOTTE.
This Evening, at 9, THE SOLICITOR.
Messrs. F. Mervin, F. Kaye, G. Wentworth, A. B. Francis,
L. D'O'rsay, H. W. Brame, H. Bedford, and E. Cranston; Mesdames Susie Vaughan, R. Rutland, L. Bell, V. Thorny-croft, and Delia Carlyle.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT INVESTED FUNDS,
LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APART-MENTS THROUGHOUT

ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1888.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free,
on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF
THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE
THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—
REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPON-DENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—
APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER
£2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free.
Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

See Prospectus, page 17, for particulars of Endowment
Assurance Policies combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with Provision for Old Age.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

OLD SHIRTS Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen,
2s.; or very best Irish Linen,
2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White
Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d.,
5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape,
2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry.
Warm, durable, and comfortable. IRISH SOX
Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker
Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., 6s. 9d., and 7s. 9d.
WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES
NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,
And all General and Commercial Work.
Every description of Printing—large or small,

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed.
Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopædia
Brit., says "PROF. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus containing opinions of pupils who have
PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic,
Clerical, etc., professions, post free from
Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

MESSRS. MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LORD TENNYSON, D.C.L.

POETICAL WORKS OF LORD TENNYSON.

Pocket Edition. A New Edition, in 1 vol., 18mo, in morocco binding, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. net.

NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

RELICS OF THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART. Illustrated by a Series of 40 Plates, in

Colours drawn from Relics of the Stuarts by WILLIAM GIBB. With an Introduction by JOHN SKELTON, C.B., LL.D., and Descriptive Notes by W. ST. JOHN HOPE, Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries. Folio, half-pressed Levant morocco binding, gilt edges, £7 7s. net.

* The Edition is limited to 300 copies for sale in England.

The idea of this volume originated at the time of the Stuart Exhibition in London. The book, a sumptuous folio, consists of forty beautiful drawings by Mr. WILLIAM GIBB, of Edinburgh, reproduced in the finest style of lithographic art by Messrs. MACLAGAN &amp; CUMMING, who reproduced Mr. Gibb's drawings of musical instruments in the handsome volume published some years ago by Messrs. A. &amp; C. Black. Mr. Gibb has made the drawings entirely from the objects themselves.

ROYAL EDINBURGH: her Saints, Kings, and Scholars. By Mrs. Oliphant, Author of "The Makers of Florence," "The Makers of Venice," &amp;c. With Illustrations by George Reid, R.S.A. Medium 8vo, 21s.

* Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, 50s. net.

Contents:—PART I.—Margaret of Scotland—Queen and Saint. PART II. The Stewards of Scotland: James I., Poet and Legislator—James II., with the Fiery Face—James III., The Man of Peace—James IV.: The Knight-Errent—James V.: The Last of the Heroic Age. PART III. The Time of the Prophets: Under the Queen Regent—Under Queen Mary—The Triumph and the End—The Scholars of the Reformation. PART IV. The Modern City: A Burgher Poet—The Guest of Edinburgh—The Shakespeare of Scotland.

WITH 182 ILLUSTRATIONS BY HUGH THOMSON.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. A New Edition, with 182 Illustrations by Hugh

THOMSON, and a Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON. Uniform with the Randolph Caldecott Edition of "Bracebridge Hall" and "Old Christmas." Crown 8vo, in cloth, paper label, uncut edges, 6s.: or in cloth gilt, gilt edges, 6s.

* Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, 30s. net.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS AFTER JULIUS SCHNORR.

BIBLE STORIES. By the Rev. A. J. Church, M.A., Professor of Latin in University College, London, Author of "Stories from Homer," &amp;c. With Illustrations after Schnorr. Crown 8vo, 5s.

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S SERMONS.

LEADERS IN THE NORTHERN CHURCH. Sermons preached in the Diocese of Durham. By the Right Rev. J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., late Bishop of Durham, &amp;c. Published by the Trustees of the Lightfoot Fund. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

ORDINATION ADDRESSES AND COUNSELS TO CLERGY. By the Same. 6s.

CAMBRIDGE SERMONS. By the Same. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

LONDON LETTERS AND SOME OTHERS. By George W. Smalley. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

VOL. I.—PERSONALITIES—TWO MIDLOTHIAN CAMPAIGNS. VOL. II.—NOTES ON SOCIAL LIFE—NOTES ON PARLIAMENT—PAGEANTS—MISCELLANIES.

The Guardian says: "We can not only see the impression made by English life on the mind of a keenly observant foreigner dwelling among us, but we may read of many noteworthy facts that escape the notice of most of us."The World says:—"His first volume is filled with a series of sketches of public men under the title of 'Personalities,' which evince powers of sound judgment, delicate appreciation, and graphic description in a very remarkable degree."

A NEW NOVEL BY ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

A COLONIAL REFORMER. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author of "Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right." 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, BART.

OXFORD LECTURES: and other DISCOURSES. By Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., Barrister-at-Law, M.A., LL.D., Edin., Corpus Christi Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford, Hon. Member of the Juridical Society of Berlin; Author of "Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics," "The Land Laws," "An Introduction to the History of the Science of Politics," &amp;c. 8vo, 9s.

A NEW BOOK BY PROFESSOR MAHAFFY.

THE GREEK WORLD UNDER ROMAN SWAY, from POLYBIUS to PLUTARCH. By the Rev. J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A., D.D., Fellow and Professor of Ancient History in Trinity College, Dublin, and Hon. Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford; Author of "Social Life in Greece from Homer to Menander," "Greek Life and Thought from the Age of Alexander to the Roman Conquest." Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NOW PUBLISHING IN MONTHLY VOLUMES, 5s. each. Vol. I. Ready.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF ALFRED AUSTIN. A New Collected Edition, in 5 vols., crown 8vo, 5s. each. Vol. I. THE TOWER OF BABEL: a Celestial Love Drama (Ready). Vol. II. SAVONAROLA (In a few days).

NOW READY, SEVENTH EDITION, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HYGIENE OF THE VOCAL ORGANS: a Practical Handbook for Singers and Speakers.

By Sir MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D. Lond., Consulting Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, formerly Physician and Lecturer on Physiology at the London Hospital, Physician to the Royal Society of Musicians. Seventh Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEWLY PUBLISHED. Crown folio, price £2 12s. 6d. net, richly bound in half-morocco.

THE LIBRARY REFERENCE ATLAS OF THE WORLD. By John Bartholomew, F.R.G.S.

84 folio plates, with Index to 100,000 places.

The Times says: "To those desirous of possessing an atlas of handy size, at a reasonable price, and amply supplied with maps executed with taste and accuracy, Mr. Bartholomew's 'Library Atlas' may be commended. There are few places one is likely to inquire for that will not be found in this atlas."

BY LEWIS CARROLL.

SYLVIE and BRUNO. By Lewis Carroll. With Forty-six Illustrations by Harry Furniss. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

* The Volume contains 395 pages, nearly as many as in the two "Alice" books together.

THE NURSERY "ALICE." Containing Twenty Coloured

Enlargements from Tenniel's Illustrations to "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," with Text adapted to Nursery Readers by LEWIS CARROLL. The cover designed and coloured by E. Gertrude Thomson. 4to, 4s.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

THE CHILDREN of the CASTLE. By Mrs. Molesworth, Author of "Carrots," "The Cuckoo Clock," "The Rectory Children," &amp;c. With Illustrations by Walter Crane. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

POEMS, BALLADS, and BUCOLICS. By H. D. Rawnsley, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

IN the GARDEN of Dreams: Lyrics and Sonnets. By

LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON, Author of "Swallow Flights," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. The Athenaeum says:—"Mrs. Moulton has long since established her name, and a book of poems by her is sure of welcome. 'In the Garden of Dreams' shows her gift of lyrical music, and it shows also her high qualities of tenderness, thoughtfulness, and grace."The Cambridge Review says:—"Each of the sonnets has its genuine beauties, and few can be said to display any flaws. Mrs. Moulton's genius is so admirable that we plead with her for more tribute to life's brightness."

A NEW WORK BY MR. JOHN FISKE.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT in the UNITED STATES CONSIDERED WITH SOME REFERENCE TO ITS ORIGIN. By JOHN FISKE, Author of "American Political Ideas Viewed from the Standpoint of Universal History," "The Critical Period in American History, 1783-89," "The Beginnings of New England; or, the Puritan Theocracy in its Relations to Civil and Religious Liberty." Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

THE POOR LAW. By the Rev. T. W. Fowle, M.A., Rector of Islip. New Edition, with an Appendix on the Poor Law in 1890. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [ENGLISH CITIZEN SERIES.]

WORKS by the late C. B. RADCLIFFE, M.D.

BEHIND the TIDES. 8vo, 6s.

VITAL MOTION as a MODE of PHYSICAL MOTION. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PROTEUS; or, Unity in Nature. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE PLEASURES of LIFE. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., President of the London Chamber of Commerce, Principal of the London Working Men's College, and Chairman of the London County Council. 2 Parts in 1 vol., Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

ENGLISH LYRICS. By Alfred Austin. Edited by WILLIAM WATSON, Author of "Wordsworth's Grave, and other Poems." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 972.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S CHRISTMAS LIST.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

ACROSS EAST AFRICAN GLACIERS:

THE ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST ASCENT OF MOUNT KILIMANJARO
BY DR. HANS MEYER.

Translated from the German by E. H. S. CALDER.

1 vol., super-royal 8vo, 450 pp., containing upwards of 40 Illustrations, consisting of Photographs, Heliogravures, and Coloured Frontispiece in aquarelle, accompanied by 3 Coloured Maps. With Appendix and Scientific Notes dealing with the Geological, Botanical, and Entomological Results of the Expedition. In handsome cloth binding, gilt top, price 32s. Also a Large-Paper Edition, limited to 50 numbered copies, on Japanese vellum, with Engraved Plates in duplicate, Text Illustrations in Brown, signed by the Author.

The value of the results, scientific and otherwise, of this expedition may be gathered from the fact that Kilimanjaro is the loftiest mountain within the limits of Africa, and has afforded a place to all the climates of the world upon its slopes, whilst from its tropical base to its ice-crowned summit it offers facilities for the existence of every variety of plant and animal.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF AFRICA. An important Work

dealing comprehensively with all the various aspects—Geographical, Historical, and Political—of the African Question. By A. SILVA WHITE, F.R.S.E., Secretary to the Royal Scottish Geographical Society. Illustrated with a Set of 14 Maps, specially designed by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. Demy 8vo, price 14s.

"The subject of Africa is not yet exhausted, and it is treated by Mr. Arthur Silva White from a new and very important point of view. Such a scheme is manifestly well conceived, and its judicious execution by Mr. White is admirably seconded by the elaborate series of maps which have been prepared by Mr. E. G. Ravenstein."—Times.

"Mr. A. Silva White has written a most useful book in his volume 'The Development of Africa,' in which the secretary of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society gives a general view of the geography, climate, geology, populations, and religions of Africa, illustrated by an admirable series of maps by Mr. Ravenstein, and then passes on to discuss the slave trade, exploration, the future of commerce, and the recent partition of Africa."—Athenaeum.

HOME LIFE on an OSTRICH FARM. By Annie Martin.

Crown 8vo, antique cover, with 11 Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.
"There is not an uninteresting page in this entertaining book, while there are very few pages indeed which do not contain something genuinely funny."—St. James's Gazette.

"We can honestly recommend this delightful little book."—Pall Mall Budget.
"A charming book, which is, moreover, exceedingly well and wittily written."—County Gentleman.

VOL. IV., "THE WORLD'S GREAT EXPLORERS."
By F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.A., M.D.

THE LIFE OF FERDINAND MAGELLAN, and the FIRST CIRCUMNAVIGATION OF THE GLOBE, 1490–1521.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with 21 Illustrations and 11 Coloured Maps, price 4s. 6d.
"This is not only a record of splendid and successful adventure (not the less successful because Magellan died, like Wolfe, in the arms of victory) but the story of an exquisitely noble life. And the story is admirably told."—County Gentleman.

Second Edition, with Portrait and Obituary Notice of Author.

THE UNKNOWN HORN OF AFRICA: an Exploration

from Berbera to the Leopard River. By the late F. L. JAMES, M.A. Crown 8vo, with 29 Illustrations and Map, price 7s. 6d.

"The Unknown Horn of Africa" is one of the most agreeable books of travel possible to be conceived."—St. Stephen's Review.

"An admirably illustrated reprint of 'The Unknown Horn of Africa.' Good temper and forbearance, high courage and kindness, seem to have uniformly characterised the relations of Mr. James and his companions with the aborigines of Somaliland, and make themselves manifest, moreover, in every page of an exceptionally charming and instructive book."—Daily Telegraph.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EXPLORERS AND EXPLORATIONS.

A SERIES OF ORIGINAL MONOGRAPHS BY LEADING AUTHORS.

Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian, Royal Geographical Society; H. J. MACKINDER, M.A., Reader in Geography at the University of Oxford; and E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S.

Four Volumes are already published, and may now be had in three different bindings:

1. Plain neat cloth cover ... Price per volume 4s. 6d.
2. Cloth gilt cover, specially designed by Lewis F. Day, gilt edges ... 5s. 0d.
3. Half-bound polished morocco, marbled edges ... 7s. 6d.

1. JOHN DAVIS, Arctic Explorer and Early India Navigator.

By CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, C.B. Crown 8vo, with 24 Illustrations and 4 Coloured Maps.

"If the succeeding volumes attain the high standard of excellence of this 'Life of John Davis,' the Series will, when complete, form a biographical history of geographical discovery of the utmost value and interest."—Academy.

2. PALESTINE. By Major C. R. Conder, R.E., Leader of the Palestine Exploring Expeditions.

Crown 8vo, with 26 Illustrations and 7 Coloured Maps.

"No narrative of personal adventure and of scientific discovery should be found more interesting. This may be said to be the first attempt to bring together in a popular form the results of the great work of Palestine survey."—Scotsman.

3. MUNGO PARK and the NIGER. By Joseph Thomson,

Author of "Through Masai Land." Crown 8vo, with 24 Illustrations and 7 Coloured Maps.

"A well chosen adaptation of author to subject sometimes produces a volume of exceptional interest. The life and work of perhaps the greatest African explorer of the last century by one of the most distinguished and capable travellers of our own day is an instance of this."—Athenaeum.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON, LONDON, 32, FLEET STREET, E.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LORD TENNYSON, D.C.L.

POETICAL WORKS OF LORD TENNYSON. Pocket Edition.

A New Edition, in 1 vol., 18mo, in morocco binding, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. net.

BY HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

A PASTORAL LETTER TO THE DIOCESE OF CANTERBURY, written at the request of the Archdeacons and Rural Deans, December MDCCLX.

By EDWARD WHITE, Archbishop. 8vo, price One Penny.

NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS.

RELICS OF THE ROYAL HOUSE OF STUART.

Illustrated by a Series of 40 Plates in Colours drawn from Relics of the Stuarts by WILLIAM GIBB. With an Introduction by JOHN SKELTON, C.B., LL.D., and Descriptive Notes by W. ST. JOHN HOPE, Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries. Folio, half-pressed Levant morocco binding, gilt edges, £7 7s. net.

The Edition is limited to 300 copies for sale in England.

"The idea of this volume originated at the time of the Stuart Exhibition in London. The book, a sumptuous folio, consists of forty beautiful drawings by Mr. WILLIAM GIBB, of Edinburgh, reproduced in the finest style of lithographic art by Messrs. MACLAGAN & CUMMING, who reproduced Mr. Gibb's drawings of musical instruments in the handsome volume published some years ago by Messrs. A. & C. Black. Mr. Gibb has made the drawings entirely from the objects themselves."

ROYAL EDINBURGH: her Saints, Kings, and Scholars.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "The Makers of Florence," "The Makers of Venice," &c. With Illustrations by George Reid, R.S.A. Medium 8vo, 21s.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, 50s. net.

WITH 182 ILLUSTRATIONS BY HUGH THOMSON.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith.

A New Edition, with 182 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson, and a Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON. Uniform with the Randolph Caldecott Edition of "Bracebridge Hall" and "Old Christmas." Crown 8vo, 6s.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Paper. Super royal 8vo, [Out of print.]

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS AFTER JULIUS SCHNORR.

STORIES FROM THE BIBLE. By the Rev. A. J. Church,

M.A., Professor of Latin in University College, London, Author of "Stories from Homer," &c. With Illustrations after Schnorr. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SHELLEY'S POETICAL WORKS. Edited by Professor

DOWDEN. 1 vol., with Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
This volume is uniform with the one-volume editions of Tennyson, Wordsworth, and Matthew Arnold's Poems.

A SPECIAL EDITION OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY."

THE GOLDEN TREASURY OF THE BEST SONGS

and LYRICAL POEMS IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Selected and Arranged, with Notes, by FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Also a limited Edition in fcap. 4to, 21s. net.

NOW PUBLISHING IN MONTHLY VOLUMES, 5s. each. Vol. I. Ready.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF ALFRED AUSTIN.

A New Collected Edition, in 5 vols., crown 8vo, 5s. each. Vol. I. THE TOWER OF BABEL: a Celestial Love Drama (Ready). Vol. II. SAVONAROLA, &c. (Immediately).

NEW NOVELS.

A COLONIAL REFORMER. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author

of "Robbery Under Arms," "The Miner's Right," "The Squatter's Dream." 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

A CIGARETTE MAKER'S ROMANCE. By F. Marion

CRAWFORD, Author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," &c. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

KIRSTEEN: the Story of a Scotch Family Seventy Years Ago.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT, Author of "Neighbours on the Green," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.,

M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., President of the London Chamber of Commerce, Principal of the London Working Men's College, and Chairman of the London County Council. Two parts in one volume. Sixty-sixth Thousand. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

BY LEWIS CARROLL.

SYLVIE AND BRUNO. By Lewis Carroll, With 46 Illustrations by Harry Furniss. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

The Volume contains 395 pages, nearly as many as in the two "Alice" books together.

THE NURSERY "ALICE." Containing 20 Coloured En-

largements from Tenniel's Illustrations to "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," with Text adapted to Nursery Readers by LEWIS CARROLL. The cover designed and coloured by E. Gertrude Thomson. 4to, 4s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE "WONDERLAND" POSTAGE-STAMP-CASE.

Invented by LEWIS CARROLL. This Case contains 12 separate pockets for Stamps of different values, and 2 Coloured Pictorial Surprises taken from "Alice in Wonderland." It is accompanied with 8 or 9 Wise Words about Letter-Writing.

Published by Messrs. EMBERLIN & SON, 4, Magdalen Street, Oxford.

Price 1s. (FISCAL DISCOUNT TO TRADER.)

N.B.—If ordered by post, an additional payment will be required as follows to cover cost of postage:—One copy 1d., two or three do. 2d., four do. 2½d., five to fourteen do. 3d., every subsequent fourteen do. 1½d.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

DR. MOORE'S DANTE AND HIS EARLY BIOGRAPHERS, by PAGET TOYNBEE	583
COL. MALLERSON'S THE MUTINY OF 1857, by H. G. KERNE	584
THE HON. RODEN NOEL'S POOR MAN'S CHRISTMAS, by MISS HICKEY	585
THE TREASURE HOUSE OF TALES BY GREAT AUTHORS, by J. A. NOBLE	586
PROF. FRASER'S LOCKE, by J. A. STEWART	587
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	587
GIFT BOOKS	588
NOTES AND NEWS	591
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	592
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	592
ORIGINAL VERSE: "Joy Cometh in the Morning," by the HON. MRS. LIONEL TOLLEMACHE	592
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	592
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	592
CORRESPONDENCE:— Julian Notary's Edition of "The Kalender of Shepherds," by Dr. H. OSKAR SOMMER; Superstitious use of the Alphabet, by W. G. SMITH; The Monarchical Spirit in France, by W. MARKHIM	593
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	594
SOME POPULAR SCIENTIFIC BOOKS	594
OBITUARY	594
CORRESPONDENCE:— School Books and the University Presses, by W. T. LENDRUM	595
SCIENCE NOTES	595
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	595
THE STONE AGE AND GROUT-FINDS IN DENMARK, by PROF. GEORGE STEPHENS	596
OBITUARY	596
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	596
WILSON BARRETT AND THE NEW OLYMPIC, by F. WEDMORE	597
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	598

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 323, High Holborn.

OPPOSITE GATES OF BRITISH MUSEUM.—HANDSOME FIRST FLOOR FLAT (fireproof) suitable for Learned and Literary Society. Also superior RESIDENTIAL CHAMBERS, 50 Great Russell Street. Also small "ARTS AND CRAFTS" STUDIO.

TO ARTISTS.—Excellent STUDIO, with good top and side lights, in W.C. district, rent moderate; also larger Studio, with North light, electric light.—Apply to Mr. THOMAS CLARKE, 63, Chancery-lane, W.C.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Registers searched; Wills found; Pedigrees traced, in British Museum, Record Office, and Local Registries; Books and Papers copied and translated in any language from manuscript or type.—FRASER & PRACOCK, Antiquarian Genealogists, 1, Doughty Street, W.C.

THE Author of various large Works, extensively reviewed, and of numerous published Magazine Articles, is open to WRITE WORKS, ESSAYS, or LECTURES on Historic, Philosophic, Theologic, Resonant, and General Subjects, in a popular, incisive, or elevated style, or to undertake Translations (at sight) from French, German, Italian, or Swedish.—Address C.W.H., 67, South Lambeth-road, London, S.W.—Anonymous letters or postcards will not be noticed.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

DOUGLAS & FOULIS' NEW CATALOGUE of SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS, Offered at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Includes many important Works on Travel, History, Biography, Poetry, Theology, Ruskin's Publications, Angling, Sport, and Natural History. Magazines, and over 1,200 Cheap Novels (52 pages, 8vo.). Also a SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature. Gratis and post free to any address.—Douglas & Foulis, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threepence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome calf and Morocco bindings, suitable for presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT &amp; FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE WRITING.—1d. per folio (72 words), or 1s. per thousand. Duplicates 4d. per thousand. Neat, accurate, and prompt. Notes taken, rapid shorthand. Technical and scientific reporting and type writing a speciality. References.—Mr. BLACKWELL, 7, Canal Street, Watworth, R.E.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN, 4, Southampton Street, Strand, London.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH LEADERS OF RELIGION. CARDINAL NEWMAN. By R. H. HUTTON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with Portrait, 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

"Few who read this book will fail to be struck by the wonderful insight it displays into the nature of the Cardinal's genius and the spirit of his life."—WILFRIED WARD, in the Tablet.

A LOST ILLUSION. By Leslie Keith. Author of "The Chilcotes," "A Hurricane in Petticoats," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.] "A perfect story."—Manchester Examiner.

THE HONOURABLE MISS: a Tale of a Country Town. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Scamp and I," "A Girl of the People," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.] "Delightfully fresh and winning."—Scotsman.

A DOUBLE KNOT. By G. Manville FENN, Author of "The Vicar's People," "Eli's Children," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.] "Thoroughly exciting."—Athenaeum.

BY J. B. BURNE, M.A.
PARSON and PEASANT: Chapters of their Natural History. By J. B. BURNE, M.A., Rector of Wasing. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready.]

BY S. BARING-GOULD.
SECOND SERIES.

HISTORIC ODDITIES and STRANGE EVENTS. Second Series. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah." Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Ready.]

OLD COUNTRY LIFE. By S. Baring-GOULD, M.A. Second Edition, with 65 Illustrations, large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"As healthy, wholesome reading, full of breezy life and movement, full of quaint stories vigorously told, will not be excelled by any book to be published throughout the year. Sound, hearty, and English to the core."—World.

DISENCHANTMENT: An Every-Day Story. By F. MABEL ROBINSON, Author of "The Plan of Campaign." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

"A remarkable book; one of the half-dozen best novels published during the last ten years."—Star.

METHUEN &amp; CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

MEMORIAL

TO
DRUMMOND OF HAWTHORNDEN.

COMMITTEE—

Viscount MELVILLE, Chairman.

Professor MASSON, Vice-Chairman.

The Marquis of LOTHIAN, K.T.
Viscount STRATHALLAN.
The Lord JUSTICE-GENERAL.
ROBERT DUNDAS, Esq.
General DRUMMOND.
Rev. J. A. BURTON.
T. GRAVES LAW, Esq.
Professor VEITCH.
CHRISTOPHER ARCHIBOLD, Esq.
JOHN SKELTON, Esq., C.B.
G. L. CRAIK, Esq.
GEORGE SETON, Esq.
J. DALRYMPLE DUNCAN, Esq.
J. R. FINDLAY, Esq.
COTTIS TROTTER, Esq.
DAVID MURRAY, Esq.
The Earl of ROSEBURY.
The Earl of PERTH and MELFORT.
Lt.-Col. DRUMMOND MORAY.
Gen. Sir H. P. DE BATHE, Bart.
E. J. G. MACKAY, Esq.
Professor CAMPBELL FRASER.
WILLIAM RAMSAY, Esq.
JOHN TOP, Esq.
ANDREW LANG, Esq.
JOHN MURRAY, Esq.
W. LAIDLAW PURVES, Esq.
J. M. GRAY, Esq.
A. H. MILLAR, Esq.
C. D. DONALD, Esq.
ROBERT MARSHALL, Esq.

Honorary Secretary and Treasurer—

A. P. PURVES, 12, Queen Street, Edinburgh.

DRUMMOND'S Remains lay in the Churchyard of Lasswade, in Mid-Lothian, but there is nothing to mark his resting-place. It is proposed to place on his Grave a MEMORIAL, including a MEDALLION OF DRUMMOND'S HEAD, with his ARMS, and the EPITAPH which he asked should be inscribed on his Tomb, and also to place some further Memorial in Lasswade or Edinburgh.

Subscriptions will be received by Mr. PURVES, Hon. Treas.

CHRISTMAS LECTURES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

PROFESSOR DEWAR, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver a COURSE of SIX LECTURES (adapted to a Juvenile Audience) on "FROST and FIRE," commencing on SATURDAY NEXT, DECEMBER 27TH, at 3 o'clock; to be continued on December 29TH, and January 1st, 2nd, 6th, and 8th, 1891. Subscription (for Non-Members) to this Course, One Guinea (Children under sixteen, Half-a-Guinea); to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas. Tickets may now be obtained at the Institution.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION OF SKETCHES and STUDIES is NOW OPEN, 5, PAUL MALL EAST, from Ten till Five. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S. Secretary.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By A. GARLAND MEARS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book. Price 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, &amp; Co.

JAMES I. and CHARLES I. New Historical Dramatic Poems. 496 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled, 3s. 8d., delivered.—Author, H. TAZELLER, Harewood House, Darlington, Author and Publisher.—For schools, reduced price, cloth boards.

TWO BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

A GIRL of the PEOPLE. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Scamp and I," &c. Illustrated by R. BARNES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Ready.] "An excellent story. Vivid portraiture of character, and broad wholesome lessons about life."—Spectator.

DUMPS and I. By Mrs. PARR, Author of "Dorothy Fox," &c. Illustrated by W. PARKINSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Ready.] "A very sweet and touching story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

TWO BOOKS FOR BOYS.

MASTER ROCKAFELLAR'S VOYAGE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready.] "This will be among the favourites of the Christmas books. It is a rattle and go all through it, and its illustrations are charming."—Gardener.

SYD BELTON; or, the Boy who Would Not Go to Sea. By G. MANVILLE FENN, Author of "In the King's Name," &c. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Ready.] "Who will not rejoice at the sight of the old combination—a story by Manville Fenn, illustrated by Gordon Browne? Full of life and vigour, breeziness and fun."—Journal of Education.

THE WORLD of SCIENCE. Including Chemistry, Heat, Light, Sound, Magnetism, Electricity, Botany, Zoology, Physiology, Astronomy, and Geology. By R. ELLIOT STEEL, M.A., F.C.S., Senior Natural Science Master in Bradford Grammar School. 117 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [School Edition, 2s. 6d.] "Admirable in many ways: well calculated to attract and retain the attention of the young."—Saturday Review.

BALLADS of the BRAVE. Poems of Chivalry, Enterprise, Courage, and Constancy, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. Edited, with Notes, by Rev. F. LANGBRIDGE. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. [School Edition, 2s. 6d.] [Just ready.] "A capital Christmas gift for a boy."—Graphic. "The book is full of splendid things."—World.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &amp;c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

THE SECOND TERM will begin on JANUARY 15TH. The College supplies for persons of either sex, above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature and Theory of Music, The Chemical, Physical, Engineering, Geological, and Biological Laboratories are open daily. The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, Mining Engineering and Surveying; and special arrangements for practical work have been made with various Engineers in and near Bristol. Information with regard to the lodging of Students may be obtained on application. Several Scholarships are tenable at the College.

ENGINEERING EDUCATION.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—Courses of Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering, Mineralogy and Applied Geology for Civil and Mining Engineers. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. Calendar containing full information price 1s. (by post 1s. 3d.). For general Prospectus and further information, apply to JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

LONDON

I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS.

11. INDIAN C.S., &c. 111. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W., under T. MILLER MACGURE, LL.D., Barr-at-Law. DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CHITWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.

Est. 1852.

CRYSTAL PALACE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

THE SCHOOL OF ART, SCIENCE, AND LITERATURE—LADIES' DIVISION.

HIGHEST EDUCATION in FINE ARTS, LETTERS, MUSIC, &c. CHRISTMAS VACATION CLOSURES on JANUARY 5TH. SINGLE STUDIES from date of entry, or full course.

THE JUNIOR SECTION OF THE LADIES' DIVISION (inclusive of up to 16 years of age) RE-OPENS on JANUARY 19TH.

THE SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL ENGINEERING.

THE NEXT TERM OPENS on MONDAY, JANUARY 5TH. I.—Mechanical Course. II.—Civil Engineering Division. III.—Colonial Section, Electrical, Marine, &c.

Prospectuses, with Particulars of Scholarships, Awards, &c., by post from the undersigned, or in the Library next Byzantine Court, Crystal Palace.

F. K. J. SHEXTON, F.R. Hist. S.,

Superintendent Educational Department.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION

for filling up about FIVE VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on the 14th JANUARY NEXT. For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

BRAMPTON PARK, near Huntingdon.

JUNIOR PUPILS EDUCATED while being treated for their STAMMERING. Principal, Mr. B. BEASLEY, Author of "Stammering: its Treatment." Adult stammerers should read this book. Price 13 stamps.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the Five GOLD MEDALS that were awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

BOOKS for CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1891.

CÆSAR.—DE BELLO GALlico. BOOKS

III.—V. (For Schools.) With Notes and Maps. By CHARLES E. MOBERLY, M.A., late Assistant Master at Rugby School. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"Stands high among the best classics we have met."
—Saturday Review.

Books I., II., 2s. 6d.; VI.—VIII., 3s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. With Introduction, Notes, and Index. By J. MARSHALL, M.A., Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh. Books I. and III., 2s. 6d. each.

MILTON.—POEMS. Edited by R. C. BROWNE, M.A. In two Volumes. Fifth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s. 6d.

Sold separately, Vol. I., 4s.; Vol. II., 3s.

In paper covers:

LYCIDAS, 3d. L'ALLEGRO, 3d. IL PENNEROSO, 4d. COMUS, 6d.

MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. BOOK I
Edited by H. C. BEECHING, B.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s. 6d.; in Parchment, 3s. 6d.

PAPILLON AND HAIGH'S NEW EDITION OF VIRGIL'S ÆNEID.

Now Ready, Parts I. and II., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. each part.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College; and E. A. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, and Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham Colleges, Oxford.

PART I.—BOOKS I.—III. PART II.—BOOKS IV.—VI.

"Mr. Papillon's elegant and accurate Virgilian scholarship is well known. This edition will meet all the reasonable needs of an ordinary class taught by a competent master, or of an undergraduate who is not hopelessly backward. It is in handy size and beautifully printed."—Saturday Review.

*. Books VII.—IX. will appear immediately, and the work will be completed by the end of the present year.

MOLIÈRE'S LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by ANDREW LANG, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—CORIOLANUS. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, D.C.L. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 2s. 6d.

*. One of the Clarendon Press Series of Shakespeare's Plays

NEW BOOKS.

NEW EDITION PRINTED ON THE OXFORD INDIA PAPER.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, extra superfine cloth, gilt line, 7s. 6d., and in various superior bindings.

ADDISON.—SELECTIONS from ADDISON'S PAPERS, contributed to the Spectator. Edited, with Introduction, &c., by THOMAS ARNOLD, M.A.

Just published, New Volume, with 12 Maps, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. Vol. II. The WEST INDIAN COLONIES. By C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College and the Colonial Office. Revised throughout by persons possessing special local knowledge of the several Colonies and Dependencies.

NEW EDITION OF STRATMANN'S MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Just published, small 4to, 31s. 6d.

A MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, containing Words used by English Writers from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century. By FRANCIS HENRY STRATMANN. A New Edition Re-arranged, Revised, and Enlarged by HENRY BRADLEY.

UNIFORM WITH THE "WIT AND WISDOM OF SAMUEL JOHNSON."

Just published, tastefully printed in crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled gilt top, 6s.

THE WORLDLY WISDOM of LORD CHESTERFIELD. Selected and Arranged by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Editor of the Clarendon Press Edition of Boswell's "Life of Johnson."

NEW EDITION, REVISED AND CORRECTED.

Just published, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

OUTLINES of TEXTUAL CRITICISM applied to the NEW TESTAMENT. By C. E. HAMMOND, M.A. Fifth Edition.

N.B.—All Book Buyers will find it worth their while to examine carefully the Catalogue of CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS,

CONTAINING MANY

STANDARD WORKS IN GENERAL AND EDUCATIONAL LITERATURE,

Which will be sent post-free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

(LIMITED.)

THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, OR ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
AND
2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

BERNARD QUARITCH,

15, PICCADILLY, LONDON,

OFFERS at the net prices affixed—

A magnificent work on the Inedited Monuments of Spanish Art.

Carderera y Solano (V.) Inconographia

Espanola, Coleccion de Retratos, Estatuas, Mausoleos y demas Monumentos Ineditos de Reyes, Reinas, grandes Capitanes, Escritores, &c., desde el siglo X hasta el XVII., con texto biografico y descriptivo en Espanol y Frances. 2 vols., royal folio, 84 fine plates, some being beautifully coloured and heightened in gold, half-morocco, gilt tops, uncut (published at £21), £10 10s. [Madrid, 1855-64.]

The Author, who was also the proprietor, printed, but a very small edition of this grand work, the darling fruit of his constant studies, on the production of which he lavished time and money with an unsparring hand. He only sold a few copies, and the book has therefore remained unknown to the general public, although it is certainly unsurpassed, if it has ever been equalled, in the truth and beauty of its plates, and in the accuracy of its text, by any other work on the Antiquities of Spain.

*. A superb Large-Paper copy of this grand work may still be had for £21.

Family History.—The Brocas Family:

Burrows (Montagu) the FAMILY of BROCAS of BEAUREPAIRE and RICHIE COURT, hereditary Masters of the Royal Buck-hounds; with some Account of the English Rule in Aquitaine. Royal 8vo, pp. xii. and 496, and 26 Illustrations from seals, tombs, ruins, &c. (pub. at £2 2s.), half-bound, uncut, 10s. 6d. [1888.]

Clark's (George T., of Talygarn, F.S.A.)

GENERAL PRINCIPLES of the older FAMILIES of the LORDSHIPS of MORGAN and GLAMORGAN, also under the title of Limbus Patrum Morgani et Glamorganie. Stout royal 8vo, consisting entirely of Genealogical Records and Pedigrees, stout 8vo, 639 pp., and the Pedigrees, cloth, £1 1s. [1892.]

A work indispensable to every Genealogist, now for the first time collected, collated and printed, with Indexes of Names and Places.

Fortescue Family.—History of the FAMILY of FORTESCUE in all its BRANCHES, by THOMAS FORTESCUE (LORD CLERMONT). Second Edition, thick imperial 4to, xx. and 502 pp., Chartier de Richart Fortescue, Seigneur Du Buisson, 79 pp. and Index, 42 Portraits, Views, and Plates of Monuments and Facsimiles, Woodcuts, and 16 Pedigrees, half-bound, uncut, Roxburghe style, £1 11s. 6d. [1880.]

An important Family History, richly illustrated. Printed at the expense of Lord Clermont.

Glanville: Glanville-Richards (W. U.S.).—

RECORDS of the ANGLONORMAN HOUSE of GLANVILLE, 1050-1880. 4to, Coloured Portraits, Coats of Arms, and numerous Pedigrees (pub. at 35s.), extra cloth, £1 1s. [1882.]

Very few copies were printed of this valuable Family History.

Scott.—Memorials of the Family of

SCOTT, of SCOTS HALL, KENT, with Appendix of Illustrative Documents, by JAMES RENAT SCOTT, F.S.A. Royal 4to, 86 Woodcut Illustrations, and many Coats of Arms, cloth, £1 11s. 6d. [1876.]

Faraday's Experimental Researches in

ELECTRICITY, facsimile reprint. 3 vols., 8vo, with 16 Plates, cloth, £2 2s. [1839-55.]

Steel and Temple's Wide-Awake Stories.

A Collection of Tales told by Little Children between Sunset and Sunrise in the Punjab and Kashmir. 12mo, xii. and 448 pp. (pub. at 10s. 6d.), cloth, 5s. [Bombay, 1854.]

A marvellous collection of popular tales, handed down by tradition from time immemorial; a fascinating volume for the reader of weird stories and the student of comparative mythology.

Forlong (Major-Gen. J. G.R.).—Rivers

of LIFE, or, Sources and Streams of the Faiths of Man in all Lands, showing the Evolution of Religions Thought from the rudest Symbolisms to the latest Spiritual Developments. 2 vols., 4to, 1,270 pp., 17 Plates, Maps and 358 Wood Engravings of the Symbols of Early Worship, with a large Coloured Chart, in a case, cloth, (pub. at £6 6s.), £2 3s. [1882.]

This is a large and important work on the comparative History of Religion; it includes researches on Tree, Serpent, Phallic, Fire, Sun and Ancestor Worship, the Early Faiths of Western Asia, Faiths of Western Aborigines in Europe, Faiths of Eastern Aborigines, Non-Aryan, Aryan, &c.

Galerie de Dresde.—Grand engraved

Edition of the DRESDEN GALLERY: Recueil d'estampes d'après les plus célèbres Tableaux de la Galerie Royale de Dresde. 3 vols., atlas folio, containing 3 Portraits, Plans, and 153 beautiful Engravings after the Old Masters, good impressions, hf. bd. roan, £25. [Dresde, 1789-1874.]

Glass, its History and Manufacture:

WALLACE DUNLOP (M.A.) GLASS in the OLD WORLD. 8vo, viii. and 272 pp., with Index, 6 Plates, plain and coloured, cloth, 12s. 6d., now 7s. 6d. [London: Field & Tuer, 1882.]

The Saturday Review says: "This is by far the most comprehensive, comprehensible, complete, and at the same time entertaining book on Old Glass that has yet been published in English."

Haite's Plant Studies. Now complete in

Ten Parts. Royal folio. Comprising 50 Plates of Plants, their Stems, Leaves, Flowers, and Fruit, with Descriptive Text, in wrappers, complete, cloth, 30s. [1845-5.]

Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise has expressed her approval of Mr. Haite's designs, and has accepted the dedication of the work.

Hapgood's Epic Songs of Russia, with an Introduction by Professor F. J. CHILD. Post 8vo, xvi. and 358 pp., cloth, 10s. 6d. [New York, 1886.]

Harting's British Animals Extinct

within HISTORIC TIMES, with some Account of British Wild White CATTLE, by J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, pp. 256, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, Sherwin, and others, cloth, 6s. [1880.]

—the same, Large-Paper, royal 8vo, woodcuts, boards, very few remain, 15s. [1880.]

Holbein's Dance of Death, the full series of Wood Engravings, reproduced in phototype from the proofs and original editions. Edited by Dr. F. LIPPMAN, Director of the Royal Print-Room, Berlin. 16mo, 58 Plates, Roxburghe binding, 7s. 6d. [1880.]

In no other edition appear all the woodcuts; they appear here for the first time united.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

*. A batch of Catalogues of Rare, Valuable, and Curious Books may be had for six penny stamps.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

DEAN &amp; SON'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Essays in English Literature.

1780 to 1860.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CONTENTS.

The Kinds of Criticism—Crabbe—Hogg (Ettrick Shepherd)—Sydney Smith—Jeffery—Hazlitt—Moore—Leigh Hunt—Peacock—Wilson (Christopher North)—De Quincey—Lockhart—Praed—Borrow.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 34, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

Love's Victory: Lyrical Poems.

By JOHN ARTHUR BLAIKIE.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 34, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 3s.

Fathers of Biology.

HIPPOCRATES—ARISTOTLE—GALEN—VESALIUS—HARVEY.

By CHARLES McRAE, M.A., F.L.S.,
Formerly Scholar of Exeter College, Oxford.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 34, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. No. 375, for JANUARY, contains:—

- 1.—EXIT MCKINLEY. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
- 2.—TWO TREATISES on the SUBLINE. By H. L. HAVELL.
- 3.—HE FELL AMONG THIEVES. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN. Chapters XI.—XIII.
- 4.—THE WRECK of the "OCEAN-QUEEN." By Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY.
- 5.—A POLITICAL SURVIVAL. By EDWARD ARMSTRONG.
- 6.—THE JUBILEE of TONIC SOL-F-A. By J. C. HADDEN.
- 7.—THE SHAM FIGHT at RUDDIFORD. By GEORGE FLAMBERG.
- 8.—A HUNT for a HEAD. By E. D. CUMING.
- 9.—NIGHT in the CROMARTY FIRTH. By G. W. HARTLEY.
- 10.—THE BRONZE-CASTER. By MORLEY ROBERTS.

MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For JANUARY, profusely illustrated, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

- 1.—STUDY of a GIRL'S HEAD. After EUGENE VIDAL. Front.
- 2.—WHEN RUNNELS BEGAN to LEAP and SING. ALFRED AUSTIN.
- 3.—ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL. C. W. ALCOCK, Sec. Football Assoc. With illustrations.
- 4.—LA GRANDE CHARTREUSE: a Lonely Island of Prayer. The Very Rev. H. DONALD M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. With illustrations.
- 5.—CHRISTMAS EVE at WARWINGIE. MARY GAUNT.
- 6.—"FIN DE SIECLE." VIOLET FANE.
- 7.—CABS and their DRIVERS. W. OUTRAM TRISTRAM. With illustrations by Hugh Thomson.
- 8.—THE EDUCATION of GENIUS. JAMES SULLY.
- 9.—BOOKBINDING. T. J. CORDEN-SANDERSON. With illustrations from books bound by the Writer.
- 10.—THE WITCH of PRAGUE. Chaps. VII. and VIII. F. MARION CRAWFORD. Illustrated by W. J. HENNESSY.

MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

LOISETTE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no device is needed. Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy," and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopædia Brit., says "Prof. LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus containing opinions of pupils who have PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic, Clerical, etc., professions, post free from Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Cuffs, and Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, 2s. 6d.; or Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 8d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape, 2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry. Warm, durable, and comfortable. Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., 6s. 9d., and 7s. 9d. WOOL PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

B. &amp; E. M'HUGH &amp; CO., Limited, BELFAST

THE LADDER:A REVIEW OF POLITICS, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART
A NEW SIXPENNY MONTHLY.

Edited by DAVID BALSILLIE, M.A.

JANUARY NUMBER Published in London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow
TO-DAY, December 20.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

LEADERS of the PEOPLE. I.—Bismarck. THOMAS RALEIGH, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.
THE PARNELL EPISODE. The Editor.
BRITISH NOVELISTS. ARTHUR F. BURNET, M.A., London.
TENDENCY of MODERN POETRY. F. F. ROGET, B.A.
SIR WALTER SCOTT. The Editor.
BRITISH LITERATURE in FRANCE. PRINGLE NICHOL.
"BEST BOOKS." Natural History. J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., F.R.S.E.
THE GOLD of RABELAIS. Chap. I.
THE ELEMENTS of LITERATURE. JOHN A. SMITH, M.A.
HYDRAULIC POWER. STEPHEN SMITH, B.Sc.
FABLES. THOMAS DAVIDSON.
THE POETRY of KEATS. J. H. HALLARD.
E. T. W. (A.) HOFFMAN. J. T. BEALBY, B.A.
REVIEWS:—
Morill's Russia. H. J. MACKINDER, M.A. OXON.
The Life and Times of Robert Owen. JOHN RAE, M.A.
Barthelemy Saintroy. F. F. ROGET, B.A.
THE PARENTS' COLUMN:—
The Choice of Books. E. E. CUTTELL.
The Song of Roland. M. B. WILLIAMSON.
Ranunculus. (From the German).
A Girl's Triumph. ALICE SMALL, B.L.
Some Good Books. MARCIA DODS.
PERIODICAL LITERATURE. D. P. HEATLEY, VANS DUNLOP.
SCHOLAR in HISTORY. Professor KIRKPATRICK, LL.D., Edinburgh University.

"The scheme of the new periodical is highly promising."—Athenæum
"A new sixpenny monthly, which may be expected to take a high place. Among the contributors are some of the best-known writers of the day on literary, scientific, and other matters. The editor is himself a man of singularly wide sympathies and great originality."

London: MARSHALL BROTHERS, 3, Amen Corner.
Edinburgh and Glasgow: JOHN MENZIES & Co.
Orders received by Booksellers, Newsagents, and at all the Railway Bookstalls.

CHRISTMAS VOLUME.

OF JOYOUS GARD: a Poem. By Ælian
PRINCE. The Golden Spear and Harp Edition. 2s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

OF PALEMIDE, Famous Knight of King

"Arthur's Round Table. 3s. Large-Paper copies (25 left), 21s. each.
"That he is a poet, and of a high and fine order, of the singing brotherhood, will hardly be doubted by those who note his management of the Romantic Tale, and the passages descriptive of Tintagel, Camelot, and Joyous Gard."—Scotman. "He has a very correct ear, a gift of clear, vigorous narrative, and great command of pictorial description."—Manchester Examiner and Times. "A remarkably fine and highly-finished poem."—Venetian Daily Chronicle. "The versification deserves praise for its evenness and care at a time when genius believes itself privileged to sanction doggerel; and in the general treatment of the motive there is a good deal of real felicity, with evidences of true artistic sensibility."—Daily Leader. "He has caught the fire of the ancient minstrel and sings his song with a rare combination of fervour and fluency."—Weekly Chronicle.
E. W. ALLEN, 4, Ave Maria Lane.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1808.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Also for HIRE ONLY.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Now ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, large post 8vo.
price 10s. 6d.SCENES THROUGH the BATTLESMOKE; being Reminiscences in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. By the Rev. ARTHUR MALE, Army Chaplain at Lucknow, and in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns. With Portrait of the Author, and 8 large Illustrations by Sidney Paget, War Artist to the Illustrated London News in these Campaigns.

Lord Cranbrook writes:—"Mr. Male's personal knowledge of the events makes his interesting book more valuable."

Large post 8vo, handsomely bound, price 7s. 6d.

FRENCH SOLDIERS in GERMAN

PRISONS; being Reminiscences during and after the Franco-German War. By Canon E. GUERS, Army Chaplain to the French Forces.

The work is illustrated with Portraits of the leading actors in these terrible scenes. The thrilling narrative helps one to realise the self-denial and heroism of those who gave up much of the comfort of this life to tend the sufferings of the sick, wounded, and helpless soldiers suddenly interred in fortress and hospital.

Handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 6s.

SOUVENIRS of the SECOND

EMPIRE; or, the Last Days of the Court of Napoleon. By the COMTE de MAUGNY, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

This interesting volume of the reminiscences of a Cabinet Minister is full of anecdotes relating to all that passed amongst the Court and Society, the Clubs and the Theatres, in the reign of Napoleon III.; also numerous portraits and particulars as to the lives of all the celebrities of the period.

Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 5s.

THE DOYLE FAIRY BOOK. Con- sisting of Twenty-nine Fairy Tales. Translated from various Languages by ANTHONY R. MONTALBA. With 24 Illustrations by RICHARD DOYLE, a Memoir of Doyle, and an Introduction by a Member of the Folk-lore Society.

Fcap. 4to, handsomely bound, cloth, price 5s.

BERGE'S COMPLETE NATURAL

HISTORY of the ANIMAL, MINERAL, and VEGETABLE KINGDOMS. Edited by R. F. CRAWFORD, F.R.S. With 16 large exquisitely Coloured Plates, containing over 250 Animals and over 100 smaller Illustrations.

This is the most complete book of any yet issued on this subject, inasmuch as it deals fully with Birds, Beasts, Reptiles, Insects, Trees, Plants, Minerals, Fossils, &amp;c., each part of the subject being profusely illustrated, thus showing at a glance the appearance of the object described.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, large post 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME: his Life and

Character. By a FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great ex-Chancellor, from his childhood upwards.

Cloth, handsomely bound, large post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

BY MADAME CARETTE,

Private Reader to the Empress Eugénie.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS of the

COURT of the TUILERIES; or, the Eve of an Empire's Fall.

THIRD EDITION. Price 6s. Large post 8vo.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MY MISTRESS the EMPRESS

EUGENIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries.

Handsomely bound in cloth boards, 4to, price 2s. 6d.

UNCLE DUMPIE'S MERRIE MONTHS.

By ROBERT ST. JOHN CORBET.

A most amusing Story, told in lively Verse, showing the Adventures of Uncle Dumpie and his Nephews and Nieces in the Channel Tunnel. With 12 humorous Full-Page Illustrations, and numerous smaller ones by J. H. Roberts.

Crown 4to, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, red edges, price 7s.

The LITTLE ONE'S OWN COLOURED

PICTURE ANNUAL for 1891. Handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gold and colour, with over 500 Stories in Prose and Verse, and 208 Full-Page fresh novel Pictures in Chromo Colours, besides Kindergarten Lessons, Riddles, Puzzles, &amp;c.

Just ready, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, emblematic cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED BOOK of WONDERS,

EVENTS, and DISCOVERIES. By JOHN TIMBS, Author of "Things not Generally Known," &amp;c. New and Revised Edition, with numerous Illustrations.

London. DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet Street, E.C.,
Office of "Debrett's Peerage."

EDWARD STANFORD'S NEW BOOKS.

"A series of beautiful Gift-books."

Christmas Bookseller.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES; AND OTHER LECTURES.

A Sequel to "The Fairyland of Science."

By ARABELLA B. DUCKLEY (Mrs. FISHER).

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with nearly 100 Illustrations, 6s.; bound in calf, 11s.

"A sequel to that very delightful book 'The Fairyland of Science,' and deals with the marvels revealed by the telescope, the microscope, and the photographic camera. For young people of scientific tastes a better book could not be found than this. The author's exposition is perfectly clear and simple. She possesses the art of interesting the young in matters remote from their ordinary experience, and of rendering complex questions perfectly intelligible to children. The chapter on the spectroscope, for instance, and that on volcanoes, are models of luminous, unpedantic, yet strictly scientific interpretation of natural laws and phenomena. The work is illustrated with many beautiful engravings."—Saturday Review.

"A better book could scarcely be placed in the hands of an intelligent boy or girl. It will aid the proper direction of that finest instrument of culture—an inquisitive mind, and teach the child to find answers to the thousand questions that are put to the parent with the ceaseless 'how?' and 'why?'"—Manchester Examiner.

"In the field of natural science Mrs. Fisher has won for herself a position peculiarly her own. She has secured the attention and interest of the young.... A simple style and a light touch is what is wanted, and this is precisely what we find in the authoress's various books on animate and inanimate nature. They form a series of beautiful gift-books, and are as pleasing to the eye as they are replete with instruction for the mind. The illustrations of the new volume are really admirable and are scattered in lavish profusion."—Christmas Bookseller, 1890.

WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE.

Twenty-third Thousand. 6s.; calf, 11s.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN. Thirteenth Thousand. 6s.; calf, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. each, sold separately.

SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE. Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d.; calf, 14s.

ANIMALS from the LIFE. Two

Hundred and Fifty-five Coloured Illustrations. Drawn by HEINRICH LEUTEMANN, with Descriptive Letterpress. Edited by ARABELLA B. DUCKLEY (Mrs. FISHER). Crown 8vo, handsome cloth binding, 10s. 6d.

"This is a really beautiful child's book. The drawings of the animals depicted are as superior to the old class of picture books as a portrait by Millais is to a signboard. The chromo-lithography is also extremely good. In reproducing Leutemann's work for English children, Mrs. Fisher has made considerable alterations, rendered necessary in a book designed for use in our own schoolrooms and nurseries. No more excellent children's Christmas gift-book could be found."—Bookseller.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of the EARTH: a Popular Account of Geological History. By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON, B.A., F.G.S. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Recently published, THIRD EDITION, REVISED and ENLARGED.

STANFORD'S LONDON

ATLAS of UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY. Quarto Edition. Containing 46 Coloured Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Steel and Copper Plates, and an Alphabetical Index to the Geography of the World. Half-morocco, cloth side, gilt edges, 30s.

"New friends and new loves are capital things provided they are not allowed to displace the old, and for our part we have no intention of ever putting out of its place Mr. Stanford's 'London Atlas,' the third edition of which in quarto form is now before us. We have used it constantly for years, and we have never found it surpassed for the combined merits of handiness, cheapness, accuracy, and clearness. The maps, of course, are fewer and on a smaller scale than those of its larger rivals; but this drawback is, perhaps, compensated by greater ease of reference. We are not sure ourselves that a compendious atlas, supplemented at different times by the sheet maps which all the best publishers issue at times when a particular district is of interest is not a better thing than a more extensive volume, which, after all, never can pretend to extreme detail on the small scale. However this may be, all good things are good in their own way, and in its way the 'London' is one of the best."—Saturday Review.

LONDON:

EDWARD STANFORD, 26 & 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHANCING CROSS, S.W.

Books Published by W. & R. Chambers.

Vol. VI., now ready.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, with Maps and Wood Engravings. In 10 vols., Imperial 8vo. Entirely New Edition. Vols. I., II., III., IV., V. and VI. are now ready.

Price 10s. each, cloth; 15s. each, half-morocco.

The Work is also being issued in Monthly Parts, price 1s. each.

"The leading literary, political, scientific, and artistic subjects have been entrusted to specially qualified writers, whose articles are, as a rule, entirely new. It is already evident that the new edition of 'Chambers's Encyclopædia' will reflect the highest credit on its editor and its publishers."—Spectator.

"Many distinguished names will be found among the list of contributors, and the articles throughout are models of conciseness, while embracing the latest facts."—Daily Chronicle.

"The best men in all departments are contributors, while the aid of specialists has been largely enlisted to make the articles complete synopses of the latest knowledge."—Sheffield Independent.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL VOLUME for 1890. Containing "My Shipmate Louise," by W. CLARK RUSSELL; and numerous Short Stories and Essays by Eminent Writers, Papers on Modern Travel, Popular Science, and other topics of current interest. Now ready, cloth, 9s.

BOOK of DAYS. A Repertory of Popular Antiquities, Folk-Lore, Curious Fugitive and Unedited Pieces, Oddities of Human Life, and Character. Elaborately illustrated with Engravings. 2 vols., cloth, 11s.; half-calf, 12s.

CYCLOPEDIA of ENGLISH LITERATURE. Being a History, Critical and Biographical, of British Authors, from the Earliest to the Present Times; with Specimens of their Writings. Illustrated with Portraits. 2 vols., cloth, 20s.; half-calf, 22s.

ST. GILES, EDINBURGH: Church, College, and Cathedral. By J. CAMERON LEES, D.D., LL.D. In 1 vol., with numerous Illustrations, demy 4to, roxburgh binding, price 25s.

JOSHUA MASON: a Biography. With Sketches of the History of the Steel-Pen and Electro-Plating Trades. By JOHN THACKRAY BUNCE. With Portrait and Illustrations, price 3s. 6d.

"This is a volume which ought to find a place in every young man's library. It may, indeed, be regarded as pre-eminently a biography for the rising generation."—Scotsman.

ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Containing Etymology, Pronunciation, and Meaning; Etymology of Names of Places; Words and Phrases from the Latin, the Greek, and Modern Foreign Languages; Abbreviations; List of Mythological and Classical Names. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

BENEFICENT and USEFUL LIVES: being Lives of Distinguished Philanthropists. With Portraits, 2s. 6d.

GREAT THINKERS and WORKERS: being the Lives of Thomas Carlyle, Lord Armstrong, Lord Tennyson, Charles Dickens, Sir Titus Salt, W. M. Thackeray, Sir Henry Bessemer, John Ruskin, James Nasmyth, &c. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

GOOD and GREAT WOMEN: a Book for Girls. Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Baroness Burdett-Goutts, Mrs. Beecher-Steele, Charlotte Brontë, Mrs. Hemans, Dorothy Pattison. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

GREAT HISTORIC EVENTS. The Conquest of India, India Mutiny, French Revolutions, the Crusades, the Conquest of Mexico. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

HISTORICAL CELEBRITIES. Oliver Cromwell, Washington, Napoleon Bonaparte, Duke of Wellington. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

LITERARY CELEBRITIES. Wordsworth, Campbell, Moore, Jeffrey. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

RECENT TRAVEL and ADVENTURE. Stanley, Lieutenant Greeley, Joseph Thomson, Livingstone, Lady Brassey, Vanburen, Burton, &c. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

TRADITIONS of EDINBURGH. By Robert Chambers, LL.D. With Portrait and Illustrations, 2s. 6d.

SONGS of SCOTLAND PRIOR to BURNS. With the Tunes. Edited by ROBERT CHAMBERS. Illustrated, 2s. 6d.

HEROES of ROMANTIC ADVENTURE. Lord Clive, Captain John Smith, Good Knight Bayard, Garibaldi. Illustrated, 2s.

OUR ANIMAL FRIENDS. The Dog, Cat, Horse, and Elephant. Illustrated, 2s.

AIRIE GILBOY: a Scottish Story. By William Chambers, LL.D. 2s.

ESSAYS, FAMILIAR and HUMOROUS. By Robert Chambers, LL.D. In 2 vols., cloth, each 2s.

CHAMBERS'S COOKERY for YOUNG HOUSEWIVES. New Edition. Edited by ANNIE M. GRIGGS, First-class Diplôme, South Kensington School of Cookery. Cloth, 1s.

NEW SERIES of CHAMBERS'S LIBRARY for YOUNG PEOPLE. Cloth, with Illustrations.

THEIR HAPPIEST CHRISTMAS: a Tale for the Young. By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," "We Two," &c. 1s.

THE GREEN CASSET, and other Stories. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "The Cuckoo Clock," &c. Illustrated, 1s.

ZOE. By the Author of "Laddie," "Tip-Cat," "Lil," &c. 1s.

THE STEADFAST GABRIEL: a Tale of Wichnor Wood. By MARY HOWITT. Illustrated, 1s.

THE SWAN'S EGG. By Mrs. S. C. Hall. 1s.

FIRESIDE AMUSEMENTS: a Book of Indoor Games. Illustrated, 1s.

PERSEVERANCE and SUCCESS: the Life of William HUTTON. 1s.

MUTINY of the "BOUNTY," and LIFE of a SAILOR BOY. 1s.

UNCLE SAM'S MONEY-BOX. By Mrs. S. C. Hall. 1s.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED,

47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON: AND EDINBURGH.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons' PUBLICATIONS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

ANNALS of a FISHING VILLAGE.

Drawn from the Notes of "A Son of the Marshes." Edited by J. A. OWEN. With 7 Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HANDSOME CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

COMPLETE IN SIX VOLUMES.

TALES from "BLACKWOOD." Third

Series. Bound in extra cloth, 15s.; roxburgh, 21s.; half-calf, 25s.; half-morocco, 28s.

"These charming and welcome volumes are full of interest."—Morning Advertiser.

"The best material in literary instruction and amusement, put together in the most artistic and attractive manner."—Whitehall Review.

"They are capital stories and make very interesting volumes."—Scotsman.

IN SIX HANDSOME VOLUMES.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT,

from "Blackwood's Magazine." Bound in cloth, 15s.; and in half-calf, 25s.

"A better collection of stories of adventure, sport, and travel it would be difficult to find."—Echo.

"A capital collection of stirring narratives of travel by land and sea."—Saturday Review.

GOLDEN LIVES: the Story of a

Woman's Courage. By FREDERICK WICKS. With 120 Illustrations. 8vo, 21s.

"This is an excellent novel.... The plot is involved without being intricate, and it is developed with a logical skillfulness rarely to be found. The sketches are clever and amusing, and have the rare merit of really illustrating the story."—Standard.

SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT of

ST. PAUL. By GEORGE MATHESON, D.D., Author of "Can the Old Faith Live with the New?" "The Psalmist and the Scientist," "Sacred Songs," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CREED in SCOTLAND. An Ex-

position of the Apostles' Creed. With Extracts from Archbishop Hamilton's Catechism of 1562, John Calvin's Catechism of 1556, and a Catena of Ancient Latin and other Hymns. By JAMES RANKIN, D.D., Minister of Muthill, Author of "Handbook of the Church of Scotland," &c. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SELECTIONS from the POEMS of

JEANIE MORISON. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

NOW COMPLETE IN FOUR VOLUMES.

HISTORY of the CATHOLIC CHURCH

of SCOTLAND. From the Introduction of Christianity to the Present Day. By ALPHONS BELLESEHRIM, D.D., Canon of Aix-la-Chapelle. Translated, with Notes and Additions, by D. OSWALD HUNTER BLAIR, O.S.B., Monk of Fort Augustus. 4 vols., demy 8vo, with Maps, price 12s. 6d. each.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Cheap

Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. ADAM BEDE. 3s. 6d.—THE MILL on the FLOSS. 3s. 6d.—FELIX HOLT. 3s. 6d.—SCENES of CLERICAL LIFE. 3s.—SILAS MARNER. 2s. 6d.—ROMOLA. 3s. 6d.—DANIEL DERONDA. 7s. 6d.—MIDDLEMARCH. 7s. 6d. Handsomely bound in half-calf, 58s.; half Persian morocco, gilt top, 52s.; half Turkey morocco, gilt top, 57s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S LIFE. 7s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S LIFE and WORKS.

Cabinet Edition. Complete in 24 Volumes. Price £6. Each Volume, price 5s., may be had separately.

IN SIX DIVISIONAL VOLUMES.

STEPHENS' BOOK of the FARM.

Fourth Edition, Revised, and in great part Rewritten, by JAMES MACDONALD, of the "Farming World," &c. Assisted by many of the Leading Agricultural Authorities of the Day. Illustrated with numerous Portraits of Animals and Engravings of Implements, &c. DIVISIONS I. to V. Now Ready, price 10s. 6d. each. (Div. VI. Immediately.)

NEW EDITION ENTIRELY REWRITTEN AND GREATLY ENLARGED.

A MANUAL of PALEONTOLOGY.

For the Use of Students. With a General Introduction on the Principles of Paleontology. By HENRY ALLEYNE NICHOLSON, M.D., D.Sc., F.G.S., &c., Regius Professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen; and RICHARD LYDEKKER, B.A., F.G.S., &c. 2 vols., 8vo, 63s.

STORMONTH'S DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Pronouncing, Etymological, and Explanatory. Revised by the Rev. P. H. PHELP. Library Edition. Imperial 8vo, handsomely bound in half-morocco, 31s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,

EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—TWO New Serial Stories,
"THE THREE BROTHERS,"

By W. E. NORRIS,

AND

"LOVE OR MONEY?"

Are COMMENCED IN the JANUARY NUMBER of

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Ready at all Booksellers and Railway Stations,
 DECEMBER 22nd.

NEW BOOKS.

Now ready. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

Musical Reminiscences of Half-a-Century. By WILLERT BEALE, Author of "The Enterprising Impresario," &c.

"Mr. Willert Beale has, in his Reminiscences, given us a greater romance of real life than will be found in twenty volumes of novels by the most eminent authors. Yet all so naturally and so simply told."—"The Baron de Bookworms" in Punch.

THE LIFE OF

THOMAS SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"A book which will attract and interest many as the unpretending record of a long life and a varied experience. Mr. Cooper has lived through an unparalleled series of social changes; he has seen and known many famous men, and his own life has not been without its romantic story of a rise from obscurity to renown."—Times.

BY MR. BARKER.

WAYFARING IN FRANCE; or, Highways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

"Often and well as the picturesque features of France have been described, there are few books now before the public that, taken altogether, give a pleasanter and more comprehensive view of what is to be seen, done, and suffered there, than does this volume."—Manchester Examiner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALEXIA."

THE LITTLE ONE. By Eleanor C. PRICE, Author of "Red Towers," &c. 2 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ACTE."

THE DELIVERANCE of ROBERT CARTER. By HUGH WESTBURY, Author of "Frederick Hazleden," &c. 2 vols.

"Clever throughout."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."

A DAUGHTER of the PYRAMIDS. By LEITH DERWENT, Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Leith Derwent has written an entertaining story, and has mingled the common things of every day so cunningly with his marvels that the latter take quite a startling impress of reality. His scene is Egypt, and in Egypt there are no common things. It is the most wonderful country in the world. It is the scene of all others for a tale of the supernatural, and Mr. Derwent has used his opportunities well. The story is undeniably a clever one of its kind, and well written. Nonsense, of course, but incomparably more entertaining than nine-tenths of what this enlightened age is pleased to call sense."—World.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA!"

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris. By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Ardath," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols.

"A story of absinthe and absintheurs—a grim, realistic drama."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

SUBJECTS FOR
CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS,
 DECEMBER, 1891.

Pitt Press Series.

Lamartine.—Jeanne D'Arc. With Two Maps and Notes Historical and Philological by Rev. A. C. CLAPIN, M.A. New Edition. Revised by A. R. ROPES, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Molière.—Les Précieuses Ridicules. With Introduction and Notes by E. G. W. BRAUN-HOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D. 2s.

—ABRIDGED EDITION. 1s.

Goethe's Knabenjahre (1749—1759). GOETHE'S BOYHOOD: being the First Three Books of his Autobiography. Arranged and Annotated by W. WAGNER, Ph.D. New Edition. Revised and Enlarged by J. W. CARTMELL, M.A. 2s.

Caesar.—De Bello Gallico, Books IV., V., with Maps and English Notes by A. G. PESKETT, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Vergil.—Aeneid, Book I., with Notes by A. SIDGWICK, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Cicero.—Philippica Secunda. With Introduction and Notes by A. G. PESKETT, M.A. 3s. 6d.

Livy.—Book XXVII., with Notes and Introduction by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Xenophon.—Anabasis, Book I., with English Notes by ALFRED PRETOR, M.A. 2s.

Homer.—Iliad, Book XXII., with Introduction and Notes by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A. 2s.

Euripides.—Hercules Furens. With Introductions, Notes, and Analysis. By A. GRAY, M.A., and J. T. HUTCHINSON, M.A. New Edition. 2s.

Herodotus.—Book VIII., Chapters 1—90, with Notes, Introduction, and Map, by E. S. SHUCK-BURGH, M.A. 3s. 6d.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry, Books I. and II. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A. 1s. 6d. Books III.—IV. By the same Editor. 1s. 6d.

Books I.—IV. in 1 volume, 3s.

Elementary Algebra (with Answers to the Examples). By W. W. ROUSE BALL, M.A. 4s. 6d.

The Elements of Statics. By S. L. LONEY, M.A. 4s. 6d. THE ELEMENTS OF DYNAMICS. By the same Author. [Nearly ready.]

The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.

General Editor—THE BISHOP of WORCESTER.

The Second Book of Samuel. Rev. Prof. KIRKPATRICK, B.D. With Two Maps. 3s. 6d.

The First Book of Kings. Rev. Prof. LUMBY, D.D. With Three Maps. 3s. 6d.

The Gospel according to St. Mark. Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. With Four Maps. 2s. 6d. GREEK TEXT, with Notes by the same Editor, 4s. 6d.

The Acts of the Apostles. Rev. Prof. LUMBY, D.D. With Four Maps. 4s. 6d.

The Epistles to the Thessalonians. Rev. G. G. FINDLAY, M.A. 2s. [Nearly ready.]

The Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

The Second Book of Samuel. Rev. Prof. KIRKPATRICK, B.D. With Map. 1s.

The First Book of Kings. Rev. Prof. LUMBY, D.D. With Map. 1s. [Nearly ready.]

The Gospel according to St. Mark. Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. With Map. 1s.

The Acts of the Apostles. Rev. Prof. LUMBY, D.D. With Map. 1s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
 CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By WILLIAM BLACK,
 Author of "A Princess of Thule," "A Daughter of Heth"
 "In Far Lochaber," &c., &c.
 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY DR. BIRKBECK HILL, NOW READY.

FOOTSTEPS of DR. JOHNSON (SCOTLAND). By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. With about 150 Illustrations, including 18 Heliogravures, sketched on the spot by Lancelot Speed, and beautifully reproduced by Lemerrier & Co., of Paris.

EDITION DE LUXE. Limited strictly to 150 copies, numbered and signed by the Author, uncut edges, £7 7s. net. ORDINARY EDITION. Handsomely bound in half-morocco, gilt tops, uncut edges (1,000 copies), £3 3s. net.

THE SALON of 1890. One Hundred

Plates in Photogravure and Etchings by GOUPIL & CO. With Text in English by HENRY BACON. Folio, bound in red cloth, £3 3s. net.

NEW WORK BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections. By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "Our Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

VISCOUNT MELBOURNE. By Henry DUNCKLEY, LL.D. ("Verax"). Being the Second Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHARLES GOUNOD: his Life and Works. By MARIE ANNE BOVET. With Portrait and Facsimiles. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

TEN CENTURIES of EUROPEAN

PROGRESS. By LOWIS JACKSON, Author of "Aid to Survey Practice," "Aid to Engineering Solution," &c. Illustrated with 13 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d.

LAD and LASS: a Story of Life in Iceland. Translated, from the Icelandic of JON P. THORODDSEN, by A. M. REEVES. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE LIFE of HARRIET BEECHER STOWE Told for Boys and Girls. By Mrs. SARAH A. TOOLEY, Author of "Lives Great and Simple." 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

NEW JUVENILE GIFT-BOOKS.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY JULES VERNE.

The Purchase of the North Pole: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon." Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

The Family without a Name. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

Bevis: a Tale for Boys. By RICHARD JEFFRIES, Author of "Amoryllis at the Fair," &c. New Edition. Edited by G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The book teems with information upon almost every subject dear to boys."—Standard.

Against Heavy Odds: a Tale of Norse Heroism. By H. H. BOYSSON, Author of "The Modern Vikings," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

JANUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

The Outlook in Southern California. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Twelve Illustrations.

School-Boys: a Poem. By RICHARD E. BURTON.

London Music Halls. By F. ANSTEV. Eight Illustrations drawn by Joseph Pennell.

In the "Stranger People's" Country: a Story. Part I. By CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK. With Two Illustrations (including Frontispiece).

At the Casa Napoleon: a Story. Illustrated. By THOMAS A. JANNIER.

Impressions of Peru. By THEODORE CHILD. Sixteen Illustrations drawn by T. de Thulstrup and H. D. Nichols.

Another Chapter of My Memoirs: How I Became a Journalist. By MR. DE BLOWITZ.

Atonement: a Poem. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

A Modern Legend. By VIDA D. SCUDDER.

St. Anthony: a Christmas-Eve Ballad. By Mrs. E. W. LATIMER. With Three Illustrations drawn by C. S. Reinhart. &c. &c. &c.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Limited,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1890.

No. 972, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Dante, and his Early Biographers. By Edward Moore, D.D. (Longmans.)

IN this interesting volume Dr. Moore gives us the substance of three lectures delivered by him as Barlow Lectures on Dante last year in University College, London.

The subject is one that has been comparatively neglected in this country, though much has been written upon it both in Italy and in Germany. Dr. Moore acknowledges his indebtedness to previous writers, especially Italian; but in spite of the modest disclaimer in his preface, he may be credited with a certain measure of originality for his work—if not in respect of the matter itself, at any rate as regards his method of dealing with it.

The first question discussed is that of the relative value of the two lives attributed to Boccaccio, commonly known as the Vita and the Compendio. Dr. Moore, in agreement with the majority of Italian and German critics, unhesitatingly condemns the latter as spurious, supporting his opinion with arguments based upon internal evidence which appear to us conclusive. It is inconceivable, for example, that Boccaccio should have so stultified himself as to make the statement which appears in the Compendio with regard to Dante's relations at Lucca with the young girl "whom he names Pargoletta," this being an evident perversion, wilful or otherwise, of a well-known passage in the Purgatorio.

Dr. Moore is at some pains to vindicate the memory of Gemma Donati from the attacks made upon it by the biographers of Dante. The author of the Compendio, whoever he may have been,* à propos of Dante's marriage to the unfortunate Gemma, taking his cue from Boccaccio, launches out into a tremendous tirade against marriage and married life—"the companionship of a wife," he declares, "as they affirm who have experienced it, brings nothing but constant anxiety and unremitting strife"—and he then proceeds to draw a satirical picture of Dante interrupted in the midst of his sublime speculations by questions as to the children's clothes and the payment of the nurses' wages!

Boccaccio himself, with a bitterness almost worthy of the author of the Quinze Joyes de Mariage, gives a melancholy representation of the consequences of marriage to a man of Dante's disposition:

"Egli, usato di vegghiare ne' santi studi, quante volte a grado gli era, cogl' imperadori, co' re e con qualunque altri altissimi principi ragionava, disputava co' filosofi, e co' piacevolissimi poeti si diletta, e le altrui angosce ascoltando, mitigava le sue. Ora, quando alla nuova donna piace, è con costoro, e quel tempo ch'ella vuole, tolto da così celebre compagnia, gli conviene li femminili ragionamenti ascoltare . . . Egli, usato liberamente di ridere, di piangere, di cantare o di sospirare, secondochè le passioni dolci o amare il pungevano; ora egli non osa, o gli conviene non che delle maggiori cose, ma d'ogni picciolo sospiro rendere alla donna ragione, mostrando che'l mosse, donde venne e dove andò . . . Oh fatica inestimabile avere con così sospettoso animale a vivere, a conversare, ed ultimamente ad invecchiare o a morire!"

Oh! unutterable weariness indeed to pass one's life with a "domesticated recording angel" of this description!

Unhappily for Gemma Donati, this flight of Boccaccio's fancy was accepted as depicting the actual state of her relations with Dante, and she has been branded in consequence as a shrew and a second Xanthippe. In vain Boccaccio has added at the end of it all—"Certo io non affermo queste cose a Dante essere addivenute; ch'è non lo so," and declared that he only stated what he supposed must have been the case, because Dante, once parted from his wife, took care never to come near her again. There can be hardly a doubt that Gemma's memory has suffered undeservedly. As a matter of fact, there is no positive evidence whatever to show that Dante was unhappy in his marriage. The most that can be said, in addition to Boccaccio's innuendo, is that Dante himself seems to avoid any reference to his married life, and speaks somewhat contemptuously of woman in general in one or two passages in his writings. If there was any domestic reason for the estrangement hinted at by Boccaccio, we may well believe that the fault was not on one side only. Dante, doubtless, like many another man of genius, was "gey ill to live wi'"—"omnibus hoc vitium cantoribus atque poetis!"

Unlike many modern critics, Dr. Moore shows a disposition to do Boccaccio the justice of believing that he at any rate sometimes speaks the truth; and he argues, as Witte did before him, that we are no more justified in rejecting the whole of the Vita because it contains certain palpable fictions, than we are entitled to discredit Livy's account of the Second Punic War because of the fables he has admitted into other portions of his history. It is not easy, for instance, to see on what grounds the statement, for which Boccaccio is the sole authority—that Dante's Beatrice was Beatrice Portinari, afterwards the wife of Simone Bardi (elegantly described by a recent German critic as, "die Frau Bardi, geb. Portinari")—is to be disbelieved, as it is by those who maintain that the Beatrice of the "Vita Nuova" and of the "Divina Commedia" was a mere creature of Dante's imagination, a personification of the theology, and nothing more.* Boccaccio would have hardly had the temerity to make such a statement publicly in Florence within fifty years of Dante's death, at the risk of immediate contradiction from one or other of the families concerned, if it was a pure invention of his own.

With regard to Boccaccio's story about the accidental loss and recovery of certain portions of the "Divina Commedia" (a story there is no prima facie ground for rejecting so far as the actual facts are concerned) which he explains to be due to Dante's habit of sending every seven or eight cantos, as they were finished, to Can Grande della Scala, to be afterwards submitted to whom he pleased, Dr. Moore throws out the ingenious suggestion that we may here have the explanation of "the singular relationships and divergencies between MSS., not only in the several Cantiche, but in groups or blocks of cantos in the same Cantica." A somewhat similar suggestion, we may remark, had already been made by Mr. Butler in the preface to his edition of the Paradiso.

Of the remaining four biographies, that of Filippo Villani, nephew of Giovanni Villani, the chronicler, and Boccaccio's successor as public lecturer on the "Divina Commedia" in Florence, is chiefly interesting as being the first to give a detailed account of the occasion of Dante's last illness, which supervened after an unsuccessful embassy to Venice on behalf of Guido Novello da Polenta. His ill-success was mainly owing to his great reputation, for the Venetians, fearful of being persuaded by his eloquence, refused to grant him a hearing. Dante, finding them obdurate, and being sick with fever, begged for a passage back to Ravenna by sea. But this, too, was refused. So ill as he was, he had to face the fatigues and risks of the unhealthy journey overland, and reached Ravenna only to die a few days later.

The lives by Manetti and Filelfo do not call for any especial remark here. We have already mentioned the chief point of interest in the latter. We must, however, draw attention to a curious slip Dr. Moore has made with regard to Manetti. He says that in his work we meet for the first time with the familiar anecdote about the women who pointed to Dante's crisped beard and dark colour as evidence of his having been to hell and back. As a matter of fact, the story occurs in a well-known chapter of Boccaccio's Vita; the only essential difference between the two accounts being that Boccaccio lays the scene in Verona, while Manetti (as quoted by Dr. Moore) lays it in Ravenna.*

The biography by Lionardo (Bruni) Aretino, which comes third in chronological order, is a work of considerable importance from several points of view. To begin with, the author's position as Secretary of State to the Florentine Republic, and his intimate acquaintance with the history of Florence (of which he wrote an account from the earliest times down to 1401), give great weight to his statements with regard to Dante's first to start this theory:—"ego aequae Beatricem quam amasse fingitur Dantes mulierem unquam fuisse opinor ac fuit Pandora"—Beatrice was no more a real woman than was Pandora.

* The story is rightly referred to Boccaccio in a note further on in the volume.

* The theory that it was Giovanni da Serravalle, the author of the Commentary on the Divina Commedia, is, as Signor Macri-Leone has pointed out, obviously untenable, for his biographical notice of Dante is in direct contradiction with the Compendio on at least one important question of fact.

* Giovanni Filelfo, who wrote a Life of Dante in the fifteenth century, appears to have been the political life. Moreover, he deliberately undertook the work with the intention of correcting the impression left by the perusal of Boccaccio's account of Dante. Boccaccio, he says, wrote:

"Come se l'uomo nascesse in questo mondo, solamente per ritrovarsi in quelle dieci giornate amorose [alluding of course to the Decamerone], nelle quali da donne innamorate, e da giovani leggiadri raccontate furono le cento Novelle; e tanto s'inflamma in queste parti d'amore, che le gravi e sustanzievoli parti della vita di Dante lascia in dietro, e trapassa con silenzio, ricordando le cose leggiere, e tacendo le gravi. Io dunque mi posi in cuore per mio spasso scriver di nuovo la vita di Dante con maggior notizia delle cose stimabili."

So carefully does Lionardo himself abstain from handling what he calls "le cose leggiere" that, with the exception of a single contemptuous reference to "l'amore di nove anni e simili leggierezze," he makes no allusion whatever to the most important episode in Dante's existence, the name of Beatrice being not even once mentioned throughout the work. On the other hand, he gives a detailed account of the Battle of Campaldino, at which he says Dante was present, and in confirmation of this statement he quotes a letter of Dante's which has not elsewhere been preserved. We are somewhat surprised to find that Dr. Moore gives no hint of the fact that considerable doubts have arisen both as to Lionardo's accuracy in this instance, and as to the genuineness of the letter he quotes.* The question is too long to discuss here. Suffice it to point out that, if Lionardo's unsupported assertion be accepted, it is hard to account for the total silence on the subject of Giovanni Villani, Boccaccio, and all the early commentators, to say nothing of the difficulty of explaining the fact that, though according to Lionardo Dante was in the forefront of the battle—"combattendo vigorosamente a cavallo nella prima schiera"—he yet totally fails to recognise Buonconte, the Ghibelline leader, when he sees him in Purgatory.

"Guarda se alcun di noi unque vedesti" he is asked, to which he replies:

"Perchè ne' vostri visi guati Non riconosco alcun."†

"Look if thou hast ever seen any of us." "For all that I gaze in your faces I recognise none of you."

Dr. Moore concludes his volume with a discussion of such biographical notices of Dante as occur in the early Commentaries or elsewhere, and with a chapter on the characteristics of Dante. Next to the well-known passage in Giovanni Villani's Cronaca, perhaps the most interesting of these minor notices is that in the Commentary written at the beginning of the fifteenth century by Giovanni da Serravalle, who was in attendance upon two English bishops at the Council of Constance in 1417. He makes the deliberate statement that Dante studied theology for some time "in Oxoniis in regno Angliae," which, taken in connexion with a vague expression of Boccaccio's, and with such hints as may be gathered from the "Divina Commedia" itself, has given rise to somewhat wild speculations with regard to Dante's supposed travels in England. There are, however, as Dr. Moore shows, very good reasons for believing this statement to have been a pure invention on the part of Serravalle, who made it probably with the object of pleasing the two English bishops (of Bath and Wells, and of Salisbury—the latter, be it noted, an ex-chancellor of the University of Oxford) at whose instance his work was undertaken. It is highly improbable on many grounds that Dante ever visited England.

In his concluding chapter Dr. Moore gives some interesting details regarding Dante's personal characteristics and appearance. He was of middle stature, apparently, slow and dignified in his gait, with a slight stoop (at any rate in later years), and of a thoughtful and melancholy expression of countenance. His features are too well known to require description. There is some question as to the colour of his hair. Boccaccio says that, like his beard, it was "black and thick and crisp"; but Dante speaks of himself in one of his Eclogues as being fair-haired, unless the term flavescere which he uses be merely meant to emphasise in poetical fashion the contrast between the hair of a youth and the hoary locks ("cani capilli") of an old man. In the Bargello portrait (the attribution of which to Giotto, by the way, Dr. Moore seems, in spite of the many difficulties, to have no hesitation in accepting) the hair is invisible, owing to the close-fitting head-gear; but we may mention that in the interesting portrait prefixed to Codex 1040 in the Riccardi Library at Florence (considered by the Florentine commission of 1864 to be the most faithful and authentic in existence*) the hair, which is plainly visible over the temples, is of a decidedly dark colour, almost black in fact, while the complexion of the face is just such as Boccaccio describes it ("il colore era bruno"). It is somewhat remarkable that in none of the portraits is Dante depicted with a beard, although from Boccaccio's account, and from an expression of his own,† we know him to have worn one.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

* See Giornale del Centenario for July 20, 1864.

† Purg., xxxi. 68, 74, 75. Dr. Moore seems to think that the words "alza la barba" are not to be taken literally, and therefore prove nothing, the expression being used by Beatrice instead of "alza il viso" to remind Dante that he was a man, no longer a youth. But surely it would be rather strange to tell a beardless man to lift up his beard; "il velen dell'argomento" loses none of its force if we assume, as seems most natural, that Dante actually was barbuto. The absence of the beard may be accounted for in the case of the later portraits by the fact that they were evidently based upon the death-mask, which is necessarily without it, since in order to take the cast of the features the hair must have been removed from the face.

"EVENTS OF OUR TIMES."—The Indian Mutiny of 1857. By Col. G. B. Malleon. With Portraits and Maps. (Seeley.)

THE reader of 1891, distraught with all the claims to his attention, may perhaps ask with pardonable impatience why he should be troubled with another book upon what, in latter-day phrase, is called "ancient history." But, if we can accept this bright book of four hundred pages as superseding all the bigger works, we may rest content with what Col. Malleon has done for us. In his own classical edition of Kaye, in the workmanlike study of Mr. Holmes, and in Capt. Trotter's India Under Victoria, we have abundance of solid material for the studious. Let those who are not studious be thankful that they can have its essence distilled into so useful and agreeable a form as the present handy and well-composed volume.

The foundation of the empire, the conspiracy fomented by unskilful administration, the outbreak, the bold resistance, the gradual abatement, the final pacification—these are the subjects of the Colonel's twenty-seven chapters of narrative. In a short "Conclusion," he vindicates his comrades and countrymen from some too-sweeping charges, and points a moral for the future from the lessons of the past. A useful index, some portraits only moderately pleasing, and plans of operations at Delhi and Lucknow complete the book.

It would be impossible, in the space here available, to do adequate justice to the selection and arrangement of the matter or the sustained flow of the narrative; and indeed all those—and most of our readers may be of the number—who are acquainted with the writer's reputation well know that the expectation of such things from him will rarely be disappointed. All that can be here done is to refer them to the book itself for the exciting story, and to offer a few friendly comments on some of the conclusions expressed or implied in the treatment.

The gallant author is doubtless right in imputing a good deal of the ultimate violence of the Sepoy army to treasonable tamperings and persuasions from discontented magnates. Above all, it was Dalhousie's doctrinaire rigour that provoked those treasons—if that be not too harsh a word. But there was another cause, also noticed by our author, in which Dalhousie was less to blame, yet gave greater offence to native opinion. The reader perceives that allusion is intended to what has been termed the "annexation policy," but which more deserves the name of the "political propaganda." There was nothing in annexation of itself that need shock races whose history is one tissue of war, conquest, and usurpation. Dalhousie annexed the Punjab—not without questionable proceedings—and the Punjab became, as it has ever since been, the most loyal and useful province of the empire. Still more high-handed had been the dealings with Sindh and Burma, yet no Nemesis awaited the spoliators. What then was there in the wholly dissimilar cases of Oudh, Bithur, and Jhānsi that continues to draw down the condemnation of Col. Malleon and other historians?

* See Bartoli, Storia della Lett. Ital., vol. v., pp. 81 ff., and Renier, in the Giornale Storico, iii., 110; and for the other side of the question, Scartazzini, Prolegomeni della D.C., pp. 38 ff.

† Purg. v. 49, 58-59

The case of Oudh was most peculiar. No Governor-General could have much longer endured the scandalous state of corruption and misrule which existed in that so-called "Kingdom" solely by virtue of the protection of British bayonets. To have simply withdrawn the troops would have been to provoke the outburst of a conflagration, on three sides of which our own territories would have abutted. Dalhousie proposed to supersede the imbecile "King," and to administer the country in his name; the Home Government adopted the more open course of annexation pure and simple. The Oudh Sepoys were annoyed at this: driven to enlist by the misery of their homes, they formed a sort of "most-favoured nation" in the Bengal army. It might have been more prudent to have preserved the privileges of those who were then in the service; if so, the omission was an administrative error, but the point is merely one of detail. The sequestration of the Peshwa's pension, again, rested on the interpretation of a promise: a liberal interpretation would have been a showy and—as things turned out—an advantageous sacrifice of the interests of the general tax-payer. But this also, by itself, was a trifle.

What really shocked public conscience was the haughty assumption that Western ways were such a benefit to Eastern mankind that no opportunity should be neglected of introducing the new wine into the old skins. Here, as our author insists, was the real fountain and origin of evil. Under the influence of our national self-conceit, and of the spirit incarnate in the editorial staff of The Friend of India, a masterful statesman simply ignored a popular feeling which was never properly brought to his notice. Had that able ruler known what we have since learned, he might have continued to make wars and annexations, he might have stood upon the old ways and the traditionary policy of the East India Company, and no harm might have followed. But his ardent nature combined with a want of proper information to urge him on the path of Fate. He made the propagating policy his own, he pushed it to its most extreme results, and he supported it by sophisms which, however honestly believed by him, were soon confuted by the remorseless logic of facts.

Out of evil, courage and justice bring good. By that potent alchemy the terrible events of 1857 have been turned into precious political metal. It is the first and greatest of such gains that we have learned how to govern Asiatics. When, with happy audacity, Lord W. Bentinck made widow-burning a penal offence, he fortified himself with the responsa prudentum, the opinions of scriptural lawyers who publicly declared that Sati was no part of the Hindu religion. But you cannot safely go further. Col. Malleon is, indeed, hardly justified in saying that Western ideas had been introduced into the Upper Provinces by Mr. Thomason and his school of land revenue. The suppression of the seigneurs and the settlement of the land with the communes was a most oriental and conservative policy. So far from the Upper Provinces being goaded into rebellion by such measures, the greater part of the province under the Lieutenant-Governor of Agra remained either quiescent or actively loyal; and the Punjab, which had been settled on the same principles, was the most useful element of the first resistance to the military revolt, and the direct instrument of the fall of Delhi. But it is not the less true that the attempts to force an ideal purity on the administration, and to deprive the native community of all interest in public affairs, is so far from being an appreciable benefit that it has always caused the deepest resentment.

That was the great lesson. Only next to it in importance—for both Native and European in India—was the benefit of discipline and mutual confidence. Five thousand sick men took Delhi, with its fifteen miles of strong walls garrisoned by fifty thousand good troops. A smaller number of still more broken-down and worn-out wanderers, under Sir Hugh Rose, captured Kalpi and Gwalior. Outram defeated a force ten times the number of his own at the Alambagh. How were these things done? The enemy were the men who had conquered all opponents so long as they were true to their salt: individually they were as brave as Europeans, with almost equal enterprise and a greater contempt of death. It was not even—as our author thinks—wholly due to English blood. Half the troops were Asiatics; of the other half a large portion consisted of Celts. Even the English themselves have been declared by recent historians to be largely, if not mainly, of un-English blood (r. Grant Allen's Anglo-Saxon Britain).

But the British in India never despaired. In the darkest days of the mutiny everyone looked on every other Briton as his brother, and trusted to him to do what he could, even as he himself intended to do. It was that solidarity that begot discipline, and discipline begot victory. The universal thought was that long ago attributed by him who was born upon St. George's Day to one of his heroic characters:—

"Come the three corners of the world in arms
And we shall shock them. Nought can make us rue
If England to itself do rest but true."

If the Mutiny was the outcome of British self-conceit, its suppression was the sign and seal of the conceit that Britons have of one another.

May it be permitted to a fellow-labourer to ask that a little more attention should be paid to the matter of transliteration? It is most properly insisted upon in the Preface, on the excellent ground that every Indian name has a meaning. But, then, why "Máphuz" and "Fakir-ud-din"? The former should be, of course, Mahfuz Ali, "the protected of Ali"; the latter, Fakhr-ul-din, "the Boast of Religion." But this savours of hypercriticism, the book being what it is—a most delightful and instructive record of a heroic episode in British story.

H. G. KEENE.

Poor People's Christmas: a Poem. By the Hon. Roden Noel. (Elkin Mathews.)

At a large afternoon party last summer, a well-known professional entertained the guests by "taking off" certain society fashions and ways, among which was drawing-room recitation. He described the ballads in favour with drawing-room reciters as having, among other qualities not to be commended, that of being "generally about poor people!" An unpleasant subject, truly, and no doubt in bad taste! What shall we then say to the Hon. Roden Noel, who actually dares to violate the good taste we might naturally expect of him, by giving us a poem of twenty pages and upwards, all "about poor people," and, moreover, ventures to suggest, not that Ladies Bountiful and Lords Philanthropical should, out of their abundance, give beef and coals to the needy, but that justice should be done!

"Justice, not almsgiving, they need.

It is no new thing to find Mr. Roden Noel writing "about poor people." More than in the work of any other English poet, we find in his verse sympathy with the sorrows and struggles and handicapping of those we call "the working class," questioning horror and burning indignation at their wrongs, and also recognition of the power of that great Love which one day must save the world. We have all this in such poems as "The Children's Grass," "The Temple of Storm," "A Lay of Civilization," and, not least markedly, in "A Modern Faust." But this latest of his published poems differs from the others in its suggestion of a possible remedy, through a change of conditions.

The Christmas bells are ringing, and many light hearts full of joy.

"They come and go upon the wind,
Peace and goodwill to all mankind."

But

"Where bleared faces of mean houses Lean as if to touch each other," amid the choke of brown fogs, in a dun, damp room,

"Sits a woman scantily clad,
Sewing by a feeble lamp"

"Rich apparel to be worn
In splendid balls by laughing wealth,
Whose pale sister, here forlorn,
Leaves in it all her youth and health."

A terrible "living lining to the dress"! Mary has fought a hard fight—she, the sole breadwinner; for her husband has been disabled by an accident, and then crippled anew by efforts to labour at any work he could get, no matter how rude, and heavy, and unfit for him. Two of the little lives she has striven to keep from the hunger that fed on them "have gone where want can hurt no more"; children who, we feel, need not have died, and, had they been a rich man's, would not so have died. They are country folk, Mary and her husband Jim; one or two touches bring to us the vision of a happy, pure-aired home, where roses and children alike had thriven; but now Jim is reduced to sitting in bitter idleness, while Mary, in her lovely patience, sits bowed over the white dress that looks to Jim like her own shroud. Dazed with pain, hopeless, anguished for the little son, "like a weed thrown into a nameless grave," for the wife dying at her task, himself hopeless for aid, "but one more mouth to feed"; baffled by the apparent impossibility of finding "God who delivers men from evil"; jeered at, as it seems to him, by the bells that ring for peace and goodwill, but not peace and goodwill to his beloved ones, who must but die, he hides his sorrow in the breast of the great dark river that rolls along with its great ship laden with merchandise, whose paddle-wheels foam over his corpse. Want of space prevents from quoting the powerful passage at p. 11, beginning with "England wrestles for the slave"; but we would draw special attention to it, and to the one on p. 14, opening with the stately and sonorous

"So, while the indifferent body rolls,
With other things that have no souls,
On the blind tide"

with its picture of our terrible London extremes of contrast, and its note of warning,

"Do ye not hear low thunders rumble," &c.

Mary yet toils on, possessing her soul in patience, and strong in the faith which tells her she will again meet her husband and the little dead Willie, of whom, in his father's words, so sweet a picture is drawn. But her time to rest is not far off; and in the death-scene the poet expresses his more than hope of a possibility, not necessarily distant, of better things. The sister who nurses the sick woman, herself one who has "left her vantage ground to help the weak," hears near the low pallet where the dying sempstress lies "low song as from some heavenly bird," a song from no human lips, and knows how the Christ has come in vision to comfort Mary, and bring with Him the little Willie, with the "waif" he had once, in his child-chivalry, helped and comforted.

"A common workman seemed the Lord,
Standing by the poor bedside;
Yet she knew He was the Lord,
That Jesus who was crucified."

Thus, in days of yore, to the dreamer on the Malvern Hills was the Christhood revealed under the form of the plowman: the Christhood that once had walked in the garb of a carpenter.

As the Hebrew of old heard, through the promptings of a soul eager for truth and light, the very voice of God Himself, the poet assigns to Christ the words of ardent enthusiasm in which he expresses his belief that Christ's servants "fashion even now justice for the commonweal"; and into His mouth, too, Mr. Noel puts the pregnant words, "Justice, not almsgiving, they need." Again Christ's "birthday bells" ring out; joy is carried into many a light heart; and into Mary's, the gladness and radiance of heaven.

If in this poem we miss some of the special qualities of Mr. Noel's work (for instance, his markedly great power of nature-imaging, for which there is here no scope) we have yet great things before us—breadth of sympathy; tender touches of child-life; power of invective, so tempered and chastened as never to pass into vituperation; belief in the love which transcends all limits; and that fine sincerity, without which the expression of the noblest sentiments may degenerate into rhetoric, and the most perfect rhythm may ring false.

E. H. HICKEY.

"THE TREASURE HOUSE OF TALES BY GREAT AUTHORS."

Tales by Leigh Hunt. With a Prefatory Memoir by William Knight.

Tales and Stories by Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley. With an Introduction by Richard Garnett. (Paterson.)

THESE volumes appear to be the first numbers of a new series; and it is convenient that they should be noticed together, though the two authors represented have so little in common that their varying endowments lend themselves neither to comparison nor to contrast.

Both the criticism and the poetry of Leigh Hunt are rich in imagination, and richer still in a very pleasant kind of fancy; but he never seems to have possessed any large share of invention pure and simple. Of the eight-and-twenty tales here collected from Hunt's various ventures, those which, to use a nursery phrase, he "made out of his own head," can be counted on the fingers of one hand, with perhaps a finger to spare. And, indeed, the contribution which is quantitatively far the most important of Prof. Knight's selections, "A Year of Honeymoons," is not, strictly speaking, a tale at all, but rather a series of characteristically Huntian essays, full of favourite quotations, and phrases of pretty sentiment, such as "the quiet and lovingness of the fields," strung on a narrative-thread of such extreme tenuity that the reader is hardly aware of its existence. What Hunt liked was to tell again, in his own fashion, a story which had been told long ago in somebody else's fashion—to take some current but well-worn coin of fiction, melt it down, and send it out from the mint with his own image and superscription. It mattered not whether the original device had been stamped by a die in ancient Greece or mediæval France, in the Italy of Ovid or the Italy of Boccaccio: if the disc of metal rang true on Hunt's counter, how could he better honour it than by giving it the bright sharpness of a new coinage? Sometimes the novel design preserves the general features of its predecessor, as in "The Nurture of Triptolemus" or "The Adventures of Cephalus and Procris," where the old Greek stories reappear in the familiar form, but with something in their expression that is not familiar—an infusion of sentiment that belongs generally to the modern world, specifically to Hunt himself. Occasionally, however, when he is in one of his more whimsical or freakish moods—such a mood as that which produced "The True Story of Vertumnus and Pomona"—the new spirit is embodied in a novel and fantastic form. Vertumnus is a gallant and Pomona a belle in the merry rather than wise days of the second Charles; the garden becomes a modish drawing-room where everything that happens is perfectly decorous; and Ovid himself undergoes a complete metamorphosis. Of the few stories for which Hunt supplied matter as well as manner the best are "Jack Abbott's Breakfast" and "The Day of the Disasters of Carfington Blundell, Esquire"; and they in themselves seem to hint at the narrowness of Hunt's inventive range, for they both deal with a single narrative theme—the misadventures of a gentleman who sallies forth from home to take a meal abroad. The former is the better, because in it the touch is lighter; and in work of this kind lightness is almost everything, for if it be wanting there is a look either of clumsiness or strain which destroys all the finer effects of humour. In both stories the materials are farcical, but Hunt's daintiness preserved him from falling into the brutalities hardly ever absent from farce proper. No one would think of saying that Hunt is seen at his best in his tales; but he is seen in them, and whatever be the form through which we apprehend the peculiar qualities of his work—its grace, geniality, and gaiety—it is certain that they are always charming.

Of the short stories of Mrs. Shelley there is less to be said. One suspects that the two influences which operated most powerfully in suggesting the substance and dominating the manner of her literary production—the influence of Godwin and of Shelley—were not really congenial to her inborn aptitude: at any rate, that is the impression left on the mind by the perusal of Mrs. Julian Marshall's full and interesting biography. If we go on to inquire what the true nature of that inborn aptitude really was, and in what kind of work it would most fitly and pleasantly have exploited itself, we may be unable to answer our own questions. But this inability does not rid us of the feeling that Mrs. Shelley had somehow missed her way; and that, when she was writing her stories about transformations and evil eyes and elixirs of life, and painting the portraits of Minerva Press heroes and melodramatic villains, she was doing work in which she had no vital interest. When she has to describe a beautiful scene in nature or to deal with noble emotion or action, we feel at once the sympathy of her touch. But the most winning treatment of these things hardly suffices to give distinction to a literary form to which they must necessarily be but incidental. That Mrs. Shelley's stories were of a much higher degree of excellence than the average contents of the "Annuals" from which they are gathered, may be admitted with no hesitation; but they are at best first-rate specimens of an essentially inferior kind of literature—literature which, to mention only one defect, errs in its obvious assumption that the non-real and the ideal are the same thing.

The introductory essays by Prof. Knight and Dr. Garnett are in every respect admirable. The former is, however, hardly correct in saying that "Shelley's death was also a death-blow to the Liberal"; for that event happened before the first number of the Liberal appeared, and the collapse of the magazine was entirely due to Byron's fickleness and loss of interest in a scheme about which he had shortly before been so enthusiastic. Nor, though Prof. Knight is evidently an admirer of Hunt, is he quite fair in saying, so unreservedly, à propos of the Recollections of Lord Byron and his Contemporaries, that the book was a "regrettable performance," because "Byron had been kind to him in many ways." This is really in substance a repetition of the old charge of ingratitude which the author of the book was able to refute so irrefragably. Hunt himself regretted the publication of the work, not because he owed Byron anything, but because it was a grief to his essentially kindly spirit that he should have given permanence to the utterances of a natural irritation, which with most men would have been much less transient than it was with him. Dr. Garnett is, as usual, both sympathetic and discriminating. His closing paragraph is specially interesting; but some readers will find it difficult to see in the story entitled "Transformation" a variation on the theme of Frankenstein. The etched portraits of Hunt and Mrs. Shelley are decidedly good, and add to the interest of the volumes.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Locke. By Prof. A. C. Fraser. (Blackwood.)

THIS little volume is a worthy companion to the Berkeley which Prof. Fraser wrote for the same series ("Philosophical Classics") a few years ago.

The Berkeley, as those who are interested in these matters know, is a much more important work than its modest exterior suggests. It is a monograph in which the student, to whose genial insight it is mainly due that Berkeley's philosophical position is rightly understood, sums up results and gives his mature judgment. No such distinction, it will be easily understood, belongs to the present volume. It is a good—indeed a very good—book of its kind, where other good books of the same kind in its own series, and in other series, exist; and, of course, one naturally compares it more closely with the excellent volume written by Dr. Fowler for the "English Men of Letters" series. Dr. Fowler, writing of Locke as a "man of letters," gives, as was to be expected, less space than Prof. Fraser does to the philosophy of the "Essay concerning Human Understanding." But, after all, this difference in plan makes less difference in result than might be supposed. Both writers have one aim—to present Locke concretely as he lived and thought in the England of his day; and both are anxious to make their readers realise that Locke's philosophy is of a kind peculiarly apt to be misunderstood if regarded in vacuo—apart from the special circumstances in which it arose. This is a point which needs much to be insisted on at present, and Prof. Fraser and Dr. Fowler have done good service by insisting on it. It is a point which Green unfortunately did not keep in view in criticising Locke (Hume: General Introduction).

"The really moral purpose," writes Prof. Fraser, "of Locke's persistent war against innateness must be kept constantly in view in our interpretation of the whole 'Essay.' The drift of this famous argument has been overlooked by critics. It has been read as if it were an abstract discussion as to universality and necessity in knowledge, like that now at issue between empiricism and intellectualism. It has, indeed, in the course of historical evolution, led on to this discussion; but abstract epistemology and ontology was not in Locke's design, which was more directly practical, and concerned with the conduct of the human understanding. The argument against innate principles and ideas is expressly put by him as a protest of reason against the tyranny of traditional assumptions and empty words, shielded by their assumed innateness from the need for verification by our mental experience. Locke's war against the 'innate' is in its spirit human understanding in revolt against the despotism of dogmas which disdain to be verified by facts, and against words and phrases for which there are no corresponding ideas or meanings. Locke believed that by insisting upon a recognition of 'experienced' ideas and principles only, he was helping to put self-evidence and demonstration and well-calculated probabilities in the room of blind repose upon authority; and that he was thus (to use his own words) 'not pulling up the foundations of knowledge, but laying those foundations surer.'"

This extract shows the spirit in which Prof. Fraser interprets Locke. Young students would be well advised, I think, not to read Green's criticism of Locke without reading also Prof. Fraser's little book.

It is hardly necessary to say in conclusion that Prof. Fraser tells the story of Locke's life with great charm of manner. The chapters devoted to the philosopher's closing years spent at Oates are especially pleasing. These chapters also contain a good deal of interesting biographical matter now published for the first time.

J. A. STEWART.

NEW NOVELS.

Basil and Annette. By B. L. Farjeon. In 3 vols. (White.)

Between Life and Death. By Frank Barrett. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Jack's Secret. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. In 3 vols. (White.)

Golden Lives. By Frederick Wicks. (Blackwood.)

A Weird Gift. By Georges Ohnet. (Chatto & Windus.)

Fair Castaways. By F. H. Winder. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Golden Bullets. By W. W. Ireland. (Edinburgh: Bell & Bradfute.)

Lady Brough. By Bernard Berris. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

FREER than are most of Mr. Farjeon's writings from Dickensian moralisings and bread-and-cheese-and-kisses sentimentalities, Basil and Annette is a fascinating story with a compact and well-sustained plot. Occasionally Mr. Farjeon drops into flabby description like this of his hero:

"Tender, simple, brave; fearless, but not foolhardy; open-hearted, confiding, and unsuspecting of sinister motives in those with whom he has once shaken hands; with a sense of humour which lightens adversity; regretting not the past, though he has wilfully steered his boat into the Bay of Poverty, and dreading not the future; such is Basil Whittingham, a typical type of an honest frank manly English gentleman."

The bulk of this is commonplace; "the Bay of Poverty" and "the typical type" are painfully Farjeonish. But happily there is not a superabundance of writing of the kind in Basil and Annette, in which the reader's attention is concentrated on four persons—Basil Whittingham; Newman Chaytor, the scoundrel who half murders and, for a time, successfully personates him; Annette Bidand, a simple girl of the "typical type," who falls in love with the first presentable young man that puts in an appearance; and her portentously villainous uncle Gilbert. There is something forced and fantastic in Basil's involuntary appearances in England in the guise of the man who is bent on ruining him; but the duel in the third volume between Chaytor and the very decidedly superior fiend Bidand is admirably managed. The "idyllic business"—for such it always is in Mr. Farjeon's novels—is also exceptionally good.

One regrets to speak unfavourably of any book by a writer who has done such good work as Mr. Frank Barrett. Yet the simple truth is that Between Life and Death is a carelessly written, violently impossible, and, in parts, vulgar story. The attempted murder of Vanessa Graham in the first volume, and the accomplished murder of Mrs. Redmond and her "friend" Cummings in the end of the third, look like deliberate attempts to reduce modern sensationalism to farce. There is not a reasonably probable incident or a passable character in the story—not even Vanessa Graham or her husband. Mrs. Redmond, a preposterous adventuress, who develops into a disgusting drunkard, pervades the book; and of her it is enough to say that her slang is even more odious than her weakness for attempting murder.

A simple country girl, a voluptuous, selfish, and ambitious woman of fashion, a weak man, and a secret marriage, have played important parts in many a novel before now; and Jack's Secret is to the extent that they figure in it a very commonplace story indeed. When a man of ordinary susceptibility is brought into a contact with "a woman tall and divinely beautiful," especially when "her black lace dress is open at the neck," and "her arm, smooth and round as polished marble, from shoulder to wrist is bare, and the dazzling milky whiteness of it takes away his breath a little," then, of course, "in the next moment, reason, common sense, and honour, were flung to the winds! he held her in his arms close against his breast, while in the fierce glow of an ungovernable outburst of passion he rained down kisses upon her lips and throat and arm." Mrs. Cameron, perhaps, makes this siren, Agnes Verinder, a trifle too coarsely selfish and sensual, and the ill-treated Madge Durham a little too feeble and complaisant; but in this she must be allowed some originality, as also in the extraordinary conspiracy of circumstances, aided by vindictive relatives, against the happiness of poor Madge. The good-natured Lionel Parker, who plays, after a fashion William Dobbin to Jack Ludlow's George Osborn, is also a very likeable character. He is, indeed, the salt of the book, for Ludlow is by no means worthy of the happiness which ultimately comes to him. Within its limits, Jack's Secret is a good story, and proves that in the art of plot-construction its author is making decided and rapid progress. Nor has she ever before drawn three such good characters as the three Miss Durhams.

A great deal of cleverness is diffused over Golden Lives, which contains the germs of half a dozen excellent novels, mainly, however, of the kind which the prigs of criticism delight in styling "cynical." The story of a tontine, with its unlimited possibilities in the way of treasons, stratagems, and spoils, is on the whole well told; but it would have been infinitely more successful had Mr. Wicks not dragged into it almost every sensation and every odd character to be found in modern life or modern fiction, including subtle poisonings, big fires, sensational trials, ordinary Stock Exchange sharks, and extraordinary American "cool cards." As a result, the reader gets tired of seeking to unravel Mr. Wicks's plot; and so in the end, to all appearance, does Mr. Wicks himself. At all events, the mystery which surrounds the past of Joshua Cope, the chief villain of the story, does not appear to be altogether cleared up in the end. There are two really strong characters in Golden Lives—Joshua Cope and his father-in-law, Crawley Foyle, who is an almost ideal representation of a pompous, bluff swindler, but who never could have had such a daughter as Isabella. Mr. Wicks is not successful in his love scenes. To all appearance he would be somewhat French if he durst. But he seems not to possess the adequate amount of courage. One scene looks somewhat risky. Isabella Foyle, when nominally Mrs. Joshua Cope, admits Mr. David Thresher at midnight into her private sitting room, having previously donned "a loose robe of maroon silk, quilted with down and drawn in at the waist with a girdle," and then "her lithe and sinuous form embedded in the downy robe, with passionate involutions was embraced by the lover of her youth." This is either underdone French realism—how very much better would M. Guy de Maupassant or M. Paul Bourget have managed an interview of this kind!—or it is egregious English nonsense. Probably it is the latter; but it is none the better for being such. The supreme passion should never be made supremely ridiculous. It is doubtful whether Mr. Wicks could write a good love-story; it is absolutely certain that if he took time and care, and kept his ambition within bounds, he could produce a very smart representation of modern London society. The illustrations of Golden Lives, by M. Jean de Paleologue, are probably the best that have appeared lately in any novel.

There is none of the ability of The Iron-master or of Dr. Rameau in M. Ohnet's new story, which, by the way, has been very carefully translated by Mr. Albert Vandam. It is, however, fantastic, "psychical," very French, and very unpleasant. In obedience to a hint thrown out in a conversation of a quasi-scientific character at Monte Carlo, Pierre Laurier, an artist, having been expelled from the presence of Clémence Villa, his mistress, an actress-prostitute of the Nana type—in whose case "the firm bust set like a jewel in a cloud of Mechlin lace, and made more evident by the low-cut dress, enhanced the proud sensual look of the whole," &c.—kindly bequeaths his soul, when to all appearance he is about to die, to his friend Jacques de Vigne. Jacques, who has led a "fast" life, and is in the last stage of consumption, revives physically, is fascinated by and takes over Clémence, to be in turn ruined and thrown over by her. Pierre, however, does not die, but lives to marry the sister of Jacques, and to be overwhelmed with commissions. Jacques himself is good enough to die, having made the discovery that the psychologico-physical experiment which had been tried with the view of effecting his cure was "performed on a weak subject with a very vivid imagination," and was therefore "too successful." A Weird Gift has nothing, not even style, to recommend it.

The Fair Castaways is a lively sea story, which in its occasionally boisterous humour, however, recalls Captain Marryat rather than Mr. Clark Russell. The description of the Sowkins household in particular is decidedly Marryatish. Mr. Winder utilises the war between Chili and Peru with much skill; and although a hunt for hidden treasure and a mutiny are unhappily among the most commonplace incidents of fiction, both are, on the whole, very skillfully managed in The Fair Castaways. The two heroes, Harold Wynne and his friend Stanley, who is a compound of Captain Kidd and Lord Dundonald, are cool and courageous enough, as indeed they require to be, for they have a positively Stevensonian amount of fighting to get through. Of the heroines, Grace Meredith (who is plagued by a titled and persistent suitor) is decidedly the better, being indeed the only female in the book that is tolerable. The plot of The Fair Castaways is rather involved and eminently improbable, but the incidents which figure in it are in themselves novel and attractive. The only serious blunder that Mr. Winder makes is the killing of poor, good-natured, and plucky young Sowkins, who is the clown of the story—such a clown as Mr. Midshipman Easy would have delighted to play the patron to.

A certain seriousness of purpose effectually prevents Golden Bullets, which is quite accurately described as "a story in the days of Akbar and Elizabeth," from being classed among books of adventure specially intended for boys. Dr. Ireland confines himself almost entirely to giving an accurate historical representation of India—its men, customs, and life (including its seraglio life)—in the time of Akbar. He has, indeed, a sort of hero in the person of Stephen Ashbourne, a merchant, whom he ruins, and then makes an artillery officer in the service of Akbar; and even a heroine in the person of Irene, who becomes Ashbourne's wife; and both have adventures of different kinds. But they, and indeed the entire plot of the book, are subordinated by Dr. Ireland to the giving of a full and faithful picture of India in the period of which he writes.

Thus he supplies a tolerably full account of the Jesuit propaganda, which is historically valuable rather than specially interesting. Altogether, and although there is plenty of movement in Golden Bullets, it cannot be said to be very exciting. But it is written with the most scrupulous care, and will be enjoyed by all who like to take a large proportion of historical truth in their fiction.

Lady Brough is preposterously long and hopelessly commonplace, being nothing better than the very old story of a selfish girl jilting a young man whom she loves to marry an old man with a title, and yet in the long run getting jealous of the young man's attentions to another woman whom her conduct has left him perfectly free to admire. Sir Charles Brough is the most patient and magnanimous of husbands that find themselves deceived in and by their wives, but even he becomes in the end very tiresome. There is, however, some tolerable writing and character-sketching in Lady Brough; and the author, with a simpler but more original plot than he has attempted to work out here, would probably produce a fairly readable second-class novel.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

GIFT BOOKS.

Winchester Meads, in the Time of Thomas Ken. By Emma Marshall. With eight illustrations. (Seeley.) Though a true "child of the house"—as Mrs. Marshall prettily calls the boys of Winchester—would dispute the entire appropriateness of the title, and might further object to one or two topographical details, no reader can fail to admit the charm of this little historical romance, which recalls Miss Charlotte Yonge in her earlier days. But though Miss Yonge has perhaps a firmer grasp on history, and can paint stirring events in more vivid colours, her successor does not yield to her in delineation of character, or in clothing her narrative with the atmosphere of the chosen time and place. Even the prominence given to the religious element is not out of harmony with a story that has for its central figure Bishop Ken, whose whole life was a protest against the sinfulness of "the world." The other characters, too, stand out clearly; and, what is more, each fits into its place—the loving mother, the Puritan maiden, the two sons, one of whom goes to court, and the other becomes a nonconforming "gospeller," while both remain true to one another and to the teaching of Ken. The fanatical uncle is less satisfactory, nor should we expect to meet with a spoilt child in such a household. But if it be incumbent on a critic to find faults, so it is necessary for an author to provide foils to the virtues of his heroes and heroines. The illustrations, from buildings at Winchester and St. Cross, supply just the background that is wanted for an almost perfect story.

The Fluttered Dovecot. By G. Manville Fenn. With illustrations by Gordon Browne. (Ward & Downey.) Mr. Manville Fenn, hitherto known to us only as a writer of books for boys and about boys, has here boldly undertaken to reveal the secrets of a girls' school, encouraged, perhaps, by the example of Thackeray in the opening pages of Vanities Fair. Of the truth of his description we do not profess to judge, though we may say that he has maintained the consistency of his heroine from first to last. Curiously enough, his dénouement turns upon the very same incident to which Miss Rhoda Broughton attaches such tragic importance in her new novel Alas! namely, a frustrated elopement. And here we venture to think that, from the point of view of his readers, Mr. Manville Fenn has committed a no less serious error by turning the affair into a comedy. Like revolutions in Paris, such matters seem to our old-fashioned notions

"Too comic for the solemn things they are, Too solemn for the comic touches in them."

The comic touches here are supplied partly by the persistent tendency to caricature on the part of the author, but still more by the pencil of the artist, who has fairly surpassed himself in the humour of some of the allegorical head-pieces.

La Rochelle: or, The Refugees. By E. C. Wilson. (Nelson.) One more story of the Huguenots, and the Dragonnades, and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and the escape of refugees. One more, doubtless, to be followed by many more still, until it may be a question whether the real sufferings of those terrible times have not been compensated by the imaginative pleasures to which they have given birth. This book about La Rochelle will add its mite to the heap. Despite the brutalities and agonies inseparable from its subject, La Rochelle is a gentle story; despite its gentleness, it has no lack of stirring incident and romantic episode. It is written by a kind and wise hand, guided by a pure taste, which can touch religion without cant, and suffering without sentimentality. The story never flags in its interest, and the characters are well drawn and individual. Nannette is one of the most charming of small Protestants; Nicholas Picard, the dragon, an admirable picture of a soft kernel in a hard shell; and Alphonse Bourdet, the Protestant who keeps up his old rôle of respectable Catholic, in order to aid the escape of his co-religionists, is, perhaps, from a literary point of view, the best of the bunch. Mr. Wilson may be congratulated on the production of a book which, if not a masterpiece of fiction, is still far above the average, and sound and sweet from beginning to end.

The Purchase of the North Pole and A Family Without a Name. By Jules Verne. Illustrated. (Sampson Low.) The two books exemplify the two manners of their popular author. The former—which is, indeed, described as a sequel to From the Earth to the Moon, published some twenty years ago—belongs to that class of marvels of science by which M. Jules Verne made his reputation. The title skilfully conceals the real subject, which is nothing else than to make the pole accessible by shifting the axis of the globe. How this is proposed to be done, and why the scheme fails, the reader must find out for himself. We will only promise him that he will find both secrets very well kept. The second book belongs to the author's later manner, which has only been attained by dropping out gradually every element of mystery. We are thus left with a plain historical romance, rendered realistic by the vivid narrative of the writer. In the present case, the scene is laid in Lower Canada, at the time of the rising of 1835, about which most English people know less than about the Arctic regions. We do not doubt the general truth of M. Jules Verne's picture, which is coloured by no animosity to English rule. Political students will be interested to observe the similarity between French and Irish rebels. There ought to be—and, for all we know, there may be—many "families without a name" in Ireland, from Hackett of Dungarvan downwards.

New York to Brest in Seven Hours. By André Laurier. Illustrated. (Sampson Low.) The master must look to his laurels, which, indeed, are plenteous enough for him to rest upon. M. Jules Verne has never written anything finer—more ingenious, more vivid, and better sustained—than this scientific dream of his most successful imitator, M. André Laurier. In fact, the imitation is so close that it might be characterised by a harsher term. Boys, however, will not be troubled about the ethical question. We can assure them that, if they can only reconcile themselves to a Gallic hero and an American heroine, they will here find a story which, both in its general scheme and in its details, they cannot resist believing.

Young People and Old Pictures. By Theodore Child. With Forty-seven Illustrations. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This is the sort of book that Leigh Hunt would have delighted to write, or to have helped another to write. It deals with art from the human point of view, and is a pleasant gossip book—well written, and pleasantly varied by quotations of picturesque passages from other authors. It is formed of a number of short essays illustrating life, especially child life, in all periods and countries of modern Europe. The illustrations begin with the charming dancing and singing children of Della Robbia, from the singing gallery once in the Duomo of Florence; these are followed by Ghirlandajo's so-called "Ginevra dei Benci," from the fresco in Santa Maria Novella, in the same city; and this by Donatello's bust of the young Baptist, and the angels and children from Botticelli's "Crowning of the Virgin" in the Uffizi. All these pictures (except perhaps Ginevra) form good illustrations for a pleasant article on "Boys and Girls from Old Florence," in which the life of the grand old city in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries is happily recalled by extracts from Vasari, Castiglione, Machiavelli, Cellini, and others, including Rabelais and Mr. J. A. Symonds. In the same way pleasant peeps are given of court life in Spain in the days of Phillip IV. and Velasquez, of French girl life in the seventeenth century, of the family circle of Rubens, and so on, until we have seen much that is pleasant, and read much that is not only entertaining but valuable, about "young people" in Italy, Spain, France, the Netherlands, Germany, and England, from the fifteenth to the present century. We hope that Mr. Child will give us some other books of the same kind—even on the same subject, for he has by no means exhausted it. He has evidently extended his reading beyond the ordinary grooves, and is well able to interest us in many things which are worth the knowing. Young People and Old Pictures would be a delightful book even without the pictures, but these are well selected and well engraved.

The Light Princess. By George MacDonald. (Blackie.) This little volume contains three quite unconventional fairy tales. The Princess, whose wicked aunt deprives her of "gravity" (in both senses of the word), and the giant, who puts his heart out to nurse, are, we fancy, new figures in this province of the realm of fancy. The style has the peculiar charm that belongs to all Dr. MacDonald's writings; and if the illustrations fall below the letterpress, it is because the standard of the latter is unusually high.

Fifty-two more Stories for Boys. Edited by Alfred H. Miles. (Hutchinson.) The rather odd number of the stories in this collection seems to suggest that it is intended to provide material for a year's reading, the tales to be consumed at the rate of one per week. It is, however, certain that voracious boyhood will have nothing to say to this self-denying ordinance, and that by the time the first week has expired the entire contents of the book will have been incontinently devoured. Indeed, no other fate could be expected for a banquet of fiction supplied by such caterers as Dr. Gordon Stables and Messrs. W. H. G. Kingston, Manville Fenn, and David Ker, to mention only four out of some thirty contributors. The best testimony to the thoroughness and discrimination of the editor's research is provided by the fact that many of the best stories are by writers whose names, in this country at any rate, are little known.

By Sea and Land. By Gordon Stables, M.D., R.N. With Illustrations by W. S. Stacey. (Frederick Warne.) An exciting book, suitable for boys. It is full of adventures by sea and land; hence the title. The account of the jungle and the killing of the tiger is written in very graphic style.

Loyal Hearts, by Evelyn Everett Green (Nelson), is a charming story of the times of Good Queen Bess. There are several pairs of lovers, who, after passing through many difficulties, are at last happily united. A good description is given of the Queen surrounded by her courtiers; she is shown in the best light—handsome, lovable, and generous. It ends with an exciting account of the Spanish Armada. The story is an agreeable mixture of fact and fiction.

The Garret and the Garden, or Low Life High Up; and Jeff Benson, or the Young Coastguardsman. By R. M. Ballantyne. With Illustrations. (Nisbet.) These two stories are told in a bright manner. In the first there is an account of a garden on the roof of a humble dwelling in the East-end of London; and it is shown how life, though surrounded by what is low and vulgar, can be purified by artistic taste. "Jeff Benson" is a stirring tale of a young coastguardsman, who experiences the usual round of shipwrecks, fires, &c., but ends by coming in for a large fortune.

"Fritz" of Prussia. By Lucy Taylor. (Nelson.) To any boy or girl interested in history this book would be a welcome gift. The introductory chapters are excellent. In the first Miss Taylor gives a brief account of Prussian history from the founding of Königsberg by the Teutonic Knights down to the death of Frederick William the Second of Prussia, the grandfather of the late Emperor William. In the second chapter Prussian history is continued to the birth of the late Emperor Frederick in 1831. From 1863 to his death the biography of the Crown Prince and Emperor becomes the history of Europe. The sketch of this eventful period is well drawn by Miss Taylor, who has the knack of conveying information in a pleasant manner.

The Log of the Bombastes. By Henry Frith. Illustrated by Walter William May. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This is a spirited and well-written tale of naval adventure on the coasts of South America and among the islands of the Pacific. The incidents show more than usual freshness of invention, without being at all improbable—except one relating to a volcanic island inhabited by cuttlefish, the date of which is the first of April. The illustrations are rather disappointing.

Fresh from the Fens: a Story of Three Lincolnshire Lassies. By E. Ward. With eight Illustrations. (Seeley.) A pretty little story, telling how three little girls from a Lincolnshire parsonage went on a visit to their aunt near the cathedral town of "Avon-minster," and how their simple goodness won the hearts and softened the manner of some very ill-trained and ill-conditioned young cousins, and led to various other desirable results. The illustrations are ludicrously amateurish.

The Little Princess Angel. By Stella Austin. (Walter Smith & Innes.) This is a delightful story for girls. The plot is good, and the character of the young heroine is ably and sympathetically drawn. Miss Austin is a lover of children, and describes them well. The picture of the little Italian Princess in the old English home is charming, and the tale of her adventures in the travelling circus is decidedly well told. The author would, we venture to think, have done better if she had laid down her pen after writing Chapter I. in Part III.; for here the interest ceases. Perhaps, however, to the young reader, for whom the book is intended, the digression about the puppy "Notable" will not be all unwelcome. Miss Austin may be a better judge than we.

City Boys in the Woods: or, A Trapping Venture in Maine. By Henry P. Wells. Illustrated. (Chapman & Hall.) The story of this book is very slight. Two Boston lads of seventeen are permitted by their fathers to set out alone on a "gunning" expedition into the backwoods of Maine. After two or three days' adventures, they naturally come to hopeless grief in the forest primeval. But they are rescued by a benevolent trapper, who initiates them into the mysteries of woodcraft, and spins long yarns about moose, caribou, beavers, &c. Here the author is in his element; for he evidently knows well the delights, dangers, and hardships of a hunter's life. Whether his descriptions are so deterrent as they are intended to be, may be doubted; but they are certainly extremely vivid and picturesque. As is often the case with American books, the illustrations are more than half the whole. As pictures of scenery and of animals they are equally admirable. Some are from photographs; others bear the names of Mr. A. B. Frost and Mr. R. A. Muller. The engraving varies in merit, but not seldom it attains the same high standard as the best of the drawings.

The Slave Prince. By Archdeacon Chiswell. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This story, which, we are assured, is founded on fact, illustrates in the adventures of Perano, a runaway slave, the difficulties attending the observance of treaties especially intended for the benefit of unfortunates of this kind. Captain Hardy, of the Favour, is an exceptionally good commander; for he is not only a thoroughly humane man, but he is so thoroughly up in the language of the treaty, in virtue of which he is asked to give up Perano, that he completely baffles that poor lad's enemies. In addition to this interesting feature of The Slave Prince, the unravelling of the royal negro mystery in it is well managed. Most of the negroes who appear in this story, especially the "scholarly" Taleny and the scoundrelly Salo, are remarkably well drawn. Archdeacon Chiswell's descriptions of tropical scenery are more than graphic. Some of his chapters are a trifle too long; but, all things considered, he has produced one of the best and most sensational—although not too sensational—books dealing with negro life in its present state that have ever been published.

The Little Ladies. By Helen Milman. Illustrated by Emily F. Harding. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) And very nice "little ladies" they are so long as they remain little. There is not a pin to choose between them; and the "Gasman" is a very nice young fellow, too, until he develops into Lord Claremont; and Sybil, or "Sweetheart," is a "lovely" aunt, until she falls in love. In short, it is a delightful book till you get rather more than half-way through, and some of the episodes, like the taking of the blind man to church, are very pretty and new. But we confess that we do not greatly admire the love-making and the religious sentiment that follow. We had much rather that Nona and Nesta had remained "little ladies" to the last, although Nesta marries Guy, and Nona, by an accident, is "called to the highest platform of suffering." Miss Milman may fairly congratulate herself that the "little ladies" are not "story-book" children altogether, but the same epithet describes but too accurately the young women into which they develop. When will writers of stories like these understand that in art as in life there is a distinct break between childhood and adolescence, and that quite a new story begins when the nursery and school-room doors are closed? To begin this story at the fag-end of the other is as great a mistake as to begin dinner directly after breakfast.

The Golden Weathercock. By Julia Goddard. (Blackie.) Miss Goddard is not deficient in fancy, and her stories are picturesque and bright, if rather thin and inconsequent. They are full of lively dialogue, pretty pictures, and striking incidents, like the introduction to a pantomime. They are told by a weathercock and several other less stationary birds, by two winds, a cat, a rainbow, and a star, and if they contain nothing which lingers long on the memory, they arrest the attention sufficiently by a series of gay dissolving views to enable the reader (or spectator rather) to sit out the performance without being bored. Indeed, the effect of the book generally is of a pleasant dream of all the Christmas pieces and fairy tales one has seen and read for the last thirty years, from Planché and Perrault to Blanchard and Lewis Carroll.

Santa Claus on a Lark, and Other Christmas Stories. By Washington Gladden. (Fisher Unwin.) This is an American book; but English children will like it none the worse for that. The sprightly extravagance of the stories is delightful in its way; and the volume altogether, with its large handsome type, good paper, and clever pictures, is pleasant to look at and to handle.

Half-hour Plays. By Amabel Jenner. (Walter Smith & Innes.) A book which will be a welcome addition to the libraries of our little schoolroom actors and actresses, and especially appreciated by such among them as are sufficiently poetical to understand the sentiment and feeling of the book. The unknown wonders of fairy-land, the ideal lives of elves and brownies, are always subjects of delight in childhood. But to many of our little ones the idea that they themselves may become "good folk" if they will, that love and unselfishness are fairy wands they all possess and can use at pleasure, will be as novel as it might be made delightful; and this idea seems to be the silver thread running through the book—the motif of the little plays. As regards its stage possibilities, the dramatis personæ are few and the parts easy; the difficulties begin in the fact that the scenery to be effective would need to be elaborate and beyond some schoolroom capabilities. Ice palaces in the Arctic regions—lovely as they sound—are not easy to create; and moonlight scenes in dim far-reaching forests are out of place in a London back drawing-room. However, difficulties like distance may lend enchantment, and snowy Christmas holidays produce brilliant ideas.

Duty's Bondman. By Helen Shipton. (S.P.C.K.) We are always glad to receive new books from this authoress. We are sure of getting a readable story, with much originality, and a distinctly high moral tone. Duty's Bondman is no exception to this rule. It is an interesting story of a young man, Laurence Ford, who begins life in doing his duty for duty's sake, and ends in performing it under the law of love. Laurence goes as valet with an invalid master, who, to prolong his life, spends the winter in Algiers. The description of the journey there and their various adventures will make this book deservedly popular. We recommend it to all parish libraries.

Steady and Strong. By R. M. Freeman. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) We do not know what school is intended by Chudleigh Abbey, and therefore cannot guess who is the original of "the head"; but it is impossible not to be interested by the enthusiasm with which the author of Steady and Strong describes all the arrangements—domestic, sanitary, and scholastic—of his favourite school, and the estimable character of its master. This enthusiasm redeems the book, which, as a picture of school life, is crude in its drawing of character and feeble in plot. There is not much necessity for the warning of the preface that the three bad boys are "entirely without foundation in fact." The illustrations are spirited, but we do not admire the "process" by which they are reproduced.

Heart of Gold. By L. T. Meade. (Frederick Warne.) This is a story for girls, describing the life of two orphans, who, though twins, have very different characters. Jocelyn Karron is the idle, while her sister Hope is the industrious, apprentice. The old idea is adhered to, and the selfish Jocelyn comes to no good end. We are bound to say that the dialogue is stilted, but the plot is clever and the love-story interesting. Markham, the hero, is an unmitigated prig. That he should escape whipping disappoints the reader; but Hope, the heroine, has a heart of gold, and is the best drawn character in the book.

The Farm on the Down. By Anne Beale. (Hodder & Stoughton.) This volume takes its title from a story of farm life, the scene of which opens in a snowstorm. The subject is the return of a prodigal daughter to a dying mother. Unfortunately the author is realistic to the extent of being commonplace. There is neither art nor picturesqueness in the tale, and the following sentence is a fair sample of Miss Beale's style: "She took a basin containing warm milk from the fender, and by means of a piece of sponge and her fingers strove to replace the maternal ewe to this her offspring." The second story in the volume deals with country life in Wales, and is decidedly more interesting than the first.

Dorothy the Dictator. By Annette Lyster. (S.P.C.K.) This is a story of a curate who lives with six brothers and sisters. Their house is a large one, but their income is small, and the combination requires management. Dorothy becomes the house-keeper in place of her eldest sister, and at once order reigns and waste is put a stop to. There are, however, some drawbacks even to the rule of King Stork; and Dorothy the manager imperceptibly becomes Dorothy the dictator. The story is well told, and the dialogue is throughout bright and clever.

The Young Squire. By Lady Dunboyne. (S.P.C.K.) Lady Dunboyne has here given us a very prettily-written and naturally told story of a family of real children. "The Young Squire" is a boy of thirteen brought up by two adoring aunts. He goes to stay with his cousins in London, and the account of how he saves a poor cab-horse from a miserable end is well drawn. The tone of the book is excellent, and it deserves to be popular.

The Spoilt Twins. By Emily Dibdin. (Nisbet.) There is nothing new either in plot or character in this little tale. But the old story of the troubles and disasters of two spoilt children, and their gradual acquisition of wisdom by means of their sorrows, is told again with more than the average skill and knowledge; and a pleasant little story is the result.

When we were Children. By E. M. Green. Illustrated by W. G. Burton. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This is a book which will charm on account of its illustrations, though these are strangely unequal. It is difficult to believe that the picture of Tring in page 4 and the woodcut on page 173 are by the same hand. The letter-press is decidedly dull, and the descriptions of child-life are both uninteresting and commonplace. The book is well printed and decorated, and the verses which precede the chapters are well chosen.

Pictures and Stories from English History. With numerous Illustrations (Nelson.) Children of eight or nine will be pleased with this book. The pictures are mostly good; the stories are short and simply told, and are interspersed with political pieces—among others Bell's "Mary Queen of Scots," Southey's "Battle of Blenheim," and Mrs. Hemans's "The Pilgrim Fathers."

A Boy's Honour. By Maud Christie. (S. P. C. K.) A short, well-written story of school-boy life, likely to be popular in a school or parish library. Although there is nothing new or original in the plot, it is well worked out and ends satisfactorily.

Wanted a Sphere. By M. Bramston. (S. P. C. K.) No girl need search long for a sphere who reads Miss Bramston's idyllic tale. It teaches how to take a deep and loving interest in the ordinary people of everyday life. That the author's sentiments are lofty and her heroines loveable goes for granted.

A Message from the Sea, by A. Eubule-Evans (S. P. C. K.), is a brightly-written seaside story rather than a story of the sea. It contains a town boy who does not recognise whittings at the sea, because in London they are always seen with their tails in their mouths, and who proposes to take a room in a lodging-house for a pet monkey, and pay for it out of his pocket-money.

The Children's Treasury for 1890. (Nelson.) An excellent little book and a boon for Sunday-school teachers on the look-out for prizes. The poems are above the average, the pictures artistic, and the tales and anecdotes both interesting and instructive; while some of the customs of foreign lands described will probably be quite unknown to most of the readers, be they nurses, teachers, or children. The book is worthy of its name, for its contents are really of value.

WE may notice here two reprints, both of which are admirably adapted for Christmas presents. First, Messrs. Reeves & Turner—who are now, we believe, the publishers of all Mr. William Morris's works—have at last issued The Earthly Paradise in a single volume, closely printed in double columns of about 440 pages. The familiar design is still on the title-page, and the cover bears a graceful pattern of leaves and flowers. It is interesting to know that the original four volumes (1868-70), which intervened between Swinburne's Poems and Ballads and Rossetti's Poems, have passed through seven editions; and not everybody is aware that a popular edition in duodecimo was published in ten parts in 1872, and again, bound up in five volumes, in 1886. The other reprint is of Carlyle's Translation of Wilhelm Meister, in two volumes, which form apparently the first of a series which Mr. David Stott is issuing under the title of "Masterpieces of Foreign Authors." It is clearly printed on good paper, and handsomely bound—perhaps too handsomely for the smoke of London. Prof. Edward Dowden has written a brief introduction; while Mr. C. K. Shorter is responsible for editorial notes. Each volume has a frontispiece—Goethe's portrait and Goethe's house at Weimar—reproduced by the novel and not altogether unsatisfactory process called photomezzotype.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are glad to hear that Dr. Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, has written his Recollections, which go back to the first decade of the century. The first volume will be published in the coming spring, under the title Annals of My Early Life. It will include his school-days at Harrow; his brilliant Oxford career, when he rowed in the first university boat-race (which, indeed, he has the credit of having organised), played in the university eleven, and also won a first-class and several university prizes; and his residence at Winchester as second master for ten years before he went to Glenalmond.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish early in January the first volume of the new and revised edition of The Cambridge Shakespeare. Mr. Aldis Wright, the surviving editor, has gone carefully over the whole book in the light of the most recent textual criticism, and it is hoped that the edition in its final form will fully sustain its reputation as the most scholarly in existence. No pains have been spared to make the book outwardly attractive by the use of new and handsome type, and by careful printing, for which the Cambridge University Press is deservedly famous. The work will, as before, be completed in nine volumes, to appear quarterly.

A COMMITTEE—with Viscount Melville as chairman, Prof. Masson as vice-chairman, and Mr. A. W. Purvis, of Esk Tower, Lasswade, as hon. secretary and treasurer—has been formed to erect a memorial over the grave of William Drummond, in Lasswade churchyard, two miles distant from the poet's castle of Hawthornden, where he received Ben Jonson in 1618-9. The monument will include a medallion portrait, for which authentic materials exist; and admirers of his work residing in the neighbourhood have undertaken that roses shall shade the place, according to Drummond's desire, indicated in the words of his proposed epitaph, in his address to a brother poet, the Earl of Stirling. If funds permit, a statue or other more important memorial will be erected in some suitable locality, in addition to that over the grave.

THE Rev. Dr. J. C. Cox—now rector of Barton-le-Street in Yorkshire, but formerly of Derby—has nearly completed a work in two volumes, to be entitled Three Centuries of Derbyshire Annals. It is based mainly upon the records of quarter-sessions from the time of Elizabeth, which, though imperfect in some particulars, are yet both older and more varied than those of any other English county. Apart from local administration and criminal justice, special chapters will deal with military, ecclesiastical, fiscal, poor-law, and economical questions. In an appendix will be given particulars of every enclosure award; and there will be three full indexes. The publishers are Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, who hope to have the book ready early in the new year.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON will publish immediately Across East African Glaciers, by Dr. Hans Meyer, being an account of the first ascent of Mount Kilima Njaro. The book will have upwards of forty illustrations, including photogravures and a coloured frontispiece. An appendix will deal with the geological, botanical, and entomological results of the expedition.

MR. JOHN MURRAY has in the press A Ride through the Disturbed Districts of Asia Minor and Armenia, by Mr. H. C. Barkley, author of "Bulgaria before the War."

MESSRS. EDEN, REMINGTON & Co. will publish on January 1 a work entitled Last Year, which will contain, in addition to a chronological summary of the principal events of 1890 an obituary list of the year, together with portraits.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK have arranged with Prof. Hermann Schultz, of Darmstadt, for an English translation (from the latest edition) of his Old Testament Theology, which has already reached four editions in the original. The translation will be by Prof. J. A. Paterson, of Edinburgh.

THE same publishers announce for immediate publication The Lord's Supper: a Biblical Exposition of its Origin, Nature, and Use, by the Rev. J. P. Lilley, of Arbroath.

Seven Lights of Society: or, the Eighth Voyage of Sinbad the Sailor, by Mr. J. A. Kelman, is the title of a volume bearing on current social questions, announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MISS MABEL PEACOCK has written for Bygone Lincolnshire a work to be shortly issued by Messrs. William Andrews & Co., of Hull, a long paper on "Havelok the Dane."

THE novel by Mr. Littlejohns, entitled The Flowing Tide, which was announced in the ACADEMY of last week, is published by Mr. Stanley J. Killby.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co., owing to the growth of their ordinary publishing business, have disposed of their department dealing with Bibles, prayer-books, fine bindings, &c., to the Oxford University Press Warehouse.

TWENTY-ONE of Mendelssohn's letters to his intimate friend, Julius Schubring, are now to be seen in London. Mr. Quaritch is in temporary possession of them, and will, we doubt not, gladly exhibit them to the lovers of the great composer. The earliest is dated in 1830, and the latest in 1846, so that they may be called representative of his whole active career. The close and affectionate relations between the writer and the recipient give a more than ordinary interest to the little collection. Schubring is known as the writer of "Recollections of Mendelssohn," which appeared nearly five-and-twenty years ago, and is still read with eagerness.

AT a meeting of the members of the National Liberal Club, held on December 14th, Prof. T. W. Rhys Davids in the chair, it was decided to form within the club a Philosophical Circle, for the discussion of philosophical questions. The provisional committee are issuing invitations to an inaugural dinner, to be held on January 14th, at 7 p.m., when they will submit proposals as to the organisation of the Circle, a committee will be elected, and an inaugural address will be delivered by Prof. Rhys Davids on "The Evolution of Indian Philosophy as compared with Western Thought."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued the two parts of Sir John Lubbock's The Pleasures of Life, bound up in one volume. Part I., which contained the famous list of one hundred best books, was first published in June, 1887, since which time more than 70,000 copies have been sold. It is interesting to learn that Sir John Lubbock has been induced to make only two changes in his original list, two plays—Kalidasa's "Sakuntala," and Schiller's "Wilhelm Tell"—taking the place of Lucretius and Miss Austen. Part II. has been no less successful, more than half as many copies having been called for in less than half the time. After this, let no modern author complain that there is no public for any books except fiction.

Correction:—In the obituary notice of W. B. Scott, in the ACADEMY of December 6, page 529, column 3, line 49, for "poverty" read "poetry."

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

The first instalment of the long-expected Talleyrand Memoirs will appear in the Century for January, 1891, to be published towards the end of this month. M. Ledros de Beaufort has for this purpose translated into English, and Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the American Minister at Paris, will edit, these excerpts, which are understood to contain the tit-bits of the entire work. The Century has thus practically secured not only the right of translation, but also that of prior publication.

The January number of the Antiquary will contain an article by Mr. W. H. K. John Hope on "The Mace of the House of Commons," illustrated by the first engraving of the mace and its details, which has been produced from photographs taken by special leave of Mr. Speaker and the Lord Chamberlain; and also an important series of original letters, giving details hitherto unknown of the last Stuart rising, under the title "Out in the Forty-five." Mr. F. Haverfield, of Lancing College, contributes to the same number the first of a quarterly series on "Recent Roman Discoveries in Great Britain."

SIR PATRICK COLQUHOUN and Wassa Pasha will publish in the January number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review the first of a series of papers on the ancient Pelasgi and their modern descendants, the independent researches of both having led to the same result. The same number will also contain an historical sketch of French enterprise in the East in 1623, by M. J. Girard de Rialle, based on a document in the archives of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. This document consists of instructions given by Louis XIII. to a mission sent to Shah Abbas by Cardinal Richelieu. It throws considerable light on the rivalry between France and Spain and the friendship of France for Turkey, and also on the relations between English and Dutch commercial and religious enterprise, and on the hope entertained by Louis XIII., that his sister's marriage to the King of England would ensure the free exercise of Roman Catholic worship at the Court of St. James.

MR. W. A. CLOUSTON will contribute an article on "The Asiatic Source of a Passage in the Diates, printed by Caxton," to the January issue of the Bookworm.

New and Old, a penny church monthly, which has been for some years published by Mr. Hayes, and edited by the Rev. C. Gutch, will, with the January number, pass into the hands of Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co., and will be edited by Miss E. M. Green.

THE first number of a new issue of the Young Men's Christian Association Times will be issued next week by the district travelling secretary, Mr. J. C. Moor, of Sunderland.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE second course of Prof. Max Müller's Gifford Lectures, to which we referred in last week's ACADEMY, is, we understand, ready for publication. The third course, which will treat of "Anthropological Religion," is to be delivered at Glasgow next January. Prof. Max Müller has been chiefly engaged during the last year in revising his lectures on the Science of Language. They will soon appear, in a new form, as "The Science of Language, founded on Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution in 1861." Of his new edition of the Rig-Veda, with Sâyana's Commentary, two volumes have just been published, the third is to appear in 1891, the last in 1892, so that the whole work will be finished in time for the next International Congress of Orientalists to be held in London.

THE election to the deputy-professorship of comparative philology at Oxford, vacant through the resignation of Mr. Sayce, will be proceeded with immediately. Candidates are requested to send their applications, with testimonials, to the registrar of the university not later than January 14, 1891.

MR. KARL PEARSON, professor of mechanics and applied mathematics at University College, London, has been appointed lecturer in mathematics at Gresham College, in succession to the Dean of Exeter.

THE London University records for 1890 are already remarkable for the failure of all the candidates for the degree of D.Sc. They are now signalled by the success of two candidates for that of D.Lit. The successful candidates are Mr. R. J. Lloyd and Mr. John Taylor—the former in English, the latter in Hebrew. This is the first time that the degree has been awarded since the revision of the regulations in 1885. Mr. Lloyd presented a thesis upon "Vowel-Sound," embodying a theory of which some account was given, under "Meetings of Societies," in the ACADEMY of April 18.

WE extract from the University Correspondent the following statistics with regard to the recent degree examinations of the London University. For the B.A. there were 399 candidates, of whom 73 passed in the first and 145 in the second division; total, 218, or 54 per cent.; of these, women gained 53 passes out of 78 candidates. For the B.Sc. there were 145 candidates, of whom 28 passed in the first and 43 in the second division; total, 71, or 49 per cent.; of these, women gained 8 passes out of 20 candidates. As compared with the previous year, these figures show a decrease for the B.A., but an equally large increase for the B.Sc. The University Correspondence College claims to have passed 85 candidates, being 39 per cent. of the total. Of the London colleges, University College has 22; King's College, 5; and the Birkbeck Institution, 9. Of the provincial colleges, Aberystwith has 18; Owens, 13; Yorkshire, Masons, and Cardiff, each 7. Of the women's colleges, Holloway has 7; Cheltenham, 6; and Bedford, 5.

ABERDEEN University has received a bequest of £10,000, under the will of the late J. G. Chalmers, to endow a chair of English literature.

AN Agassiz professorship of oriental languages, with an endowment of 50,000 dollars (£10,000), has been founded at the university of California, which is situated at the town of Berkeley, in that state.

THE annual meeting of the managers of the American School at Athens was held at Columbia College, New York, on November 21. Nearly all the colleges supporting the school were represented. Prof. Poland, of Brown University, was chosen director for the coming year, and 5000 dollars (£1000) was appropriated to carry on the work of the institution.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

JOY COMETH IN THE MORNING.

I HAD a sorrow, and I wept salt tears
One winter night, and heavy bent the rain;
At dawn came frost, and on my window pane
Each drop like fairy lacework now appears.

So shall my grief perchance become a pleasure,
Yes, tears maybe are jewels hearts would keep,
For in another life we'll wake from sleep,
And light shall sparkle from our new-found treasure.

BEATRIX L. TOLLEMACHE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of The American Journal of Psychology is chiefly remarkable for an article on "The Brain of Laura Bridgman," by Dr. H. H. Donaldson. That now historical child, who, notwithstanding the loss or grave impairment of all the senses except touch, managed by the help of a carefully planned education to grow into an intelligent moral being, has probably had more attention bestowed on her by psychologists and paedagogists than any other individual of our species. In the present paper Dr. Donaldson reports on a particularly careful scientific examination of Laura's brain, the main result of which seems to be that the area of the cortex is below the average of her sex, though the difference is not great, and such as it is can be explained as the result of the failure of certain portions of the brain to develop completely. The results of measurement of the mass of the brain are to follow. Next to this article the most interesting feature of the Journal is a careful study, by Dr. W. Noyes on "The Insanity of Jean Jacques Rousseau." The writer bases his conclusions to a large extent on a recent German monograph on the subject, J. J. Rousseau's Krankheitsgeschichte, by P. J. Möbius. This study in psychiatry is particularly instructive. Few who read it will doubt that Rousseau gave quite unmistakable signs of mental disease, and that this disease had a clearly traceable development.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERTHELF, J. Recherches pour servir à l'histoire des arts en Poitou. Paris: Thorin. 15 fr.
BOULANGIER, E. Voyage en Sibérie. Paris: Soc. d'éditions scientifiques. 7 fr. 50 c.
EDOUARD, E. Essai sur la politique intérieure d'Haiti. Paris: Challamel. 2 fr. 50 c.
FROITZHEIM, J. Lenz u. Goethe. Bielefeld: Velhagen. 2 M. 50 Pf.
GRINKBACH, E. Das Goethe'sche Zeitalter der deutschen Dichtung. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M. 50 Pf.
JOANNE, Paul. Dictionnaire géographique et administratif de la France et de ses colonies. T. 1 (A—B). Paris: Hachette. 25 fr.
LERICHE, L. Les Etapes de Gutenberg. Paris: Chacornac. 12 fr.
MIALLER, G. Géographie des colonies françaises. Paris: Challamel. 3 fr. 80 c.
MURKO, M. Die Geschichte v. den sieben Weisen bei den Slaven. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 60 Pf.
PITON, C. Histoire de Paris: le quartier des Halles. Paris: Rothschild. 50 fr.
TISSANDIER, G. Souvenirs et récits d'un acrobate militaire de l'armée de la Loire. Paris: Dreyfous. 9 fr.
VIGNON, L. L'expansion de la France. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
VILLE, Léon. La lutte et les lutteurs. Paris: Rothschild. 10 fr.
WESSLEY, E. J. Geschichte der graphischen Künste. Leipzig: Weigel. 20 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- LIPSUS, R. A. Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten u. Apostellegenden. Ein Beitrag zur altchristl. Literaturgeschichte. Ergänzungsheft. Braunschweig: Schwetschke. 8 M.
STRAUSS, I. TORNEY, V. v. Der altgriechische Götterglaube. 2. Thl. Heidelberg: Winter. 10 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ARGOVIA. Jahresschrift der histor. Gesellschaft d. Kantons Aargau. 21. Bd. Aarau: Sauerländer. 3 M. 20 Pf.
ARMORIAL, ancien, d'histoire de la Toison d'or et de l'Europe au 15<sup>e</sup> siècle. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 200 fr.
BERGER, E. Les registres d'Innocent IV. Fasc. IX. Paris: Thorin. 9 fr. 50 c.
BIIE, S. Die Fortschritte d. Völkerrechts seit dem Wiener Congress. Breslau: Schletter. 1 M. 20 Pf.
BRÜ, O. Schlesische Heidenzinnen, ihre Erbauer u. die Handelsstrassen der Alten. Berlin: Calvary. 10 M.
DU FRESNE DE BRACOURT, le Marquis G. Histoire de Charles VII. T. 5. Le Roi victorieux. Paris: Picard. 8 fr.
FITTIG, H. Die Institutionenglossen d. Gualcausus u. die übrigen in der Handschrift 328 d. Kölner Stadt-Archivs enthaltenen Erzeugnisse mittelalterlicher Rechtsliteratur. Berlin: Guttentag. 5 M.
GINDLEY, A. Die maritimen Pläne der Habsburger u. die Antheilnahme Kaiser Ferdinand II. am polnisch-schwedischen Kriege während der J. 1627—1629. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 80 Pf.
LAFORE, Ch. Collection des principaux cartulaires du diocèse de Troyes. T. 7 et dernier. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Indices eorum quae tomis hucusque editis continentur. Scripsit O. Holder-Egger et K. Zeumer. Hannover: Bahn. 12 M.
RACHFAHL, F. Der Stettiner Erbfolgestreit (1464—1472). Breslau: Koebner. 8 M.

STRATZ, R. Die Revolutionen der J. 1848 u. 1849 in Europa, geschichtlich dargestellt. 2. Thl. Heidelberg: Winter. 5 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BIEDERMANN, G. Moral-, Rechts- u. Religionsphilosophie. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 20 Pf.
 FRITSCH, A. Fauna der Gaskohe u. der Kalksteine der Permformation Böhmens. 3. Bd. 1. Hft. Schachti. Prag: Riva. 32 M.
 HEINE, F. u. A. REICHENOW. Nomenclator musei Heineani ornithologici. Berlin: Friedländer. 10 M.
 LORENZ-LIBURNAU, J. R. Ritter v. Die Donau, ihre Strömungen u. Ablagerungen. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 3 M. 20 Pf.
 PENZIG, O. Pflanzen-Teratologie, systematisch geordnet. 1. Bd. Dicotyledones polypetalae. Berlin: Friedländer. 20 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ACTA martyrum et sanctorum. Syriace ed. Bedjan. Tom. 1. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 20 M.
 ALBRECHT, E. De adiectivi attributi in lingua latina collocatione specimen. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
 BÜHLER, G. Die indischen Inschriften u. das Alter der indischen Kunstpoesie. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M.
 DE HARLEZ, C. 1-Li. Cérémonial de la Chine antique. Paris: Maisonneuve. 15 fr.
 DE LA GRASSIE, Raoul. Etudes de grammaire comparée. Essai de phonétique générale. Paris: Maisonneuve. 12 fr.
 EXERCITATIONES palaeographicas in Bibliotheca Universitatis Lugduno-Batavae instaurandas iterum indicit S. G. de Uries. Leiden: Brill. 2 M.
 KÜHNER, R. Ausführliche Grammatik der griechischen Sprache. 1. Th. 3. Aufl. besorgt v. F. Blass. 1. Bd. Hannover: Hahn. 12 M.
 MAIRET, J. de. Silvanire, m. Einleitg. u. Anmerkgn. hrsg. v. R. Otto. Bamberg: Buchner. 3 M.
 ROTAK, C. Die Bedeutung der Wiederholungen f. die Homerische Frage. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JULYAN NOTARY'S EDITION OF "THE KALENDER OF SHEPARD'S."

6, North-crescent, Bedford-square, W.C.: Nov. 22, 1890.

While completing the bibliographical history of "The Kalender of Shepherdes" for my forthcoming edition, I have had the satisfaction of finding out and rectifying several erroneous statements concerning Julian Notary's edition, which I beg to communicate to the readers of the ACADEMY as a contribution to the history of English typography.

The first English edition of "The Kalendar" etc., appeared at Paris, in 1503, under the title "The Kalendar of Shyppars." It is a Scotchman's translation of "Le compost et Kalendrier des bergiers" (ed. 1496). As English people were unable to appreciate the uncouth language of this edition, further disfigured by French compositors, Rycharde Pynson had it revised, and printed a second edition at London in 1506. Independent of these two texts, Robert Copland translated the French original for the third English edition, printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1508. Combining Pynson's and Wynkyn de Worde's texts, Julian Notary printed about 1518 the fourth English edition; and his text is reproduced more or less faithfully, and with orthographical changes in the editions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Notary's edition is of extreme rarity; in fact, there is no perfect copy of it extant. Three copies, with smaller or greater deficiencies, are found in the libraries of Alfred Huth, Esq., London, and F. Locker Lampson, Esq., Rowfant, Sussex, and in the Bodleian at Oxford (Auct. QQ. supra ii. 30). I have been able to examine all three, as both gentlemen kindly allowed me the collation of their copies.

If quite complete, Notary's edition consists of 104 folios, arranged from A to N in eights. The title "The Kalender of Sheperdes" above a woodcut, representing a shepherd gazing at the starry sky, while a wolf tears his sheep, is on A<sub>1</sub> recto, the colophon on N<sub>8</sub> verso. The edition is peculiarly marked through the appearance of a Tudor-rose on the rectos of ff. B<sub>2</sub>; G<sub>1</sub> and, T<sub>8</sub>, and M<sub>4</sub>; and on the verso of G<sub>4</sub>. This rose is of the size of a shilling, is sometimes printed in red, sometimes black, and contains in the centre a Roman M, above it a sign resembling an A, and below it an asterisk.

The copy in the Huth Library is the most perfect of the three copies. It lacks only nine folios, viz., M<sub>8</sub> and N<sub>1-8</sub>, besides the right-hand side corner of the bottom of fol. I<sub>8</sub>.

The copy in the Rowfant Library* was hitherto supposed to be quite perfect, two leaves (N<sub>7</sub> and, and,) having been supplied by facsimiles. This statement proved, as I discovered on a closer examination, to be wrong. Besides the two leaves in facsimile, the copy contains ten leaves from two later editions, viz., M<sub>8, 8, 7</sub>, from the edition of 1556 (the only known copy of this edition is at the Lambeth Library), and M<sub>8</sub>, N<sub>1-8</sub>, from the edition of 1559 (there are two copies known of this edition—one in the Britwell Court Library, the other in the Parker Collection, Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, MS. 169 iii.)† I am surprised that this forgery has hitherto escaped the attention of those who examined the copy, especially when I consider the somewhat ambiguous remark in the Fuller Russell Sale-Catalogue "with all faults."‡

The copy in the Bodleian Library is still more deficient. It lacks no less than eighteen folios—viz., A<sub>1</sub> and, s; E<sub>4</sub>, s, s; F<sub>2</sub>, 7; G<sub>2-8</sub>; T<sub>4-8</sub>; N<sub>7-8</sub>, including title-page and colophon.

By taking the Huth copy, adding to it folios M<sub>8</sub> and N<sub>1-8</sub> from the Bodleian copy, and photographs from the two leaves facsimiled in the Rowfant copy, it would be possible to make up a perfect book.

The colophon on N<sub>8</sub> verso (facsimile) in the Rowfant copy runs thus:

"Imprinted in Powles chyrch yarde at the sygne of the thre Kynges by Julyan Notary the yere of our lorde
 a. M.CCCCC. &."

a third line is missing, thus leaving the date incomplete. From a comparison with quotations of this colophon by Haslewood in Sir Egerton Brydges's Censura Literaria (vol. iii. p. 27), and Dibdin in his Typographical Antiquities, the portion marked in italics in the above colophon seems to have been missing on the leaf from which the facsimile is derived. Dibdin, in the second volume of Typographical Antiquities (1812), devotes a considerable space to the description of various editions of "The Kalender," &c.; but his statements are, except those about the edition of 1503, all wrong. On page 526 he says:

"There is no edition of this work extant with the name of Pynson subjoined as the printer of it. It

* The Rowfant Library, Catalogue of the Printed Books, Manuscripts, &c., collected by F. Locker-Lampson. London, 1886, 8vo, p. 115.

"A-N in eights."

"Title with woodcut of shepherd gazing on the heavens, while a wolf devours his sheep, and, on verso of a student resting after work, A<sub>1</sub>; Prologue A<sub>2</sub> recto; Table A<sub>2</sub> verso and A<sub>3</sub>. Illustrated throughout with curious woodcuts, apparently of German origin. (.)

"A similar edition by the same printer, from the only known copy of which also the last figure of the date has been cut off (.) is very fully described by Dibdin in Typ. Ant. vol. ii. This copy appears to belong to the same edition as that described by Haslewood in Sir Egerton Brydges's Cens. Literaria.

"From the Fuller-Russell Library."

† The editions of 1556 and 1559 are page by page reprinted from Notary's edition; but the type and, if not this, the more modern orthography must at a first glance convince an expert of their later date.

‡ Sale Catalogue of the Library of J. Fuller Russell, Esq., July 1st, 1885. No. 1078 Shepard's Kalender Prose and Verse black letter, numerous woodcuts, the last two leaves marvellously facsimiled by Harris, sold therefore with all faults, green morocco, gilt edges by Lewis, small folio. Julian Notary 1510.

** Specimens of the printing by Julian Notary are extremely rare.

is only from internal evidence that the present and subsequent impressions are arranged in the order in which they are described."

As the Catalogue of the Grenville Collection points out, there is a copy of Pynson's edition extant, with the name plainly and legibly attached to it. What Dibdin describes on pp. 526-34 is not Pynson's nor Notary's, but the edition of 1556. It appears he had never seen a copy of Pynson's. On pp. 590-603, where Dibdin pretends to give a detailed account of Julian Notary's edition, a very strange confusion has taken place, in fact, he mixes two editions. To judge by the fragment of the colophon:

... oles chyrch yarde at the sygne of the thre ...
 ... otary the yere of our lorde a. M.CCCCC. & ...
 he had really seen a copy of Notary's impression, most likely the one now at Rowfant; but his description following is that of a much later edition, as is proved by the appearance of Roman type in the facsimile page (p. 594) and by the first date on the table of eclipses: "M. d. l. x." From the copious specimens Dibdin gives as illustrations, I have been enabled to ascertain that he describes the edition of 1560 (?) in the British Museum (C. 27. K. 6).

Haslewood, in the Censura Literaria, gives a description of a copy of Notary's edition; but it is not thorough and detailed enough for the purposes of the critical bibliographer.

The determination of the date of Notary's edition has caused various bibliographers great difficulties and led them to wrong conjectures.* In the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library Notary's edition is ascribed to Pynson and dated 1497, very probably from the table of the eclipses of the sun and the moon. Hazlitt dates it 1510. As there is no copy of "The Kalender of Sheperdes" extant with a complete date, we are left to conjecture it.

From books of Julian Notary's press that have come down to us, containing colophons with genuine dates, we know that Notary settled first about 1496 in King-street, Westminster; about 1503 he moved thence to St. Clement's Parish, and established himself "without Temple Bar," at the sign of "The Three Kings."† About 1515 he removed to St. Paul's Churchyard. The first book we possess with a genuine date from this last address is "The Cronicles of England, with the fruit of the times." The colophon of this book runs line by line thus:

"Enprynted at Londō in powlys chyrche yarde at the west dore of powlys beyde my lorde of London palays by me Julian Notary.

In the yere of oure lorde god. M.CCCCC. xv."

There are two books in the University Library, Cambridge, from Julian Notary's press, bearing the date 1516, and printed in St. Paul's Churchyard at the sign of St. Mark, § viz.—Robert Whittington's De Metris and De Octo Partibus Orationis. The colophon of the former runs thus:

"Explicit whytintoni editio nuper impressa Londonper Julianum Notari impressorem cō-morante iuxta sancti Pauli fub interfignis fan-cti Marci. Anno dni. MCCCC. xvi. xxiii. mē-fis Julii."

* Compare Th. Warton's History of English Poetry, ed. W. C. Hazlitt, 1871, vol. iii., p. 155; also Dibdin's Typographical Antiquities, W. C. Hazlitt's, Bibliographical Collections and Notes, third series, Lond. 1887, 8vo, p. 231; and finally B. Quaritch's Catalogue, 1886, p. 115, &c.

† See Misale secundum usum Sarum (1498); The Book of Devotions (1502).

‡ The Golden Legend (1503); Herolt's Sermones Discipuli, &c. (1510).

§ I owe the information concerning the two books in the Cambridge University Library to Mr. E. Gordon Duff.

The colophon of the latter :

"Explicit libellus octo partiū Roberti whittintoni lich-feldienſis Artiū magiftri Londini ipreſſus per me Julianu
notary commorâte circa templū Sancti pauli ſub iterſignis ſeti Marci. Anno. dni. M.ccccc. xvi. xxvii meſis Auguſti."

The Life of St. Barbara has the following colophon :

"Here endeth the lyfe of ſaynt Barbara
Inprinted in London by me Julyn
Notary dwellynge in Paules chyrche yarde at the weſte dore beſyde my lorde of londonſ palaye / at the ſygne of the thre kynges Anno poſt virgineum partum . M.ccccc xviii Viue memor lethi."

It is impossible to fix the exact date of the removal to St. Paul's Churchyard, it probably took place very near 1515. Another question is, whether "the sign of St. Mark" and "the sign of the three kings" were attached to the same house. The colophons of the "Cronicle" and "Barbara" speak strongly in favour of this hypothesis. Both state "in St. Paul's Churchyard at the west door beside my lord of London's palace," but while the former does not mention any sign, the latter gives that of "The Three Kings."

According to this, Notary must in 1515 have had no sign at all or the "sign of St. Mark," because his books from 1516 have it; in 1518 that of "the three kings." A third possibility is that he had two houses in St. Paul's Churchyard, and first lived "at the sign of St. Mark," and thence removed to the sign "of the three kings."

I am inclined to believe—of course, it is only a conjecture—that he removed to a house in St. Paul's Churchyard which had the sign of St. Mark. In the first two years he adopted this new sign; but afterwards, perhaps for commercial reasons, he replaced it again by his old emblem "of the three kings," as it is not very likely that he should have found three houses with the same sign, however common "the three kings" may have been.

The last book I have come across with this place and sign named in it is the Life of Erasmus (1520). Its colophon runs thus :—

"Here endeth the life of ſaynt Eraſmus. Imprynted at London in Powles chyrchyarde at the ſygne of
the. iii. ky-
ges by my Julyan Notary . a . M.CCCCC. and xx."

We may, therefore, fairly date the edition of "The Kalender of Sheparden" by J. Notary "about 1518," which will certainly not be far from the exact year.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE OF THE ALPHABET.

Dunstable : December 15, 1890.

The pillar stone with Roman letters of the sixth or seventh century at Kilmalkedar (county Kerry) may indicate a former belief in the protective power of the alphabet. The stone is incised on one side with an ornamental cross with a long shaft; on the other with the alphabet running from top to bottom. In the middle of the alphabet three letters of much larger size are inserted, D N I. The stone is illustrated in Petrie and Stokes's Christian Inscriptions in the Irish Language (vol. ii., pl. 5), and the authors consider the D N I to be an invocation=DOMINE.

W. G. SMITH.

THE MONARCHICAL SPIRIT IN FRANCE.

Queen's College, Oxford : December 8, 1890.

Notwithstanding Mr. Hamerton's able, clear, and vigorous letter in the ACADEMY of December 6, I still adhere to the statement that the French Republic is not national, and that the monarchical sentiment is still alive, though dormant, but capable of vigorous revival.

In 1879—and how often since!—I have heard men and women say in France: "Ah, si le Prince Impérial vivait encore!" In 1873, when he was a Woolwich cadet, I heard Frenchmen and Frenchwomen ask: "A-t-il de l'esprit?" I have also constantly heard the Orleans Princes spoken of in France—and that by Republicans—as "nos Princes."

There is, and has been for the last twenty years, a great resuscitation of the past among French scholars and historians; and the value and the power of "heredity" and "hereditary" qualities and influences has become a household word in France, as well as in a good many other countries.

I do not wish to "oppose one affirmation to another," but I think Mr. Hamerton will perhaps admit that I have met one fact with another. And if I were not afraid of writing a long letter, I believe I have a few more facts in store which might possibly convince Mr. Hamerton that the Bishop of Annecy has been somewhat too hasty in his conclusion.

WILLIAM MARKHEIM.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 21, 4 p.m. South Place Institute.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Competition as a Principle of Social Progress," by Mr. J. A. Hobson.
MONDAY, Dec. 22, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Gaseous Illuminants," V., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewis.
TUESDAY, Dec. 23, 3 p.m. British Museum: "History of the Literature of Babylonia, IV., Second Semitic Period," by Mr. G. Bertin.
SATURDAY, Dec. 27, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Frost and Fire," adapted to a Juvenile Auditory, I., by Prof. Dewar.

SCIENCE.

SOME POPULAR SCIENTIFIC BOOKS.

A Manual of Public Health. By A. Wynter Blyth. (Macmillan.) Dr. Blyth is probably most widely known as the capable and energetic medical officer of health and public analyst for St. Marylebone; to students of hygiene he is more particularly and intimately known as the author of most useful text-books upon various branches of their subject. This handsome and well-printed manual, whose appearance recalls Prof. Corfield's standard treatise upon sewage of the same publishers, is in all respects worthy of the writer's high position and reputation. It is neither a dictionary nor a cyclopaedia of a vast subject. It is a careful and well-proportioned statement, at once concise and complete, of the best and latest teaching and practise in all departments of public health. Statistics, air, ventilation, warming, meteorology, water, drains, sewage, nuisances, disinfection, zymotic diseases, hospitals, diet, the inspection of food, the duties of sanitary officers—all these subjects are here fully and ably discussed without omission of essential details and without redundancy, the whole illustrated with maps, diagrams, and plans. Dr. Blyth writes in a clear and lively style—the style, we can fancy, of one who has had to educate his masters of the vestry; and so this volume, though intended primarily as a book of reference and learning for sanitary officers and students, is full of interest and instruction for all of us who live over untrapped drains, breath infected air, and drink poisoned water. The laity read medical works proper far too much for their strength and peace of mind—already, thanks to the daily papers, the silly army of hypochondriacs is smitten with the craze of tuberculosis; let them read instead such a manual as this, which deals with the broader facts and conditions of personal and popular health, and lays down useful rules within the comprehension and observance of all intelligent persons.

Through Magic Glasses, and Other Lectures. A Sequel to "The Fairyland of Science." By Arabella B. Buckley (Mrs. Fisher). With many Illustrations. (Stanford.) This is as pleasant a book of miscellaneous scientific information for young folk as we have seen for a long time. The contents are very diversified; there is a bit of astronomy, a bit of microscopic botany, something about the spectroscope and its revelations, and even a little on prehistoric archaeology, and the extinct fauna and flora of Britain. Mrs. Fisher writes brightly and lucidly, and no boy or girl with a spark of capacity for taking an interest in natural science can fail to be delighted with the book. The illustrations are excellent.

Object-Lessons from Nature. By Prof. Miall. (Cassell.) This first book of science comprises twenty-six short and well-illustrated lectures on subjects drawn from all departments of nature. They are intended for children of twelve onwards, and are exactly suited for home or scholastic use. Mr. Miall chooses some interesting plant or animal, and collects its most noteworthy associations after carefully describing its structure. In an age of good scientific books, this takes a high place among elementary manuals. It ought to prove of the greatest service to national and parish schoolmasters.

Among the Moths and Butterflies. By Julia P. Ballard. (Putnam's.) This book is a revised and enlarged edition of Insect Lives, and is intended for young Americans, as the butterflies and insects treated are mainly those of the New World. They are described in a popular fashion for children. The book is nicely printed; and more than a hundred good illustrations of insects and the larger American butterflies give it a certain value.

MR. G. URE—author of Our Fancy Pigeons and Rambling Notes of a Naturalist (Elliot Stock)—is an enthusiastic breeder of fancy pigeons; and as he "verily believes that even such scientists as Edwards, Dick, Frank Buckland, and the rest, were but highly-developed fanciers, which natural bent of mind supplied the enthusiasm necessary for the success they achieved, and without which they would have remained in obscurity," humble persons whose ambition never soared beyond keeping a cloud of white doves naturally feel insignificant. But it is only fair to praise Mr. Ure's careful account of the breeds of prize pigeons, to which are appended some "rambling ornithological notes" on a few of our wild singing birds and others which frequent the river-side. This book would delight every lad fond of nature and pets.

A WELL-KNOWN pisciculturist, Mr. Burgess, of Malvern, has written a useful little work—Modern Fish Culture (Billing). We are glad to see that he does not recommend the introduction of the Black Bass from America, and that he is doing his best to breed the White Fish from the same country (Coregonus albus). It would be a substantial addition to our native supplies.

OBITUARY.

It is with great regret that we hear of the death of Mr. James Croll, LL.D., F.R.S. By sheer force of intellect he had raised himself from a very humble station of life, and acquired the reputation of a deep and original thinker on problems connected with geological physics. His work on Climate and Time has received great attention, even from those who differ from his views, while his writings on such subjects as Oceanic Circulation and Stellar Evolution have also been widely read. Dr. Croll had for many years been suffering from a painful disease. But though fully aware of its fatal character his enthusiasm was not impaired, and he remained at work until removed by death last Monday, December 15, in his seventieth year.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SCHOOL BOOKS AND THE UNIVERSITY PRESSES.

Dulwich College, S.E.: Dec. 9, 1890.

The current number of the Classical Review contains a paper by Mr. Page, which will be welcome to all who are interested not only in school teaching but in the credit of English scholarship. It is a protest against "the mental pabulum which the Presses of Oxford and Cambridge send out as fit for the strong digestion of youth." It is a most refreshing protest; and that long enduring body, assistant masters, may congratulate themselves on having found at last a spokesman in so accomplished a writer and scholar as Mr. Page.

It cannot be a mere coincidence that only a few hours before reading this paper the present writer was endeavouring to throw into the form which follows a few remarks upon this subject. There must be something rotten in a state which has moved two persons, quite independently of one another, but with perhaps not dissimilar opportunities of forming an opinion, to make the same protest at the same time and upon exactly the same grounds. It is indeed an undoubted fact that one result of the business, the very active business, which is being done in England between the publishers and editors of some school editions is that pabulum of a very unwholesome kind is being administered to school boys.

Mr. Page has taken as his text two editions of Virgil, recently published by the Clarendon Press; may it be permitted now to call attention to the edition of the Phormio of Terence, issued under the same high authority? The book appeared in 1887; but the present writer made its acquaintance for the first time last week, and after a very cursory reading he offers the following selection from some of the striking statements to be found in it:—

(1) 23, "quom, 'although.' In Plautus often, in Terence occasionally, quom causal or concessive is followed by the indicative." After this it is no surprise to find that on 838:

"Ne quom hic non videant me conficere credant argentum suum."

there is no note at all, or that at 502:

"Neque, Antipho alia quom occupatus esset sollicitudine tum hoc esse mi obiectum malum!"

we are only given the very reprehensible rendering "at a time when Antipho might have been beset by," &c.

(2) 154, "when ubi is used of indefinite frequency the subjunctive naturally follows." Consistently with this we are told at 90, dum iret; "subjunctive of indefinite frequency."

(3) 723, "interest and refert take a gen. of the person."

(4) 840, "ostium concrepuit. Greek doors opened outwards, and so it was customary before leaving a house to knock against the door as a warning to persons in the street."

(5) 1035, "Cantor. Between two or more acts of a Roman comedy it was the custom to introduce a lyrical monologue (canticum) with a flute accompaniment. Cf. Pl. Ps. 1, 5, 158-160"—and the familiar passage is quoted at length.

These points turn upon the very alphabet of Plautine and Terentian scholarship; and the doctrine here offered is, it is submitted, either inadequate, or misleading, or false. It may be doubted whether the force of misrepresentation could further go than it has gone in the passage last quoted. It is of less moment that on p. 117 it is suggested that amarier possibly "=amare-se (the reflexive pronoun)" or on p. 176 that provincia is derived from providentia. At 176 we are told that eius (fem.) amittendi is instructive as showing "how entirely the gerund was once a verbal noun." It would be interesting to know when the form ceased to bear that character. Lastly, on p. 442; "qui me et se hisce impedit nuptiis," the note deliberately says: "hisce, nom. masc. plur." W. T. LENDRUM.

SCIENCE NOTES.

In his presidential address at the annual meeting of the Royal Society on December 1, Sir George Stokes announced some of the recommendations of a committee of the council appointed to revise the whole body of statutes. Proposals to increase the annual number of new fellows from fifteen, and the total number of foreign fellows from fifty, were both rejected. But the committee agreed in approving a proposal that the council should have the power of nominating for election, in addition to the annual fifteen on the ground of scientific merit, a strictly limited number of men of very high eminence in other ways, not more than two in any one year, and not more than twenty-five in all.

At the same meeting, the first award of the Darwin medal was made to Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace, "for his independent origination of the theory of the origin of species by natural selection." The Darwin Fund, originally started in 1882, is administered by the council of the Royal Society in accordance with the following recommendations of a committee:

"That the proceeds be for the present applied biennially in reward of work of acknowledged distinction (especially in biology) in the field in which Darwin himself laboured; that the award consist of a medal in silver or bronze, accompanied by a grant of £100; that it be made either to a British subject or a foreigner, regardless of sex; and that it should be conferred at the same time as other medals at the anniversary."

A THIRD and revised edition of Dr. Crookshank's Manual of Bacteriology, with additional plates and engravings, will be published this week by Mr. H. K. Lewis.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, Dec. 4.)

DR. SANDYS, president, in the chair.—Mr. Giles read a paper on certain derivations. (1) φάνη, finda. φάνη (byform πάνη) cannot be connected with πάραιμαι, nor, as Fick suggests (Bezzenger's Beiträge, i. 171), with βαθύς, βάθος, &c. Nor is the ordinary meaning, "manger, feeding-trough," certain for Homer. If φάνη really meant this, we should expect not ἐν φάνη—the only form which occurs in Homer—but ἐν or ἐκ φάνης, as in a fragment of Eubulus (Incert. 17). As we see from K 568, ἰπποὺς μὲν κατέθησαν ἰμάσιν | φάνη ἐφ' ἰππεῖν, animals were tied up at the φάνη, whatever it may have been. The original meaning of the word seems to be "halter" or "tether," hence "stall," and in the classical period "manger." From this latter use came the derivatives φάνιον, "tooth-socket," and φάνισμα lacrimaria, as well as the use of φάνη in the sense of "panels." For similar wide changes in the meaning of words between the Homeric and the classical period, compare the Homeric and the classical use of ἐμβρυον and βρέφος. If this was the original meaning, the root with which φάνη must be connected is **bhandh*, the root of πεῖσμα (= **penθ-μα*), "anchor-cable," and πενθρός, "connexion by marriage" (cf. also Skt. bandhu, "relation," and the English "bond" and "band"). πᾶν-η, therefore, represents an original **bhandh-nā*, with the same suffix as in ποι-η, &c. For the change of position in the aspirate cf. χίτων and κίδων, &c. The Latin finda, "sling," is rather to be connected with this root than to be treated as a borrowing from σπενδών. It represents an original **bhandh-dā* or bhand-nā (Thurneysen, KZ 26, 303), and is thus the exact philological equivalent in root-form of the English "band." (2) μίσω, μισός; μισρός miser. μισρός = **mis-ros*, is the exact philological equivalent of miser. Both are to be separated from μισέω and μισός, which come from a root appearing in Skt. as mith. μισέω is Homeric and Herodotean, μισός appears only in Attic. Hence it is legitimate to suppose that the verb is older than the substantive. μισέω, at any rate, shows no trace of being a derivative of μίσω, as τελέω is of τέλος. The history of the words was probably as follows. From a root **mith-*, with a byform **mith-* (cf. Skt. viras with Latin vir = **vros*), we could have a derivative mith-io-s, whence in Gk. μισός, later μισός, just as **meth-io-s* becomes μέσος, μέσος. From this adjectival form came the verb μισέω—cf. μίσέω from μέσος. The neuter substantive is formed later, perhaps on the analogy of ἐχθός. The history of στυγέω and στύγος is identical; the verb is Homeric, the substantive later. With this root must be connected the English verb "miss" and the prefix in "mis-trust," "mis-lead," &c., which come from a participial form in original Teutonic **mib-tō-* (Kluge); the Old Church Slavonic mislŭ (= **mith-ti-s*), "revenge, punishment," and possibly Latin mitto (old form mitō). (3) Augur. The first part must be the same as in au-spex, au-ceps, hence a shortened form of the stem of avis. The second part is to be identified with the suffix in πρᾶ-βυ-s, Cretan πρᾶ-γυ-s, Skt. vanar-gu, "haunter of the wood," Lithuanian zmo-gū-s, "man," and other words discussed by Brugmann in vol. xli. of the Berichte über die Verhandlungen d. K. Sachs. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, p. 54. The words in the other languages are u-stems, and hence we must postulate a change of declension in the Latin word. Whatever the original meaning of this stem may have been, in all these languages it seems to have reached the stage of acting as a vague designation for "being" or "person"; and it seems not impossible that γυ-η is, after all, only the feminine to this masculine form—γυ-s.—Mr. Conway read a paper on "The Origin of the Latin Passive." He held that Zimmer's theory (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, xxx., p. 224 ff.) was confirmed by an Oscan inscription which had been recently discovered, and was discussed by Bücheler in Rheinisches Museum, xlv., p. 161. Zimmer had shown that the passive inflexion in all the Celtic languages was derived from a form of the finite verb which had an active but impersonal sense (i.e., its subject was the indefinite "they." Fr. on, Ger. man), and which ended in -r. Comparing this with the r of the regular Sanskrit endings of the 3rd pl. in the perfect and aorist, he inferred that it was the original secondary ending of the 3rd pl. active; and other evidence led to the conclusion that the secondary endings as a whole, including this -r of the 3rd pl., were originally used not only in tenses which had the augment or the reduplicating syllable, but also throughout the verb when it was compounded with a preposition. The r-form had been "levelled" out of the verbal system in favour of -nt in the European languages generally, but in Celtic and Italic it had remained in an impersonal use and given rise to a passive inflexion. In applying this theory more closely to Italic, Mr. Conway distinguished two classes of forms, the older, or rudimentary, the younger, or developed, passives. In the first the passive -r appeared in the place of the -nt(s) of the active 3rd pl., as in Umbr. ferar "aliquis ferat, feratur"; in the second it was added to the complete forms of the active or middle, as in the regular Latin forms (regitur, reguntur, &c.). The rudimentary class were of course the most important for the theory, but only some six or seven examples had hitherto been known in Oscan and Umbrian; with most of these the logical object of the action was left unexpressed, and in no case could it be determined whether they properly took an accus. or nomin. The developed passives in Oscan and Umbrian as well as Latin regularly took a nominative. Now in the new inscription one of the rudimentary forms occurred, from a verb in common use in the active, and unmistakably governed an accusative. It was a direction for the celebration of periodical sacrifices before a group of ivirlas (nom. fem. plur. Lat. **ivirlae*) or coats of arms (dedicated in the temple of Capua on behalf of a clan), sakriiss sakrafr aut oltiumam kersmaia, "sacrificis sacratae sint (more nearly 'sacraverit aliquis'), sed ultimam cenis," "they are to be re-consecrated with sacrifices, but the last of them with a public banquet." Sakrafr was the rudim. passive, originally the indefinite form of the 3rd pl. active, of the regular Osc. perf. subj., cf. fefacid, lamatir. The same distinction between a "banquet" and a "sacrifice" appeared also on a pair of companion ivirlae found on the same site. (Bücheler, Rh. Mus. 44 (1889), p. 323.) If this interpretation was correct, it proved the originally transitive force of the r-forms for Italic. The old legal construction censetur pecuniam (Cic. Flacc. §80) like the Osc. censamur eitiam (Tab. Bant.) perhaps showed a trace of this use even in the forms of the developed passive. The inscription contained other points of interest, e.g., the word messimais (fem. abl. pl.), which should be compared with Lat. maximus as showing the original e of the root (Gr. μῆγας).

FINE ART.

SWEDISH ETYMOLOGY—THE DANISH STONE AGE—DANISH GROUP-FINDS.

Etymologisk Svensk Ordbog, af Fredr. Tamm. Iste Häftet. A—BÄRGA. Large 8vo double columns, pp 80. (Stockholm.)

Nordisk Archaeologi. Stenålderstudier af L. Zinck. 8vo. Kjöbenhavn. Pp. viii. 105.

Kongl. Vitterhets Historie och Ant. Ak. Månadsblad. Stockholm, Oct.—Dec., 1890. Pp. 145-185. "Yxformar från Stenåldern i Ringsjö-fynden," by C. D. Reventlow.

Hypotesen om Religiöse Offer-og Votiefund fra Danmarks forhistoriske Tid. Af Henry Petersen. (Aarb. f. Nord. Oldkynd. og Hist. Pp. 209-252.)

It was in 1769 that the great Swedish linguist Johan Ihre published at Upsala his renowned and still valuable Glossarium Sutoyothicum, in folio and in Latin. It is now, of course, largely obsolete, and is, besides, so rare that a chance copy costs some 50 English shillings. All have longed for something similar, in the vernacular, about the present four Northern languages, whether on the scale of Prof. Skeat's quarto or the smaller of Kluge's High-German and Franck's Netherlandish. But none such has appeared till this part of Tamm's Swedish, which was issued a few days ago. I hasten to announce it, and recommend it to students of English at home and abroad. As sprung largely from Scandinavia, English will gain much help from every etymological dictionary of a Northern tongue.

Docent Tamm, of Upsala, is well known as a diligent and gifted worker in this field, and many have profited by his published dissertations. But he here comes as a Hercules, determined to accomplish a great task; and so far he has shown himself fully qualified for his undertaking. Cautious and modest, he now and again hits the mark better than his fore-gangers. Of course, he does not expect everybody to accept everything. Here, as elsewhere, we sometimes think we "know better." But the book is a solid and welcome gift, and deserves a large circulation. It is announced to be completed in ten parts.

Of not less interest in another direction are the papers by Zinck and Reventlow. The former is an active digger in Denmark, and at once gained reputation by his Broncefolket's Gravhøje (Kjöbenhavn, 1871). The latter is a veteran South-Swedish old-istorist, famous for his museum of stone-age objects from Ringsjön in Skone, the fruit of many years' toil and sacrifice. This rich collection will eventually be handed over to the Swedish State. The finds have been discussed by him in former volumes of the Månadsblad.

In these publications the two scientists come to close quarters with the enemy. My "pre-historic" readers are aware of the life-long conflict in Denmark between the late Chamberlain Worsaae and the still living palaeontologist Japetus Steenstrup on the division of the first age, fixing an early "barbarous-stone" and a late "polished-stone" period. This, in fact, depended on the date of the rough-cut so-called "scrapers" whose use is still under debate. Worsaae and his men affirmed that these "scrapers" were so rude that their chippers were mere savages, and that there was a gulf of ages between them and the "polished stone" population. Steenstrup and his warriors denied the fact, and therefore refused to admit the conclusion. In this violent dispute the fault belonged to the time—which patronised too much theorising, an impatience of unpleasant realities, and an extravagant use of typology, as if the free will and free talent of man were ruled by the same "laws" as dead matter.

The result is that here, as elsewhere in science, a reaction has set in. As might be expected, both these treatises are on Steenstrup's side. They tabulate the lateness of the "scrapers," and bring proofs of no sudden leap in the stone-age, no new mass-colonization, but the same population gradually accomplishing masterpieces in its stone art, and then receiving from abroad bronze-culture elements which it locally developed, as it afterwards welcomed and perfected the great advance into iron. Whether we will or no, we must now admit that the Danish "scrapers" were at least as young as the "polished" pieces, and the ideas of the honoured Worsaae must be abandoned.

Lastly, Dr. Henry Petersen's brilliant essay. It handles a great question. When the remarkable third and fourth century finds were taken from the Danish peat mosses in Slesvig, Worsaae started the theory that all these things—from the gold and silver down to pots and pans and the simplest tools and wooden fragments, whether Roman or Romanised, or first-class Scandinavian—had been hacked and smashed and then tumbled in as an offering to the gods. His great name made the doctrine fashionable, and his followers gradually extended it to all other group-finds, iron, or bronze, or stone age. A minority, again headed by Steenstrup, in vain protested.

Now that the progress of science and the accumulation of large material has permitted cooler examination and wider views, Dr. Petersen, one of the leaders in opposition, has here gathered the many decisive evidences against it. He shows that the Scando-Angles never had this monstrous sacrificial custom, that the peat-moss finds are camp-plunder and the stock of marauders belonging to two or more bodies of the same Danish iron-using nationality, and that such group-finds, as far back as the bronze and stone periods, were hidden for safety by their owners for future use, whether those owners were artisans, traders, or travellers. Most interesting details abound in the course of this reasoning.

Very many are eagerly engaged in these attractive and important enquiries. I draw their attention to the arguments and realities brought together in the above unusually fresh and independent archaeological contributions.

GEORGE STEPHENS.

OBITUARY.

MANY persons interested in art will have heard with regret of the death of the well-known collector and connoisseur, Mr. Richard Fisher. Mr. Fisher's death occurred lately at his country house, Hill Top, Midhurst. He was in his eighty-first year. For two generations Mr. Fisher had been closely associated with the collection of works of art. He was, we believe, one of the original members of the Burlington Fine Arts Club, and he was the intimate friend, and afterwards the trustee, of the late Mr. Felix Slade. He lived in art and for it. He issued for private circulation, about a dozen years since, a voluminous and extremely interesting catalogue of his principal possessions, appending to the list of them a series of notes, both chatty and learned, and printing the volume—which was full of rare ornament—in such a style as to increase its value to the tasteful amateur. Though Mr. Fisher's knowledge of art was varied and wide, his collection was confined chiefly to etchings and engravings. He was a most comprehensive print-collector of the old-fashioned type, now, alas! rapidly disappearing. Rich in such comparative trifles as modern etchings, rich too in Rembrandts, Ostades, and Claudes, Richard Fisher was richest of all in the works of the Italian engravers, from the very earliest craftsmen who produced the nielli, down to Marc Antonio, or to artists of even later practice. What will become of his collection is at present a matter of conjecture. Meanwhile, we confine ourselves to regretting the loss of a veteran connoisseur of great amiability, of full information, and of fine taste.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

THE January number of the Magazine of Art will contain an article on "The Portraits of John Ruskin," by the editor, which will be illustrated with two portraits of Ruskin as a child, by J. Northcote, and, among others, the portraits of 1842 and 1857, by Mr. George Richmond. In the text, "impressions" are contributed by such friends as Mr. Woolner, Mr. Holman Hunt, and also by Mr. Ruskin himself. Mr. Holman Hunt will write in the same number on "The Proper Mode and Study of Drawing"; and there will be an article on Mr. Brocklebank's collection of modern pictures, with engravings of works by Sir Everett Millais, Mr. W. P. Frith, Mr. Peter Graham, T. Webster, and John Phillip. The paper on Belvoir Castle, the seat of the Duke of Rutland, is illustrated with seven drawings, by Mr. J. Pinemore; and Mr. Harry Furniss will contribute a paper on "The Illustrating of Books" from the humourist artist's point of view.

MR. HENRY GRAY—antiquarian bookseller, formerly of Manchester, but now of Leicester-square, London—proposes to issue by subscription Views of the Old Halls of Lancashire and Cheshire, by Nathaniel George Philips, consisting of twenty-eight etchings (including five hitherto unpublished) from the original copper plates, mostly engraved by the artist himself between 1820 and 1822. There will be a letterpress description of each plate, written by various well-known authors; and a brief memoir of the artist, by Mr. W. Morton Philips. The work will be handsomely printed on toned paper of imperial quarto size.

THE latest discovery at Rome is that of a series of inscriptions, found on the right bank of the Tiber, near the Prati di Castello. There are in all from 150 to 200 lines, in small characters, consisting of fragments of the Acts of the college of XV viri sacris faciundis. But there are also some separate passages, engraved in fine, tall letters, of the time of Augustus.

which include the following words: "Carmen saeculare composuit Q. Horatius Flaccus."

OUR Indian readers will be startled to learn, from the New York Critic, that "the right to explore the site of ancient Delhi [sic] has at last been secured to America."

THE Académie des Inscriptions has recommended M. Homolle for the vacant post of director of the French School of Athens.

FROM Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. we have received two parcels, containing Christmas Cards and illustrated booklets appropriate to the season. The Cards do not show any particular novelty in design or treatment, but they are beautifully printed; and it is satisfactory to be assured that they come, not from Germany or the United States, but from the Royal Ulster Works, Belfast. The booklets have pleased us more. They consist of a familiar text—such as a poem, a hymn, or a fairy tale—accompanied by a series of designs that really do illustrate. Here, again, much of the charm is due to the admirable printing in colour and gold, and the artistic "get-up" of the little volumes. For the monotypes we do not care so much, but the illuminated borders and initials are the finest specimens of such work that we have ever seen in cheap publications. We may specially mention Keble's "Star of the East," with reproductions of Raphael's Madonnas. Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner" has some bold drawings of unequal merit by Mr. C. M. Paddy. The illustrations to Dickens's "Christmas Carol," by Mr. Frank Bindley, likewise fail in the figures.

THE STAGE.

WILSON BARRETT AND THE NEW OLYMPIC.

MR. WILSON BARRETT'S reappearance has been a theatrical event—the theatrical event, properly speaking—of this December season. He has appeared in his best form, and with a company large and well drilled, and generally of fair strength, and with a new young "leading lady," Miss Winifred Emery, whose talents and whose personality are, to say the least, well adapted to the particular part bestowed upon her in the piece with which, after an eighteen months' absence, Mr. Barrett makes his bow to the London public. Furthermore, the popular and romantic and really scholarly actor comes before us in what is practically a new theatre. Not the "Olympic," but the "New Olympic"—the "New" must never be dropped: it must be kept to the front. For the old Olympic (though it was associated with many pleasant memories of very long ago; though people who are still with us saw Robson there; though I myself, moi qui vous parle, have there been under the spell of Miss Kate Terry—the old Olympic, notwithstanding all that, had accumulated a tradition of failure, of dulness, and of disrepute. If the name has been maintained at all, it can only be as a convenient direction to a cabman—as an indication of a place that is known. But Mr. Barrett and the playgoing public must forget "Olympic" as much as they can and must insist upon the "New." The theatre's newness, its skilful planning, its size, its comfort, its wisely popular prices—all that is what must be borne in mind. It has purged itself of its traditions, and begins life afresh. Do I insist upon this a little too lengthily? There is something in it, depend upon it—a bad name sticks.

"The People's Idol"—the new piece, written mainly, no doubt, by Mr. Victor Widnell, but in which Mr. Barrett himself has had part—is a play of real merit; and, from its humanity, its wholesomeness, and the almost perfect fashion in which it is set upon the stage, one would like to hope for it a very long run. A success, to a certain extent, it is bound to be, but of its thoroughgoing popularity—a matter with which the educated people who read the ACADEMY are fortunately unconcerned—of its thoroughgoing popularity, I say, I am not so well assured. And there shall be mentioned at once the three causes—one or two of them minor faults, one or two of them quite substantial merits—which may conceivably combine to arrest the progress of this worthy drama of the day. The first is that the play wants humour. Mr. George Barrett, whose performance ought at all costs to include something of the comic, is invited to be wholly pathetic. The lack is felt distinctly of that comedy element which proceeds from a joyous or, if you will, even from a cynical observation of life. Am I preaching the necessity, or even the advisability, of the introduction of humour into every work of literary art? Nothing of the kind. Imagine the introduction of humour into Grey's Elegy, or Wordsworth's Ode, or Milton's Sonnets, or into the profoundest of the short stories of Balzac! But at the theatre—and in a play that has four acts, and that lasts all but three hours—it is quite a different matter. The relief of comedy—something more of the relief than is afforded in "The People's Idol"—is certainly to be desired. Again, there is some approach to faultiness of construction in that division of interest between the strike of the workpeople and the love affair of Lawrence St. Aubrey, which occurs lateish in the play. It may be urged that the strike concerns Lawrence almost as much as does his love affair. It may be urged that we are concerned with the whole of his fortunes, with his chivalry, his personality, as Mr. Wilson Barrett represents him. And that is, no doubt, true. But, for all that, we cannot so readily divert our attention from one of his troubles to another; and they come upon him during the progress of the play "not single spies, but in battalions." Thus is the interest not indeed precisely frittered, but yet not concentrated. The third feature which may conceivably be found to tell to some extent against the commercial interests of the piece is a positive merit, and that is the reasonable and judicial manner in which the problem of the strike is treated. When, to gather the average opinion, I lingered for a moment in an ante-room, in the atmosphere of other people's cigarettes, I was informed that the piece was "too argumentative." And I fear that this wholly Philistine British objection may have some weight. The middle class embraces its prejudices, and loves not argument. The lower class—the great residuum who enjoy the courtesy-title of "working men"—hates reason. Now all the treatment of the strike business in "The People's Idol" is thoroughly unprejudiced, is eminently reasonable. I trust—with no great sanguineness—that it will commend itself to the public. In the drawing of the principal characters—chivalrous hero, charming young woman, sneaking gentleman, violent and protesting lady—there is no particular freshness of observation; but the writers who, not at all in a spirit of mere compromise, have addressed themselves to the study of humanity as it is affected by a great strike, are capable of excellent work.

And now for the acting. Mr. Wilson Barrett, as the best young manufacturer of the modern type—whose interest in his workpeople is probably considerably in excess of his workpeople's interest in him—gives us a natural and unforced study of character, in a performance often spirited and impressive, and never less than judicious and discreet. Tender and lover-like in his dealings with Grace Duncan, the representative of Lawrence is possibly seen at his best in the scenes with his scapegrace brother, who has been rescued out of a tight place not seven times but seventy times seven, it would appear. Lawrence St. Aubrey's relations with the erring Arthur are depicted by Mr. Barrett like a true observer of life. A little more of tenderness, and the thing would have become sentimental: a little less of natural consideration and kindness, and the truth would not have been reached. But, in the different parts of his performance, with singular skill has Mr. Barrett kept the balance true. Miss Emery has played stronger parts than that of Grace Duncan, whose joys are not those of very high comedy, and whose sorrows are chiefly vicarious. One has seen her in parts that have proved a little too strong for her: one has never seen her in any part that has proved too delicate for her—her great intelligence and sensibility, and her knowledge of the business of her art, make it quite unlikely that that could ever happen. For Grace—a character both gladsome and tender, and essentially young—Miss Emery, with her seemingly spontaneous emotions, is admirably fitted. That Miss Lillie Belmore—in whom, before her departure for America, I recognised great promise—should succeed as well as she did with a part quite out of the line on which one thought she was about to travel, was indeed a surprise. The part of a rather bad young person she performed with decisiveness and aplomb. Subtlety—well, perhaps the particular young person here indicated did not want much subtlety. Her badness—at the least, her egotism, her selfishness—very likely was as obvious as her youthful comeliness. Miss Lillie Hanbury played a small part, attractive in its sentiment, sympathetic, though slight; and she made it—may I say, of course?—admirably picturesque. Mr. George Barrett, deprived of some of his accustomed opportunities, did everything which a not very important part suffered him to do. Miss Alice Cooke, Mr. Cooper Cliffe, and especially, perhaps, Mr. Austin Melford, lent useful aid in parts more or less effective; and Mr. Stafford Smith—whose name is, I think, new to me—really distinguished himself in the part of a workman, whose common sense rebels against the dictation of the demagogue of the moment, who for the moment has been in vogue among his peers.

At a season when there are several good plays to be seen, "A People's Idol" is not dependent wholly upon the circumstance of Mr. Wilson Barrett's return for the interest which it is entitled to claim. Piece, acting, mounting, taken altogether—the occasion is one which the playgoer will hardly think of missing.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

DR. MACKENZIE'S "Rose of Sharon" was given at the Albert Hall last Wednesday week. We have always looked upon this oratorio as one of the composer's highest achievements, and are surprised that it is not oftener heard in London. It cannot, perhaps, be said that Mr. Barnby's choir did entire justice to the work—there was, at times, a lack of fervour; but still, the performance may be pronounced a good one. The soloists were Mme. Albani, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd and Watkin Mills—an excellent cast.

Sir C. Hallé gave his third orchestral concert on Friday, December 12. The programme included Cherubini's fine and rarely heard "Medea" Overture, and the graceful Romanza from "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" of Mozart, charmingly played and encored. Mme. Néruda's rendering of the Beethoven Concerto was remarkable for its purity and power. The performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, under Sir Charles's direction, can scarcely be overpraised. He displayed unwonted vigour and care; almost every detail of the intricate score came out with wonderful clearness. The "almost" refers to the "Ball" movement, for which he had only two harps instead of four. There was a much better attendance. But the concert-giver is not satisfied with the support given to his London scheme, and the concerts announced for after Christmas will be abandoned. It is strange that, almost at the same time, Mr. Henschel gives notice that unless a sufficient number of applications are made for the remainder of his series, he, too, will discontinue. This is an extraordinary and, we may add, unprecedented state of things. It cannot be said that there are too many other attractions of a similar kind. The Crystal Palace is the only place where high class orchestral music was to be heard in November and December, and after the Christmas break they are not to be resumed until February. Herr Richter every season puts forward a scheme in which the works of Beethoven and Wagner form the most prominent features, and these names draw the public. It is dangerous to say whether a similar scheme would be equally successful with Sir Charles or Mr. Henschel, but we believe that programmes drawn up according to some guiding principle would produce better results. Why, for instance, should Sir Charles not have given special Berlioz programmes, or have introduced some of the novelties which he produces at Manchester. And Mr. Henschel might, we think, have followed a similar course, say—with Schubert or Schumann, or even Brahms; and of course Wagner. Then, again, have both been wise to exclude the vocal element?

A Symphony in E minor, No. 1, by Mr. E. German, was produced at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon. The work is founded on the themes of a symphony written when the composer was a student at the Royal Academy of Music, so that it is not astonishing to find it somewhat Mendelssohnian in character, particularly in the second and third movements. The writing and the scoring are thoroughly good, and Mr. German may be praised for his clear and unpretentious style. The Finale is full of life and vigour, but on the whole we like the opening Allegro best. The work was conducted, in the absence of Mr. Manns, by Mr. C. Jung, and the composer was recalled at the close. Miss Fanny Davies gave a really fine reading of Beethoven's E flat Concerto; her phrasing was distinct, and her technique irreproachable. The slow movement was rendered with much feeling. She was received with great cordiality. Miss Fillunger sang Beethoven's "Ah Perfido" with considerable power.

On Tuesday evening the Bach Society gave a performance of Brahms's "Requiem," a masterpiece which they have already attempted three times. The enormous, almost cruel, difficulties of the vocal music must be remembered in criticising the efforts of this choir. In the matter of purity of intonation they deserve high praise, and some of the quiet passages were delivered in an impressive manner. But the quality of tone of the choir is not rich, and the volume of tone in the loud passages was therefore not satisfactory. Moreover, there was hesitancy just where spirit and firmness was most needed; and the basses, too, often dragged. Dr. Stanford conducted most carefully; but we cannot approve of his tempi for the opening chorus, the "How lovely is thy dwelling-place," and the final chorus. If the printed metronome marks are correct, he was too slow in all three. The solo parts were well sung by Miss L. Lehmann and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies. The programme included Dr. Parry's "St. Cecilia Ode," which he wrote for the Leeds Festival of 1889. It was conducted by the composer. The choir sang with spirit, and the clever and genial music was evidently much enjoyed. In spite of the name of the society, no composition by Bach was included in the programme. A second concert, however, is announced for February 10, to be devoted entirely to the works of the Cantor of Leipzig. The programme includes the grand Church Cantata "Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss," and the violin Suite in E to be played by Dr. Joachim.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TRISCHLER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the BRITISH EMPIRE; or, A Witch's Cavern. By an Anonymous Author. In 1 Vol., 291 pp., crown 8vo, extra cloth, bevelled boards, 6s.

The Glasgow Herald says:—"The Decline and Fall of the British Empire" assumes the shape of a story of London life and abounds in very vivid and forcible sketches of the state of the Modern Babylon at the close of the nineteenth or beginning of the twentieth century."

The Norwich Argus says:—"Full of profound sympathy with the suffering poor, being an attempt to analyse the disintegrant forces acting upon English Society, such as poverty, lawlessness, unbelief, and false economic theories, and to estimate their significance. The result is presented in popular form, in a story of highly imaginative character."

ATALANTA. Vol. III. The Gift-Book of the Season. This volume consists of 800 pages, beautifully printed on highly-finished paper, with 400 illustrations by the first English and American artists. Imperial 8vo, handsomely bound in extra cloth, 8s.

The Spectator says:—"Atalanta" deserves a special word of welcome among the yearly volumes of magazines. It may fairly claim to equal, if not surpass, all its English competitors; it may well challenge comparison with magazines from the other side of the Atlantic."

A VILLAGE PRIEST, The Original Story of (upon which is founded the successful play produced by Mr. BEERBOHM TREE at the Haymarket Theatre). Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Cloth 2s. 6d., picture boards 2s.

UNDER the GUM-TREES. A Collection of Australian Stories by Australian Authors. Edited by Mrs. PATCHETT MARTIN. Paper covers, 1s.

The Whitehall Review says:—"Mrs. Patchett Martin, who has most ably edited this excellent collection of stories, has certainly succeeded in presenting an extraordinary good shillingworth to the public. The volume contains no fewer than a dozen stories by, for the most part, well-known writers."

THE PRISONER of CHILOANE: or, With the Portuguese in South-East Africa. By WALLIS MACKAY. With about 90 illustrations, sketched on the spot by the Author (late the "Captious Critic" of the Sporting and Dramatic News). Bevelled boards, fcap. 4to. Illustrated Cloth Cover in gilt and colours, 7s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"The narrative is written in a bright spirited style; and the illustrations, which are by the author himself, are full of fun and movement."

The Queen says:—"The perils and adventures he experienced . . . are most amusingly related. Possessed of a marvellous facility for sketching and hitting off the salient peculiarities of the various races which he interviewed. . . . Unlike an ordinary dry matter-of-fact book of travel."

HEART WINS (by Mrs. ALEXANDER) and other Stories.

The Queen says:—"Ten stories are included in this two-shilling volume, among the writers, besides Mrs. Alexander, being Mrs. Newman, Miss Adeline Sergeant, and Ina Cassilis. The tales are varied in character as well as in interest, and therefore offer something attractive to various kinds of readers."

TRISCHLER & CO., 18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

EPPS'S
(BREAKFAST)
COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

MADE SIMPLY WITH
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The JANUARY Number for 1891 commences a New Volume.

Published Monthly, tastefully printed, in large 8vo size, with occasional illustrations, price THREEPENCE.

THE FIELD CLUB.

A Magazine of General Natural History for Scientific and Unscientific Readers.

Edited by the Rev. THEODORE WOOD, F.E.S.

The FIELD CLUB has been received by Scientific Students and Lovers of Nature during the first year of its existence with great heartiness, and has been generously supported both by subscription and literary contributions. It has taken a prominent position with the Members of Field Clubs and Natural History Societies in all parts of the country.

The Magazine treats of all those subjects which interest the Members of these Societies, and which are being studied by lovers of Nature's wonders. Its principal contents are Short Papers on Scientific subjects, written by competent authors; Records of Passing Incidents, and Discussions on Natural History; A Calendar for the Month; Jottings by Observers; Directions for Collectors, &c.

Arrangements have been made for the appearance of many interesting papers during the year 1891, among which may be mentioned the following:—

By REV. M. C. H. BIRD, M.A.: EELS AND ELVERS—BIRD LIFE OF THE NORFOLK BROADS—THE FOOD OF THE SQUIRREL.

By G. W. BULMAN, M.A., B.Sc.: WATCHING THE BEES—GEOLOGY AND BOTANY OF THE NORFOLK COAST—THE INSECT SELECTION THEORY.

By H. A. FRANCIS: ODYNERUS SPINIPES AND ITS NEST.

By REV. GREGORY C. BATEMAN: AXOLOTLIS.

By EDWARD A. MARTIN: SOME DEFORMITIES IN SHELLS—AFIELD AT MARGATE—A CORNER OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

By REV. JOHN ISABELL: SPIDERS—PHYSICALLY AND MORALLY CONSIDERED.

By W. H. TUCK: A YEAR WITH THE WASPS.

THE EDITOR: INSECT ARTILLERY—"MISSING LINKS"—IS NATURE CRUEL? &c.

A CALENDAR OF THE MONTHS: ZOOLOGICAL AND BOTANICAL.

JOTTINGS FOR NATURE STUDENTS, &c.

Now ready, in handsome cloth, gilt, price 1s. 6d., post free.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE FIELD CLUB

Contains numerous Articles on a wide range of subjects, interesting to Naturalists and Students, among which may be named:

POPULAR FALLACIES IN NATURAL HISTORY. By REV. M. C. H. BIRD, M.A.

THE DENIZENS OF A TURF BANK. By H. A. FRANCIS.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE AQUARIUM. By Rev. GREGORY C. BATEMAN.

THE GROWTH OF THE HYACINTH. By EDWARD A. MARTIN.

THE AIR BLADDER OF FISHES, considered as a DEGENERATE LUNG. By ALICE BODINGTON.

AMONG THE WILD GERANIUMS. By G. W. BULMAN, M.A., B.Sc.

"ASPIDOTUS GLOVERI." By HENRY A. FRANCIS, F.R.M.S.

"THE SENSES OF INSECTS." By the EDITOR.

SOME NATURAL HISTORY NOTES FROM "IN DARKEST AFRICA." By G. W. BULMAN, M.A.

THE COAL FORMATION AT BOVEY TRACEY. By EDWARD A. MARTIN.

INSECTIVOROUS PLANTS. By Rev. JOHN ISABELL.

THE MIGRATION OF BIRDS. By G. W. BULMAN, M.A.

THE NATURALIST'S CHRONICLE OF THE MONTHS.

JOTTINGS ON CURRENT NATURAL HISTORY EVENTS, &c.

The Annual Volume of the FIELD CLUB forms a valuable store of information on a variety of topics interesting to nature-lovers. It is rendered easily referable by a Full Index

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

Lyrics from the Hills.

By CHARLES ARMSTRONG FOX.

CONTENTS.

CUMBERLAND HILLS. YORKSHIRE MOORS.
SYRIAN HILLS: Sacred Sonnets. WELSH HILLS.
SYRIAN HILLS: Four Typical Wrestlers in Holy Writ.
SURREY HILLS. DEVONSHIRE HILLS.
LUDGATE HILL TO RICHMOND HILL.
SONNETS and other Pieces: IN MEMORIAM.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

The Love Song of Barbara.

A POEM IN TEN CANTOS.

By CHARLES JOSEPH WHITBY.

"Mr. Whitby's Ten Cantos show considerable power over the difficult Spenserian verse-form. The little lyric on page 17—one of the best things in the volume—seems to show that the author might be more successful in a simpler measure."

British Weekly.

"Mr. Whitby's style is brilliant."—Glasgow Herald.
"The story has pathos and promise."—Manchester Guardian.
"Told with skill and power: those who read this poem will not lose their labour."—Aberdeen Journal.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

The Garden of Psyche.

By BENJAMIN GEORGE AMBLER.

"The story is told simply and fervently, without any attempt to interpolate into it the thought and feeling of a later day. The author has thrown his strength into the choruses. Some of them are fairly brimming over with imagery and melody."—Literary World.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

Told in a City Garden.

TALES AND LYRICS.

By EASTWOOD KIDSON.

"A collection of tales written with true poetic power, and of peculiar and fascinating interest."—New York Journalist.
"All who can appreciate good poetry should procure this volume, and all who do so will be sure to welcome anything more that comes from the same pen."—Aberdeen Journal.
"Devil's Nest," and "A Colonial Ancestress," both show great command of pathos and dramatic interest."

Literary World.

Complete Edition, in handsome crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

The Poems of William Leighton.

Illustrated by JOHN LEIGHTON.

"This book contains true poetry, and the brief record, more pathetically interesting than its brightest stanzas, of a beautiful life and a poignantly touching and heroic death."

Literary World.

"Considering the youth of the author it may be questioned if there is a more remarkable volume to be found in the entire collection of Scottish poets."—North British Daily Mail.

In crown 8vo, neatly bound, price 2s. 6d.

Lostara: a Poem.

By SOPHIA LYDIA WALTERS.

"Contains many truly poetic ideas, some of which are expressed with considerable verbal skill. Miss Walters should do good work in the future."—Sunday Times.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Occasional Poems.

By L. J., Author of "Sketches from the Heart," &c.

"There is much poetic feeling in these compositions, and reader as much credit to the heart as to the pen of the writer."—Hackney Gazette.

"A gentle spirit and graceful thoughts pervade the little book."—Christian.

"Every thought is expressed with elegance and force."—Family Churchman.

The FOURTH VOLUME of THE BOOK-WORM commences with the December issue 1890.

Published Monthly, tastefully printed on antique paper, price Sixpence.

THE BOOK-WORM.

Without sacrificing any of its claims to be regarded as "a treasury of old-time literature," the new volume of the Book-Worm will contain several new features. Amongst these may be mentioned NOTES ON BOOKISH TOPICS of the days, and on new editions of books which have a "pedigree." A few will be devoted to QUERIES and REPLIES respecting bibliographical subjects, and of which readers are cordially invited to avail themselves.

The primary object of the new volume, as in the case of its predecessors, is to be as miscellaneous and discursive as possible, without being trivial or commonplace. We shall guard against the learned dulness of scientific bibliography as strictly as against the irresponsible inaccuracies of the scrappy abominations with which the bookstalls of to-day are overloaded.

In the new Series of Book-Worms of To-Day some very interesting PRIVATE LIBRARIES at home and abroad will be dealt with, and the rarities in them more or less fully described. The number of papers promised or in hand are both numerous and varied. Mr. H. S. Ashbee will give some interesting reminiscences of the late Octave DELEPIERRE in the series of "FOREIGNERS WHO HAVE WRITTEN IN ENGLISH"; the Rev. C. F. S. Warren will deal with SIR HENRY SPELMAN and the "HISTORY OF SACRILEGE"; Mr. W. A. Clouston will describe a GORGEOUS ORIENTAL MANUSCRIPT of great literary interest; and articles will appear on the following among other subjects:—THE LITERATURE OF THE LIVERY COMPANIES, SIR ROBERT WALPOLE AS A COLLECTOR OF PAMPHLETS, the first two Parisian books printed in the English language (with a facsimile of the title-page of one—the "Kalendar of Shepherds"); HOW TO TREAT BOOKS; BOOKMEN AMONG THE NONJURORS: BOOK-HUNTING AT SCARBOROUGH; the MIGRATION OF BOOKSELLERS; MESTON THE IMITATOR OF HUDIBRAS; BOOK CENSORSHIP IN TURKEY; the late Sir RICHARD BURTON AS A BOOK-LOVER; and very many other topics of interest to those who love books. An occasional article on the OLD MAGAZINES OF THE LAST CENTURY will find a place; and nearly every month a bookish poem will be inserted. In fact, our chief aim will be to make the new series of wide and miscellaneous interest; and to that end we shall publish notes and essays upon any phase calculated to throw light upon or create an interest in those books the taste for which Gibbon has so happily described as "the pleasure and glory of life."

Illustrations and facsimiles will be made a prominent feature, as in former volumes.

In handsome 8vo, strongly bound in cloth, gilt lettered, price 7s. 6d. each.

There are now THREE VOLUMES of the BOOK-WORM: an Illustrated Treasury of Old-Time Literature for all Book-Lovers. They are full of Quaint and Curious information on Old Books and Bookmen, Early Editions, Bookbinding, Ancient MSS., Old Booksellers, Book Auctions, Literary Anecdotes, Ballads, Famous Libraries, Americana, Early Printers, Book-Worms, Dedications, Rare Tracts, &c. A full Index is added to each volume.

"The contents of this quaintly illustrated volume are so varied and of so interesting a nature, that it will be appreciated by a large circle of ordinary readers, as well as by those who may be classed 'literates.'"—Morning Post.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

GOOD BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

Price 7/6 each.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR.

Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holy Days throughout the Year.

By the Rev. JOHN KEBLE, M.A.

With the Collects, and Meditations Selected from the Writings of the Rev. H. P. LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., Late Canon of St. Paul's, &c.

Extra crown 8vo, gilt top.

* This Edition of "The Christian Year" is known as the "St. Paul's Edition."

THE DUKE'S PAGE;

or, "In the Days of Luther."

A Story for Boys. From the German.

By Mrs. PEREIRA.

With 16 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top.

"As a picture of the country and time of which it treats, 'The Duke's Page' is at once vivid and lifelike; while, as a work of fiction, it is packed with interest from first page to last."—Scottish Leader.

Price 6s.

By the Rev. BIOT EDMONSTON and Mrs. SAXBY.

The HOME of a NATURALIST.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

"We would fain linger long over the scenes which this excellent volume brings up before us. The authors have put together a very refreshing set of memories."—Saturday Review.

5/- each.

BY R. M. BALLANTYNE.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

CHARLIE to the RESCUE: a Tale of the Sea and the Rockies.

BLOWN to BITS; or, the Lonely Man of Rakata. A Tale of the Malay Archipelago.

BLUE LIGHTS; or, Hot Work in the Soudan. A Tale of Soldier Life in Several of its Phases.

THE FUGITIVES; or, the Tyrant Queen of Madagascar.

RED ROONEY; or, the Last of the Crew.

THE ROVER of the ANDES: a Tale of Adventure in South America.

THE YOUNG TRAWLER: a Story of Life and Death and Rescue in the North Sea.

DUSTY DIAMONDS, OUT and POLISHED: a Tale of City Arab Life.

THE BATTERY and the BOILER; or, Adventures in the Laying of Submarine Electric Cables.

THE GIANT of the NORTH; or, Pokings Round the Pole.

BY EMMA MARSHALL.

With numerous Illustrations, and handsomely bound in cloth, crown 8vo.

EASTWARD HO! A Story for Girls.

LAUREL CROWNS; or, Griselda's Aim.

HOUSES on WHEELS: a Story for Children.

BY EMMA MARSHALL.—Continued.

DAPHNE'S DECISION; or, Which Shall it Be?

THE ROSES of RINGWOOD.

CASSANDRA'S CASKET.

SILVER CHIMES; or, Olive.

STORIES of the CATHEDRAL CITIES of England.

POPPIES and PANSIES.

REX and REGINA; or, the Song of the River.

DEWDROPS and DIAMONDS.

HEATHER and HAREBELL.

BY AGNES GIBERNE.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

MISS CON; or, All Those Girls.

ST. AUSTIN'S LODGE; or, Mr. Berkeley and his Nieces.

ENID'S SILVER BOND.

KATHLEEN.

BERYL and PEARL.

MATTHEW MELLOWDEW. By Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

Price 3/6 each.

BY AGNES GIBERNE.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

"LEAST SAID, SOONEST MENDED."

NUMBER THREE WINIFRED PLACE.

DECIMA'S PROMISE.

THE YARL'S YACHT. By Jessie M. E. SAXBY. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

THE LADS of LUNDA. By Jessie M. E. SAXBY. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

BY EMMA MARSHALL.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

DULCIBEL'S DAY DREAM; or, the Grand, Sweet Song.

OUR OWN PICTURE BOOK. With 161 Illustrations.

MISTRESS MATCHETT'S MISTAKE. A Very Old Story.

SIR VALENTINE'S VICTORY, and Other Stories.

THE BARONETS and their BRIDES. By the Rev. W. M. COX. Crown 8vo.

GENERAL GORDON; the Christian Hero. By Major SETON CHURCHILL. With Portrait. Small crown 8vo.

Price 2/6 each.

BY EMMA MARSHALL.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

PICTURES ILLUSTRATIVE of the LORD'S PRAYER. With Appropriate Stories for Children. Medium 4to.

OLIVER'S OLD PICTURES; or, The Magic Circle.

MICHAEL'S TREASURES; or, Choice Silver RUBY and PEARL; or, The Children of Castle Aylmer.

THE LIFE of our LORD JESUS CHRIST for very YOUNG CHILDREN; or, Little Sunny's Sweet Stories of Old.

HER TWO: a Story of To-day.

By Mrs. G. S. REANEY. Crown 8vo.

READY, AYE READY!

By AGNES GIBERNE. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

SUNBEAMS on MY PATH; or, Memories of Christian Work in Various Lands.

By Mrs. WRIGHT. Edited by the Rev. C. H. H. WRIGHT, D.D. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

WHERE the DEW FALLS in LONDON

A Story of a Sanctuary.

By SARAH DOUDNEY.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

HIDDEN HOMES; or, the Children's Discoveries.

By M. A. PAULL RIPLEY.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

OUR NEIGHBOUR, WIDOW YATES.

By GRACE STEBBING.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

Price 2/- each.

BY EMMA MARSHALL.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

JOHN MARBECKE: a Windsor Organist of 300 Years Ago. His Work and his Reward.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S PICTURES.

STELLAFONT ABBEY; or, Nothing New.

MATTHEW FROST, CARRIER; or, Little Snowdrop's Mission.

BY AGNES GIBERNE.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

DAISY of OLD MEADOW.

OLD UMBRELLAS; or, Clarrie and her Mother.

FIVE THOUSAND POUNDS.

Price 1/6 each.

With Illustrations. Small crown 8vo.

THE SPOILT TWINS;

Or, The Ruined Castle.

By EMILY DIBDIN.

LIVING SERMONS;

Or, Marvels of Gospel Power.

By Mrs. G. S. REANEY.

WHEN I WAS YOUNG.

By EMMA MARSHALL.

LONDON: JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane, Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 973.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

GURNEY & JACKSON'S STANDARD BOOKS ON NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENCE.

British Wild Flowers. Illustrated by John E. Sowerby. Described with an Introduction and a Key to the Natural Orders, by C. PIERPOINT JOHNSON. Reissue, to which is added a SUPPLEMENT containing 180 Figures, comprising later discovered Flowering Plants, and the Ferns, Horse-tails, and Club-Mosses. Large 8vo, with 1,780 Hand-Coloured Figures, £3 3s.

Griffith and Henfrey's Micrographic Dictionary. A Guide to the Examination and Investigation of the Structure and Nature of Microscopic Objects. FOURTH EDITION. Edited by J. W. GRIFFITH, M.D., &c.; assisted by the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., and T. RUFERT JONES, F.R.S., F.G.S., Professor of Geology, Sandhurst, &c. Illustrated by 53 Plates and numerous Woodcuts, giving Figures of nearly 5,000 Objects. Medium 8vo, £2 12s. 6d.

An Illustrated Manual of British Birds. By HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c. With Illustrations of nearly every Species. 8vo, cloth, 367 Woodcuts, £1 1s.

The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne, in the County of Southampton. By the late Rev. GILBERT WHITE, formerly Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Edited by THOMAS BELL, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., &c., Professor of Zoology in King's College, London. With Steel Plate and other Illustrations, 2 vols., demy 8vo, £1 11s. 6d. A few copies have been printed on Larger Paper, royal 8vo, with the Plates on India paper, £3 3s.

The Book of Duck Decoys, their Construction, Management, and History. By Sir RALPH PAYNE-GALLWEY, Bart. Crown 4to, cloth, 226 pages, with Coloured Plates, Plans and Woodcuts, £1 6s.

The Fowler in Ireland; or, Notes on the Haunts and Habits of Wild Fowl and Sea-Fowl, including Instructions in the Art of Shooting and Capturing them. By Sir RALPH PAYNE-GALLWEY, Bart. 8vo, 564 pages, with many Illustrations of Fowling Experiences, Birds, Boats, Guns, and Implements, £1 1s.

Notes on Sport and Ornithology. By His Imperial and Royal Highness the late CROWN PRINCE RUDOLF OF AUSTRIA. Translated, with the Author's permission, by C. G. DANFORD. Demy 8vo, 650 pages, with an Etching by Frank Short, 18s.

Bird Life of the Borders. Records of Wild Sport and Natural History on Moorland and Sea. By ABEL CHAPMAN. With Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

The Birds of Norfolk. By HENRY STEVENSON, F.L.S., continued by THOMAS SOUTHWELL, F.Z.S. 3 vols., 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Farm Insects: being the Natural History and Economy of the Insects Injurious to the Field Crops of Great Britain and Ireland, and also those which Infest Barns and Granaries, with suggestions for their destruction. By JOHN CURTIS, F.L.S., &c. Super-royal 8vo, with 16 Hand-Coloured Plates and many Woodcuts, £1 1s.

Exotic Butterflies: being Illustrations of New Species. With Coloured Drawings and Descriptions. By WILLIAM C. HEWITSON. In 5 vols., demy 4to, £26 6s., half-bound, Morocco.

Rhopalocera Exotica. Illustrations of New, Rare, or Unfigured Species of Butterflies. By H. GROSE SMITH and W. F. KIRBY. With Coloured Drawings and Descriptions. Published quarterly in continuation of the foregoing. 4to, 7s. 6d.

Illustrations of Diurnal Lepidoptera (Lycanida). By WILLIAM C. HEWITSON. Demy 4to, complete in Eight Parts, £9 15s.

"SHELLS AND THEIR INHABITANTS"
Genera of Recent Mollusca, arranged according to their Organisation. By HENRY and ARTHUR ADAMS. This Work contains a Description and a Figure, engraved on Steel, of each Genus, and an enumeration of all the Species. 3 vols., 8vo, £4 10s.; or royal 8vo, with the Animals Coloured, £9.

An Elementary Course of Botany: Structural, Physiological, and Systematic. By Professor ARTHUR HENFREY, F.R.S., F.L.S., &c. Illustrated by upwards of 800 Woodcuts. Fourth Edition, by MAXWELL T. MASTERS, M.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., &c. Examiner in Botany to the University of London; and A. W. BENNETT, M.A., B.Sc., &c. Post 8vo, 15s.

Experimental Researches in Pure, Applied, and Physical CHEMISTRY. By E. FRANKLAND, Ph.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Royal School of Mines, &c. 1 vol., 1,086 pages, £1 11s. 6d.

A Theoretical and Practical Treatise on the Manufacture of SULPHURIC ACID and ALKALI, with the Collateral Branches. By GEORGE LUNGE, Ph.D., F.R.S., Professor of Technical Chemistry at the Federal Polytechnic School, Zurich, formerly Manager of the Tyne Alkali Works, South Shields.
Vol. I. SULPHURIC ACID. (A New Edition in the press.)
Vol. II. SODA (THE LEBLANC PROCESS). 704 pages, 267 Illustrations. £1 16 0
Vol. III. BLEACHING POWDER, CHLORATE OF POTASH, and APPENDICES. 438 pages, 135 Illustrations. 1 4 0

Coal-Tar and Ammonia. Being the Second and Enlarged Edition of "A Treatise on the Distillation of Coal-Tar and Ammoniacal Liquor." By Professor LUNGE, Ph.D., F.R.S. 8vo, with 191 Illustrations drawn to scale, £1 11s. 6d.

Attfeld's Chemistry, for Principals, Assistants, and Pupils in Medicine and Pharmacy. Thirteenth Edition, Illustrated. (Including a Section on Modern Organic Chemistry.) Post 8vo, 885 pages, cloth, 15s.

The Laboratory Guide: a Manual of Practical Chemistry for Colleges and Schools. Specially Arranged for Agricultural Students. By ARTHUR HERBERT CHURCH, M.A., of Lincoln College, Oxford, Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Academy of Arts. Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, 6s. 6d.

MR. VAN VOORST'S SERIES OF BOOKS ON THE NATURAL HISTORY OF THE BRITISH ISLES.

GURNEY & JACKSON take this opportunity of notifying that the following are still in print, the high prices often paid for Second-hand Copies tending to show that a contrary impression prevails. The Series is illustrated with very many beautiful Wood Engravings and Copperplates, giving Figures of the Species described. Of some of the Volumes but few remain for sale.

HISTORY of BRITISH QUADRUPEDS; including the Cetacea. By Professor Thomas Bell, F.R.S., &c. Second Edition, Revised and partly Rewritten by the Author, assisted by R. F. TOMES and E. R. ALSTON. 8vo, 160 Woodcuts, £1 6s.

HISTORY of BRITISH BIRDS. By the late Wm. Yarrell, V.P.L.S., F.Z.S. Fourth Edition, Revised to the end of the Second Volume by Professor NEWTON, M.A., F.R.S. The Revision continued by HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S., F.Z.S. 4 vols., 8vo, cloth, with 561 Illustrations, £1.

HISTORY of BRITISH REPTILES. By Professor Thomas Bell, F.R.S., &c. Second Edition, with 50 Illustrations, 12s.

HISTORY of BRITISH FISHES. By William Yarrell. Third Edition. With Figures and Descriptions of the additional Species by Sir JOHN RICHARDSON, C.B., a Portrait and Memoir. 2 vols., 8vo, 522 Illustrations, £3 3s.

HISTORY of BRITISH MOLLUSCA and their SHELLS. By Professor Edward Forbes, F.R.S., &c., and Sylvanus HANLEY, B.A., F.L.S., illustrated by a Figure of each known Animal and of all the Shells, engraved on 203 Copperplates. 4 vols., 8vo, £6 10s.; royal 8vo, with the Plates Coloured, £13.

HISTORY of BRITISH STALK-EYED CRUSTACEA (Lobsters, Crabs, Prawns, Shrimp, &c.). By Professor Thomas BELL, F.R.S. 174 Engravings. 8vo, £1 5s.

HISTORY of BRITISH SESSILE-EYED CRUSTACEA (Sandhoppers, &c.). By C. Spence Bate, F.L.S., and Professor J. O. WESTWOOD, F.L.S., &c. With Figures of all the Species, and numerous Tail-pieces. 2 vols., 8vo, £3.

HISTORY of the BRITISH MARINE POLYZOA. By the Rev. Thomas Hincks, B.A., F.R.S. Containing an Introductory Sketch of the Class, and a full and Critical Account of all the British Forms. With Plates, giving Figures of the Species and principal Varieties. 2 vols., demy 8vo, £3 3s.

HISTORY of BRITISH STARFISHES and other ANIMALS of the CLASS ECHINODERMATA. By Professor EDWARD FORBES, M.W.S. 8vo, 120 Illustrations, 15s.

HISTORY of the BRITISH HYDROID ZOOPHYTES. By the Rev. Thomas Hincks, B.A., F.R.S. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, with 67 Plates, £2 2s.

HISTORY of the BRITISH ZOOPHYTES. By George Johnston, M.D., LL.D. Second Edition. In 2 vols., with an Illustration of every Species, £2 2s.

MANUAL of the BRITISH MARINE ALGÆ. Containing Generic and Specific Descriptions of all known British Seaweeds, with Plates to illustrate the Genera. By Professor W. H. HARVEY. 8vo, £1 1s.; Coloured Copies, £1 11s. 6d.

A FEW COPIES WERE PRINTED ON LARGE PAPER.

GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, PATERNOSTER ROW (Successors to Mr. VAN VOORST).

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
FROUDE'S LORD BEACONSFIELD, by J. A. HAMILTON . . .	605
JONES BROWN'S VULGAR VERSES, by W. WATSON . . .	607
WHITLEY STOKES'S LIVES OF SAINTS FROM THE BOOK OF LISMORE, by T. W. ROLLESTON . . .	608
MAJOR SKINNER'S FIFTY YEARS IN CEYLON, by W. WICKHAM . . .	609
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP . . .	609
GIFT BOOKS . . .	611
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	612
ORIGINAL VERSE: "By the Waters of Babylon," by T. M. . .	613
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .	613
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"A Midsummer Night's Dream," by Prof. Skeat; Milton and Foulde, by the Rev. G. Edmundson; Norfolk Manor Court Rolls, by Paget Toynbee; Homer and Odysseus, by W. Watkiss Lloyd . . .	613
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	615
THE EARLY CIVILISATION OF ARABIA, by A. H. SAYCE . . .	615
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	616
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .	616
A LUTHER RELIC . . .	617
TWO MINOR EXHIBITIONS . . .	617
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	617
STAGE NOTES . . .	617
MUSIC BOOKS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	618
MUSIC NOTES . . .	618

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &amp;c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE.

ASSISTANT LECTURER IN ENGLISH.

The Council is prepared to receive APPLICATIONS from Candidates for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER IN ENGLISH. His duties will be to assist the Professor of English, to lecture on Geography, and to direct tutorially the English work of the Normal Students. The stipend is £120 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, must be in the hands of the Registrar on or before the 23rd of JANUARY, 1891. Further particulars can be obtained from

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, Dec. 22nd, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE.

MISTRESS OF METHOD.

The Council as the Local Committee of the Cardiff Day Training College invites APPLICATIONS for the post of MISTRESS OF METHOD. The stipend will not be less than £150 per annum. A statement of duties can be obtained on application to the Registrar. Applications, with testimonials and references, must be sent in on or before JANUARY 31st, 1891.

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, December 22nd, 1890.

LONDON AND DUBLIN. I. ALL ARMY EXAMINATIONS. II. INDIAN C.S., &c. III. R.I. CONSTABULARY CADETSHIPS. LONDON ESTABLISHMENT 12 and 14, EARL'S COURT SQUARE, S.W., under T. MILLER MAGUIRE, LL.D., Barr-at-Law. DUBLIN ESTABLISHMENT, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, MERRION SQUARE, under W. J. CHETWOOD CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., Editor of "Open Competition Handbooks," &c.

BRAMPTON PARK, near Huntingdon. JUNIOR PEPILS EDUCATED while being treated for their STAMMERING. Principal, Mr. B. B. B. Author of "Stammering: its Treatment." Adult stammerers should read this book, post free 15 stamps.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION for filling up about FIVE VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on the 14th JANUARY NEXT. For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

RUSSIAN (Instruction in) given, after 7 p.m., by J. E. NEWTON (a native of St. Petersburg). Translation done.—Apply by letter, care of Messrs. Thompson & Boulton, 222, High Holborn.

FACTS HUNTED UP; Registers searched; Wills found; Pedigrees traced, in British Museum, Record Office, and Local Registries; Books and Papers copied and translated in any language from manuscript or type.—P. & P. & P., Antiquarian Genealogists, 1, Doughty Street, W.C.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSEN & SÖNNE, of Munich, the well-known Artists in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Threepence Discount in the shilling off the published prices of NEW BOOKS, BIBLES, Prayer Books, Church Services. A large and choice stock, many in handsome cloth and Morocco bindings, suitable to presents, well displayed in show rooms, to select from. Export and country orders punctually executed.

Catalogues gratis and postage free.

GILBERT &amp; FIELD, No. 67, Moorgate Street, London

MESSRS. J. M. DENT &amp; CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOW READY.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE TEMPLE LIBRARY.

"May fairly rank as an edition de luxe. The publishers well deserve the gratitude of all book collectors."

Athenæum.

The POETICAL WORKS OF THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES.

2 vols. post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE, and with Two Etchings by Herbert Railton.

The text includes the exceedingly rare "Improvisatore," and several Poems now for the first time printed from the MS. in the possession of the late Mr. Robert Browning.

The edition is limited to 500 copies. There is also a Large-Paper Edition of 125 copies, but it is already completely out of print at the Publishers.

The following is a List of Works already issued in this Library:—

LAMB'S ESSAYS of ELIA. Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. (Only fifteen copies remain unsold.)

POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLD-SMITH. Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON.

SELECT ESSAYS of Dr. JOHNSON. Edited by BIRKBECK HILL.

LANDOR'S PERICLES and ASPASIA. Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

Each having Six Etchings by Herbert Railton.

All the Large-Paper Copies of the above are completely out of print; and very short numbers of the Small-Paper remain.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

ANNOTATED AND ACCENTUATED.

With Illustrations of English Life in Chaucer's Time.

By JOHN SAUNDERS.

"No better edition of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales' has been produced for many a day. The illustrations from the Ellesmere MS. are capital guides to the student, as giving an authoritative glimpse into the life of Chaucer's time. A special word of recognition must be awarded to the scholarly essay under the title 'Concluding Remarks,' in which the author briefly but powerfully surveys what Chaucer did for his own time, for ours, and for remotest posterity. The volume forms a thoroughly trustworthy text-book."—Daily Telegraph.

J. M. DENT &amp; CO., ALDINE HOUSE 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET, E.C.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Essays in English Literature.

1780 to 1860.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CONTENTS.

The Kinds of Criticism—Crabbe—Hogg (Edrick Shepherd)—Sydney Smith—Jeffery—Hazlitt—Moore—Leigh Hunt—Peacock—Wilson (Christopher Hunt)—De Quincey—Lockhart—Prued—Borrow.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 31, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

Love's Victory: Lyrical Poems.

By JOHN ARTHUR BLAIKIE.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 31, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 3s.

Fathers of Biology.

HIPPOCRATES—ARISTOTLE—GALEN—VESALIUS—HARVEY.

By CHARLES McRAE, M.A., F.L.S.,

Formerly Scholar of Exeter College, Oxford.

PERCIVAL &amp; CO., 31, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER ETCHERS.

The DATE for SENDING IN WORKS for the forthcoming EXHIBITION is FRIDAY, 29th FEBRUARY. Candidates for Election as Associates must forward Works for Inspection of the Council not later than 29th JANUARY, to 54, FLEET STREET, EAST.

J. BLAYAN, Secretary pro tem.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is NOW OPEN, 5, FLEET STREET, EAST, from Ten till Five. Admission is 1s. Catalogues 6d. ALFRED D. FERRIS, R.W.S. Secretary.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED. Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

- THE DOGMA of the INCARNATION. By Rev. W. H. HUTCHINGS.
 "IN DARKEST ENGLAND," and SOME OPINIONS as to the PROPOSED "WAY OUT."
 SOCIALISM and CHRISTIANITY.—I. By Rev. H. M. WARD.
 NOTES by the WAY.
 THE ORIGIN of AUSTRALIAN WESLEYANISM.
 By A. PATCHETT-MARTIN.
 THE SHEPHERDESS and the BUTTERFLY. By JEAN REBOUL.
 (Translated by Rt. Rev. H. L. Jenner, D.D.).
 "EMINENT CHURCHMEN."—IV. Bishop Ken. By Mrs. HERNAMAN.
 "VIRGINIE'S HUSBAND."—Chaps. XIII, XIV. By ESME STUART.
 "A COUNTRY MAIDEN." By E. M. BENHAM.
 HARDWAR and its FAIR. (Illustrated.) By R. F. HUTCHINSON, M.D.
 SOME NOTES on the HISTORY of BOOKS for CHILDREN.
 1800-1850. By CHARLES WELSH.
 CHURCH NOTES and QUERIES.
 "CHANGED LOTS; or, Nobody Cares."—Chaps. XII, XIII.
 (Illustrated.) By FRANCES ARMSTRONG.
 STORIES of the LIVES of the SAINTS for CHILDREN. Chap. VII.
 By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKDEN &amp; WELSH, London.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

Number XCIX.—JANUARY.

CONTENTS.

- THE MISCHIEF of MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. VII.-IX.
 LINCOLNSHIRE. By the Rev. Canon OVERTON.
 THE THREE DOCTORS. By Lord WALSINGHAM.
 AN INNOCENT CHAPERON. By W. E. NORRIS.
 HOT ORCHIDS. By FREDERICK BOYLE.
 THE FALSE TESTAMUR. By PERCY ROSS.
 THE "DONNA" in 1890.—
 I. By Miss TRENCH. II. By the EDITOR.
 AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.
 London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

FOR CONTENTS OF—

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. BENTLEY &amp; SON'S Advertisement, page 604.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. SAMPSON LOW &amp; CO.'S Advertisement, page 604.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S Advertisement, page 620.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY, profusely Illustrated, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

- 1.—STUDY of a GIRL'S HEAD. After EUGENE VIDAL. Front.
- 2.—WHEN RUNNELS BEGAN to LEAP and SING. ALFRED AUSTIN.
- 3.—ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL. C. W. ALCOCK, Sec. Football Association. With Illustrations.
- 4.—LA GRANDE CHARTREUSE: a Lonely Island of Prayer. The Very Rev. H. DONALD M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. With Illustrations.
- 5.—CHRISTMAS EVE at WARWINGIE. MARY GAUNT.
- 6.—"FIN DE SIECLE." VIOLET FANE.
- 7.—CABS and their DRIVERS. W. OUTRAM TRISTRAM. With Illustrations by Hugh Thomson.
- 8.—THE EDUCATION of GENIUS. JAMES SULLY.
- 9.—BOOKBINDING. T. J. CORDEN-SANDERSON. With Illustrations from Books bound by the Writer.
- 10.—THE WITCH of PRAGUE, Chaps. VII. and VIII. F. MARION CRAWFORD. Illustrated by W. J. HENNESSY.

MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. No. 375, for JANUARY, contains:—

- 1.—EXIT MCKINLEY. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
- 2.—TWO TREATISES on the SUBLIME. By H. L. HAVELL.
- 3.—HE FELL AMONG THIEVES. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN. Chapters XI.—XIII.
- 4.—THE WRECK of the "OCEAN-QUEEN." By Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY.
- 5.—A POLITICAL SURVIVAL. By EDWARD ARMSTRONG.
- 6.—THE JUBILEE of TONIC SOL-FA. By J. C. HADDEN.
- 7.—THE SHAM FIGHT at RUDDIFORD. By GEORGE FLAMMAR.
- 8.—A HUNT for a HEAD. By E. D. CUMING.
- 9.—NIGHT in the CROMARTY FIRTH. By G. W. HARTLEY.
- 10.—THE BRONZE-CASTER. By MORLEY ROBERTS.

MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

PRICE ONE SHILLING

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

- ESTHER VANHOMRIGH.—Chaps. I., II. Mrs. WOODS.
 SEA POWER. Capt. S. EARDY WILNOT.
 "PASSING." Wm. TOYNBEE.
 POETRY of LEWIS MORRIS. ARTHUR WAUGH.
 MESSER ANTONIO'S REVENGE. ALAN ADAIR.
 A TOUR in BURMAH. B. F.
 GREAT STEAMSHIP LINES.—North Atlantic. MORLEY ROBERTS.
 BEGUN in JEST. Mrs. NEWMAN.
 CORRESPONDENCE. W. BASIL WORSLED.
 NOTES of the MONTH. DEAN CHURCH.
 OUR LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

Now ready, price 1s.

For JANUARY.

CONTAINING—

- JOHN RUSKIN. By Sir EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., B.A., Photogravure by Bousset, Valdon, & Co.
 THE PORTRAITS of JOHN RUSKIN.—I. By M. R. SPIELMAN. With 6 Illustrations: "John Ruskin at the Age of 34 Years," by James Northcote, R.A.; "John Ruskin (1824)," by James Northcote, R.A.; "John Ruskin (1842)," by George Richmond, R.A.; "John Ruskin (1857)," by George Richmond, R.A.; "John Ruskin (1866)," Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry; and "John Ruskin (1876)," by M. Georges Pilotelle.
 THE PROPER MODE and STUDY of DRAWING.—I. Addressed to Students. By W. HOLMES HUNT. With 4 Illustrations by the Author: "Rienzi Vowing Vengeance"; and Three Studies for the same Picture.
 MODERN PICTURES.—MR. BROCKLEBANK'S COLLECTION at CHILDWALL HALL. By E. RIMBAULT DINDIN. With 6 Illustrations after Peter Graham, R.A.; John Phillip, R.A.; Clarkson Stanfield; Sir Everett Millais, Bart., R.A.; Thomas Webster, R.A.; and W. P. Frith, R.A.
 BELVOIR CASTLE and its HISTORY. By F. STEPHENSON. With 7 Illustrations by J. Pinmore.
 THE ILLUSTRATING of BOOKS.—From the Humorous Artist's Point of View. By HARRY FERRISS. With 8 Illustrations by the Author.
 ALFRED HUNT. By FREDERICK WEDMORE. With 4 Illustrations of Alfred Hunt's Works.
 THE CHRONICLE of ART: ART in DECEMBER.
 CASSELL & Company, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Now ready, price 7d.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

For JANUARY.

CONTAINING—

- SERIAL and COMPLETE STORIES.
 A SHARP EXPERIENCE. By KATE EYRE, Author of "A Step in the Dark," "For the Good of the Family," "To Be Given Up," &c. Illustrated by Percy Tarrant.
 THE TEMPTATION of DUCE CARRUTHERS. By C. E. C. WEIGALL. With Illustrations by Lucien Davis.
 BY WORD of MOUTH. A Story of Adventure. By THOMAS KAY-WORTH, Author of "Mistress June," "Never Cleared Up," &c. &c. Illustrated by Everard Hopkins.
 THEIR MYSTERIOUS BUSINESS. By the Author of "Mrs. Van Koert's Teapot," &c. &c. Illustrated.
 MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS.
 THE COMING CENSUS. By ALEXANDER KNOX.
 THE STRANGER. By J. F. SULLIVAN. Illustrated by the Author.
 MEMORIES of MILAN. By the Rev. A. FINLAYSON. Illustrated from Photographs.
 THE KEY-NOTE of DINNER. By A. G. PAYNE.
 THE GARDEN in JANUARY. Illustrated by Fairfax Muckley.
 THE SHEPHERD'S SONG. By BENDETTO PALMIERI.
 HOW to CHOOSE a NEW HOUSE. By PHYLLIS BROWNE. First Paper.
 MY MONGREL! The Story of a Lost Dog. Illustrated by S. T. DADD.
 A WORD ABOUT FLORIDA CRACKERS. By M. PEXNOS.
 WHAT to WEAR in JANUARY: Chat-Chat on Dress. From OUR LONDON AND PARIS CORRESPONDENTS. With Illustrations.
 THE GATHERER: an Illustrated Record of Invention, Discovery, Literature, and Science.
 CASSELL & Company, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JANUARY.

- LIGHT: an Epitome. By A. C. SWINBURNE.
 ISEN'S NEW DRAMA. By EDMUND GOSSE.
 THE TRUTH ABOUT STANLEY and EMIN PASHA. A. MOUNTNEY JEPHSON.
 SCIENTIFIC SIGNS. By ERNEST M. BOWDEN.
 FINLAND. By E. B. LAMON.
 CHEZ POUSSSET: a Literary Evening. By EDWARD DELILLE.
 ON the BLACK SEA with PRINCE FERDINAND. By J. D. BOURCHIER.
 ANIMA NATURALITER PAGANA. By J. B. BURY.
 A CANADIAN PEOPLE. By Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, K.C.M.G., M.P.
 THE IRISH LEADERSHIP. By FREDERICK HARRISON.
 "THE RAKE'S PROGRESS" in IRISH POLITICS. By the Hon. AUREON HERBERT.
 ONE of our CONQUERORS.—Chaps. XV.-XIX. By GEO. MEREDITH.
 CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

A WEEK in a WHERRY on the NORFOLK BROADS. By "BLUE PETER." Illustrated by "THE PURSER." Five Shillings.—London: THE LEADENHALL PRESS
 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

Just published, large demy 4to, price 21s.

A POPULAR HANDBOOK and ATLAS of ASTRONOMY.

By W. PECH, F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E.,
Astronomer to the City of Edinburgh.

Containing 44 Large Quarto Plates, including Photographs, Charts of the Stars, Moon, Mars, World, Coloured Plates of the Planets, Sun, &c.
 The Letterpress contains a Catalogue of Double Stars, Star Clusters, Nebulae, &c., which can be seen with small Telescopes; Tables of the principal Binary and Variable Stars, Meteor Systems, &c., together with a popular description of the various Celestial Bodies and the principal instruments used in observing them. There are numerous illustrations throughout the text.
 The most useful and practical popular work on Astronomy yet published. It is especially valuable for those possessing telescopes.
 Prospectuses free on application.
 GALL & INGLIS, London and Edinburgh.

ORDER FROM YOUR BOOKSELLER OR NEWSAGENT, THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

For JANUARY, now ready, which contains the first Instalment of the

Memoirs of Prince Talleyrand,

With Introduction by the Hon. WHITELOW REID, American Minister to France.

SOME OF THE CONTENTS:—

THE MEMOIRS: a Strange Childhood.—TALLEYRAND and PARISIAN SOCIETY.—LA FAYETTE.—THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.—THE DUKE of ORLEANS.—ORIGIN of the REVOLUTION.—TALLEYRAND in ENGLAND.—TALLEYRAND in AMERICA.—TALLEYRAND and HAMILTON.

Price 1s. 4d.; post free, 1s. 7d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED.) THE BEST BOOKS

FOR SALE, or ON SUBSCRIPTION.

Head Office - 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.

Branch Offices { 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.
 AND
 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.

TWO New Serial Stories,

"THE THREE BROTHERS,"

By W. E. NORRIS,

AND

"LOVE OR MONEY?"

Are COMMENCED IN the JANUARY NUMBER of

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Ready at all Booksellers and Railway Stations,
DECEMBER 22nd.

Price ONE SHILLING.

NEW BOOKS.

Now ready. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

THE LIGHT of OTHER DAYS.

Musical Reminiscences of Half-a-Century. By WILLEST BEALE, Author of "The Enterprising Impresario," &c. "Full of good stories concerning all sorts of people; nearly all told with excellent effect and with hearty good humour." Guardian.

THE LIFE OF

THOMAS SIDNEY COOPER, R.A.

With Portrait and Illustrations. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s. "A book which will attract and interest many as the unpretending record of a long life and a varied experience. Mr. Cooper has lived through an unparalleled series of social changes; he has seen and known many famous men, and his own life has not been without its romantic story of a rise from obscurity to renown."—Times.

BY MR. BARKER.

WAYFARING in FRANCE; or, Highways and Otherways. By EDWARD BARKER. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s. "Often and well as the picturesque features of France have been described, there are few books now before the public that, taken altogether, give a pleasanter and more comprehensive view of what is to be seen, done, and suffered there, than does this volume."—Manchester Examiner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALEXIA."

THE LITTLE ONE. By Eleanor

C. PRICE, Author of "Red Towers," &c. 2 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ACTE."

THE DELIVERANCE of ROBERT

CARTER. By HUGH WESTBURY, Author of "Frederick Hazelden," &c. 2 vols.

"Clever throughout."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A DAUGHTER OF DIVES."

A DAUGHTER of the PYRAMIDS.

By LEITH DERWENT, Author of "Circe's Lovers," &c. 3 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENDETTA!"

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "Ardath," "A Romance of Two Worlds," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols.

"A story of absinthe and absintheurs—a grim, realistic drama."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "RED AS A ROSE IS SHE."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols.

Sale over One Million Copies.

THE NOVELS OF
MRS. HENRY WOOD.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A New and Cheaper Edition is now appearing of Mrs. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS, handsomely bound in red cloth and printed in new type. Each novel in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. The last volume (the 34th) issued is JOHNNY LUDLOW. Fifth Series.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BERNARD QUARITCH,

15, Piccadilly, London,

OFFERS at the net prices affixed—

Holbein Society, Publications of the.

A COMPLETE SET, in 17 volumes, 8vo, 4to, and folio, all illustrated with Woodcuts, cloth, rare, £12 12s. (1890-88.)

Sold separately.

The Triumphs of the Emperor Maxi-

MILIAN I. Edited by ALFRED ASPLAND. 2 Parts, folio and 4to Text, cloth, £5. (1873-75.)

The Ars Moriendi (editio princeps, circa 1480), a reproduction of the Copy in the British Museum. Edited by W. H. RYLANDS. With an Introduction by G. BULLEN, Keeper of the Printed Books in the British Museum. 4to, Twenty-four artistically reproduced Facsimiles, eleven of them exquisite Full-page designs, of the original Block Book, by F. C. Price. cloth, £1 1s. (1891.)

Tewdrannk.—Die Geuerlicheiten und eins teils der GESCHICHTEN des lübblichen streit... und hochberitmen Heids und Ritters TEWDRAANKHIS: (An Allegorical Poem of Knight-Erantry, executed by Melchior Pintzing, but projected by the Hero of the work himself, the subject matter being the Adventures of the Emperor Maximilian in his wooing and winning of the beautiful Mary of Burgundy). Folio, with 118 very large and spirited Woodcuts by Hans Schaeffelin and Hans Burgmaier. Complete, Three Parts, in 1 vol., cloth, £2 2s. [Augsburg, Schönsperger, 1519] 1892-84.

America.—De Bry, Thomas Hariot. A

Brief and True Report of the New Found Land of VIRGINIA, of the Commodities and of the Nature and Manners of the Natural Inhabitants. Folio, with 22 Plates of the Indians of Virginia, and 5 Plates of the Ancient Picts of Britain, boards, £2 2s. (1888.)

A reproduction of the edition printed at Frankfurt, in 1590, at the expense of Theodore de Bry.

Horses and Equitation.—F. H. Huth's

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL RECORD of HIPPOLOGY. 84. sm. 4to, x. and 440 pp., half-vellum, 10s. 6d. (1887.)

The Bibliography is arranged chronologically and extends from page 1314; the Index to Names of Authors to 372; the Index to Works on Horses comprises sub-divisions:

Breeding—Equitation and Stable Management—Racing—Horses' Feet, Shoes, and Shoeing—Harness, Rigs, Biting—Driving and Coach-building—Laws relating to Warrant—Natural History—Cavalry—Veterinary—The Chase—Age of Horse—Stable Architecture—Artistic—Mules & Asses—Brands—Pageantry, Chariots—Bibliography.

Ireland.—History of the Irish Con-

FEDERATION and the WAR in IRELAND, 1641-1649. Containing a Narrative of Affairs in Ireland from 1641 to the conclusion of the Treaty for Cessation of Hostilities in 1643. By RICHARD BELLINGS, Author of "A Sixth Book to the Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia," Secretary of the Supreme Council of the Irish Confederation, with Original Documents, Correspondence of the Confederation and of the Administrators of the English Government in Ireland, Contemporary Personal Statements, Memoirs, &c. Now for the first time published, from Original Manuscripts, by JOHN T. GILBERT. 6 vols., small 4to, boards, with Portraits and Facsimiles, price to Subscribers, £10 10s. (1882-89.)

—the same, 6 vols., 4to, Large-Paper, £15 15s.

Twenty-five Copies are on Extra-Large Paper, similar to the Roxburghe Club Books.

Italian School of Design. Consisting of 182 Plates, chiefly engraved by BARTOLOZZI, after the Original Pictures and Drawings of the Italian Masters, in the Collection of Her Majesty. 2 vols., imperial 4to (pub. at £15 15s.), half-morocco, gilt edges, £4 4s. (1835.)

Japan.—E. M. Satow.—The Jesuit

MISSION PRESS in JAPAN, 1591-1610. 4to, with 13 Facsimiles of the Titles of Works produced by the Jesuits in Japan during their stay in that country, sewed, 18s. (Privately printed, 1888.)

The issues of the Jesuit press in Japan are of extreme rarity; they are here most accurately described.

Japanese Romance.—Chiushingura; or,

The Loyal League: a Japanese Romance. Translated by F. V. DICKINS. With Notes and an Appendix containing a Metrical Version of the Ballad of Takasago, and a Specimen of the Original Text in the Japanese Character. New Edition. Royal 8vo, 2s. Engravings on Wood, in Colours, by Japanese Artists, printed on Japanese paper (pub. at 10s. 6d.), cloth gilt, 5s. (1880.)

Jewellery.—Jeypore Enamels. By Col.

S. S. JACOB and Surgeon-Major T. H. HENDLEY, both of Jeypore. Imperial 4to, 28 Full-Page Coloured Illustrations, containing 120 Designs by W. Griggs, with Descriptive Letterpress, extra fancy paper, gilt edges, price to Subscribers, 35s. (1888.)

The finest and best executed work in chromo-lithography produced in Europe.

Chefs-d'Œuvre d'Orfèvrerie, ayant figuré à l'Exposition de Budapest. Complete in 15 Numbers, forming 2 vols., folio, containing 150 Plates of Jewellery, some in Colours, in portfolio, £10 10s. [Paris, 1878-88.]

Koran, commonly called the Alcoran of Mahomed. Rearranged and Translated into English, with Notes by J. M. RODWELL, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, 9s. (1876.)

The only edition of the Koran in which the original text appears in its correct chronological order.

Lea's Chapters from the Religious His-

TORY of SPAIN connected with the INQUISITION. Small 8vo, 322 pp., cloth, 12s. [Philadelphia, 1890.]

Lea (Henry C.) Superstition and Force:

Essays on the Vager of Law, The Vager of Battle, The Ordeal, and Torture. Third Edition. Enlarged. In 1 handsome volume, royal 12mo, pp. xii. and 352, cloth, 3s. [Philadelphia, 1878.]

"As a work of curious inquiry on certain outlying points of obsolete law, 'Superstition and Force' is one of the most remarkable books we have met with."—London Athenaeum, Nov. 3, 1866.

Lea's History of Celibacy: an Historical

Sketch of Sacerdotal Celibacy in the Christian Church. 8vo, Second Edition, Enlarged, xx. and 682 pp. (pub. at 10s.), cloth, 12s. [Boston, Mass., 1884.]

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

* * A batch of Catalogues of Rare, Valuable, and Curious Books may be had for six penny stamps.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

FOOTSTEPS of DR. JOHNSON

(SCOTLAND). By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. With about 160 Illustrations, including 18 Heliogravures, sketched on the spot by Lancelot Speed, and beautifully reproduced by Lemerrier & Co., of Paris.

EDITION DE LUXE. Limited strictly to 150 copies—100 for the United Kingdom and 50 for America. Bound in plain boards, uncut edges, £7 7s. net.

ORDINARY EDITION. 1,000 copies, bound in half-morocco, gilt tops, uncut edges, £3 3s. net.

NEW WORK BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

OVER the TEA-CUPS: a Series of

Papers of Reminiscences and Characteristic Reflections. By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," "One Hundred Days in Europe," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TEN CENTURIES of EUROPEAN

PROGRESS. By LOWIS JACKSON, Author of "Aid to Survey Practice," "Aid to Engineering Solution," &c. Illustrated with 13 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d.

VISCOUNT MELBOURNE. By Henry

DUNKLEY, LL.D. ("Verax"). Being the Second Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Edited by STUART J. REID. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHARLES GOUNOD: his Life and

Works. By MARIE ANNE BOVET. With Portrait and Facsimiles. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE LIFE of HARRIET BEECHER

STOWE Told for Boys and Girls. By Mrs. SARAH A. TOOLEY, Author of "Lives Great and Simple." 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

NEW GIFT-BOOKS FOR BOYS.

BY HENRY M. STANLEY.

My Kalulu: Prince, King, and Slave. By HENRY M. STANLEY, Author of "In Darkest Africa," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Against Heavy Odds: a Tale of Norse Heroism. By H. H. BOYESSE, Author of "The Modern Vikings," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Bevis: a Tale for Boys. By RICHARD JEFFERIES, Author of "Amaryllis at the Fair," &c. New Edition. Edited by G. A. HENRY. Illustrated. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The interest is maintained from end to end. The book teems with information upon almost every subject dear to boys."—Standard.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY JULES VERNE.

The Purchase of the North Pole: a Sequel to "From the Earth to the Moon." Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

The Family without a Name. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

JANUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

London Music Halls. By F. ANSTEE. Eight Illustrations drawn by Joseph Pennell.

The Outlook in California. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARRNER. Twelve Illustrations drawn by H. Bolton Jones, W. Hamilton Gibson, J. D. Woodward, and W. C. Fidler.

School-Boys: a Poem. By RICHARD E. BURTON. In the "Stranger People's" Country: a Story. Part I. By CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK. With Two Illustrations (including Frontispiece).

The March of Winter: a Poem. By ARCHIBALD LAMPHAN.

At the Casa Napoleon: a Story. By THOMAS A. JANVIER. Seven Illustrations drawn by W. T. Smedley.

Impressions of Peru. By THEODORE CHILD. Sixteen Illustrations drawn by T. de Thulstrup and H. D. Nichols.

Another Chapter of My Memoirs: How I Became a Journalist. By MR. DE BLOWITZ.

Atone ment: a Poem. By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

St. Anthony: a Christmas-Eve Ballad. By Mrs. E. W. LATIMER. Three Illustrations.

&c. &c.

60 ILLUSTRATIONS IN ALL.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Limited, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1890.

No. 973, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"THE PRIME MINISTERS OF QUEEN VICTORIA."—Lord Beaconsfield. By J. A. Froude. (Sampson Low.)

WHATEVER else there is to be said of it, beyond any manner of doubt this book is most attractively written. Be he what he will, Tory, Disraelite, Radical, or Whig, no man of taste can fail to read it with pleasure and to lay it down with regret. When Mr. Froude writes on a historical subject, praise is, perhaps, a superfluity, and blame a presumption. Still, with all possible humility, it must be said of this book that the matter is almost as faulty as the manner is faultless. One wonders equally at the facile adroitness of the style—so bright, so flowing, so easy, yet so epigrammatic—and at the perverse paradox of the opinions. Facts seem to masquerade uncomfortably in novel garbs; and one appears to be listening to the voice of a minor prophet crying in the wilderness—of one who, like the Bourbons, has learnt nothing and forgotten nothing for all the political changes that have passed by, who seems to occupy, without either discomfort or misgiving, the position of a teacher without pupils, a philosopher without a school. At times, one is tempted to think that the book is a collection of historical lamentations by Mr. Froude, enlivened by anecdotic sketches of Mr. Disraeli; at times, that it is a latter-day parody of Coningsby or Sybil. But for all that, however idiosyncratic and however imaginative it is, Mr. Froude's theory of Disraeli's life must always be a thing of interest and of a certain value.

Mr. Froude had access to a good deal of new material of the lighter kind, which at any rate must have enabled him to form a complete idea of the workings and ways of Disraeli's mind. For many years Disraeli carried on a close and candid correspondence with Mrs. Brydges Williams, a wealthy Jewish lady, who followed his career with admiration and interest, sought an assignation with him in order to make his personal acquaintance, became his wife's and his own most intimate friend, and by her request is buried near them at Hughenden. This correspondence Mr. Froude has seen, and at least in a general way has used. From other sources, apparently from intimate personal friends of Disraeli's, he has obtained a quantity of information particularly about Disraeli's money matters, which, if correct, adds considerably to our knowledge of his character. But with all this we seem to see rather points of light than a picture; we get more characteristics than character.

Two points in particular Mr. Froude seems to us to urge with an insistence that the evidence does not really justify. He will have it that Disraeli's lifelong affectation was a deliberate mask adopted to conceal his real thoughts and deeper nature; and he perpetually uses Disraeli's Hebrew descent to explain his aims and his failures. He makes it the source of his ideals and the excuse for his shortcomings. He calls him libertinus, libertino patre natus. Surely it is time these personalities were forgotten. Disraeli was a Jew, no doubt; but if his name had been Dickenson, if his physiognomy had been of a racially neutral cast and colouring, if his novels had not mentioned Jerusalem or crypto-Judaism, the world would have forgotten his Hebraism. Brought up as a Jew, he never acquired the instinctive knowledge of English ways and standards, which English boys obtain at school; but from the time he was twenty he lived among the classes who were always his principal allies and supporters; and if he failed to understand them, as he certainly failed to understand the middle classes, it was from no lack of acquaintance. To speak of him as being in reality a stranger in the country of his adoption is to make far too much of the matter. If he was not English, he certainly was not anything else; if he did not know his native land, it was not because he was particularly full of the knowledge of any other; and, considering the pains he was at not only to seem but to be English in every fibre, it is impossible thus to class him as a member of no nation at all.

That some of his affectation was deliberate there can be no doubt. The particular form it took was the sham-Byronic. He posed in drawing-rooms as a Childe Harold of Wardour-street. But if all he wanted was to make his manners serve the Talleyrandian office of speech and conceal his thoughts, he was too clever not to know that he might find many better cloaks than familiarities of dress and demeanour, which were vulgar in a young man, and ridiculous in an old one. In fact, these traits testify to nothing but an innate want of an artistic sense of propriety. Such an hypothesis cannot explain the vigour and thoroughness with which he played that part of the English country gentleman, which, it would seem, he particularly affected. He boxed, he rode to hounds, he received the Eucharist with punctual devotion, he wore velvetens and gaiters, he presided at farmers' ordinaries. Mr. Froude would have us conceive that in reality no more was involved in all this than the love of nature of an accomplished literary man of simple personal tastes. It is too much that we should be left in doubt whether this elaborate study of the country gentleman was a life-long exercise in irony, or was really conceived to be part and parcel of those influences which made the chief of the Tory party.

With more literary tact than historical fidelity, Mr. Froude deals lightly with that part of Disraeli's life which was spent in debates and divisions, in votes of want of confidence and motions by way of amendment, and confines himself to the more human side of his subject. The gain in interest is very great, but it is accompanied by a corresponding want of historical accuracy. Mr. Froude appears to have felt that many of these passages in Disraeli's life are now indefensible, and to have wisely decided against boring his readers merely in order to give his subject away. He disposes of these things in a few airy asides. "It may be claimed for Disraeli," he says of the period when he first became leader of the opposition, "that he discharged his sad duties during all this time with as little insincerity as the circumstances allowed."

"His speeches in Parliament and out of it were dictated by the exigencies of the passing moment. We do not look for the real opinions of a leading counsel in his forensic orations. We need not expect to find Disraeli's personal convictions in what he occasionally found it necessary to say."

It may be unintentional, but really this is too unsparing. The Times could hardly say more of Mr. Parnell. It is an echo of Dr. Johnson's mot, "I do not wish to be censorious, but I believe the man to be an attorney."

Leaving the wildernesses of debates, Mr. Froude casts his lines in more pleasant places. He dilates on Disraeli's literary work, on his youth, his political ideals, which, by the way, he made no attempt to realise—on almost anything rather than his serious politics. His budgets are never mentioned; that he was in office twice before 1867 is only indicated, and from this book a casual reader might hardly even guess the fact. There is no real information about the "Ten Minutes' Bill"; and the whole administration of 1874 is dealt with in only four more pages than are given to a foreign tour which Disraeli made when he was about twenty-five. Thanks probably to the publication of Disraeli's letters to his sister, we have his early manhood in full. The story is interesting, if not admirable. Disraeli's leading motive from his twentieth to his fortieth year appears to have been self-advertisement. He wore gaudy garments, he wrote conceited novels, he "cheeked" Peel, he challenged O'Connell, he abused his opponents, he satirised his friends. Whatever men might think of him, he was determined never to be forgotten; and he was wise in his generation. There must, withal, have been a spice of malicious pleasure even in his singularly unmalicious nature, when he saw the puzzled wonder and the helpless indignation of some of his party under these lively sallies. A "topboot Tory," wroth but dumb, struggling but impotent, like a captive cockchafer buzzing on a pin, must have been a precious spectacle to his somewhat elfin waywardness.

But, as time went on, Disraeli developed more positive opinions. Till 1840, whatever he might call himself, he was really an anti-Whig. If he called himself a Radical, it was not from any affinity to Joseph Hume, but from antipathy to Earl Grey. If he followed Peel, it was from no community of principle, but in virtue of a community of opposition. With the period of Sybil and Coningsby he appears to have matured something like a distinct political ideal, which never, however, approached realisation. The importance of these two novels as indicating the lasting attitude of his mind has been much over-estimated, but no doubt his "Young Englandism" was as genuine as it certainly is interesting. But here disastrously comes in Mr. Froude's personal equation. He affiliates the subject of his latest book to the subjects of earlier writings. He connects Disraeli's views at this time with the Oxford Movement and with Carlyle. This is doing a double injustice. Disraeli's mediaevalism is like Pugin's Gothic—it was ignorant sentimentalism; a very distant imitation of reality. Great as he was, there was no real affinity between his mind and Newman's. On the other hand, his thoughts were at least the thoughts of a man of sense and a statesman. As a politician, Mr. Froude may compare him to a mere Queen's counsel, but he had at least a lucid mind. He knew what he meant, and could express his meaning in English, which, if turgid, was still intelligible. It is hard upon him actually to make him sit, even for the briefest possible period, at the feet of one who paid him the unconscious homage of his most particular detestation.

One is all the more disposed to think that Mr. Froude's personal bias has misled him as to the sincerity of Disraeli's Young Englandism, by observing that his speculations about what might have been have brought him to the conclusion that both of the great Tory leaders of this century, Peel and Disraeli, actually went most wrong when they have generally seemed most to have gone right. Peel's Free Trade policy, whatever may be said for its sincerity, and even for its success, was in the light of Mr. Froude's higher statesmanship but a maldroit and unhappy episode. Disraeli's six years of triumph from 1874 to 1880 were in fact years of the saddest of all failure, years of wasted opportunity and mistaken endeavour. Mr. Froude writes too much from the point of view of the present. He has antedated his argument for protection, and put the case of the Tory squires in 1845 as the naval alarmists put it in 1890; and surely he has considerably anticipated the date of the "policy of sewage." He appears, in stating them, to sanction views of Disraeli about his greater antagonist, which were perhaps never quite seriously meant, and in doing so does Peel great injustice.

"He took the course, which promised most immediate success. To restore authority required an aristocracy who could be trusted to use it, and there was none such ready to hand. Wages must be left to the market where he found them. All that he could do to help the people was to cheapen the food which was bought with them, to lay taxation on the shoulders best able to bear it, and by education and such other means as he could provide to enable the industrious and the thoughtful to raise themselves, since neither legislation nor administration could raise them. Cheap food and popular education was his highest ideal. Peel could see what was immediately before him clearer than any man. His practical sagacity forbade him to look farther or deeper.

"But the difficulty of his position lay in his having been brought into power as a Protectionist. The constituencies had given him his majority in reply to his own Protectionist declaration. If Free Trade was to be made the law of the land, was Peel to repeat the part which he had played in Catholic emancipation? All reasonable Conservatives knew that the Corn Laws must be modified, but the change, if inevitable, need not be precipitate. Peel's great defect, Disraeli said in his 'Life of Lord George Bentinck,' was that he wanted imagination, and in wanting that he wanted prescience. No one was more sagacious when dealing with the circumstances before him. His judgment was faultless provided that he had not to deal with the future. But insight into consequences is the test of a true statesman, and, because Peel had it not, Catholic emancipation, parliamentary reform, and the abrogation of the commercial system were carried in haste or in passion without conditions or mitigatory arrangements. On Canning's death, the Tories might have had the game in their hands. A moderate reconstruction of the House of Commons, the transfer of the franchises of a few corrupt boroughs to the great manufacturing towns, would have satisfied the country. Peel let the moment pass, and the Birmingham Union and the Manchester economic school naturally followed. His policy was to resist till resistance was ineffectual, and then to grant wholesale concessions as a premium to political agitation."

Of Disraeli, in 1874, there is an equally speculative and unhistoric judgment.

"Two unsettled problems lay before him after his Cabinet was formed, both of which he knew to be of supreme importance. Ireland, he was well aware, could not remain in the condition in which it had been left by his predecessors. . . . The passions of the Irish nation had been excited; they had been led to believe that the late measures were a first step towards the recovery of their independence. Seeds of distraction had been sown broadcast, which would inevitably sprout at the first favourable opportunity. A purely English minister, with no thought but for English interests, and put in possession of sufficient power to make himself obeyed, would, I think, have seized the opportunity to reorganise the internal government of Ireland. The land question might have been adjusted on clear and equitable lines, the just rights secured of owners and occupiers alike. The authority of the law could have been restored, nationalist visions extinguished, and a permanent settlement arrived at which might have lasted for another century. . . . This was one great subject. The other was the relation of the colonies to the mother country. . . . Difficult such a task would have been, for the political and practical ties had been too completely severed; but the greatness of a statesman is measured by the difficulties which he overcomes. Whether it was that Disraeli felt that he was growing old, that he wished to signalise his reign by more dazzling exploits which would promise immediate results; whether it was that he saw the English nation impatient of the lower rank in the counsels of Europe, to which it had been reduced by the foreign policy of his predecessors . . . but it is idle to speculate on motives. The two great problems which he could have, if not settled, yet placed on the road to settlement, he decided to pass by. He left Ireland to simmer in confusion. His zeal for the consolidation of the Empire was satisfied by the title with which he decorated his sovereign. . . . Disraeli failed as he deserved to fail. He thought that he was reviving patriotic enthusiasm, and all that he did was to create jingoism."

It is political judgments such as these that compel one to mistrust Mr. Froude's account of the true position of Disraeli among English statesmen. Either history has been outrageously miswritten for fifty years, or the reform of 1832 was in some form, not substantially different from Lord

Grey's, by all political diagnosis inevitable. Either there is no trust to be put in economic facts, or, in postponing a thoroughgoing reform of the Corn Laws, Peel would have been giving up the most solid of commercial advantages for the problematical profit of a traffic in commercial treaties. The matter has very little to do with the moral condition of the nation. We should not have been any the more virtuous if we had remained poorer, and Carlylean denunciations are just as much or as little applicable to the nineteenth century as to the ninth or the twenty-ninth. To suggest that the disestablishment of the Irish Church and the Land Act of 1870 had seriously been meant, or had generally been taken, as intimations that national independence would be given if cried for loudly enough, is a misreading of all the facts. Anyone who thinks that Disraeli, who came into power largely because Mr. Gladstone had harassed and alienated so many interests, would have been allowed by his followers to convulse Ireland with further drastic land reforms, or to embark on some enterprise of colonial constitutionalism, of which no one even yet has been able to devise the detail, must have completely forgotten the condition of political feeling from 1874 to 1878.

Says Mr. Froude again, in conclusion :

"He made no lofty pretensions, and his aims were always perhaps something higher than he professed. If to raise himself to the summit of the eminence was what he most cared for, he had a genuine anxiety to serve his party, and in serving his party to serve his country; and possibly, if among his other gifts he had inherited an English character, he might have devoted himself more completely to great national questions; he might have even inscribed his name in the great roll of English worthies. But he was English only by adoption, and he never completely identified himself with the country which he ruled. At heart he was a Hebrew to the end; and of all his triumphs perhaps the most satisfying was the sense that a member of that despised race had made himself the master of the fleets and armies of the proudest of Christian nations."

This is the verdict rather of an accomplished writer of romance than of a serious historian. It is in line with a plan which dilates upon Disraeli's youth and follies at the expense of the marvellous years of detestable drudgery from 1848 to 1867. But so much of it as is true misses the point, and much of it is not true. Disraeli was a supreme Parliamentary tactician; he was a master of sarcasm, always cutting if often laboured; he was the cunning lapidary of polished phrases; he was a witty novelist, a speculator upon history, whose views were ingenious though not well-informed. But to say so much of him and leave it there is unjust. No doubt his personality is one of the most interesting to be found in modern times. For sheer pluck in face of the heaviest odds, for splendid victory on his own merits, Disraeli stands almost without a rival. But there was a great deal more in him than this, and his greatest feat and greatest service to his country is one that Mr. Froude ignores. It is that he was able, as leader of the Conservative party, in American phrase, to "keep the procession moving." He performed to the Liberals the inestimable service of making their opponents once more a possible majority. It was a great gain for his country that he taught his party to get into line with the inevitable democracy, to secure itself a future in the new world, the old world having passed away, and to adapt the enduring principles of the party of caution and order to the new conditions of a widely disseminated franchise. It was from him that his party learnt neither to sulk in their tents nor to rail at accomplished facts, neither to bewail a golden past that never existed, nor to anticipate cataclysms that never arrive, but to be once more what they want to be, and what the country wants them to be—a practical fighting party. And it is this which is Disraeli's monumentum aere perennius.

J. A. HAMILTON.

Vulgar Verses. By Jones Brown. (Reeves and Turner.)

THE author of this volume, written for the most part in Lancashire dialect—not, however, the Lancashire of Waugh and Brierley and Prince—would, one supposes, be the last person to plead guilty to a charge of vulgarity properly so-called, whether brought against his subject-matter or his mode of treating it; and of such a hypothetical accusation we, for our part, make haste to acquit him. There is indeed nothing that incurs the just reproach of vulgarity in these wholesome and honest rhymes. But their author is an unbending realist, to use the current slang of criticism. And having said this, it is perhaps almost needless to add that he is not quite innocent of a tendency to make his people and their words and ways a little more real than the reality; while another propensity, usual with the hardened and irreclaimable realist, is also observable—the propensity to flout and set at naught, with a certain not wholly unmalicious wantonness, the prejudices (no doubt lamentable) of nice and genteel persons. That very estimable young woman, Hannah, in "The Canvassers," says:—

"So, as I was a-sayin', I stood on the sill,
Sniffin' and lookin' an' thinkin' no harm;
An' for all I did nothing but just stand still,
The sweat ran down in grimy streaks
Over my forehead an' over my cheeks,
An' I wiped it off wi' the thick o' my arm"— a very natural and most proper action on Hannah's part. But why should the particular circumstance necessitating such an action be so frequently described and circumstantially dwelt upon in these pages? Even in Lancashire, it can hardly be that the pores are stimulated to such almost incessant excretory activity as numerous passages in this volume might lead the natives of other counties to suppose; or, even if they are, we cannot think that egotistical allusions to the matter can come so near to forming the staple of Lancashire conversation as an uninstructed alien might imagine after reading the very able volume before us. Certainly this local peculiarity, if it really exists, has not struck other travellers who have penetrated into the interior of the county palatine as it seems to have struck Jones Brown. Its discovery has been left to the latest literary explorer of Darkest Lancashire—a phrase which is not inapplicable to those coal-mining districts which are his chosen province.

We are also dissatisfied with Jones Brown for confining himself to such a limited range of female character, as well as for appearing to insist too much upon our sharing his admiration of certain types which, on the whole, are not the most winsome. We feel sure there are in Lancashire, as elsewhere, young women endowed with many charms not less irresistible than an aptitude for giving an unappreciated admirer "one in the eye," or a readiness to knock him down if necessary. Indeed, the uninstructed alien to whom reference has already been made might imagine from Jones Brown's testimony that the men of Lancashire were as invariably puny as the maidens are Amazonian, so frequent are the contemptuous allusions which the latter make to the physical inferiority of the former. The truth is, the big, brawny, and rather aggressive young woman is slightly overdone in this volume, and her softer sister is, by implication, somewhat disparaged. In the long run these rather epicene heroines are unattractive; and we are grateful when the author gives us a picture like that of "Our Ann," who, besides being "a tall, athletic maid," had "innocent soft eyes," and an agreeable freedom from pugnacity.

"Such arms! they were the boast and pride
And glory of the country side—
The wonder of the town;
No other maiden near or far
Had arms so large and muscular,
So round, so red, so brown.

"From wrist to shoulder they were bare,
Both out of doors and everywhere,
For work and not for show;
No wonder they were plump and fine—
Ripened by all the suns that shine,
And all the winds that blow."

We are sorry to find poor Ann, with those arms, coming to grief in the end. The little poem that celebrates her massive beauties and bewails her eventual fate is admirable throughout, and is touched with true pathos—a quality which we regret to find so rarely attempted in these pages, for it is never attempted unsuccessfully. We are also inclined to lament the comparative scarcity of humour in the volume, and to regard such a deficiency as rather uncharacteristic of the locality dealt with; for if the spirit of broad and rough fun is to be found anywhere, it is to be found among Lancashire folk, yet this book has not the ingredients of a hearty laugh between its two covers. But the defect has a basis of merit; for, after all, laughter, even the kindest, is perhaps (as Shelley, who wanted it "put down," seems to have thought) incompatible with perfect sympathy and insight. And the author of Vulgar Verses succeeds too well in imaginative identification of himself with his human creations to be lightly sensible of any element of mere comedy in their lot—more especially of such comedy as the spectator, not the actor, is alone aware of and amused by.

Jones Brown's great excellence is his power of realising with intuitive precision the working-class point of view; and the result is that his character-pieces are genuinely dramatic, without having anything of the pre-determined air of "studies." To illustrate what is meant, take the following sufficiently unpretentious stanzas, put into the mouth of a servant-girl narrating an interview with her future mistress:

"Her axed me, could I cook?
An' could I fettle an' clean?
But her words was as hard as a printed book
For to reckon up what they mean.
"Still, I reckon'd 'em up at last,
For I studied afore I spoke:
You munna get on wi' yer talk too fast,
When you're in wi' the gentle-folk.
"Bless you, it's on'y their way
As they learn 'em when they're young:
They've allas gotten a summat to say
On the very tip o' their tongue.
"Aye, but it's bad to make out;
It inna plump nor plain;
You're tied to think what it's all about
Afore you answer again."

That is a case of real insight into the illiterate mind, together with an unusually vivid recognition of the curious disparity between the vocabularies of different social classes. We have heard often enough of the dignity of labour, but here is a quite novel revelation of its delectableness:

"Eh, what a pleasure, to kneel wi' yor two bare arms kep' tight,
Stiff from the shoulders down, both hands wi' all your might
Grippin' the big floor brush, an' pressin' it down wi' a shove
Into the grain o' the boards, till the dirt begins to move!
For you drives it up an' down, as fast as your arms 'ull go,
Churnin' the black dirt up to mud, as yo thrusts
it to an' fro.
An' of coorse the brush is soaked i' the water out
o' your pail,
An' the mud splashes up again yo like showers
o' upcast hail,
Till your face is all ower black, an' your hands an' arms, an' your breast,
An' the sweat keeps pourin' off you, for you
canna stop to rest,
An' you looks at your two black arms for a place, an' canna find none,
Not one clean spot o' the thick o' your arm, for to wipe your face upon!"

It is, however, in the group of poems dealing with the life of the pit-brow women of the Lancashire coal districts that Jones Brown achieves his most special success. In most of these, the dialect is much more full-flavoured than in any of the pieces from which the foregoing quotations have been made, and it would most likely prove a somewhat obstinate barrier to the uninitiated reader. Poems like "T'Pointsman," "Eawr Liz," "Th' Owd Cabin," and "Heaving Day" embody a phase of life which, so far as we know, has not elsewhere been accorded the distinction of literary embalment, at least in verse; while "Jenny o' Eaw Pit" reverts with somewhat grim and painful power to a now closed chapter of labour-history—an industrial era having some features which legislation has since very properly effaced, but which are here recalled to imaginative life with undeniably fine effect. In this and some other pieces the human figures stand out against their dusky and grimy background with a sharpness of almost lurid relief, which may be styled Rembrandtesque in its intensity of chiar-oscuro.

Before taking leave of these poems—the great merits of which we are forbidden by considerations of space alone to illustrate by extracts, and which are as remarkable for their deep human feeling as for their seemingly unintentional picturesqueness, and the power they exhibit of drawing realisable and convincingly authentic human portraits, with a few strong, firm outlines that leave nothing vague—we would take occasion to remark that their author has not entirely solved the problem of an orthography which shall be at once intelligible and accurately phonetic. For example, while “abaht” (about) indicates the local pronunciation with tolerable approach to exactness, the same cannot be said of “grahmy” (grimy) where the vowel-sound is really a compound one, and is hardly even approximately rendered by ah. Perhaps this and some associated difficulties were practically insuperable; and it would be unfair not to add that the author of this volume has been more generally successful in grappling with such obstacles than any other writer whose works we know—unless it be the accomplished author of That Lass o' Lowrie's, who, by the way, has treated kindred themes with equal sympathy and power. The standing difficulty of representing by printed signs the sound given to u, as in “just,” has, however, been something of a stumbling-block to Jones Brown as to most writers of dialect. He writes “joost”; but this is an exaggeration of the sound, which really has its most obvious analogy in an educated person's pronunciation of the u in “bull”—and no compiler of a pronouncing dictionary would direct us to say “bool.” To illustrate the crudity of Jones Brown's method in this particular, it is enough to mention that in one line he has “shoots” and “trooks,” and he does not need us to tell him that the vowel-sounds in the two words are not identical in a Lancashire mouth. Is it not better to retain the u, superscribed with a modifying accent? We observe that he translates “more” into “moor”; but in the local vernacular this word is most often an emphatic dissyllable—“moo-er.” On p. 148 we have “nae mair,” which is surely wrong. And may we ask Jones Brown in what part of Lancashire, where the dialect is as broad as in some of his poems, would “coals” be pronounced other than “coils”?

This volume opens with a poem, “Queen Kara,” which is oddly, not to say grotesquely, out of keeping with the other contents. It is, however, a picturesque story, told in verse that is admirable for flexibility and easy grace.

WILLIAM WATSON.

“ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA.”—Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore. Edited by Whitley Stokes. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS volume forms Part V. of the Mediaeval and Modern Series of the “Anecdota Oxoniensia.” It is stated that MSS. contained in the Bodleian and other Oxford libraries are to have the preference when choice is being made of materials to be produced among these “Anecdota.” Celtic scholars have, therefore, some special reason to be grateful to Oxford for having included in this valuable series an Irish text, the property of the Duke of Devonshire, which is still preserved at Lismore Castle, where it was discovered in 1814. The Book of Lismore is a compilation made in the latter half of the fifteenth century from the lost Book of Monasterboice and other MSS. On a general account of its contents, and on a minute study of the Lives of nine Irish saints which have been extracted from it for the present volume, Mr. Stokes has here bestowed an amount of labour which leaves the most exacting student little to desire, and a wealth of scholarship which few of his contemporaries are competent to appraise.

The text itself is not of the first order of interest. The scribes to whom we owe its present form were “all more or less careless and ignorant,” its language is a “mixed language” showing an imperfect and inconsistent modernisation of ancient forms, and the historical contents of the Lives are substantially given in other and more trustworthy MSS. The Book of Lismore, however, relates many miracles which are not to be found elsewhere; and the details which surround these miracles are doubtless authentic, and, therefore, as Mr. Stokes observes, “of value for the student of the social condition of the ancient Irish, and of their religious tenets and practices.” And if the book adds but little to existing information on these subjects, we must remember that a thorough and scholarly edition of an Irish text is in itself something of a rarity, and that no labour is thrown away which brings us, as this volume certainly does, into helpful contact with an historical document of the great antiquity which can confidently be attributed to the contents of the Book of Lismore.

Everyone knows how Carlyle fared when he began the study of ancient Irish history with the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. After a certain number of grotesque θάμματα—the mere childish appeals to the sense of the marvellous with which Irish hagiology is so disfigured—had presented themselves to his ken, he laid down the folio in melancholy wrath and abjured thenceforward the study of Celtic antiquities. It is unfortunate that he should have chosen to begin with Colgan's miscellany of miracles instead of with Patrick's own Confession and Epistle to Coroticus*—writings whose piety, sincerity, and noble human worth, no spirit could have responded to more warmly than his own; but even in the hagiology he would have found much to delight him. Take, for instance, this episode from the Life of St. Patrick, in the present volume:

“After that Patrick went into the province of Munster, to Cashel of the Kings. And Oengus, son of Nattraich, King of Munster, met him, and made him welcome. And Oengus then believed in God and in Patrick, and he was baptised, and a multitude of the men of Munster along with him. Now, when Patrick was blessing the head of Oengus, the spike of the crozier went through his foot. So, after the end of the Benediction, Patrick saw the wound in Oengus's foot. Said Patrick, ‘Wherefore did'st thou not tell me?’ ‘Meseemed,’ saith Oengus, ‘that it was a rite of the faith.’”

* Let me refer the reader to an admirable English version of these writings, with full editorial introduction, by the late Sir S. Ferguson (Dublin: Sealy, Bryers & Walker).

The story of the stag which used to visit St. Ciaran's hermitage every day to offer its antlers as a rest for his psalter—a story related, indeed, of many other Celtic saints—has a quaint beauty of its own, and would have lent itself well to illustration by the hand to which we owe the magnificent engraving of the conversion of St. Hubert. The affectionate relations which prevailed between the Irish saints and the beast-creation come out frequently in these biographies. St. Columba's horse came, before the saint's death, and wept in his breast till his raiment was wet. A servant sought to drive him away, but the saint would not suffer it. Twelve holy men going on a voyage brought with them a “sea-cat,” the size of a small bird, which “was very dear to us.” It afterwards grew into a terrific monster, but never did them any hurt.

The most interesting of these biographies, from a literary point of view, is certainly the life of the warrior saint, Findchua of Brigown. It is only found in the Celtic. In it there are echoes of the early heroic legends, a higher order of literature altogether than the hagiology, which are rarely met with in the latter. His name (a fact not without significance) contains the word cu = “hound” (Findchua = “White Hound”), which is often met with in the names of the pagan heroes of the Conorian cycle—Cuchullin, Curoi, Cucorb, Conary (cu, gen. con) Conaill Cearnach, &c.—where it has a distinctly warlike meaning. The miracles recorded of Findchua are often simply ways of making us realise the terrible fierceness of his anger. Thus, when an overbearing king drove his horses on a monastery meadow which Findchua was guarding, the monk's wrath grew so hot that the cowl on his head was burned to ashes. When he scowled on the injurious king, the earth rose in billows against him and buried him to the knees. In battle, sparks of fire break from Findchua's teeth, and once an army of Danish marauders is consumed by him, nothing being left but charred bones and weapons. His anger could petrify like the Gorgon's gaze. When the Ulidians came down to battle with Findchua and his Munster men, he fixed them as they were stooping to the charge, and so “broke the battle upon them” and destroyed them. On that occasion the Munstermen were at first greatly disheartened by the number of their foes, the “forest of their weapons,” and their splendid accoutrements. “The children of Niall are thrice our number,” said they. “Then slay the surplus till you are equal,” said Findchua, a reply which would surely have struck a spark of appreciation from Carlyle.

It should be mentioned that Mr. Stokes has accompanied these Lives with a translation at once vigorous and exact, qualities far from easy to combine in renderings from the Celtic. The essay on the language of the Lives contains a complete list of words borrowed from Latin and other non-Celtic sources; and we have also a general glossary containing, for the most part, only words which are not found in Windisch's Wörterbuch—features which will be of special service to that Irish lexicographer whose advent is still a subject of pious hope.

T. W. ROLLESTON.

Fifty Years in Ceylon. An Autobiography. By the late Major Thomas Skinner, Commissioner of Public Works, Ceylon. Edited by his daughter, Annie Skinner. (W. H. Allen.)

SIR MONIER WILLIAMS, in the brief preface which he has contributed to this volume, remarks that the biography tells its own tale—that the living individual, exhaling British pluck and energy from every pore, seems to stand before us in sharply defined outline, a typical example of self-help and self-reliance.

All this is strictly true. Major Skinner, justly called the great engineer and road-maker of Ceylon, was born in Newfoundland in 1804. At the age of fourteen he obtained a commission in the Ceylon Regiment, and continued to serve in the island until his final retirement in 1867. Nothing can be more vivid than his account of his early military life and adventures. By the time he was eighteen he had "bagged" half a dozen elephants; but in those days they simply swarmed in Ceylon, and shooting of all sorts was first-rate. He was little more than eighteen when he fought a duel, and with all the experience of after-life he did not consider the abolition of duelling an unmixed gain. He remarks that the change of tone in the language and conduct of gentlemen towards each other has been very marked and certainly not improved by the abolition of the old code of honour. He suffered from the climate of Ceylon, and underwent much more from the system of the doctors. This is the way he was treated for a jungle fever:

"I got over my attack, but it was a marvel that I did. One morning my doctor bled me till there was scarcely a drop of blood left in my body; he then gave me forty grains of calomel, and in the evening—as the fever was still raging—he ordered me to be taken out to the yard of my quarters, laid on a bare rattan couch, and buckets of cold water thrown over me for about twenty minutes! I was then put back to bed, and fortunately fell asleep for several hours. After some weeks on the sick list, I was able to return to my post at Korne-galle."

It was early in his career that Major Skinner obtained an appointment on the roads, and he continued in that capacity till his retirement. When he was first appointed roads scarcely existed; indeed, a writer on Ceylon stated that, strictly speaking, there are no "roads in the island." The interior was then inaccessible, and parts actually unexplored. In the year 1832 he was ordered to open a road from Aripo, on the western coast, where the pearl fisheries were situated, to Anarajapora, about which so little was known that in the then latest maps the district was described as a mountainous unknown country. To the Major's astonishment, he found this mountainous country, when he succeeded in reaching it, thickly peopled, with magnificent tanks of colossal dimensions, and with evidence of having been at an earlier date the granary of the island. At the time of his finally leaving Ceylon there was a magnificent net-work of roads spread over the country from the sea-level to the passes of the highest mountains; and instead of dangerous fords and ferries, in which life was frequently sacrificed, every principal stream was substantially bridged. In short, under his superintendence nearly 3,000 miles of roads were made, one-fifth of which were of the first class, and another fifth of excellent gravelled highways. All this may be attributed to his energy and capacity, and we must add that he was very inadequately rewarded for all he did for the island. Not that he ever even hints at this; he was certainly one of those fine characters so common two generations ago, to whom it was sufficient satisfaction that they did their duty.

Major Skinner's account of the various governors of the island is very interesting, and with all he maintained the best relations. The one of all whom he regarded with the deepest affection was that fine old soldier, Sir Edward Barnes, ever on the watch to encourage and help youngsters in whom he saw a promise of good in the future. Napoleon's jailor and butt, Sir Hudson Lowe, held the office of commandant of Colombo,

"never," say our author, "was a character more maligned; a more kind, I may say tender-hearted man, I never met with. For a military commander it almost amounted to a fault, for it was with extreme difficulty we could get him to notice irregularities or to punish breaches of discipline. He was very hospitable and generous; kept an excellent table and first-rate cellar."

Sir Monier Williams, who visited Ceylon in 1877, shortly before Major Skinner's death, found his reputation still fragrant there. He was a man whose memory the government still delighted to honour; and in travelling he met many eminent natives, who delighted to speak of him as one of their greatest benefactors, and as an officer of unusual administrative ability, indomitable energy, and unblemished integrity of character.

"'It would be difficult,' he says, 'for any one to speak in exaggerated terms of the debt of obligation which the island owes to the man who is acknowledged by all to have been the first opener of its means of communication, and the earnest promoter of numerous important works, such as the improvement of irrigation and inland navigation, the encouragement of native talent, and the progress of education.'"

WM. WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

Fra Lippo Lippi. By Margaret Vere Farrington. (Putnam's.)

Esther Pentreath. By J. H. Pearce. (Fisher Unwin.)

Philosopher Dick. In 2 vols. By "Chamier." (Fisher Unwin.)

Bail Up. By Hume Nisbet. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Strange Wooing. By Charles Gibbon. (Ward & Downey.)

Scot Free. By C. G. Compton. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Who Poisoned Hetty Duncan? By Dick Donovan. (Chatto & Windus.)

Little Venice. By Grace Denis Litchfield. (Putnam's.)

OF all the artists of Italy there is none whose life appeals more to ordinary human sympathy than the blithe-spirited, impulsive Carmelite monk, the daring realist, Fra Lippo Lippi. Men like Fra Angelico, Raphael, Titian, and Lionardo seem so far above us all, not merely by their genius, but by their singular loftiness of life; while the very weaknesses of an Andrea del Sarto or a Filippo Lippi endear these painters to their fellow men, who realise that, genius apart, they are comrades indeed. Fra Lippo is among the most fortunate of his kin. He left, of course, his splendid achievement and his fruitful influence as a legacy to the country which claimed him as her son; but he has an immortality, also, in another and far wider world than that of Italy, in the art of words instead of that of line and colour, and in a language alien to his own. Probably of all Landor's "Imaginary Conversations" there is none more generally admired than that wherein the roguish friar of the Carmine tells the Pope of his experiences during his captivity in Barbary, an imaginary sketch in which something of the real Lippo Lippi is assuredly revealed. And among Browning's poems, again, it is doubtful if any is oftener re-read than that which tells of the daring successor to Masaccio, with his imperative claim for the body as well as the soul. After such distinguished predecessors, it was a rash undertaking for Mrs. Farrington to give us the story of Fra Lippo Lippi's life in the form of a romance. The obvious danger is a mere repetition of familiar facts and sayings, with (notwithstanding the different methods of treatment) an invitation to perilous comparisons. It is with pleasure, therefore, that the present writer, remembering Landor and Browning—to mention no others—admits that he has read Mrs. Farrington's sympathetic romance with keen appreciation from first to last. The book is charmingly written, and clearly by one who is familiar not only with the life and achievement of the great painter, but also with Florence, Prato, and all the lovely country of the Val d'Arno. The sketch of Filippo's boyhood is as vivid as it is succinct, though perhaps both there and in the later chapters the author has kept in the background the very potent "bodihood" of the celebrated Frate. The story how he came to paint Lucrezia Buti as the Madonna; how he loved and won the beautiful novice, and persuaded her to elope with him to Florence and become his wife; of his brief years of happiness and noble work; and of his tragic death, owing to the wrath of a revengeful Princess of the all-powerful Medicis, who had stooped to love him, ex-monk and mere painter as he was—all is told with a sympathy and grace which make the book really welcome. It is, moreover, handsomely bound and printed, and has the further attraction of fourteen photogravures, including a portrait of Fra Lippo himself.

It is a high compliment to Mr. Pearce's Cornish romance to say that it is almost worthy of being ranked with Mr. Baring Gould's Mehalah. In vigour of style, in sombre realism, in strange and picturesque detail, Mr. Pearce is not inferior to the older author with whom he has so much in common. Esther Pentreath, however, is not wrought in the same reserve and simplicity as Mehalah, and the final impression is not so singularly strong and clear. There is not enough relief in the gloom; or, rather, too many gloomy and terrible scenes and episodes are introduced one upon the other, till at last the reader revolts against what seems an almost mechanical display of the workings of an imaginary doom. Mrs. Margaret Woods has shown us, in A Village Tragedy, how a story may be charged with the most unrelieved and even sordid gloom, and yet be at once a fascinating and genuine work of art; but to this end one must deal simply with simple details. Towards the close of his story Mr. Pearce harrows the reader's imagination till it almost becomes dulled. Death and Terror and Tragedy are omnipresent; and powerful as is the end, in its mingled bitterness and pathos, it does not strike one—perhaps it would be fairer to say it does not impress the present writer—so profoundly as, artistically, it ought to do. But from first to last the book is characterised by unmistakable power. It is long since I have read anything so surcharged with the Celtic sentiment; and one of the secrets of the charm of Esther Pentreath is that the author is obviously not merely a dispassionate describer of life among the Cornish mines, but is himself under the spell in whose shadow every personage in his story moves. Nor is the romance quite without that humour which makes tragedy doubly poignant. The widow Betty and the old scoundrel of a veteran, John Wesley Bucket, are delightful. Mistress Betty, indeed, with her fantastic absurdities, her real ignorance and assumed airs, her anxiety lest at her age she “do maake un [i.e., her white-haired soldier-swain, now sobered to respectability by virtue of advanced years and his office of sexton] feel more shyer 'cause I happen to got curly heer, my dear?” and all her amusing ways, is a genuine creation. Mr. Pearce is a poet as well as a novelist; and, indeed, no one could read Esther Pentreath without realising this. The passion of the sea is upon him, as upon all Celtic natures: a passion quite distinct from the perhaps deeper love of the Englishman, who has towards the sea the attitude rather of a masterful lover than of an awed but entranced slave. The breath of nature blows through the book, and this is a delight in itself. If it be Mr. Pearce's first work in fiction, he may rest assured that he has found his métier.

Philosopher Dick is a provoking book. It is so bright in parts that its shortcomings are the more intolerable. The author—who, by the way, prefers anonymity, if one may judge from the absence of any name on the title-page, though “Chamier” appears on the back of the cover of each volume—knows up-country life in New Zealand thoroughly, and is able to give most vivid pictures of scenes and episodes familiar to all who have “followed mutton” in the Antipodes. If he had restricted himself to a story of incident he would have done better; the weak portions of the book are the ambitious flights of rhetoric and speculation. There is a good deal of what is intended for humour—characteristic, no doubt, but too often as uninteresting, and sometimes as coarse in innuendo, as “the everlasting sheep” themselves. One or two passages, indeed, are in extraordinarily bad taste, being introduced wholly unnecessarily, and, therefore, obtrusively. Then, the book is much too long. The greater part of the second volume is of that quality which might be spun out indefinitely without obvious weakening. The author, probably, could write some clever and entertaining sketches of shepherd-life in the form of short tales. Philosopher Dick simply proves that his philosophy is of a rather shallow kind, and that in “the novel” he has not found his true vocation. Nevertheless, there is much that is bright and interesting in the book. It has the great merit of verisimilitude; and though in his description of the particular and general details which make up the background of his tale, the author is often redundant and “lets himself go” too freely, he has clearly a keen eye for and a true love of nature. Occasionally the style improves so much that one is inclined to believe the story must have been written in sections, at long intervals; but, even in the more careful chapters, there are constant reminders of inexperience in literary craft.

Bail Up, which is another narrative of wild life at the Antipodes, is at once a much less ambitious, and a much more interesting, and, indeed, much better written story than Philosopher Dick. Mr. Hume Nisbet has already entertained many readers by his Land of the Hibiscus Blossom, A Colonial Tramp, and other pleasant records of travel and adventure; but in his latest book he has shown a faculty for plot and exciting narrative which makes one surprised he has not, before this, given us Australasian romances of the same kind. Bail Up is a story of up-country life in Queensland. Naturally the book is, as a genuine study of early colonial days, the more worth attention from the fact that the author not only revisited some four years ago the localities he describes so vividly, but a quarter of a century earlier himself participated in the vigorous, rough, exciting life of the then sparsely populated colony. Brisbane no longer has its unwelcome parasite, Paradise Plain; and one may ride the length of the Darling Downs and unmeasured leagues without the least danger of being “stuck-up” by bushrangers, or even molested by vagrant blacks; but, for the rest, up-country life is even now pretty much what it was five-and-twenty years ago. Mr. Hume Nisbet's description of the Fan-Tan dens of the Chinese quarter of Brisbane will be recognised not only by old Queenslanders, but also by those who, even in recent years, have visited the purlieus of Melbourne, Sydney, and San Francisco.

Poor John Chinaman comes in for so much abuse that it is pleasant to find him as a hero, however tarnished, in Mr. Nisbet's romance; for Wung-ti deserves that rarely abused title almost as much as any of his European companions in good and evil, trouble and misfortune, dire peril and suffering, and ultimate welfare. Bail Up is quite the best book of its kind—that has been published during the last year or two.

Posthumous novels have been quite the vogue of late. The late Charles Gibbon produced so much excellent fiction of a kind—not a very high kind, it is true, though as a delineator of Scottish life and character as it really is he had few rivals—that it is a matter of regret not to be able to say something more in praise of A Strange Wooing than that it is fairly interesting. The plot is commonplace, the working out of the leading motive is awkward, and the characterisation is at once feeble and conventional. A Colonel Quinton is the villain of the story; but, from the outset, he could impress only readers of the London Journal type—indeed, the unnecessarily elaborate lie indulged in by Quinton concerning the death of his friend, Sir Hubert Bevan, is in itself proof that Mr. Gibbon had never actually realised the shadowy conception of the chief personage in his tale. Skilful and shrewd man of the world as the would-be murderer is represented, his clumsy narrative and clumsier subterfuges cannot be accepted as credible. For the rest, A Strange Wooing is merely a weak following of the notable lead given by Mr. Clark Russell in his John Holdsworth, Chief Mate—though in the latter the reader is allured from scepticism by the skill and charm of the narrative, while in Mr. Gibbon's book Mr. Livingstone (the long lost Sir Hubert Bevan) is too unreal to win the reader's sympathies.

The author of Scot Free has spoilt a readable story, firstly, by the introduction of an altogether improbable method of removing one Robert Dixon from life—improbable, at least, in the circumstances described—and secondly, by making his heroine, Agnes, take on herself a life-long sorrow, simply on the strength of a letter from a semi-imbecile named George Crosby, who writes a terrible indictment of her husband, Austin Cartwright, as the murderer of Robert Dixon. Not only would such a letter by itself be valueless in a murder trial, but could scarce be credited even by the most suspicious sane person. As for Agnes Cartwright, it was her duty to have at once shown Crosby's letter to her husband, whom she had every reason to believe incapable of the crime. Robert Dixon is supposed to come to his death by means of nicotine-poisoning; Crosby, whose madness shows itself in an irresistible secret “shadowing” of certain people, sees, or believes he sees, Cartwright inject some of the poison into his victim's wrist as he lies unconscious in his arm-chair. Scot Free is one of that multitude of novels which would be infinitely better worth reading were they condensed into short tales. But literary economy is almost as rare as literary charity—and that, as we have been recently told, is becoming extinct!

Lovers of detective stories can always be sure of entertainment with Dick Donovan as the teller. His latest volume, which contains eleven short stories, does not perhaps show him quite at his best; but all the tales are interesting, and some are clever. It is unfortunate that the one which gives its name to the volume is the poorest of the set.

It is not often that a volume of short tales by a new writer is so welcome as Miss Grace Denis Litchfield's Little Venice, and other Stories. Miss Litchfield's name is new, on this side of the Atlantic at any rate; but each of her eight stories is good enough to win her as many readers here as each did on its first appearance in The Century, The Atlantic Monthly, or other American magazine. "Little Venice" itself, an idyl of the St. Clair Flats, is as perfect a short story as one could find in the magazines of either continent. The author has humour, pathos, a keen love for the unconventionally picturesque in nature, and an instinctive charm of style; so it is to be hoped she will give us more of such delectable literary fare.

WILLIAM SHARP.

GIFT BOOKS.

The Vicar of Wakefield. By Oliver Goldsmith. With a Preface by Austin Dobson, and Illustrations by Hugh Thomson (Macmillan). Every Christmas brings with it one or two books which the popular verdict quickly distinguishes among their thousand rivals as the most desirable of the year. Lewis Carroll, Mrs. Molesworth, Mrs. Ewing, Mr. R. L. Stevenson, Mr. Rider Haggard—to name only the foremost—have each in their turn deservedly won this pre-eminent place. More rarely the honours are taken by an artist, such as Ralph Caldecott, Kate Greenaway, and Mr. Linley Sambourne. The turn has now come to Mr. Hugh Thomson, who has set the seal to all his former efforts by associating his own name for the future with Goldsmith's immortal romance. In a preface, characteristically inspired by equal shares of learning and taste, Mr. Austin Dobson touches upon previous illustrated editions—English, German, and French—concluding with the remark that none has represented the lighter and the graver aspects of the story with the same success. To Mr. Hugh Thomson, no doubt, the humour appeals most strongly, as might be expected from the illustrator of Days with Sir Roger de Coverley. But though it is in humour that he is supreme—witness the inimitable head- and tail-pieces—he is only one degree less happy with his demure damsels, elegant swains, and chubby boys; nor has he failed in the pathetic. We shall not single out any drawing for special comment, since the common praise is due to all, that none is unworthy of its subject or of its fellows. Our only complaint is that the margin of the ordinary issue is inadequate; and it is small compensation to know that all the large-paper copies have already been bought up by the wise and prudent.

"THE ADVENTURE SERIES."—The Buccaneers and Marooners of America. Illustrated. Edited by Howard Pyle. (Fisher Unwin.) It is impossible to spoil altogether such a subject as the buccaneers of the Spanish main; but the editor has done his best. Admirable as an illustrator, and qualified also by some study of the period, Mr. Howard Pyle has yet to learn the rudiments of an editor's duties. In his introduction he succeeds in talking all round his subject in language that is lamentably slipshod, and in avoiding just the precise information we have a right to look for. He has even left it obscure how far he has faithfully reproduced his original authorities. We protest, also, against the use of the title "marooners" as applied to such pirates pur sang as Kid and Avery and Bartholomew Roberts. Of the contents of the book it is enough to say that they are taken from the English translation (1684) of John Esquemeling's De Americaensche Zee Roovers, with reproductions of some of the plates, and from Captain Charles Johnson's later Histories. We have here the raw materials upon which a thousand fictitious stories have been based; a chapter torn fresh from the book of actual life; realistic history, without the halo of romance; a narrative of sordid crime, marked by cowardice and treachery, and most often ending at the gallows.

Cutlass and Cudgel. By E. Manville Fenn. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Mr. Fenn does not display, in this story, quite the amount of ability exhibited in some of his other works—notably, Dick o' the Fens—with which it may be compared. But it is a good, lively story of—as, indeed, the title indicates—a protracted conflict between smugglers and their natural enemies, the men of a revenue cutter. The two sides in the fight are well represented by Archie Raystoke, a midshipmite, and the little imp Ram Shackle, the son of one of the smugglers, who, after a deal of plotting and counterplotting, and even engaging in single combat, figure in the end, after the accomplishment of Archie's special mission, as the best of friends. The narrative has no sentimental background to speak of. What there is is sufficiently well supplied by Celia, the daughter of Sir Risdon Graeme, a gentleman who is unfortunately in alliance with the smugglers. Possibly, if Cutlass and Cudgel had a sequel, Celia and Archie would figure in it as a very happy and pretty pair. As a stirring story of adventure, however, it can stand very well by itself.

By England's Aid: or, the Freeing of the Netherlands. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie.) Boys have already given their hearty approval to Mr. Henty for the historical and other tales which flow from his prolific pen. They are not likely to withhold it from the very substantial volume which he now offers them. He follows Mr. Clement Markham rather than Mr. Motley in his estimate of Sir Frances Vere, and with his usual skill and vigour recounts the adventures and vicissitudes which befell two English lads in the great struggle which destroyed the supremacy of Spain. The tale has a solid basis of fact, which boys will find useful and schoolmasters helpful.

Dumps and I. By Mrs. Parr. (Methuen.) Mrs. Parr is to be congratulated on having written another charming story for girls. There is both humour and pathos in the book. We have some capital descriptions of country life; and the sleepy old town of Mallett, with its straggling streets, its gabled houses, and butcher's shop, with an old elm-tree before its door, planted well by a curbstone and propped with a stout iron crutch, because Cromwell, they say, once sat under its shadow, is well portrayed. The crippled hero, "Dumps," is a delightful creation, and there is a boyish vigour in young "Sir Jasper" which makes a happy contrast. The story turns on the revenge of an old solicitor, who, wedded to a country belle in his youth, is resolved at her death to revenge himself on her relations that have disowned her. The plot is well worked out, and there is plenty of incident in the tale. There is a humorous touch in the figure of the dressmaker—"Miss Spratt, from London," who distils French idioms, and is not unworthy of Cranford. She takes her leave by saying—"Having a little independence put by, she thinks that with this fait accompli she will take her congé of the monde des modes."

Maggie in Mythica. By F. B. Doveton. (Sonnenschein.) It is impossible to avoid drawing a comparison between this pretty little book and our old friend, Alice in Wonderland. In subject and treatment the two stories resemble one another, and even in their illustrations each suggests the other. But as T. H. Wilson is to John Tenniel so is F. B. Doveton to Lewis Carroll. The Welsh Rabbit is a pale reflection of the Mock Turtle, and King Cole of Topsy Turvydom and his vixenish wife are inferior alike in humour and originality to the crowned heads of Wonderland. But Maggie, will, nevertheless, amuse young people, for the old theme never tires, and there are plenty of recesses in Fairyland still unexplored.

'Twixt School and College. By Gordon Stables, M.A. (Blackie.) The period of hobbledehoyhood is a troublesome one; but, if it could be employed as Dr. Stables suggests in this capital book, parents and guardians would have little cause for complaint. Most boys and many girls have an interest in natural history which only needs development, and the pleasure that comes from the study of the habits of animals is free from all objections. We are not sure that we can agree with Dr. Stables when he says:

"I have all my life had an idea that providence places pets in the hands of those who really love His creatures, rather than in the possession of people who neither care for nor understand them."

In our experience, the pet sometimes falls out of favour when a new object has attracted attention, and if discarded favourites could speak we should hear some sad tales of thoughtless neglect. The illustrations are excellent; and the book, with its useful hints on pet management, and its picture of students' life at Aberdeen, is sure to become popular.

Eastward Ho! A Story for Girls. By Emma Marshall. (Nisbet.) Mrs. Marshall's numerous youthful admirers are not likely to be disappointed by her new story, which has plenty of incident and is pleasantly told. The reference of the title is not to the eastern hemisphere, but to the East End of London; and the heroine of the tale is the grand-daughter of an earl and a prospective peeress in her own right, who is redeemed from selfishness, bad temper, and other naughty dispositions, by being brought into contact with the dwellers in the other half of the world. There are some improbabilities in the book, and when the earnest young man Dalrymple talks to Pauline "for her good," he becomes both preachy and priggish; but even in these respects Eastward Ho! compares favourably with many stories of its class.

Very Young, and Quite Another Story. By Jean Ingelow. (Longmans.) We should have the greatest pleasure in according a warm welcome to any work by a lady who has written such charming verses as Miss Ingelow, but it is difficult to say much in praise of Very Young and Quite Another Story. Very Young is poor enough, but Quite Another Story is, if possible, poorer still. There is indeed no story at all. There are a certain number of characters and incidents; but the characters are without individuality, and the incidents are not amusing. The book is a series of uninteresting scenes, unredeemed by any picturesqueness of description or briskness in the dialogue. The tale drags itself on from page to page in a desultory, disjointed manner, until it tardily, but nevertheless unexpectedly, ends in the marriage of Andrew Capper with Daisy Smith. The worst of it is that the reader has no satisfaction in this denouement, as he has never learnt throughout the whole 314 pages to care twopence about either Andrew or Daisy, or to suspect that they care twopence for one another.

The Rajah's Legacy. By David Ker. Illustrated by A. W. Cooper. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This happens to be the first book of Mr. David Ker's that we have read, though we are aware that he has attained a reputation by former stories for boys. Of this, we can only say that it seems to us a jumble of improbabilities, put together without art. As the title implies, the scene is laid in India; but we have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Ker's knowledge of that country is derived merely from books. He gives to a Sikh the name of Mahmud, and makes an Englishman turn Mahommedan in order to become heir to a Raja. Such things may be trifles; but they spoil the verisimilitude, especially when the author is always adding in a footnote, "This is a fact."

Holland and its People. By Edmondo de Amicis. Translated from the Italian by Caroline Tilton. (Putnam's.) Every country has produced of late years a book or books about Holland, and many of them have been translated into English. They are of two kinds. One, represented by Mr. Boughton, M. Havard, and others, gives us much of the writer's own thoughts and impressions of the country and the people, the other is more or less of the guide-book order. M. de Amicis's volume is something between the two, but gravitates towards the lower class. Personal notes are scarce; he went and saw what everyone goes to see, and his book is made up of gossip about the "sights," with "excursions" on the history and the works of art. It is all very pleasant, and the text is interspersed with pretty little pictures; but there is nothing very new or striking in it all—nor is this to be wondered at, since it was written several years ago.

Love and Justice. By Helen Shipton. (S.P.C.K.) This is an interesting story, with an unusually well worked-out plot. The account of the poor deformed tailor Martin, whose independent spirit feels bitterly the seeming injustice of his lot, and who finds in the end that his life is being ruled by Almighty Love, is told with much skill and pathos. The chief characters are all carefully drawn; and there are also many exciting incidents, such as an escape from a burning house, and a desperate struggle with a robber. We can recommend this book to all parish libraries.

Amina: A Tale of the Nestorians. By Edward L. Cutts. (S.P.C.K.) Mr. Cutts has apparently two objects in view in this short tale: firstly, to give his readers a glimpse of the customs and religious ideas of Persian Christians; and, secondly, to arouse sympathy with them in their ill-treatment by the Kurds and the Turkish government. Both these objects would be helped by a preface telling us to what extent the tale is actual fact. As fiction it has no special merits, and is scarcely worthy of Mr. Cutts's abilities. The facts are certainly interesting and curious, but we are left without any means of knowing whether they are true.

Claude and Claudius. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The authoress has not been happy in her selection of a subject. A foolish marriage, a misunderstanding between father and son, and a death-bed scene where some of the errors of the past are condoned—these are scarcely the ingredients wherewith to compose a suitable Christmas present for children. Nor do we think the style will prove attractive to young readers. For example:

"The Scotchman, brought up on the sour milk of rigid Calvinism, in throwing this overboard had thrown with it most other religious theories, and was calmly and professedly of the day and the world; the scholar and half-recluse was in his own way a man of firm, though rather mournful faith; neither objected to the other's views."

Do children want this sort of analysis?

Poor and Plain: a story for Elder Girls. By the author of "Dethroned," &c. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Although this tale begins and ends sadly, yet in the main it is pleasant reading and wholesome. Lucy Everard, an almost penniless orphan, and without even the dower of good looks, finds in the path of duty the path which leads to happiness. We think the book would have been all the better if its last chapter had been omitted.

Unlucky. By Caroline Austin. (Blackie.) This book justifies its ill-omened title. It is the dismal record of a spirited and unruly but well-meaning child, whose ill-qualities are fostered, while her good qualities are repressed, through the injudicious management of her step-mother. Though well-intentioned, and conveying an oft-needed lesson to parents and guardians, the book and its conclusion are alike dreary and repulsive.

The Baronets and their Brides. By the Rev. W. M. Cox. (Nisbet.) The author's aim has been, he tells us, to provide something "to instruct and persuade, as well as interest and amuse," the young who crave for "sensational novel reading." He contemplates a series of "unpretending productions of a somewhat similar kind." We cannot encourage him in his project. The subject of his book—an unhappy marriage between a vain, foolish woman and an unprincipled spendthrift—is as bad as his style. He tells us that the characters have been, for the most part, drawn from life: we can only add they are not life-like. Our advice to Mr. Cox is to eschew long words and stilted talk, and try to put before his readers in natural language things that are pure, honourable, and of good report.

True Stories from Italian History. Compiled by F. Bayford Harrison. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The bookbinder has here done his work better than the bookmaker. There is, indeed, plenty of information within the pretty covers of this volume, but it is conveyed in so dry a manner that few readers will find it palatable. Mr. Harrison's compilation is rather of materials than of stories. The latter, at any rate, suggest the addition of a little fancy and ornament.

Very Much in Earnest. By A. Lister. (S.P.C.K.) This is a short but touching story of a child brought up in religious disbelief by her father, but who becomes ultimately a sincere Christian. The tone of the book is religious, but wholly void of cant or bigotry.

Lucy Winter. By C. E. Reade. (S.P.C.K.) A simple but interesting narrative of the reformation of a heedless, gambling brother through the mediation of a loving sister. A slight sonnet of ritualism mars what would otherwise be a wholesomely religious book.

Mabel's Holiday. By E. M. and A. H. (S.P.C.K.) This is a story for young children, and full of interest even of a sensational kind. That its chief incident is improbable will probably not weigh much in the estimation of the young people for whom it is intended.

My Grandfather and His Parishioners. By P. M. W. (S.P.C.K.) Another child's book. It consists of a series of stories told by a grandmother of events which might have happened fifty years ago. Their common aim is to tell children how they may become good Christian heroes.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. E. R. WHARTON, sometime Ireland scholar and now fellow of Jesus College, has decided to offer himself for the deputy-professorship of comparative philology at Oxford, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Sayce. By his two books—Etyma Graeca (1882) and Etyma Latina (1890)—as well as by sundry papers read before the Philological Society, Mr. Wharton has proved himself to be perhaps the only Englishman whose name is recognised on the continent in his own special branch of study. We understand that the other candidates include Mr. S. Arthur Strong, of Cambridge, who has taken all orientalism as his province; and Dr. William Wright, the translator of Brugmann, who has been trained in the strictest school of Teutonic philology.

WE hear that the Royal Asiatic Society has now officially given its support to the committee formed for organising the ninth international congress of orientologists, to be held in London in 1892; and that Lord Northbrook (as president for the year) and Sir William W. Hunter (as a member of council) have joined this committee as vice-presidents. As there is some probability that the congress may visit Oxford, the names of the Master of Balliol and the Provost of Oriel also appear among the vice-presidents. The list of presidents of sections is now complete, as follows:—Aryan, Prof. Cowell; Semitic (a) Assyrian, Mr. Sayce; (b) General, Prof. Robertson Smith; China, Sir Thomas Wade; Egypt, Mr. Le Page Renouf; Australasia, Sir Arthur Gordon; Anthropology, Dr. E. B. Tylor. Of four hon. secretaries, we may mention Prof. R. K. Douglas, of the British Museum; and Prof. A. A. Macdonell, of Oxford.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN announce a volume by Mr. Goldwin Smith, to be entitled Canada and The Canadian Question.

MESSRS. LONGMAN have in the press a translation of the Abbé Fouard's Life of Christ, with a preface by Cardinal Manning.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will begin in January the publication of a new series, to be called "The Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour," under the editorship of Mr. Davenport Adams. The volumes are to appear at monthly intervals, the first being Essays in Little, by Mr. Andrew Lang; and the second, Sawn Off: a Tale of a Family Tree, by Mr. G. Manville Fenn. Each of these will be illustrated with a portrait of the author.

MR. FRANK KIDSON, following the example of the Rev. S. Baring Gould, has been collecting old ballads in the North of England and the border counties of Scotland. Nearly a hundred of these, which he believes to be hitherto unprinted, he proposes to publish, together with their appropriate words from broadsides or oral tradition. The work will be issued early in the new year, by Mr. George P. Johnston, of Edinburgh, under the title of Traditional Tunes.

THE two next volumes of the series of "Historic Towns"—to be published, we believe, simultaneously—will be York, by Canon Raine; and New York, by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt.

THE Rev. C. Halford Hawkins, chaplain and assistant master of Winchester College, has in the press a booklet entitled, Hints on the Art of Reading and Reciting, with illustrated examples—marked and annotated—from Shakspere, Milton, Byron, and Shelley. Messrs. Joseph Hughes and Co. will publish the work early in the new year.

MISS E. J. WHATELY will publish immediately, through Mr. Elliot Stock, a volume of essays on the Christian life, entitled Doers of the Word.

THE Handbook to the Public Records, which Mr. Scargill Bird, the superintendent of the search department, has been engaged for some years in compiling, is expected to be issued very shortly. The work is, in effect, an elaborate catalogue raisonné of the Public Records; and its publication will enable the uninitiated student to make use of that vast mine of legal and historical information which has hitherto been practically unworkable for want of an official guide.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, will publish at an early date Yorkshire Family Romance, by Mr. Frederick Ross.

THE forthcoming number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain articles—in addition to those already announced in the ACADEMY—on “Italy in Africa,” by Signor R. Bonghi; and on “The Anglo-Portuguese Question,” by one who is probably the highest living Portuguese authority. Persicus contributes a second article, dealing with the importance of road-making in Persia, in view of the Russian veto on railways, which will be illustrated with a map; while the Persian ambassador in England supplies a statement about the Muharram, which should set at rest the dispute about the propriety of introducing the Prophet Muhammad upon the stage, so far as the Shiah sect is concerned. There will also be some plain speaking about the persecution of Jews in Russia, and the visit of the Czarevitch to India.

MR. ROBERT RICHARDSON will contribute to the United Presbyterian Magazine, edited by Prof. Calderwood, a series of papers entitled “Everyday Essays.” The first, on “Sentiment,” will appear in the January number.

AMERICAN readers of the ACADEMY will be interested to know that the vestry of the parish of St. Sepulchre's, in the city of London, have voted a sum of £25 “for the purpose of forming the nucleus of a fund for restoring the tombstone of Captain John Smith, founder of Virginia.”

TO-DAY (Saturday) Prof. Dewar—Fullerian professor of chemistry at the Royal Institution, and Jacksonian professor of natural experimental philosophy at Cambridge—will begin a course of six Christmas lectures (adapted to a juvenile auditory) at the Royal Institution, at 3 p.m. His subject is “Frost and Fire.”

MR. J. G. COTTON MINCHIN, author of The Growth of Freedom in the Balkan Peninsula (John Murray, 1886), will deliver a lecture at the South Place Institute, on Sunday next, December 28, at 4 p.m., on “National Life and Thought in Roumania.” He has already treated, at the same place, of Servia and Bulgaria.

IN the ACADEMY of November 29 we noticed an edition of Macbeth, consisting of the text of the first folio, with the variants of the other three folios (Halle: Niemeyer.) We have since received, again from Germany, a still more valuable contribution to the study of Shakspeare. This is a parallel-text of Hamlet, based upon the first (1603) and second (1604) quartos and the first folio (1623). The editor is Prof. Wilhelm Viëtor, well known as the editor of Phonetische Studien; and the book is published by Elwert, of Marburg. For the two quartos Mr. Griggs's facsimiles have been used, and for the folio the reduced facsimile of Halliwell-Phillipps; but in the latter case certain corrections of obscure typography have been made from the original copy in the British Museum. The method adopted has been to print the text of the two quartos on opposite pages, with the corresponding text of the folio across the two pages below; while the numbers of acts, scenes, and lines of the Globe edition have been added in the margin.

Prof. Viëtor has interpreted an editor's duty so strictly as not to add a word about the many interesting questions that have been suggested as to the relation between the three texts. He is content to let the versions speak for themselves, referring the reader to the Cambridge editors and Mr. H. H. Furness. But even so, his book is one which no Shakspeare student can afford to be without.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

“BY THE WATERS OF BABYLON.”

O Winter tide, O Winter tide,
Thy coming brings us sadness;
Afar are those we hold most dear,
Here men are strange, and skies are drear;
O winter tide, O winter tide,
Thy days are days of sadness.

O merry bells, O merry bells,
That ring a Christmas greeting;
As through the air thy full notes peal,
What softer feelings o'er us steal:
O merry bells, O merry bells,
Ring out a Christmas greeting.

O fairy tide, O fairy tide,
Thy magic gives men gladness;
Though bleak the sky, though chill the wind,
If hearts be warm, if friends be kind,
O Christmas tide, O Christmas tide,
Thy magic gives us gladness.

T. M.

Göttingen.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BARRON, L. Les Fleuves de France: la Garonne. Paris: Renouard. 10 fr.
BRUNET, G. Études sur la reliure des livres et sur les collections de bibliophiles célèbres. Bordeaux: Moquet. 10 fr.
DELAUNAY, Albert. L'impôt. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 2 fr.
GALLIENI, Lieut.-Col. Deux campagnes au Soudan français. Paris: Hachette. 15 fr.
HEISS, A. Les médailliers de la Renaissance. T. 8. Florence et les Florentins. 1re partie. Paris: Rothschild. 200 fr.
HONGRIER, la, illustrée. Zurich: Füssli. 10 fr.
LE FAURE, G. Aventures de Sidi-Froussard. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
MATTHIJS, C. E. L'Alsace et les Alsaciens à travers les siècles. Paris: Jouvett. 15 fr.
WERNER, B. v. Deutsches Kriegsschiffleben u. Seefahrerkunst. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 9 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ARTAUD, A. Un armateur marseillais, Georges Roux. Paris: Champion. 8 fr. 50 c.
CUG, E. Les institutions juridiques des Romains. L'ancien droit. Paris: Plon. 10 fr.
DEBIDOUR, A. Histoire diplomatique de l'Europe (1815–1878). Paris: Alcan. 18 fr.
FOURNEL, V. L'Événement de Varennes. Paris: Champion. 10 fr.
GESCHICHTE der k. u. k. Kriegs-Marine. 2. Thl. Die k. k. österreich. Kriegs-Marine in dem Zeitraum von 1797 bis 1848. 1. Bd. Wien: Gerold. 8 M.
RISN, L. Histoire de l'insurrection de 1871 en Algérie. Alger: Jourdan. 15 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

- GIACOMINI, C. I cervelli dei microcefali. Turin: Loescher. 20 fr.
OLLÉ-LAFRÈRE, L. La philosophie et le temps présent. Paris: Belin. 3 fr. 50 c.
RESULTATE, wissenschaftliche, der v. N. M. Przewalski nach Central-Asien unternommenen Reisen. Zoologischer Thl. 1. Bd. Säugethiere. Bearb. v. E. Büchner. 4. Lfg. St. Petersburg: Eggers. 15 M.
ZIEHEN, St. Leitfaden der physiologischen Psychologie in 14 Vorlesungen. Jena: Fischer. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- LEHRBÜCHER d. Seminars f. orientalische Sprachen zu Berlin 1.–3. Bd. Berlin: Spemann. 43 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

“A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.”

Christ's College, Cambridge: Dec. 15, 1890.

I do not remember to have seen it pointed out, at any rate with sufficient clearness, that one of the chief characteristics of this play—the introduction of the fairy-king and queen into the plot, is really taken from Chaucer's Merchant's Tale (ed. Tyrwhitt, 10, 101). Pyramus and Thisbe are mentioned in the same, 10,002; and, more fully, in the Legend of Good Women. Every one knows that Theseus and Hippolyta were suggested by the Knight's Tale.

The point is that, in both works, a dispute between the fairy king and queen is settled by the aid of mortals. The dramatist has varied the incidents of the dispute with great skill.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MILTON AND VONDEL.

The Vicarage, Northolt, near Southall: Dec. 9, 1890.

The appearance, in Prof. Masson's new library edition of Milton's Poetical Works, of a somewhat lengthy excursus upon the question of Milton's acquaintance with the works of his Dutch contemporary Vondel, with special reference to my little work* upon the subject, leads me again to address to you a few words of personal explanation.

It would have been better, it seems to me, had Prof. Masson not devoted so many pages of his valuable Introduction to the discussion of a subject of relatively so little importance. In his enthusiasm, however, for the reputation of the great poet, the learned editor has really gone out of his way (1) to draw attention to a work whose existence had probably been well-nigh forgotten; (2) to attribute to its author views on the subject of Milton's indebtedness to Vondel which he certainly does not, and never did, hold.

I feel it therefore necessary once more emphatically to state that my object in writing the book in question was not to depreciate Milton, but to draw the attention of English students of literature to the merits of an unjustly neglected poet, and at the same time, by the comparison which I instituted between a series of contemporary poems dealing with precisely the same subjects, to give some account of the lives, modes of work, and literary characteristics of their authors. If in the advocacy of my thesis I may have been tempted at times to express myself too strongly, or to give the suspicion of suggesting that Milton deliberately purloined from Vondel, I fully and unreservedly withdraw any such imputation. At the same time, I remain quite convinced that the English poet was acquainted with and impressed by the Dutchman's writings, though I quite agree with Prof. Masson that, in a large number of the parallelisms of phrase and imagery which I have brought forward, the similarity is no doubt due, not to imitation, but to the fact that the poets were making use of common material, and that both alike had their minds saturated with Biblical and classical reminiscences. As, however, the publication of the several dramas of Vondel (“Lucifer,” “Adam in Ballingschap,” and “Samson”) in each case preceded the composition of the corresponding portions of Milton's works, it need excite no surprise that he should have read them (qui facit per alios, facit per se), and that their perusal should have left perceptible traces on his imagination.

In 1885 I was unaware of the existence of the following passage, in which a high authority on such a subject endorses by anticipation the views which I have since more fully presented and worked out. The poet Beddoes, in a review of Hayley's Life and Letters (Quarterly Review, vol. xxxi., March, 1825), thus wrote:

“An effect, which has hitherto not been noticed, was then produced by the Dutch poets. In their school Joshua Sylvester (who had lived amongst them) learnt some of the peculiarities of his versification; and if Milton was incited by the perusal of any poem upon the same subject to compose his ‘Paradise Lost,’ it was by studying the 'Lucifer' and 'Adam in Ballingschap' of Vondel; for he tried his strength with the same great poet in the Samson Agonistes, Vondel being indeed the only contemporary with whom he would not have felt it a degradation to vie."

* Milton and Vondel: a Curiosity of Literature. (Trübner. 1885.)

GEORGE EDMUNDSON.

NORFOLK MANOR COURT ROLLS (THE BARWICK MSS.).

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Nov. 14, 1890.

The subjoined entries, extracted from the Stanhoe manor court rolls (in continuation of those given in my former letter, ACADEMY, November 15), furnish interesting details as to the tenure of land, and payment of rent (often in kind), fines (on taking possession), penalties, &c.

Thirty-one acres on a seven years' lease, at a yearly rental of sixteen shillings:

[4 Hen. IV.] "Domini concesserunt et ad firmam dimiserunt xxxi acras terre in Brunham Thorp [Burnham Thorpe, the birthplace of Nelson] Johanni Sewale de Thorp ad terminum septem annorum, termino incipiente ad festum sancti Michaelis Archangeli ultimum preteritum ante datum hujus curie, reddendi inde dominis per annum xvi s. ad festum sancte Fidis Virginis proximum futurum pro omni servicio et consuetudine."

A close and croft and five and a half roods of land on a seven years' lease at a yearly rental of one quarter and two and a half bushels of barley:

[4 Hen. IV.] "Domini concesserunt et ad firmam dimiserunt Bartholomeo Colle unam inclosurem vocatam Margeryesherde, cum crofto et tribus rodīs et dimidia ad finem dicti crofti et dimidiam acram jacentem apud Barkerscroftesende, tenendas sibi et attornatis suis ad terminum vij annorum, termino incipiente ad festum sancti Michaelis Archangeli ultimum preteritum ante datum hujus curie reddenda inde dominis per annum j quarteria et ij buscelli ordeī ad festum sancti Martini in yeme [i.e. Nov. 11, the feast of St. Martin Hymalis, as distinguished from that of St. Martin Bulliens, which was in June] proximum futurum pro omni servicio et consuetudine."

A fine of 3s. 4d. on taking possession of a messuage and three acres of land:

[4 Hen. IV.] "Galfridus Mundes capellanus et Johannes de Creyke de Stanhowe presentes in curia sursum reddiderunt in manus domini unum mesuagium de tenemento Skaneynes et Pynnokkes, et duas acras et unam rodā de tenemento Potters in diversis peciis in campo de Stanhowe, et dimidiam acram terre apud Losedele, et unam rodā terre native in Northcrofte de tenemento Pynnokkes, ad opus Galfridi Irenhard de Walpole et Cecclie uxoris ejus et heredum suorum, &c. Quibus liberata est inde seisinā, &c. tenenda ad voluntatem domini per servicia et consuetudines, &c. Salvo jure cujuslibet, &c. Et dant de fine iij s. iij d. et fecerunt fidelitatem."

A penalty of 2d. for non-attendance at court:

[5 Hen. IV.] "Jurati de Thorp presentant quod Radulfus Skot et Johannes Sewale faciunt defaultum secte curie [mercia iij d.]"

John Webster is fined 6d. for making forcible recovery of four horses and a cart seized for arrears of service and rent, and 6d. for the same offence after they had been impounded on the land of the lord of the manor:

"[5 Hen. IV.] "Jurati ex officio curie de Stanhowe presentant quod Johannes Webster fecit rescusum supra Johannem Wrokkels de iijor equis et una caretta arestatīs pro redditu et servicio a retro [mercia vi d.]"

"Et quod idem Johannes fecit rescusum supra Nicholaum Sowter de predictis iijor equis et caretta captis supra feodum domini [mercia vi d.]"

Richard Wright is fined 4d. for lopping an ash:

[5 Hen. IV.] "Et quod Ricardus Wryght amputavit unam fraxinum supra bondagium domini [mercia iij d.]"

This unlicensed felling and appropriation of timber was a frequent offence on the part of tenants. Records of it continually occur throughout the rolls. The penalty was usually a fine:

[1 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Gregorius Deynys fecit stripamentum ["clearing"] et vastum in succidendo diversas elmys [sic] et unam fraxinum, crescentes supra inclusum vocatum Esthallyclose, ideo ipse in mercia iij d."

[3 Hen. VIII.] "Quod Thomas Plyer fecit vastum supra tenementum suum quod est de bondagio domini in succidendo fraxinum et diversas elmes [sic], nec non reparavit tenementum suum predictum, ideo ipse in mercia xij d et preest sibi illud tenementum sufficienter reparare citra proximam curiam sub pena incumbenti, &c."

In other cases (at a later date) forfeiture of holdings:

[1 James I.] "Quod Robertus Davy commisit vastum succidendo supra curtelagium mesuagii sui nati nuper Smithes in Stanho unam ulmum existentem meremium ["building-timber"] et ulmum illam ad usum et commodum suum proprium et non ad reparacionem domorum mesuagii illius convertit, ideo preest balivo mesuagium illud ac omnes alias terras quas tenet per copiam rotuli curie de manerio isto et habuit in una eademque concessione cum mesuagio illo seisire in manus domini et inde respondere domino de exitibus ["returns"]."

Or a writ of ejectment:

[1 James I.] "Quod Johannes Oughton commisit grave vastum supra curtelagium mesuagii nuper in tenura ejusdem Johannis, modo seisitum in manus domini in Stanho, succidendo diversas grossas arbores scilicet ulmos et eradicando diversos pomos (anglice Apple trees) supra eosdem [sic] nuper crescentes, ideo persequatur breve domini regis versus eum pro trusone illius."

Payment of rent in kind was a common practice. In 5 Hen. IV. Richard Wright for two acres of land pays "iij skeppes [sic] ordeī in iij<sup>bus</sup> annis et dimidiam quarteriam ordeī in tercio anno." In the same year Edmund Wright pays three bushels of barley for an acre and half a rood of land; and William Davy pays two bushels of barley for one acre. In 11 Eliz. Laurence Asheworth pays 13s. 6d. and two capons and two hens annually for thirteen and a half acres of land—the value of the fowls we get from an entry in the manor accounts, where (in 8 Hen. VIII.) twelve hens and one cock are priced at 2s. 2d., later on at 2s. In one instance payment is required of "xiiij" and half an henne!"

In cases of trespass and damage done by straying animals money penalties were imposed:

[25 Hen. VI.] "Jurati presentant quod Thomas Clerk conculcat bladum et herbagium domini cum averiis suis ["farm-cattle"] et cum aucis suis, et continuavit per totum annum, ideo ipse in mercia iij s iij d."

[28 Hen. VIII.] "Et quod Thomas Smyth pastor Ricardi Cotter introduxit gregem in campum de Stannowe in tempore nocturno ad grave dampnum tenementum domini, ideo in mercia vi d. Et preest ei ne amplius sic agere sub pena xv d."

[30 Hen. VIII.] "Et quod Robertus Wightman et Edmundes Julian introduxerunt [sic] cum equis suis in campum de Stannowe in sepeciali pastura domini vocata Longemere et ibidem pasturant et custodiunt dictos equos ubi nullo modo sic facere debent ad grave dampnum domini, ideo in mercia xij d et preest illis ne amplius sic facere sub pena cujuslibet eorum xij d."

[31 Hen. VIII.] "Et quod Thomas Fyshpole fecit injustam viam cum quadriga sua ["waggon"] trans-versus terras tenentium domini erga portam suam ad nocumentum usque Newportefelde, ideo in mercia iij d, et preest ei ne amplius sic facere sub pena xij d."

* The fines in these instances are registered on the margin of the roll.

[32 Hen. VIII.] "Et quod Rogerus Houghton fecit injustam viam cum biga sua ["tumbrel"] a puteo calceo ["chalk-pit"] transversus terras tenentium domini hujus manerii ad nocumentum ubi nullo modo sic facere debet, ideo in mercia iij d, et preest ei ne amplius sic facere sub pena xij d."

[11 Eliz.] "Et quod Johannes Smyth senior permisit porcellos suos vagare ad largum inanulatos ["unringed"] in subvertendum solum domini hujus manerii in tenura Johannis Neweman ad grave dampnum, etc., ideo ipse in mercia iij d, et preest ei ne amplius sic agere sub pena xij d, etc."

[23 Eliz.] "Et quod Henricus Whitacre contra consuetudinem hujus ville custodivit quandam equam et illam ad largum in communibus campis hujus ville ire permisit ad grave perturbacionem et dampnum equorum diversorum tenentium domini ibidem depascentium, ideo ipse in mercia xij d."

Occasional instances occur of the exercise of the jus weyvi, the claim over waifs, on the part of the lord of the manor. In one case the bona weyviata is a dish, value 5d., abandoned in his flight by a thief:—

[22 Hen. VI.] "Jurati presentant quod quidam latro ignotus pro diversis felonis fugam fecit extra dominium, et habuit infra dominium quandam parvam patellam, pretii v d., quequidem patella seisata fuit in manus domini et liberata est balivo salve custodienda, etc."

In another it is a coulter, value 1s.:

[10 Charles I.] "Et quod quedam pecia ferri vocata a coulter pretii 1<sup>s</sup> inventa fuit infra dominium istud ut bona weyviata, ideo preest balivo inde domino respondere."

The introduction of English words in the midst of the Latin, as in this last entry, is somewhat curious. In the earlier rolls they are used at times apparently as substitutes for Latin—e.g., we have had "skeppes" and "elmys"; later on they occur as explanatory of the Latin—e.g., in 41 Eliz. Henry Smith is fined 3s. 4d., "quod ipse non reparavit muros domorum suarum porcinarum ac domorum suarum gallinaciarum (anglice of his swyne cotes and henne houses)." Again in 15 James I. John Asheworth is dispossessed of his holdings for persistently neglecting to keep in repair "quedam domus pro braceo faciendo (anglice the malthehouse)."

Considerable local interest attaches to many of the entries on account of the minute topographical details given in describing the boundaries of the various pieces of land leased or surrendered. From these particulars it would be quite possible to construct a plan, for instance, of the old town (as it is always styled) of Stanhoe, which in those days must have been a considerable place, with its Petergate (to the south), Petergate-street, Docking-gate (to the west), Eastgate, Newport, Newport-street, Northgate, Northgate-street, and so on.

Like many another old Norfolk town, Stanhoe, together with its neighbours the two Barwicks, Barmer, Docking, the three Birchams, the two Creakes, and the seven Burnhams, has dwindled into an insignificant village, with a few hundred inhabitants, its church alone now testifying to its former importance.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

HOMER AND ODYSSEUS.

Athenaeum Club: Dec. 18, 1890.

Can you spare me a little space in favour of two friends who are not here to defend their own reputations? Homer is accused of nodding, and Ulysses of being far from as wide awake as he should be to merit his reputation.

In the ACADEMY of Nov. 8, above the signature Isaac Taylor, I read:

"While in the Iliad he [Ulysses] is a wise and sagacious prince, in the Odyssey he is sometimes Quixotic in the extreme. Witness his conduct in the case of Polyphemus."

In the ACADEMY of Dec. 13, Mr. A. Lang comes to the rescue of Homer on terms which the poet would not have accepted—offering to help a dog who is not lame over a style that is non-existent—but he gives up the case of Ulysses as hopeless.

"In his recent work Mr. Gladstone has defended the unity of the character [that of Ulysses] in the two epics. His view has been impugned partly because of Odysseus's hiv-brained [sic] adventure with the Cyclops. His conduct was out of character, indeed; but the whole plot of the Odyssey turns on it. . . . The poet who composed the Odyssey as we possess it built it all up to and from that point; so if he makes Odysseus inconsistent, it is with his eyes open and knowingly. The inconsistency, such as it is, is not accidental, the result of dovetailing—it is essential."

If this means anything, it is that the contriver of this marvellous story was not clever enough to combine his plot without committing the character on which its chief interest depends to a gross inconsistency in the incident which is the turning point of the whole.

But "verify your references." Then it will be seen that Ulysses landing on the shore of the Cyclops did not know where he was, and for anything that appears did not know of the existence of such a being as this one-eyed mountainous monster. His excursion of discovery with a single ship was quite in harmony with that spirit of adventure which belongs to him throughout. He went to see what men were to be found—"their way of life and their genius"—so to translate the opening words of the poem. At most, he surmised (δοῖσιν) that he might encounter an uncivilised man; and accordingly he provided himself with the very reliable means of conciliation—a magnum of that wonderful wine, of such bouquet and body, which he had received from the clergyman at Ismarus from a store reserved for his own and his wife's private consumption. When his less enterprising crew want him to return to the ship, it is not from fear of the Cyclops whom they have not seen and know nothing of, but for the sake of lifting some cattle. When the monster does appear, all are unluckily within the cave, and so when he lights a fire they are seen and caught.

The late Col. Mure, with whom I had the pleasure generally of being in full sympathy on Homeric questions, made the same mistake as these critics. How pertinent was his phrase, which, I may say, he pointed out to me that I had borrowed from him (quite unconsciously) "The Iliad post-supposes the Odyssey quite as distinctly as the Odyssey pre-supposes the Iliad."

W. WATKISS LLOYD.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Dec. 28, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Roumania," by Mr. J. G. C. Minchin.
 MONDAY, Dec. 29, 4 p.m. London Institution: Christmas Course for Juveniles, "Rain and Fog," I., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
 TUESDAY, Dec. 30, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Frost and Fire," adapted to a Juvenile Auditory, II., by Prof. Dewar.
 WEDNESDAY, Dec. 31, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Frost and Fire," adapted to a Juvenile Auditory, III., by Prof. Dewar.
 THURSDAY, Dec. 1, 4 p.m. London Institution: Christmas Course for Juveniles, "Rain and Fog," II., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
 THURSDAY, Jan. 1, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Frost and Fire," adapted to a Juvenile Auditory, IV., by Prof. Dewar.
 FRIDAY, Jan. 2, 4 p.m. London Institution: Christmas Course for Juveniles, "Rain and Fog," III., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
 SATURDAY, Jan. 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Frost and Fire," adapted to a Juvenile Auditory, V., by Prof. Dewar.

SCIENCE.

THE EARLY CIVILISATION OF ARABIA.

Skizze der Geschichte Arabiens. Part I. By Ed. Glaser. (Munich: Straub.)

Skizze der Geschichte und Geographie Arabiens. Vol. II. By the same. (Berlin: Weidmann.)

THE first of these works has fallen like a shell into the circle of orientalist. Hitherto we have been accustomed to regard Arabia before the time of Mohammed as a land of darkness and barbarism, lit up perhaps about the age of Augustus by the rise of one or two cultured kingdoms of small extent in the extreme South and of the kingdom of the Nabatheans in the North. That Arabia had been the seat of powerful and cultivated nations, whose authority had extended over the greater part of the peninsula centuries before the Christian era, had not been dreamed of by the wildest imagination. Such, however, it seems, we must now admit to have been the case.

Dr. Glaser has devoted himself to the exploration of Southern Arabia. He has discovered there a large number of inscriptions, and has corrected or completed many others which had been previously copied. With the help of this new epigraphic material, and a thorough knowledge of the country and its historians, he has succeeded in throwing an unexpected flood of light on the early fortunes of the Arabian peninsula. He has been assisted in his work by the brilliant learning of Prof. Hommel, and has been further able to call to his aid the inscriptions copied by Doughty, Huber, and Euting in the neighbourhood of Teima in the North, and deciphered by Prof. D. H. Müller. The inscriptions of Southern and Northern Arabia confirm and supplement one another.

The most important part of Dr. Glaser's work is that in which he seeks to prove that the Minaean kingdom preceded that of the Sabaeans. His arguments are numerous and powerful, and it is difficult to find an answer to them. Not only in the classical writers, but even in the Old Testament, the Minaean kingdom is forgotten and extinct. We may hear of Minaean tribes, but the cultured state which had its capital at Ma'in has been superseded by Saba or Sheba. The same is the case if we turn to the Assyrian monuments. Here, too, we are told of a king of Saba who came into contact in Northern Arabia with the Assyrian rulers in the eighth century before our era; of kings of Ma'in they know nothing. The old belief that the Minaean and Sabaeans kingdoms flourished contemporaneously must be given up in face of the evidence which Dr. Glaser brings against it. Geographically it is impossible. The cities of Saba were embedded, as it were, within Minaean territory, and the northern extension of the two kingdoms was one and the same.

The conclusion which follows from the fact that the kingdom of Saba was preceded by the kingdom of Ma'in is sufficiently startling. On the one hand, kings of Saba were already in existence in the time of Tiglath-pileser and Sargon, while a queen of Sheba visited the court of Solomon; on the other hand, the inscriptions have already made us acquainted with the names of thirty-three Minaean princes, three of whom are mentioned in the inscriptions of the North. Moreover, as Dr. Glaser shows, the kings of Saba were the successors of the Makarib or "Priests" of Saba, just as the kings of Assyria were the successors of the priests of Assur. We must, indeed, go far back in history in order to discover the period when the kingdom of Ma'in waned and the kingdom of Saba arose.

Great, therefore, must be the antiquity of writing in the peninsula of Arabia. Prof. Hommel believes that he has found a reference to the age of the Hyksos in an inscription copied in Southern Arabia by Halévy, the historical importance of which was first noted by Dr. Glaser. The authors of the inscription were governors of Ashur and Tsar, in which Prof. Hommel finds the Asshurim of Gen. xxv. 3., and the fortress Tsar which dominated the western frontier of Egypt. They had erected the inscription in gratitude for their deliverance from peril at a time when war had broken out between Egypt and Madhi, as well as when the kings of "the North" and of "the South" were engaged in hostilities with one another.

If the early use of writing in Arabia can be maintained, it will be necessary to modify very considerably the prevalent views as to the origin and history of the alphabet. Canon Isaac Taylor had already been led by palaeographical reasons to assign a much earlier date to the alphabet of Southern Arabia than that previously allowed to it. If Dr. Glaser's conclusions, which are accepted by Hommel and Halévy, can stand the test of future research, it will no longer be possible to speak of the Phœnician alphabet as the mother of the alphabets of the world. The Phœnician alphabet will itself have been derived from one of the alphabets of Arabia.

There is much to be said for such a view. It will explain the puzzling fact that the oldest Phœnician text presents us with the alphabet already in an advanced stage of development. It will also explain the names given to several of the letters. P, "the mouth," for example, bears no resemblance to the mouth in its Phœnician form; the Arabian form, on the contrary, is an oval. Finally, we shall understand why it is that certain sounds belonging to the Semitic Parent-Speech, but lost in Phœnician, are accordingly not represented by symbols in the Phœnician alphabet; whereas the alphabets of Arabia, where the sounds in question were preserved, express them by special symbols which cannot, for the most part, be derived from any of the other symbols of the alphabet.

Quite as interesting as the light thrown on the antiquity of Arabian civilisation is the light thrown by Dr. Glaser's researches on the influence of Judaism in Arabia in the centuries preceding Mohammed. Princes and peoples were converted to the Jewish faith, and Jewish doctrines were taught and accepted in what were afterwards the sacred cities of Islam. The bearing of this fact on the origin of Mohammedanism and the interpretation of the Qorân may be easily imagined. The relation of Islam to Judaism assumes for us a wholly new aspect.

Of Dr. Glaser's Skizze der Geschichte und Geographie Arabiens only the second volume has as yet appeared. The first volume, which will deal with the history and antiquities of the country, is still in the press. The second volume is devoted to geography, and a very bulky and learned volume it is. The ancient authors have been ransacked for geographical details relating to Arabia, and the places and tribes mentioned by them have been identified by Dr. Glaser with great ingenuity, if not always convincingly. I cannot agree, for instance, with much that he has to say on the geography of Arabia according to the Assyrian inscriptions. Biblical scholars will turn with special interest to his examination of the site of Ophir. That this lay on the shores of the Persian Gulf seems scarcely doubtful. It was the entrepôt of the wares of the East rather than the source from which they actually came.

What Dr. Glaser has already published is so important and so novel that we await with impatience the volume in which Arabian history is dealt with in all its details. Above all, it may be hoped that the publication of the texts upon which the reconstruction of that history is largely built will not long be delayed. Dr. Glaser has discovered more than a thousand inscriptions which have never been copied before. The decipherment of them is like the exploration of a new world.

A. H. SAYCE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A COMMITTEE has been formed among fellows of the Royal Society to obtain a portrait of Sir Gabriel Stokes, on his retirement from the presidency, as an expression of their appreciation of his services for thirty-six consecutive years, as one of the secretaries or as president.

DR. C. LE NEVE FOSTER, inspector of mines, has been appointed professor of mining in the Royal College of Science, with which the Royal School of Mines is now incorporated.

MESSRS. TAYLOR & FRANCIS have just issued, on behalf of the Indian Government, a new volume of The Fauna of British India. It is a second volume of Birds, somewhat smaller in size than the first, both edited by Mr. Eugene W. Oates. It completes the order of Passeres, which are represented by 936 species, or about five-ninths of all the species of birds found in India (including Ceylon and Burma). The families here described are the Muscicapidae (flycatchers), Turdidae (chats, robins, thrushes, dippers, and accentors), Ploceidae (weaver-birds and munias), Fringillidae (finches), Hirundinidae (swallows), Motacillidae (wag-tails and pipits), Alaudidae (larks), Nectariniidae (sun-birds), Dicaeidae (flower-peckers), and Pittidae. As before, the work is illustrated with some admirable woodcuts, showing specific differences of bill, tail, and claw, and (in a few cases) the bird in its habitat. Ornithologists will hear with regret that Mr. Oates's return to his duties in India will prevent him from completing the work which he has so excellently begun, and (we fear) also from writing the discussion of the classification of Aves which he had promised for the concluding volume. Meanwhile, Mr. W. T. Blanford, the general editor of the series, has undertaken to treat the remaining orders of Birds, which will form a third volume of extra size. Upon this he will set to work as soon as he has finished his own proper task; the second half of the volume containing Mammalia, which he promises to have ready early in 1891.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Dec. 3.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—A paper, by Mr. William Poel, on "The Stage-Version of 'Romeo and Juliet,'" was read. Mr. Poel pointed out that Shakspeare was evidently acquainted with Arthur Brooke's poem, the "Tragicall Historie of Romeus and Juliet," published in 1562, and with William Painter's story in his collection of novels, published in 1567 as The Palace of Pleasure, but that he writes a prologue to his play that contains an important modification in the argument. Why Shakspeare thought fit to choose a different motive for his tragedy to the one shown in the poem and the novel we shall never know. He may have found the hatred of the two houses accentuated in an older play on this subject, and his unerring dramatic instinct would prompt him to use the parent's strife as a lurid background on which to portray with greater vividness the "fearful passage" of the "star-crossed lovers"; or the modification may have been due to Shakspeare's reflections upon the political and religious strife of his day, or to his irritation at Brooke's short-sightedness in upholding as more deserving of censure the passion of improvident love than the evil of ready-made hatred. The characters in Shakspeare's play may be divided into three groups—those who belong to the house of Capulet, the house of Montague, and those who, as partisans of neither of the houses, we may call the neutrals. The play opens with a renewal of hostilities between the two "houses," which serves not only as a striking opening, but brings on to the stage, without unnecessary delay, many of the chief actors. In less than thirty lines we are introduced to seven persons, all of whom indicate their character by the attitude they assume towards the quarrel. We are also shown the citizens hastily arranging themselves to part the two houses, and hear for the first time their ominous shout, "Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!" It is heard on two subsequent occasions during the play, and is the death-knell of the lovers. A scene follows to prepare us for Romeo's entrance, Shakspeare having wisely kept him out of the quarrel that the audience may see him indifferent to every other passion but the one of love. Romeo, until he was shot well with Cupid's arrow, seems to have been a sociable being; for in the third act of the play Mercutio thus taunts him: "Why, is this not better now than groaning for love? Now thou art sociable, now thou art Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature." We hear of Juliet for the first time in the second scene of the play, where we are shown Paris, no less a person than the Prince's kinsman, as a suitor for her hand. In the next scene we are introduced to the heroine herself and to her nurse, the chief comic character of the play, brought in no doubt to supply "those unsavoury morsels of unseemly sentences, which doth so content the hungry humours of the rude multitude." In Scene IV. Mercutio is brought on to the stage; a character that figures in many Elizabethan plays, and in the theatrical parlance of Shakspeare's time was known as "the horrible fierce soldier," but the part had never received such brilliant treatment till Shakspeare took it in hand. Our stage Juliets, for some unaccountable reason, go through their billing and cooing in the so-called "balcony scene" as deliberately as they do their toilets; never for a moment thinking that the place is death to Romeo, and that "love's sweet bait must be stolen from fearful hooks." In Shakspeare's time this scene was acted in broad daylight, and the dramatist is careful to stimulate the imagination of his audience with appropriate imagery. The word "night" occurs ten times, and the actor would no doubt be instructed to give a special emphasis to the word. There are, besides, several allusions to the moon and the stars, including that descriptive couplet:

"Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops."

When Shakspeare can give us in words so vivid a picture of a moonlight night, Ben Jonson could well afford to have a fling at Inigo Jones's mechanical scenery, and say:

"What poesy e'er was painted on a wall?"

The scene in which Romeo and Juliet meet at the friar's cell, and are married, ends on the modern stage the second act. But to drop the curtain here interrupts the dramatic movement just as it is making to a climax—the death of Tybalt and the banishment of Romeo. The unforeseen complication arising out of Tybalt's death places Friar Laurence in a position of great difficulty and danger. The feud between the "houses" is now at its height, and he is directly responsible for the clandestine marriage. Our actors are apt to overlook this fact; but it is not only undramatic, but inconsistent with the text, to make the friar appear indifferent to his own tragic position. Juliet's death is carried out with the greatest simplicity, and within a few moments of her awakening. There is neither time for reflection nor lamentation. The watch has been roused, and is heard approaching. She has hardly kissed the poison from her dead husband's lips before the men enter the churchyard; and nothing but the darkness of the night screens from them the sight of the steel that Juliet plunges into her breast. It is the presence of the watch almost within touch of her that goads her to lift the knife; as it is the vision of Tybalt's ghost pursuing Romeo that nerves her to drink the potion. The dramatist's intention is clearly indicated in the stage-directions of the two quartos and the folio. Mr. Poel concluded his paper by remarking that this last scene is full of animation, and presents a fine opportunity for the Régisseur. The crowd seen hurrying with "bated breath" to the spot; their horror at sight of the dead children, whom they believe to be murdered; their surprise at learning they are man and wife; the bowed grief and shame of Capulet and Montague; the Prince's stern rebuke; the reconciliation of the bereaved parents, and joining of hands across the dead bodies. Indeed, no stage-version of "Romeo and Juliet" can be consistent with the author's conception that does not give prominence to the hatred of the two "houses," and retain intact the three "crowd scenes"; the one at the opening of the play, the second in the middle, and the third at the end. To represent only the love-episode is to make that episode far less tragic, and therefore less dramatic.—A discussion followed, in which the chairman, Mr. James Ernest Baker, Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. Frank Payne, Mr. F. W. Hunt, and other members of the society took part.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, Dec. 5.)

HENRY BRADLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. G. L. Larkins on "The Scansion of Heroic Verse." He began by stating that he should consider this particular metre solely with reference to its number of syllables, eschewing such terms as "foot" and "iambic" as implying divisions both arbitrary and misleading. The theory entertained by very few—that it originated in old English rhythms based on old French models—rested on very shadowy foundations, unsupported by positive evidence. Its sole founder was Chaucer, who adopted an accentual basis, and established the characteristics which have never been departed from since his time. Then the question arose, whence did he derive it? Entering closely into contemporaneous influence, we find that Provençal verse died out in the thirteenth century, and was effete and obsolete in his time; and the same was true of romances in the Langue d'Oïl. The long war, accompanied with famine and pestilence, was disastrous to poetry in France during the fourteenth century, and Froissart was the only name of note that emerged. His rhythm had so many of the modern French regulations that we were compelled to acknowledge that, like the latter, it was devoid of stress. This latter feature was established by citing the dicta of the most eminent French metricians, and the writer utterly rejected the theory that English heroic had any affinity with the décasyllabe. Its sole origin was the Italian endecasillabo. Passing under review the known facts of Chaucer's intercourse with Italy, and the internal evidence furnished by the "Canterbury Tales"—of which several striking passages were cited—ample proof was given for this assertion. Next, the Italian heroic was closely examined; and, leaving out of question synaeresis and synaloepha (of which, however, Milton supplied examples), its laws were found to be identical with the English one. For this the chief Italian poets—as well as Byron, Chaucer, and Browning—were laid under contribution. These laws are: a final accent on the tenth syllable, together with a predominant accent on the fourth or sixth and very rarely the eighth. Immediately following the two first we find either a masculine, a feminine, or a dactylic caesura. The dignified taste of the Italian heroic did not generally permit the latter after the fourth, although it was freely found in Dryden and Pope. By way of exception, however, a sonnet by Parini was referred to. The accents on the sixth or eighth following the predominant may be present or not, which bestows great variety on the rhythm, and the seventh and ninth are not counted. Likewise those on the syllables preceding the predominant, which form an anacrusis or prelude thereto, are not reckoned. While rendering a just tribute to the industry and research displayed in Dr. Schipper's Englische Metrik, too much weight is given therein to caesural influence, to the neglect of accent. The caesura is not so inconstant as the learned author represented it to be, but obeyed the fixed laws of the predominant, and is found only in certain places of the verse. Consequently enjambement had very slight influence on the caesura, inasmuch as the rejet was not always coincident therewith. The scholastic five-foot iambic, with classical technology to explain deviations from a supposed normal, was condemned, and the substitution of a syllabic unit of metre, according to immemorial French and Italian usage, strongly recommended. In conclusion, the writer intimated that this was only the threshold of a vaster inquiry into the relations between classic and modern metre, which he reserved for a future occasion.—Dr. Furnivall, on general grounds, expressed his concurrence as to the influence of Italian literature on Chaucer; and the president expressed the acknowledgments of the meeting to Mr. Larkins for the presentation of his views on a subject so important to history and literature.

FINE ART.

A LUTHER RELIC.

MR. T. THIEMANN, of Münster, has had the good fortune to secure a most interesting and valuable piece of mediaeval art, in the shape of Martin Luther's own "Contemplation Book of the Passion of Christ."

The work was executed by that famous family of goldsmiths, sculptors, and painters, the brothers Aldegrever, at Soest, in the years 1522-24, to the order of Joachim, Elector of Brandenburg, and was in the following year signed by Luther himself with his name. The size is small octavo; the covers are of ivory superbly sculptured, with silver supports; on the upper cover is a portrait of the Elector Joachim. The back is of solid silver, having the title, "Leiden Christi" engraved on it. The work contains 27 leaves, 14 of silver and 13 of parchment. The former are beautiful specimens of workmanship, and, in addition to engraved prayers, meditations, and songs with musical notation, contain highly artistic representations of the Passion. The parchment leaves are illuminated with pen and ink drawings of delicate finish; conspicuous among which are pictures of the Four Evangelists, of Christ, of some female saints, and of Luther himself. An examination of the monograms will reveal to the connoisseur the names of four brothers Aldegrever, who must have jointly executed the work.

This discovery is of importance for art history, since hitherto the works known under the name of Aldegrever in Vienna, Prag, Berlin, Darmstadt, and Soest, are all attributed to one—viz., Henry Aldegrever. The dedication of the work to Joachim is a proof of his warm sympathy with the reformer—at least, in the early years of his career; and it will, no doubt, have the effect of modifying the prevalent view taken of the Elector's attitude towards Luther. The work is also valuable as a contribution to religious history, since both text and ornaments preserve to some extent a Roman character, and further as illustrating the language of the period.

To Mr. Thiemann is due the merit of being the first to appreciate at its full value the worth of the book. He is at present exhibiting it in Münster, and intends to exhibit it in other large German towns, and afterwards, possibly, in London. The book was found at Bevergern, a village in Westphalia.

TWO MINOR EXHIBITIONS.

THE exhibition of Mr. Albert Goodwin's drawings, at the Fine Art Society's, constitutes one of the most valuable and noteworthy picture-shows which we have recently been invited to see. There are about seventy drawings, the work chiefly of the last two years. Very few of these are sketches from Nature; they are rather the result of those finer memories of places and effects that have been cared for, which are the peculiar possessions of the artistic man. They appeal, therefore, primarily to the finer connoisseurs and the true collectors—in a word, not so much to the common public and the common painter, as to the refined critic and the potential artist. Though here and there they evince quite wonderful craftsmanship, the mere craftsman will remain for the most part indifferent to their beauty. He will excite himself more readily over modern French brush-work—over some cheap French imitation of our great master, Constable. But that is of little importance. Mr. Goodwin's refined and exalted visions—his utterances so spontaneous, so varied, so entirely his own—will live when imitations, and the lop-sided eulogists of them in the minor journalism, are comfortably forgotten.

It is a pity that Mr. Francis James's exhibition at the Dudley Gallery—a dingy, disregarded place, quite beautified for the occasion—was open for so short a time. It will be closed—unless Mr. James has relented—before this word of appreciation is in the readers' hands. Mr. James's charming drawings have, as regards their subjects, been of two classes—the one consisting of slight, but always vigorous and refined, visions of landscape; the other, of requisite suggestions of the delicacy or glory of flowers—the transiency of the anemone, the splendour of the rose in June. It is too late now to insist here, further, or in any detail, upon their merits. But it is not too late at all to record the fact that, by an exhibition deliberately and wisely planned, and carried out with singular taste, Mr. James has greatly fortified his position with the always small number of people who may hope to have any entrance into the secrets of art; while he has, for the first time, addressed himself, in addition, to a larger public—with a certain danger, we think, of bringing upon himself what a wit, who was endowed with a measure of wisdom, once thought proper to describe as "the insult of popularity."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. JOHN LEWIS ROGET, editor of Roget's Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases, has been engaged for some time past upon a history of the "Old Water-Colour Society," now the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. In addition to a record of the proceedings of the society and the contents of its exhibitions, it will contain biographical notices of all its deceased members and associates, and also an account of the practice of water-colour painting in England during the last century. The work will form two volumes royal octavo, and will be published by Messrs. Longmans.

LORD WHARNCLIFFE, as president of the Society for the Preservation of the Ancient Monuments of Egypt, has presented to Lord Salisbury the memorial before referred to in the ACADEMY, which now bears about 650 signatures, praying for the appointment of an official inspector (if possible, an Englishman), to whom the care of the monuments should be entrusted.

THE most important feature in the programme of the Portfolio for the coming year is a series of twelve articles by the editor, Mr. P. G. Hamerton, on "The Present State of the Fine Arts in France," to be illustrated with etchings by MM. Flameng, Damman, Toussaint, and Manesse. Prof. A. H. Church will write upon "Textiles and Paper-Hangings," and "Some Features of Japanese Art"; Mr. F. G. Stephens upon "The Caricatures of Rowlandson" and "W. H. Hunt"; Mr. Walter Armstrong upon "Mr. Alfred Gilbert," and "Van Meer and Brekelenkam"; and Mr. J. Leyland upon "Haddon Hall," with illustrations by Mr. H. Railton. Among the plates promised are Rossetti's "Beata Beatrix," by Mr. G. W. Rhead; Walter Hunt's "Dog in a Manger," by Mr. C. O. Murray; Franz Hals's "Portrait of a Man"; and etchings by Mr. F. Slocombe, G. Poynt, A. Dawson, &c.

AMONG the contents of the Art Journal for the coming year will be a series of six articles on "The Pilgrims' Way," from Guildford to Canterbury, written by Mrs. Ady (Julia Cartwright), with illustrations by Mr. A. Quinton; two articles on "The Scenes of Tennyson's Childhood"; "A Summer Tour through Continental Galleries," by Mr. Walter Armstrong; "The Houses of the Gunpowder Plot Conspirators," by Mr. W. Outram Tristram, illustrated by Mr. Herbert Railton; "The Collection of the Scottish Antiquaries," by Mr. J. M. Gray; and "Art in America," by Mr. G. H. Boughton. The January number will contain an article on "The Recent Additions to the National Gallery," by Mr. Sidney Colvin, with four illustrations.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

As a foretaste, perhaps, of the grandeurs and longuours of pantomime, we allowed ourselves, one night last week, to see the "Cigale" at the Lyric. No one should go to the "Cigale" with a severe mind. The appeal is not to the mental faculties, but to one's capacity for sensuous impression. "La Cigale" is just now the prettiest, most gorgeous, most luxurious show that can be beheld in London. In these respects, though not perhaps in the element of fun, it more than vies—dare we say it?—with "Carmen up to Date" at the Gaiety; and the Gaiety entertainments, under Mr. George Edwardes's management, have long been established as the standard up to which light opera and burlesque, elsewhere, are bound to endeavour to live. It is not our function to criticise with seriousness the music of "La Cigale"; but we may say of it that, if it has not quite the style and technical merit of "Dorothy," nor quite the unforced melodiousness of each production of Sir Arthur Sullivan, it is yet attractive and catchy. It bears hearing with pleasure. Of course, a very notable point in the piece, as it is performed at the Lyric, is the opportunity which it affords to Miss Geraldine Ulmar—heard here to better advantage in the music of Audran (with touches by Mr. Ivan Caryll) than even in the music with which the composer of "The Golden Legend" has for year after year provided the Savoy. Miss Ulmar indeed—and especially as the piece proceeds—both acts and sings with remarkable skill. Another point is the singing, and, let us add, the gallant bearing, of the gentleman presented to us as Le Chevalier Scovell. His performance and his personality count for much in the success of the piece. But, in spite of ourselves, we are getting lamentably serious, with analysis and comparisons and matter of fact reports. That is not at all what is wanted. The men of London do not leave the dinner table to betake themselves to the Lyric because this or that actor is a little better than the like of him may be found elsewhere. Stalls and boxes are filled to overflowing simply because of the sensuous glory of the show. The old Emperor William—a great connoisseur in these matters, we believe—would not have hesitated to extend the Imperial protection to the Lyric ballet. They dance, indeed, extremely well, and have the supreme merit of being very good looking. Théophile Gautier—reveller in light and colour—would hardly have sighed over himself as "pauvre Théo" had he been privileged to witness the splendours and audacities of hue and of design which do so much to make "La Cigale" engaging. Money has been spent lavishly and spent tastefully in providing a vision of magnificent dress—of harmonies and contrasts of colour such as occur chiefly to the imagination of the most gifted of theatrical costumiers—and of placing this dress, not always in too encumbering quantity, upon a great troop of the judiciously selected. Heliotrope and plum colour, silver and lavender, old gold and russet brown, grey-blue and steel, copperish gold and flaming red—the splendours of velvets and brocades and satins, the grace of tulle (for the audience, like one of the persons of the drama, does not resent the diaphanous)—the Lyric stage, we say, while "La Cigale" is playing, is a parterre of such flowers as these. And against such flowers as these, what chance has the intellectual drama. The natural man—whether with the taste of the amiable barbarian, or the taste of Théophile Gautier, does not trouble even to ask for it.

MUSIC.

MUSIC BOOKS.

A System of Sight-Singing from the Established Musical Notation. By Sedley Taylor. (Macmillan.) How to Teach Sight-Singing. By John Taylor. (Philip.)

It is strange that these two works should have appeared about the same time. Both authors are in favour of certain modifications of the Tonic Sol-fa system, but both advocate the use of the established notation. Mr. Sedley Taylor thinks the former helps to a knowledge of the latter; Mr. John Taylor, that the two can be used concurrently. The former suggests a reform of the staff notation; and the latter has invented a Stave and a Key Modulator, to exhibit tonal, and simplify key relationship.

The two books have a common aim, and to some extent the means are common, so that they may conveniently be considered together. It will be our object to indicate some only of the features of both systems, to point out generally their likenesses and differences, and to offer a few comments. To attempt more would occupy far too much space. It will be a further saving to give only the initials of the writers; since, owing to the similarity of name, we must, in mentioning them, quote the Christian as well as the surname.

First, let us notice the points of resemblance. Both writers admire the pictorial representation of pitch in staff notation, and both believe that the staff is well able to exhibit tonal relation. S. T. suggests that the line or space on which the key-note is to be found should be specially pencil-marked; the singer would then be able to compare other notes with it. When modulation occurred, a new line or space would be accordingly marked. J. T., on the other hand, by means of two clever appliances, named the Stave and the Key Modulator, so graphically exhibits the relation of the notes of a scale to the tonic, and in his singing exercises so constantly keeps this relationship in view, that pupils would never connect, as has generally been done, the staff notation merely with absolute pitch. But besides this, he sometimes exhibits at the beginning of an exercise a "skeleton" of the scale group of notes as shown in his modulators. The aims of both writers in this matter are, therefore, common for short simple pieces, such as hymn tunes; the method of S. T. is a very practical one.

In the important matter of the minor scale, the two writers differ. S. T. strongly objects to the "Lah Mode" of the Tonic Sol-fa system. He considers it far more rational to regard the minor as a modification of the major mode, and even proposes to do away with the usual minor signatures. Thus, the key of C minor would be written with the C major signature, and flats and sharps would be added as wanted. Theoretically, this would show the relationship between tonic major and minor scales; but in practice it would, in long pieces, necessitate many accidentals. J. T. adopts the Tonic Sol-fa "Lah Mode," and thereby, we think, causes great confusion to his own system. His "skeleton" group mentioned above is admirably adapted to the tonic principle advocated by him; but by prefixing the "skeleton" of C major to a phrase in A minor, J. T. is hardly consistent.

S. T. has a short chapter on chromatic or, as he calls them, "modified" scale notes. He considers they might be treated as "independent of the other members of the scale" and named accordingly, but asserts that "it has been found more convenient to regard them as attendants on one or other of their two next neighbours." This, of course, means that sharps are to be used in ascending, flats in descending. J. T., describing them as "intermediate" notes, writes out the chromatic scale in like fashion. Neither, then, seems to look upon such notes as having any real connexion with the diatonic notes and with the tonic. S. T. only touches slightly on the matter, but J. T. gives numerous examples containing chromatic notes, and comments upon them. The chromatic scale is the bête noire of theorists. Some would explain the additions to the diatonic scale as derived from related scales, others from fundamental chords in the scale; but all are pretty well agreed not to write A sharp in ascending, or G flat in descending; and in this they are supported, for the most part, by the practice of the great masters. In J. T.'s example from the "Creation," with the A sharp, there is modulation, and the bar in which the A sharp occurs is no longer in the key of C. But we must abstain from further discussion. The system of J. T. is an excellent one up to a certain point; though for advanced music, with chromatic notes and intricate modulations, it is not comprehensive enough. We are not surprised that in one place the author should speak of the "restless wandering tonality" of the advanced German school.

Mr. J. Taylor is a teacher of much experience; and, whatever objections we may raise against certain points in his work, it is full of original thought and practical hints. His Stave and Key Modulators are decidedly original, and must be of immense service in class teaching.

Mr. Sedley Taylor's book deserves special praise for its clear, concise style. He, too, is eminently practical, and he presents many elementary matters in quite a fresh and original manner. We said at the outset that we had to beware of exceeding our space. We have done justice to neither book, but if this notice induces any teacher or pupil to read them it will suffice.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

NIELS GADE, the well-known Danish composer, died suddenly at Copenhagen on December 21. He was born in 1817, and from early youth showed musical talent. He was a personal friend of both Schumann and Mendelssohn. In 1844 he took the place of the latter as conductor of the Leipzig concerts. In 1848 he returned to his native city, where since 1865 he has held the post of director of the Conservatoire. His works, which are numerous, include Symphonies, Overtures, Concertos, and Cantatas. Of the last, "Zion" and "The Crusaders" were produced under his direction at Birmingham in 1876, and "Psyche" was given at the same place in 1882. It is twenty-three years since one of his seven Symphonies has been heard at the Crystal Palace. The Scandinavian element is not lacking in Gade's music, but he was greatly influenced by Mendelssohn. His works, therefore, are more distinguished for charm and finished workmanship than for striking individuality.

THE Crystal Palace Concerts will be resumed on February 14, with Herr Stavenhagen as pianist. In March, Berlioz's "La Mort d'Ophélie" for female chorus and orchestra; Grieg's "Scenes" from Björnson's Drama "Olav Trygvason"; and a Concerto for pianoforte by Miss Dora Bright, are announced. Dr. Joachim will appear on February 28, playing Beethoven's Concerto, and M. Ysaye follows on March 21 with a Concerto by Vieuxtemps.

M. RICHARD GOMPERTZ gave two concerts of chamber music at Princes' Hall on December 11 and 18. The programme of the first included Beethoven's great Quartet in E flat (Op. 127), and Dr. Stanford's Quintet in D minor, with the composer at the pianoforte. At the second, Brahms's Quartet in B flat (Op. 67) was given. Mr. Borwick was the pianist, taking part in a Beethoven Sonata for pianoforte and violin and also playing solos. M. Gompertz and his associates—Messrs. E. Kreuz, H. Inwards, and C. Ould—may be commended for their rendering of works not often heard: it is eleven years since the Beethoven Quartet and twelve years since the Brahms was given at the Popular Concerts. Miss Lena Little and Mr. W. Shakespeare were the vocalists at the first evening, and Miss Fillunger at the second.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 17 4	0 8 8

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holi, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

NOW READY.

IDYLLS, LEGENDS, and LYRICS. By A. GARLAND MYERS. Handsome volume of Love-Sonnets and old-time Love-Stories in Verse. Eminently suitable for Gift-book. Price 7s. 6d.
London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays, by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.
And all Booksellers.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1863.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER.

248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)

Also for HIRE ONLY.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.

Every Evening, at 8, THE ENGLISH ROSE.

Preceded, at 7.15, by THE LITTLE SENTINEL.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.45. An original play in three acts, by

R. C. Carton, entitled

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MAN PROPOSES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHAS. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 9. A farce in three acts, by Harry Nicholls and W. Lestocq, entitled

JANE.

Preceded, at 8.15, by MADCAP.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD, and Mr. A. CHUDLEIGH.

Every Evening, at 8, THE CABINET MINISTER.

Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Weedon Grossmith, Frank Rodney,

Brandon Thomas, Allen Ayneworth, Saunders, F. Farren,

Clulow; Misses Carlotta Leclercq, Rosina Filippi, Florence

Tanner, Eva Moore, Caldwell, Isabel Ellisson, Harrington,

Mrs. Edmund Phelps, and Mrs. John Wood.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Every Evening, at 8.50, LONDON ASSURANCE.

Messrs. Chas. Wyndham, W. Farren, Geo. Giddens, A.

Bouchier, W. Blakeley, Cyril Maude, H. H. Vincent,

F. Atherton, S. Hewson, F. Emery; Mesdames Mary Moore,

M. A. Victor, F. Frances, E. Vining, E. Terriss, and Mrs.

Bernard-Beece.

Preceded, at 8, by W. Gordon's Comedietta, entitled

DEAREST MAMMA.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

Every Evening, at 8.10,

THE PEOPLE'S IDOL.

a new drama, by Wilson Barrett and Victor Widnell.

Preceded at 7.15 by THE CLERICAL ERROR.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable

on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum

monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND,

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD

PRINTERS and PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES

NEWSPAPERS and PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with us to Printing and Publishing

Estimates and all information furnished.

Contracts entered into.

FRY'S

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa

that I like so

well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition, 1889 GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.

Every Evening, at 9.15, Mr. ARTHUR LAW's new three-act

Farce, entitled

THE JUDGE.

Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Lestocq, R. S. Boleyn, Frank H.

Fenton, A. G. Leigh, and M. A. Kinghorne; Mesdames E.

Thorne, Helen Leyton, E. Chester, and Cissy Graham.

Preceded, at 8, by

SMOKE.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 7.45,

ANTHONY AND CLEOPATRA.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

This day, at 2.45, THE ROSE AND THE RING.

Messrs. Hendon, Shale, W. Cheesman, J. Le Hay, and Harry

Monkhouse; Mesdames Violet Cameron, Attalie Claire, Maud

Holland, — Amadi, Isa Bowman, Ada Dorcé, and Empsie

Bowman.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original Comic Opera, by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in two acts, entitled

THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, E. S. WILLARD.

This Evening, at 8.50, THE THARISEE.

Messrs. Lewis Walker, Herbert Waring, J. Beauchamp,

H. V. Edmund, Herbert Basing, and M. Marius; Mesdames

Lancaster-Wallis (Miss Wallis), Marion Lea, Florence

West, Minnie Terry, Dennis, and Sophie Larkin.

Preceded, at 8, by

MY LADY HELP.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. EDWARD TERRY.

Every Evening, at 9.0, A. W. PINERO's three-act Farce, entitled

IN CHANCERY.

Mr. Edward Terry and Company.

Preceded, at 8.15, by

MY FRIEND JARLET.

THROAT

IRRITATION

AND

COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE

JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the

Glycerine in these agreeable con-

fections becomes actively healing.

In boxes, 7s. 6d.; tins, 1s. 11d., labelled

"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homeo-

pathic Chemists."

LOISETTE'S

System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be improved until no Device is needed.

Mr. PROCTOR, author of "Old & New Astronomy,"

and of "Astronomy" in the Encyclopædia

Brit., says "Prior LOISETTE'S Method appears to me admirable." Prospectus containing opinions of pupils who have

PASSED EXAMINATIONS, and of members of the Medical, Scholastic,

Clerical, etc., professions, post free from

Professor LOISETTE, 37, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

OLD SHIRTS

Refitted, New Fronts, Collars, and

Collar-bands—Fine Irish Linen,

2s.; or very best Irish Linen,

2s. 6d. each, returned free, ready to wear. Sample New White

Shirt, for Dress or ordinary wear, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d.,

5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Gent's best 4-fold Linen Collars, any shape,

2s. 9d. half dozen, post free.

Hand knit by Donegal peasantry.

Warm, durable, and comfortable.

Two pairs free, 2s. 6d. Men's Knicker

Hose, two pairs free, 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., and 7s. 9d.

Wool PANTS and VESTS are now very cheap. Price Lists

and Patterns Cambric Handkerchiefs and all kinds Irish Linen

Goods sent free for Household or Family use, from the cheapest to the best qualities made.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

IRISH SOX

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

"THE POCKET LIBRARY."—Post 8vo, printed on laid paper and bound in half-cloth, 2s. each.

The Essays of Elia. By CHARLES LAMB.
Robinson Crusoe. Edited by JOHN MAJOR.
With 37 Illustrations by George Cruikshank.

The Epicurean; and Alciphron. By THOMAS MOORE.

Whims and Oddities. By THOMAS HOOD.
With 85 Illustrations.

Gulliver's Travels; and The Tale of a Tub. By Dean SWIFT.

The Barber's Chair; and The Hedgehog Letters. By DOUGLAS JERROLD.

Gastronomy as a Fine Art. By BRILLAT-SAVARIN. Translated by R. E. ANDERSON, M.A.

The Rivals, The School for Scandal, and other Plays. By RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN.

The Natural History of Selborne. By GILBERT WHITE. Edited by T. BROWN, F.L.S.

Anecdotes of the Clergy. By JACOB LARWOOD.

Leigh Hunt's Essays. Edited by EDMUND OLLIER.

EDWIN ARNOLD'S NEW NOVEL.

THE WONDERFUL ADVENTURES of PHRA the PHENICIAN. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD. With an Introduction by Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E., and 12 Full-page Illustrations by H. M. Paget. 3 vols., crown 8vo, at all Libraries. Shilling.

ARMOREL of LYONESSE: a Romance of To-day. By WALTER BESANT. Author of "Children of Gibcon," &c. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

MY SHIPMATE LOUISE: the Romance of a Wreck. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. Author of "An Ocean Tragedy," &c. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

BETWEEN LIFE and DEATH. By Frank BARRETT. Author of "Fettered for Life," &c. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

THE GREAT TABOO. By Grant Allen, Author of "Strange Stories," "The Devil's Dice," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

RUFFINO, &c. By Ouida, Author of "Under Two Flags," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

AUNT ABIGAIL DYKES. By Lieut.-Col. George RANDOLPH. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

A WARD of the GOLDEN GATE. By Bret Harte, Author of "A Wail of the Plains," &c. With 59 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

TALES of the PACIFIC SLOPE: being the Sixth Volume of BRET HARTE'S COMPLETE WORKS. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.
THE OTHER FIVE VOLUMES (Complete in Size and Price) ARE AS FOLLOWS:—
Vol. I. COMPLETE POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS. With Steel Portrait, and Introduction by Author.
Vol. II. EARLIER PAPERS—LUCK of ROARING CAMP, and other Sketches—BOHEMIAN PAPERS—SPANISH and AMERICAN LEGENDS.
Vol. III. TALES of the ARGONAUTS' EASTERN SKETCHES.
Vol. IV. GABRIEL CONROY.
Vol. V. STORIES—CONDENSED NOVELS, &c.

A WEIRD GIFT. By Georges Ohnet, Author of "Dr. Rameau," &c. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"BAIL UP!" a Romance of Bushrangers and Blacks. By HUME NISBET. With Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

WHO POISONED HETTY DUNCAN? With other Detective Stories. By DICK DONOVAN. Post 8vo, picture cover, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

DRAMAS of LIFE. By George R. Sims, Author of "The Daguerre Reciter," &c. With 60 Illustrations. Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

HARRY FLUDYER at CAMBRIDGE: a Series of Family Letters. Post 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A LIBRARY of AMERICAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Settlement to the Present Time. Compiled and Edited by EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN and ELLEN MACKAY HUTCHINSON. 11 vols., royal 8vo, cloth extra. A few Copies are for sale in England, price £6 12s. the set.

OUR OLD HOME. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Annotated with Passages from the Author's Note Book, and illustrated with 31 fine Photographures. 2 vols., crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 15s.

"PICCADILLY NOVELS."—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

The Bell of St. Paul's. By WALTER BESANT.

An Ocean Tragedy. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Blind Love. By WILKIE COLLINS. With Preface by WALTER BESANT, and 36 Illustrations.

MR. R. L. STEVENSON'S NEW BOOK.

BALLADS. By Robert Louis Stevenson (Uniform with "Underwoods"). Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

TRAVEL.

FIVE YEARS with the CONGO CANNIBALS. By HERBERT WARD. With 92 Illustrations by the Author, Victor Perard, and W. B. Davis. SECOND EDITION. Royal 8vo, cloth extra, 11s.

MY LIFE with STANLEY'S REAR GUARD. By HERBERT WARD. With a Map by E. Waller. Post 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Shilling.

A SOCIAL DEPARTURE: How Orthodoxy and I went Round the World by Our-elves. By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN. With 111 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

THE "GILBERT and SULLIVAN" BIRTHDAY BOOK: being Quotations for Every Day in the Year, selected from those Plays by W. S. GILBERT which have been set to Music by Sir ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Royal 16mo, handsomely bound, 2s. 6d.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S RULES of CIVILITY Traced to their SOURCES and Restored by MONCURE D. CONWAY. 1cap. 8vo, printed on laid paper and bound in Japanese vellum, 2s. 6d.

"MY LIBRARY"

A Short Series of Choice Works, carefully printed on laid paper and bound in half-Roxburgh 2s. 6d. each. The Two following Volumes are ready:—

FOUR FRENCHWOMEN: Mlle. de Corday: Madame Roland: the Princess de Lamballe: Madame de Genlis. By AUSTIN DOBSON.

CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE. By Charles Reade. With a Photogravure Frontispiece. Others to follow.

ARTEMUS WARD, COMPLETE. A New and Cheaper Edition of ARTEMUS WARD'S COMPLETE WORKS. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.

STAGELAND: Curious Habits and Customs of its Inhabitants. By JEROME K. JEROME, Author of "Three Men in a Boat," &c. With 61 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. 1cap. 1to, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE. One Shilling Monthly. In Addition to Articles upon Subjects in Literature, Science, and Art TABLE TALK by Sylvanus Urban appears Monthly.

The Contents for JANUARY are as follows:—TWO PICTURES. By Lynn Cyril d'Oyle.—THE ART of CONVERSATION. By George Whale.—THE PARACHUTE of the DANIEL LION. By Rev. Alex. S. Wilson, M.A., B.Sc.—SPA. By Percy Fitzgerald.—MACAULAY. By Alfred J. H. Crespi, L.R.C.P.—IN and AROUND a SCOTCH KIRK. By Alexander Gordon.—ELVERS in the SEVERN. By C. Parkinson.—AMERICA in ENGLAND. By W. J. Lawrence.—RAMBLES among ALGERIAN HILLS. By Dr. J. E. Taylor, F.L.S.—THE PERFECTING of the BOOK. By Sylvanus Urban.

SCIENCE-GOSSIP: an Illustrated Medium of Interchange for Students and Lovers of Nature. Devoted to Geology, Botany, Physiology, Chemistry, Zoology, Microscopy, Astronomy, Telescopy, Physiography, Scientific Photography, &c. Edited by Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c. Price 4d. Monthly; or 5s. per year post free. The JANUARY NUMBER is just ready.

The Bishops' Bible. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN.

Sowing the Wind. By E. LYNN LINTON.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, London's Printing Works, Chancery Lane, Published by HENRY VILLIERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

